PEOPLE, etc., v. HUBERT and others. (No. 11,253.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 23, 1886.)

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS—SWAMP-LAND ASSESSMENT—CALIFORNIA CODE CIVIL PROC. § 338, SUBD. 1.

An assessment for reclamation purposes is "a liability, created by statute," and under subdivision 1, § 338, Code Civil Proc. Cal., an action to enforce it is barred by the lapse of three years.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

A. C. Adams, for the People. Geo. P. Harding and Jno. W. Gorn, for respondents, Hubert and others.

BELCHER, C. C. In December, 1870, an assessment for reclamation purposes was levied upon the lands situate in reclamation district No. 108, and on the fifth day of May, 1871, it became delinquent. On the ninth day of August, 1884, this action was commenced to enforce payment of the assessment against certain lands in the district owned by defendant. The defendant demurred to the complaint upon the ground that the cause of action was barred by subdivision 1 of sections 338 and 339, and by sections 343 and 345, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The court below sustained the demurrer, and, we think, properly.

Under subdivision 1 of section 338, "an action upon a liability created by statute, other than a penalty or forfeiture," is barred if not commenced within three years after the cause of action accrues. In Perry v. Washburn, 20 Cal. 318, it was held that taxes are not debts, nor founded upon contract, but charges upon persons or property, to raise money for public purposes. In People v. McCreery, 34 Cal. 454, it is said that "taxes are charges, imposed by or under the authority of the legislature, upon persons or property subject to its jurisdiction." A swamp-land assessment is a charge imposed upon property by authority of the legislature, and is thus clearly a "liability created by statute." The fact that it is only a lien upon the property assessed, and not a direct charge against the owner, is immaterial. "A lien is a charge imposed upon specific property, by which it is made security for the performance of an act." Section 1180, Code Civil Proc. The act here for the performance of which the land was made security was the payment of the assessment. An action was required to enforce the performance of the act, and it could only be brought within the time prescribed by statute. San Francisco v. Jones, 20 Fed. Rep. 188; State v. Yellow Jacket S. M. Co., 14 Nev. 226. The special act of the legislature referred to by the appellant (St. 1871-72, p. 696) has no application to the case. It provides only that warrants and assessments, while they remain unpaid, shall bear interest.

The judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; SEARLS, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

1. EXECUTION—EXEMPTIONS—FARMING UTENSILS—CODE CIVIL PROC. CAL. § 690, SUBD. 3.
An expensive threshing outfit, owned by the judgment debtor and two or more other farmers in common, and used by them to a limited extent on their own lands, but principally used in doing work for others for hire, is not exempt under subdivision 3, § 690, Code Civil Proc. Cal., exempting from execution "farming utensils or implements of husbandry."
2. INSOLVENCY—EXEMPTIONS—PRACTICE ON PETITIONS TO SET ASIDE.
Creditors of an insolvent debtor who has filed a petition to have his exemptions set aside may appear and object without filing any paper setting forth their objections, and, if such a paper is filed, it need not be verified, nor served on the debtor.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

J. B. Webster and L. M. Elliott, for appellant. F. T. Baldwin, Ansel Smith, and J. C. Campbell, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. C. John Baldwin was a farmer, and was adjudged an insolvent debtor, under the provisions of the insolvent act of 1880. After the order adjudging him an insolvent was entered, he petitioned the court to set aside to him certain personal property as exempt from execution, and, among other things, a Cahoon seed-sower, and a "threshing rig," consisting of a threshing engine, three tanks to hold water for the engine, a thresher, a derrick and forks, a seed-cleaner, a feeding-machine, a feeding-rack, and a cook-house. S. P. Bailey, one of the creditors of the petitioner, filed a paper, objecting to the property being set aside, on the ground that it was not, by law, exempt from execution. The petitioner moved that the paper be stricken out on the ground that it was not verified, and no copy of it was served on him or his attorney. The court denied the motion, and an exception was reserved to the ruling.

The matter was then heard, and, from the evidence introduced, it appeared that Baldwin owned and farmed 200 acres of land in San Joaquin county, and that he rented other lands, and usually cultivated about 320 acres in grain annually. He owned the Cahoon seed-sower, which was worth $10, and another seed-sower, which was set apart to him, worth $90. The two seed-sowers were used for sowing grain broadcast, but were operated in a different manner. He and his son, who was also a farmer, owned jointly the threshing rig. The engine was used to furnish motive power for the thresher, and it required sixteen men and six horses, in addition to the steam-power, to operate it. The threshing rig was used to thresh the grain of its owners, but it was used principally for the purpose of threshing grain for others. It was also shown that the implements above described were all necessary implements to enable a farmer to profitably carry on the business of farming, and to harvest and prepare his crops for market; that it was of great advantage to a farmer to own and control implements for threshing, in whole or in part, for the reason that the grain, while in stack waiting to be threshed for hire by threshing implements of others, was liable to be injured by fire, early rains, shelling out, etc.; that it was not an unusual thing for several farmers to purchase, and use in common, threshers, engines, derricks and forks, feeding-machines, cleaners, headers, mowers, seed-sowers, plows, and other implements, for the reason that the size of their own farms, and the amount of their capital, would not warrant the investment by each individual farmer in the whole of such implements; that only about one farmer in 40 or 50 owned a threshing rig, and only farmers owning tracts of land several thousand acres in extent could afford to have a complete threshing outfit; and that most of the threshing was hired done, and the men, generally, who owned threshing outfits operated them for profit outside the regular business of farming.

The petitioner offered to prove that, by reason of his land being principally river bottom land, his grain largely grew up with sun flowers, and hence he could not raise grain, and make a living, if compelled to hire it threshed at current prices for threshing; therefore he was compelled to own and control an interest in a thresher, so as to be enabled to entirely harvest his own grain. The creditors and assignee objected to this evidence as irrelevant and immaterial, and the objection was sustained, the petitioner reserving an exception.

After hearing the evidence the court refused to set aside as exempt any of the implements above mentioned, but ordered them turned over to the assignee; and the appeal is from that order.

Section 60 of the insolvent act of 1880 makes it the duty of the court having jurisdiction of the proceedings to exempt and set apart, for the use and benefit of the insolvent, such real and personal property as is by law exempt from execution. Subdivision 3 of section 690 of the Code of Civil Procedure exempts from execution "the farming utensils or implements of husbandry of the judgment debtor; also two oxen, or two horses, or two mules, and their harness, one cart or wagon, and food for such oxen, horses, or mules for one month."

The principal question presented for decision is, does the Code exempt from execution an expensive threshing outfit, which is owned by two or more farmers in common, and is used by them, to a limited extent, on their own lands, but is used principally in doing work for others for hire?

In Brewer's Lessee v. Blougher, 14 Pet. 178, it is said on page 198: "It is undoubtedly the duty of the court to ascertain the meaning of the legislature from the words used in the statute, and the subject-matter to which it relates; and to restrain its operation within narrower limits than its words import, if the court are satisfied that the literal meaning of its language would extend to cases which the legislature never designed to embrace in it."

It should be observed that the subdivision above quoted does not, by any express words, limit the exemption provided for to judgment debtors who are farmers, nor say that, to be exempt, the oxen, horses, or mules must be work oxen, horses, or mules; and yet it has been held by this court that the language used must be so construed as to make the exemption applicable only to such judgment debtors as are engaged in the business of farming, and only to such oxen, horses, or mules as are suitable and intended for the ordinary work conducted on a farm. Brusie v. Griffith, 34 Cal. 302; Roberts v. Adams, 38 Cal. 383.

In the case last cited, after reviewing the different provisions of the section providing for exemptions in the old practice act, (section 219,) the court said: "From this summary of the act it is entirely plain that its purpose was to secure to the judgment debtor the means to prosecute his vocation, and thus earn a support for himself and family. In securing to a farmer two oxen, horses, or mules, with their harness, a wagon or cart, his farming implements, and his seed grain or vegetables for planting, the legislature intended, by this exemption, to enable him to prosecute his business of farming, in the ordinary sense of that term; and the oxen, horses, or mules which are reserved to him must be such as are suitable and intended for that use."

In our opinion, the legislature meant by the words, "the farming utensils or implements of husbandry of the judgment debtor," such utensils or implements as are needed and used by the farmer in conducting his own farming operations, and it was not intended that all farming machinery which a farmer may own should be exempt, because, while he uses it chiefly by renting it out, or in doing work on others' farms for hire, he still uses it, to a small extent, on his own land. To hold otherwise would enable the farmer who cultivates 40 acres to invest a large amount of money in expensive implements, and to hold them free and clear of his creditors, though they were used but for a day on his own land, and for all the balance of the year were rented or hired out to others. A reasonable construction should be given to the statute, and not one which would pervert its benevolent design, and enable gross frauds to be perpetrated under color of law.

In support of their claim that the property should have been set aside, counsel for appellant cite McCue v. Tunstead, 65 Cal. 506; S. C. 4 Pac. Rep. 510. In that case the plaintiff owned and cultivated in grain, etc., a farm of 150 acres. He also owned a stallion, which he used as a work-horse on the farm, and in serving mares which were brought to the farm and agisted thereon. In summing up the case this court said: "On the question of the value and gender of the horses used in husbandry the Code is silent. It is restrictive as to the number and use only. If the plaintiff is engaged in husbandry, he is entitled to the exemption of two horses, if the same be used by him in such husbandry, the value and gender of which are immaterial. The findings of the court, in our opinion, establish two propositions: (1) That plaintiff is a farmer; and (2) that the horse which he claims as exempt was one of two which he used on his farm in the cultivation and tillage thereof." It was accordingly held that the horse was exempt, and the judgment of the court below holding otherwise, was reversed. We do not think that case a controlling authority in this case. The result reached might have been different if it had appeared that the stallion, though sometimes used to do work on the farm, had been principally used to stand for mares in other places.

As to the Cahoon seed-sower. It was worth but $10, and the petitioner had another seed-sower, which was worth $90, and was set aside to him, both being used for the same purposes, though operated in a different manner. The cheaper implement may have been useful to the petitioner, but, as it did not appear that the one set aside was not sufficient for all his purposes, we cannot see any such violation of duty on the part of the court below in refusing to set it aside as should lead to a reversal of the order.

There was no error in refusing to strike out the paper filed by Bailey. It was not necessary that it be verified or served on the petitioner or his attorneys. The creditors had the right to appear, and object to the property being set aside, without filing any paper setting forth their objections.

So we can see no material error in the ruling of the court excluding certain evidence offered by the petitioner. If admitted, it could not have changed or affected the result.

On the whole we think the order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order is affirmed.

WALLACE and others v. AH SAM and others. (No. 11,368.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 30, 1886.)

DAMAGES—MEASURE OF—FAILURE TO CONSTRUCT LEVEES—FUTURE CROPS.

In an action for a breach of contract for the construction of levees the probable profits on crops not planted, but to be raised by a tenant of the owner of the land, who went into possession under a lease at thirds, executed subsequent to the contract for the levees, are too remote to form a ground for damages.

Commissioners' decision.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, county of San Joaquin.

J. H. Budd and J. C. Campbell, for respondents, Wallace and others.
William L. Dudley and R. Thompson, for appellants, Ah Sam and others.

SEARLS, C. On the first day of April, 1881, William S. Moss entered into an agreement with John Wallace, Frank T. Baldwin, and H. T. Compton, Jr., whereby, in consideration of the covenants, and agreements to be kept and performed by the parties of the second part, he bound himself to convey to them the northern half (less 150 acres) of a certain tract of land by him owned in the county of San Joaquin. The tract was swamp and overflowed land, and the consideration upon which the conveyance was to be made required the parties of the second part to reclaim the whole tract from overflow, by means of levees, dams and flood-gates, to be by them constructed at their own cost and charge. The agreement specified the dimensions of the levee, etc., and contained a further provision that, upon the completion of one-third of the length of the levee, Moss would join with the second parties in the execution of a mortgage on the entire tract of land, to secure the payment of such sum or sums of money as it might become necessary to raise to complete the work.

No time was specified within which the work was to be done, but it was provided that, upon a failure to comply with the provisions of the contract, the agreement to convey should become null and void, and the second parties should forfeit all right thereto. On the twenty-fifth day of July, 1881, Wallace, Baldwin, and Compton, who had agreed to build the levee, entered into a written agreement with Ah Sam, Soon Fook, and Lee Fook, defendants herein, whereby the latter undertook to construct the earth-work of the levee at a given price per cubic foot. The work was to be commenced by the first day of August, 1881, and completed by December 1, 1881.

This second contract recites generally the making of the contract with Moss for the sale of the land, the agreement with him to construct the levees, and refers to the record of that contract, etc. There are a number of other provisions in the second contract, one of which is that authorizing the parties of the first part to hire and put on men to work, provided they should be satisfied the parties of the second part were not likely to complete the work within the time limited; but such additional men were not to be employed until the expiration of the first month, and, if employed, were to be so located as not to interfere with the work of the second parties. The contract also recited the provision for a mortgage as specified in the contract with Moss, and provided for a further loan from defendants, to be secured by a second mortgage on the land to be conveyed to Moss, etc.

The two contracts are set out in the pleadings, and we have only recited such of their provisions as are deemed material to the questions hereinafter considered. Defendants did not complete the levees by December 1, 1881; there being at that date about one mile thereof remaining to be constructed. They continued to work upon this unfinished portion until on or about March 19, 1882, when they abandoned the work, and, a flood coming on, the land was overflowed, and could not be cultivated during the year 1882.

The court below, in making up the account between plaintiffs and the contracting defendants, allowed the former $7,500 damages on account of the loss of a crop upon the land for the year 1882.

The evidence upon which this finding is based tended to show the quantity of grain that could have been produced upon the land in 1882 had the levees been completed in 1881 as per contract, and the prices at which the same could have been sold; also, that in February, 1882, plaintiffs had leased the land in question, or 1,210 acres of it, to sundry persons for a term of five years, from November 1, 1881, they, the said plaintiffs, to receive as rent therefor, one-third of the crops raised each year, delivered to them in Stockton. This evidence was all admitted against the objections of defendants, who excepted to the rulings of the court admitting it, and now assign its admission as error.

The contention of appellants is that the probable profits on crops not planted are too remote to be allowed in this, an action to recover damages for a breach of contract for the construction of levees. The argument is based upon the idea that the leases were not made until February, 1882,—long after the contract for constructing the levees had been entered into, and could not have been contemplated by the parties when the contract was made.

In Giaccomini v. Bulkeley, 51 Cal. 261, which was an action in tort for destroying a fence, it was held that evidence to prove that the land would support a given number of cows and hogs, and showing the profits that might have been reaped from them, (it not appearing that plaintiff had such animals,) was too remote and speculative. See, also, Friend v. Miller, 8 Pac. Rep. 40, and cases there cited.

In Hadley v. Baxendale, 26 Eng. Law & Eq. 398, it was said: "Now, if the special circumstances under which the contract was actually made were communicated by the plaintiff to the defendant, and thus known to both parties, the damage resulting from the breach of such a contract which they would reasonably contemplate would be the amount of injury which would ordinarily follow from a breach of contract under these special circumstances so known and communicated. But on the other hand, if those special circumstances were wholly unknown to the party breaking the contract, he at the most, could only be supposed to have had in his contemplation the amount of injury which would arise generally, and in the great multitude of cases not affected by any special circumstances for such a breach of his contract."

Ordinarily, the measure of damages for the breach of a contract to construct levee, a fence, or any similar work is: (1) If payment has been made, the cost of constructing the work. (2) If payment has not been made, the excess of the cost of the work over the contract price. This we term "general damages," and it involves the loss which naturally flows from, and is presumed from, the contract and its breach. In addition thereto, there may be a recovery of such further loss or detriment occasioned by the breach of the contract, and proximately caused thereby, or which, in the ordinary course of things, would be likely to result therefrom. This last we term "special damages," and it is awarded upon the theory that the parties who contracted with a full knowledge of the facts, circumstances, and objects of the agreement, may well be supposed to have had in contemplation all the proximate and natural results flowing from its breach.

In the present case there is such reference made to the contract of plaintiffs with Moss that we are authorized to conclude that defendants contracted to build the levee with full knowledge that it was to be the consideration or condition upon which the land was to be conveyed to plaintiffs, and that the completion of the levee was a condition precedent to the conveyance.

When, therefore, the defendants violated their contract to complete the levee by December 1, 1881, they must be presumed to have done so with full knowledge that the direct and immediate consequence of such violation was to prevent plaintiffs from procuring a conveyance of the land until the levee was completed. It follows that, under such circumstances, defendants should be held liable for the use and occupation of the land in its then condition, during such reasonable time as was necessary for plaintiffs to complete the violated contract, and thus entitle themselves to a conveyance from Moss, if prevented from occupying and using the land by the non-completion of the levee.

It does not necessarily follow, however, that the method adopted in the court below was a proper one for estimating the value of the user of the land. The leases offered in evidence were executed, not only after the defendants had entered into the contract, but after its breach. The land, except a small portion of it, was not cultivated, or sown to grain of any kind, and, had it been, we are at a loss to see how plaintiffs would have been entitled to the crops raised upon land which they did not own.

It seems to us that the rule adopted in the court below, if applied to contracts of this character, would tend largely to place it in the power of parties entitled to recover damages to regulate the amount of recovery to suit themselves. There would be but little risk in contracting to give one-third of a crop which the parties all knew could not be raised.

If it be said the leases were for five years, and therefore any inference of a want of good faith, because the land was not susceptible of cultivation during the first year, is unfounded, we reply that, while it tends to meet the objection named, it at the same time suggests another, viz., that it may well be that a tenant could afford to give one-third of the crops raised upon lands of this character for a term of five years, yet, owing to the inherent difficulties of cultivating such lands in the first instance, he would be unwilling to give a like quantity or proportion the first year. We have no reason to believe that plaintiffs acted in bad faith in executing the leases specified in the record, and we only refer to the possibility of such conduct for the purpose of showing that the rule under which such a course may be pursued, is inherently vicious.

Had defendants contracted with plaintiffs to crop the land for the year 1882, yielding in return one-third of the crop, and then failed to comply with their agreement, the basis adopted here would have been proper. In such a case it could properly be said they contracted with a view to the damages proven.

Again, had the leases been executed before defendants agreed to construct the levee, and had their agreement been made with full knowledge of such leases and their conditions, it might with propriety be held that their liability should be measured by the conditions in the leases. Here, however, the measure of damages is made to depend upon a subcontract with which the defendants had nothing to do, of which they knew nothing, and with a view to the terms of which they cannot be supposed to have contracted. In other words, the subcontracts of plaintiffs with their several lessees, and the possible profits which they might have derived therefrom, are substituted for the value of the premises during the year 1882.

This we think was, under the circumstances of this case, erroneous. Olmstead v. Burke, 25 Ill. 86; Rhodes v. Baird, 16 Ohio St. 581; Fox v. Harding, 7 Cush. 522; Devlin v. Meyer, 63 N. Y. 25; Masterson v. Mayor, etc., 7 Hill, 61.

The judgment and order appealed from should be reversed, and a new trial ordered.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

PACIFIC TRUST CO. v. DORSEY. (No. 11,153.)

CORPORATIONS—STOCK—ISSUING CERTIFICATE FOR NOTE—CONST. CAL. ART. 12, § 11; ST. 1875-76, PAGE 729, § 1; PEN. CODE, § 560.

A note given by a subscriber to the capital stock of a bank, in payment of a first assessment, the certificate for the stock being issued thereupon, is not void under section 11, art. 12, Const. Cal., providing that "no corporation shall issue stock except for money paid," etc., nor under section 1, St. 1875-76, p. 729, or section 560, Pen. Code.

Commissioners' decision.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, county of San Joaquin.

D. S. Terry and Baldwin & Smith, for respondent, Pacific Trust Co.
Jas. A. Louttit, for appellant, Caleb Dorsey.

BELCHER, C. C. This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial. The action was based upon a promissory note, and the contention of appellant is that the contract, in the execution of which the note was given, was against public policy, and prohibited by law; and so the note was void.

The facts, as shown by the record, are as follows: In August, 1883, the Pacific Trust Company, plaintiff herein, was organized as a corporation to do a banking business at the city of Stockton. Its capital stock was fixed at $500,000, divided into 5,000 shares, of the par value of $100 each. The defendant subscribed for 100 shares of the capital stock. After the corporation was fully organized the subscribers for stock were called upon to pay an assessment of 10 per cent. upon the amounts severally subscribed by them. The defendant paid nothing upon his subscription till the third day of December, 1883, when he made the note in question for the amount of his assessment, payable to the plaintiff, or order, one day after date, with interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum. The note was delivered to the president of the company, and thereupon a certificate for a hundred shares of stock, properly signed and sealed, was delivered to the defendant, and by him indorsed and delivered back to the president, to be held by the company till his note should be paid. The note was not paid, and on the fourth of September, 1884, this action was commenced to recover the amount due upon it.

Was the note void? In support of their claim that it was, counsel for appellant cite section 11 of article 12 of the constitution, section 1 of "An act concerning corporations and persons engaged in the business of banking," approved April 1, 1876, (St. 1875-76, p. 729,) and section 560 of the Penal Code.

The section of the constitution referred to reads as follows: "No corporation shall issue stock or bonds, except for money paid, labor done, or property actually received, and all fictitious increase of stock or indebtedness shall be void. The stock or bonded indebtedness of corporations shall not be increased except in pursuance of general law, nor without the consent of the persons holding the larger amount in value of the stock, at a meeting called for that purpose, giving sixty days' public notice, as may be provided by law."

The evident purpose of this section was to prevent the fictitious increase of the stock or indebtedness of corporations, and it does not touch the question involved here. The defendant had subscribed for 100 shares of the stock, and was liable to pay for it as the money might be needed and called for. And if it be conceded that the certificate was improperly issued to him before the actual payment of the money, or some part of it, still that fact cannot render void his promise to pay at a subsequent time, and so release him from all liability. But it is by no means clear that the certificate was improperly issued. The provision is that no stock shall be issued "except for money paid, labor done, or property actually received." The word "property" includes property real and personal; and the words "personal property" include "things in action and evidences of debt." Section 14, Civil Code. The defendant's note was actually received by the corporation, and was a thing in action or evidence of debt.

The first section of the "Act concerning corporations and persons engaged in the business of banking" requires every corporation and all persons doing a banking business in this state, in January and July of every year, to publish and file for record a sworn statement "of the amount of capital actually paid into such corporation, or into such banking business: provided, that nothing shall be deemed capital actually paid in except money bona fide paid into the treasury of such bank, and under no circumstances shall the promissory note, check, or other obligation of any director or stockholder, or of the proprietors or proprietor of any such bank, be treated, computed, or in any manner considered, any part of such actually paid-in capital."

Under this statute the defendant's note could not be advertised to the world or treated as a part of the paid-up capital of the bank. The evident purpose of the statute was to inform the public twice a year of the actual capital which a bank might have in hand for its business, and to prevent the perpetration of frauds upon the public by a pretended or fictitious capital. But why should the note be held void because the amount of it could not be included in the advertised capital? It was given for a lawful and adequate consideration, and was in fact only a new promise to pay a debt which the defendant had contracted and was then obligated to pay.

Section 560 of the Penal Code is in a chapter that treats of "fraudulent insolvencies by corporations, and other frauds in their management." It provides that "every director of any stock corporation who concurs in any vote or act of the directors of such corporation, or any of them, by which it is intended * * * to discount or receive any note or other evidence of debt in payment of any installment actually called in and required to be paid, or with the intent to provide the means of making such payment, * * * is guilty of a misdemeanor."

It is unnecessary to consider when or under what circumstances this section makes the directors of a corporation liable to be prosecuted for a misdemeanor. The only question here presented is, does it make void the note of defendant, which, so far as appears, was made in good faith, and for the purpose of obtaining a little more time to discharge an obligation which he then recognized as legal and binding upon him? We do not think it can have that effect. If it could, then, by the same reasoning, it would follow that if he had gone to the bank with the best note that could be made in the state, and had had the note discounted with the intent to provide the means of making payment of his assessment, and with the money received had paid his assessment, still he could treat the whole transaction as void, and compel the bank to deliver back to him the note. Such a construction of the section would sanction fraud and unfair dealing, and we cannot, therefore, think it correct.

In our opinion the receipt of the note neither violated public policy, good morals, nor positive law, and the judgment and order should be affirmed.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed.

BROWN v. MANN. (No. 9,043.)

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS—ADMINISTRATOR SUING HIMSELF—OPERATION OF STATUTE NOT SUSPENDED.

If a mortgagee is administrator of the estate of the mortgagor, a suit to foreclose the mortgage cannot be maintained for his benefit by one to whom he assigns the mortgage; and if such a suit is begun while he is administrator, and, after he ceases to be administrator, he is substituted as plaintiff therein, the suit will be considered as begun at the time of such substitution, and will be barred by limitation if the statutory period has then elapsed.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, county of Santa Cruz.

W. D. Storey, for appellant, Brown. C. B. Younger, J. A. Barham, F. Adams, and A. Craig, for respondent, Mann.

MYRICK, J. Foreclosure. The note and mortgage were dated May 4, 1870, payable in one year, to-wit, May 4, 1871. The proceedings had after the transfer of the note and mortgage by plaintiff (Charles Brown) to Adolphus Brown, with the suit thereon, must be disregarded, because Charles Brown, being the administrator of the estate of Abel Mann, could not, under the name of Adolphus Brown, have an action for his own benefit against himself as administrator to foreclose the mortgage. He had ample means in other ways to obtain the benefit of his security. Not until he ceased to be administrator, and was substituted as plaintiff, which was after May 4, 1875, had he, Charles Brown, the plaintiff herein, commenced any proper action to foreclose the mortgage. At that time more than four years had elapsed after the note came due, and the action was barred.

In this view, the balance of the case, and the points and arguments presented on either side, are quite immaterial. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: MCKINSTRY, J.; ROSS, J.

PEOPLE v. CAROLAN. (No. 20,198.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 30, 1886.)

1. WITNESS—DISCREDITING—CROSS-EXAMINATION—MISDEMEANOR AND FELONY.

A witness cannot be asked, upon cross examination, for the purpose of discrediting him, whether he has been arrested and convicted of a misdemeanor, as section 2051, Code Civil Proc., limits such evidence to conviction of felony.

2. SAME—OFFENSE INVOLVING MORAL TURPITUDE.

A record of conviction of a misdemeanor, if admissible in any case, is so only when the offense involves moral turpitude or infamy.

3. FRAUD—PRESENTING FRAUDULENT CLAIM TO SUPERVISORS—WARRANT REGULARLY ISSUED.

In a prosecution for presenting a fraudulent claim to the board of supervisors, it is immaterial whether or not the warrant upon which a claim made for traveling expenses was based, was regularly issued.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, county of Contra Costa.

The Attorney General, for the People. Eli R. Chase, G. W. Bower and J. O'B. Wyatt, for appellant, Carolan.

BY THE COURT. The defendant was indicted under section 72 of the Penal Code for presenting to the board of supervisors for allowance a false and fraudulent claim, and was convicted.

There is no merit in the points made by the defendant, that the claim as presented contained several items, or that the claim contained items not alleged to be false or fraudulent.

One Lowrey was examined as a witness for the prosecution. On cross-examination, for the purpose of affecting his credibility, the defendant's counsel asked him whether he had been arrested and convicted of a misdemeanor, and whether he had been incarcerated in the county jail. The court sustained objections to these questions. We see no error. Section 2051, Code Civil Proc., limits evidence of this character to conviction of a felony.

For the same purpose a record of the conviction of the witness Lowrey of a misdemeanor was offered, and the court rejected the evidence. If, in any case, a record of conviction of a misdemeanor is admissible for the purpose of discrediting, it should be made to appear that the offense involved moral turpitude or infamy, which was not done in this case.

The indictment was sufficient, charging the offense, as it did, in the language of section 72, Pen. Code.

It was immaterial whether or not the warrant was regularly issued, upon which the claim made by the defendant for traveling services was based. We see no error in the record.

Judgment and order affirmed.

Ex parte THOMAS. (No. 20,243.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 6, 1886.)

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—REGULATION OF COMMERCE—LICENSING SALE OF MERCHANDISE.

An ordinance imposing a license tax for vending goods not manufactured or produced in the state is in violation of the federal constitution, being an attempt to regulate commerce between the states.¹

Department 2. On habeas corpus.

A. E. Bolton, for petitioner. S. P. Hall, for respondent.

BY THE COURT. This case involves the constitutionality of section 14 of an ordinance passed by the board of supervisors of Alameda county. The section referred to is in these words: "Every traveling merchant, hawker, or peddler, who vends goods, wares, or merchandise of any kind, other than the manufactures or productions of this state, or butchers' meat, must pay a license tax of $10 per month, unless he uses a wagon, or one or more animals, for the purpose of vending such goods, wares, or merchandise, in which case he must pay a license tax of $15 per month." No license is required for vending goods, wares, or merchandise which are the manufacture or product of this state, or butchers' meat.

The applicant for this writ was convicted of a violation of this ordinance in selling sewing-machines manufactured in another state. It is contended that this ordinance is in violation of the federal constitution, in that it is a regulation of commerce, control over which is by the supreme law of the land vested in congress. The identical question here presented was passed on by the supreme court of the United States in Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, and in Webber v. Virginia, 103 U. S. 344. The statutes considered in the cases cited were of the same character as the ordinance in question herein, and they were held to be unconstitutional. See, also, Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 425; Woodruff v. Parham, 8 Wall. 123; State Freight Tax, 15 Wall. 232; Mobile Co. v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691. In accordance with the judgments in the cases above cited, we are bound to hold that the ordinance before us is unconstitutional and void.

The prisoner must be discharged from custody. So ordered.

COUNTY OF SAN MATEO v. MALONEY and others.

TAXATION—COLLECTION OUT OF PERSONAL PROPERTY—DECISION OF ASSESSOR, CONCLUSIVE—COMMISSION.

The determination of an assessor, who is directed by Pol. Code Cal. § 3820, to enforce the collection of taxes out of personal property whenever, in his opinion, the lien upon the real property would be insufficient to secure payment of the taxes upon the real and personal property, that it is necessary to resort to the personal property, is binding on the courts; and upon personal property taxes thus collected he is entitled, without further question, to a commission under St. Cal. 1883-84, p. 125, giving him a commission on personal property tax collected by him as authorized by section 3820 of the Political Code. MYRICK and THORNTON, JJ., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, county of San Mateo.

¹NOTE.

As to the illegality of laws imposing higher rate of taxation on the products of other states, see Walling v. State of Michigan, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 454, and note, 460.

A tax imposed by one state on the sale of the products of another within its limits, which in purpose or effect discriminates against said products, is void. Ex parte Hanson, 28 Fed. Rep. 127, and note; In re Watson, 15 Fed. Rep. 511, and note; City of Marshalltown v. Blum, (Iowa,) 12 N. W. Rep. 266.

Edward F. Fitzgerald, for respondent, County of San Mateo. Sawyer & Burnett, for appellants, Maloney and others.

McKEE, J. This was an action against the defendant Maloney, as assessor of San Mateo county, and the sureties upon his official bond, to recover the sum of $638, which, it is alleged, he collected as taxes for the county, and, instead of paying the same over to the county treasurer, as it was his duty to do, he converted the same to his own use.

It appears by the finding of the court that between the first Mondays of March and July, 1886, the assessor served the executors of the last will of John Parrott, deceased, with a demand in writing to render to him a statement in writing, under oath, as required by law, of the specific real and personal property belonging to the estate of their testator, in their possession, or under their control, at 12 o'clock M. on the first Monday in March, 1886, to be taxed according to law. With the demand the executors neglected and refused to comply, and, upon their refusal, the assessor arbitrarily estimated the value of the personal property of the estate in their possession and under their control on that day at $1,292,879, and the real property at $62,695. Upon the assessment thus made taxes were levied on the personal property, amounting to $20,039.63, which were collected by the assessor from the personal property, "because, in his opinion, said taxes were not a lien upon any real property;" and, after enforcing the collection of the taxes on the personal property in that way, he paid all of them over to the county treasurer, except the sum of $638, which he retained as commissions for collecting said taxes.

The county contends that the assessor had no legal right to enforce the collection of the taxes against the personal property, and that he was not entitled to retain the money in his hands as commissions for collecting said taxes; and that is the question.

Upon the facts found by the court, there is no question that the assessment of the personal property, the levy of the taxes thereon, and their collection by the assessor, were lawfully made. The assessment was made under the provisions of the revenue law, which imposed upon the assessor the duty of arbitrarily estimating the value of the real and personal property of a taxpayer who neglects or refuses, after demand by the assessor, to render a statement in writing under oath of the specific real and personal property owned by him, or in his possession, or under his control, at 12 o'clock noon on the first Monday of March in each year. Sections 3629, 3633, Pol. Code. The levy of the taxes upon the assessment was also made under provisions of the same law; and the law made both the assessment and levy conclusive. The assessment was not subject to be reduced by the board of equalization. The tax levied had the effect of a judgment against the tax-payer, the levy was declared to be a lien upon the personal property itself, and also upon the real property of the tax-payer, with the force and effect of an execution levy upon both the real and personal property, and the judgment could not be satisfied, nor could the lien be removed until payment of the taxes in the manner provided by law. Sections 3716, 3717, 3752, Pol. Code, and 1669, Code Civil Proc. And, in addition to the statutory lien upon all the property, power was conferred upon the assessor to enforce collection of the taxes on the personal property whenever, in his opinion, the lien upon the real property would be insufficient to secure payment of the taxes upon the real and personal property. Section 3820, Pol. Code.

It was under that section of the Code that the taxes were collected. They were therefore lawfully collected. But the court below gave judgment for the plaintiff upon the ground that "said taxes were a lien upon the real property, and the real property was sufficient to secure the payment of said taxes;" and it decided "that said defendant, Maloney, as assessor, was not entitled to any compensation or commissions for the collection of said $20,039.63." But the law authorized the assessor to ascertain and determine whether the real property was sufficient to secure payment of the taxes upon the real and personal property; and if, "in his opinion," it was not, the law cast upon him the imperative duty of enforcing collection of the taxes against the personal property. That duty was regularly performed by the assessor, (sub. 15, § 1963, Code Civil Proc. ;) and the judgment or opinion which he formed, and upon which he acted, is not reviewable by the courts, after he has collected and paid over the taxes to the county treasurer. It is well settled that an officer to whom public duties are confided by law is not subject to the control of the courts in the exercise of the judgment and discretion which the law reposes in him as a part of his official functions. Gaines v. Thompson, 7 Wall. 347. As was said in Porter v. Haight, 45 Cal. 639: "When the state, by legislative act, confers upon a board of public officers jurisdiction to exercise their judgment and discretion upon matters within their power to perform, the courts cannot review the question whether that discretion was properly exercised." See, also, People v. Hagar, 52 Cal. 179.

The taxes were therefore lawfully collected under section 3820 of the Political Code. And the law provided: "The assessor shall be entitled to receive and retain for his own use 6 per cent. on personal property tax collected by him, as authorized by section 3820 of the Political Code." St. 1883-84, p. 125. The assessor had therefore the right to retain the money in controversy as his percentage for collecting the tax.

Let the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded. So ordered.

Ex parte SCHMIDT. (No. 20,220.

WITNESSES—DIVULGING PROCEEDINGS BEFORE GRAND JURY—INDORSING NAMES OF WITNESSES ON INDICTMENT.

A grand juror summoned as a witness upon the hearing of a motion to set aside an indictment on the ground that the names of all the witnesses examined before the grand jury have not been inserted or indorsed thereon, cannot refuse to testify as to what witnesses were examined before the grand jury.

In bank. On habeas corpus.

John B. Harmon, for petitioner.

BY THE COURT. A person had been indicted for an offense, and that person moved the court, under section 995, Pen. Code, to set aside the indictment on the ground that the names of all the witnesses examined before the grand jury had not been inserted at the foot of the indictment, or indorsed thereon. On the hearing of the motion, and in support thereof, the petitioner, a member of the grand jury, was called and sworn, and was interrogated as to whether any person was examined as a witness before the grand jury whose name was not inserted at the foot of the indictment or indorsed thereon. The petitioner refused to answer the questions, on the ground that he would thereby be disclosing secrets of the grand-jury room; and such refusal was by the court below adjudged a contempt, and the petitioner was committed. Hence this writ.

Section 943, Pen. Code, declares that the names of the witnesses examined before the grand jury, or whose depositions may have been read, must be inserted at the foot of the indictment, or indorsed thereon, before it is presented to the court; and by section 995 the failure to so insert or indorse the names of all the witnesses is made ground for setting aside the indictment. By section 925, no person, except the district attorney and witnesses under examination, are permitted to be present at the sessions of the grand jury. If, therefore, neither the members of the grand jury nor the district attorney could be called upon to state whether any witnesses were examined other than those whose names have been inserted or indorsed, a barren right to move to dismiss is given without the power to ascertain whether or not the statute has been complied with. Under our statute, the names of witnesses before the grand jury are not secrets to be undivulged, at least for the purpose herein referred to; because the moment an indictment is presented that moment the names should be a part of the record.

The petitioner is remanded, and the writ is discharged.

RIDDELL v. HARRELL. (No. 11,363.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 3, 1886.)

1. EXECUTION—SALE—SETTING ASIDE—COMPLAINT—"PROBATED"—"DURING HIS LIFE."
On a demurrer to a complaint in a suit by a devisee to set aside an execution sale of his testator's land, an averment that the will was "probated by the superior court" means, in effect, that the will was admitted to probate by the superior court; and an averment that testator was, "during his life-time," the owner of real estates, is a statement that he was the owner continuously during his life-time,—and will sustain the complaint.
2. JUDGMENT—COSTS—VOID FOR WANT OF NOTICE OF MEMORANDUM.
Where plaintiff obtains a judgment "claiming his costs," and the clerk inserts the costs in the judgment, but no memorandum of the items of the costs as required by statute was served upon defendant, the judgment for costs is as void as it would be if the memorandum had not been filed.
3. EXECUTION—SETTING ASIDE SHERIFF'S SALE—RECEIPT OF BALANCE OF PROCEEDS.
In an action by a devisee to cancel a judgment for costs against his testator, and the sheriff's sale thereunder, the presumption that the sheriff, in the execution of his duty, paid or tendered the balance of the proceeds of the sale, above the amount of the judgment and costs, to the deceased testator, raises no presumption that the testator received it, and thereby ratified, the judgment, and will not estop his devisee from seeking relief in equity for cancellation of the judgment.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county.

Action by a devisee to cancel a judgment for costs against his testator, and the sale of land, and sheriff's deed thereunder, and for a deed under order of court to plaintiff. Demurrer to complaint sustained. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals.

I. N. Thorne, for appellant. Alfred Daggett, for respondent.

MCKINSTRY, J. The court below sustained the defendant's demurrer to the complaint, which is as follows:

"The plaintiff complains and alleges:

"First. That Speer Riddell, his brother, lately deceased, was, during his life-time, the owner in fee of certain real estate, situate, lying, and being in the county of Tulare and state of California, particularly described as follows: South half of section 20, township 17 south, range 24 east; north half of south half, and north half of south half of south half, of section 21, township 17 south, range 24 east; all section 29, township 17 south, range 24 east; south half of section 30, township 17 south, range 24 east,—Mount Diablo base and meridian.

"Second. And plaintiff further says that the said Speer Riddell departed this life on the twenty-third day of October, 1884, leaving no wife or descendants, and leaving a last will and testament, which has been duly probated by the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, where said Speer Riddell resided and owned property at the time of his decease; wherein and whereby the said Speer Riddell devised to this plaintiff the whole of his estate, real and personal, subject only to the payment of certain small legacies, neither of them exceeding the sum of $100, and not exceeding in the aggregate the sum of $300; and by reason whereof this plaintiff became, was, and is the owner of and seized of all the real estate whereof the said Speer Riddell was the owner, as aforesaid, at the time of his decease.

"Third. And the plaintiff further says that the said Speer Riddell, prior to his decease, was interpleaded with one Jasper Harrell, in a suit commenced by the said Jasper Harrell against the said Speer Riddell and others, his tenants, in the superior court of Tulare county, for the recovery of certain real estate situate in the said county of Tulare other and different from the land and premises hereinbefore described; and that such proceedings were had in such suit that judgment was rendered in favor of said Harrell, and against the said Speer Riddell and others, defendants, for the recovery of the premises sued for, to which judgment, as recorded in the judgment book, there was added, without authority by the clerk of said court, a further judgment, as for costs, of $113.50, but that the copy of the judgment as recorded, attached to the judgment roll, did not contain the said sum added as for costs, but left a blank, a copy of which said judgment as recorded is hereto annexed, and marked 'Schedule A,' and which is made a part of this complaint.

"Fourth. And plaintiff further says that that part of the aforesaid judgment as for costs was added by the clerk of said court without authority of law, and in violation of the statute relating to costs, and the entry of judgment therefor; and he further says that said cause was tried in said court before the judge, sitting without a jury, and judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants for the recovery of the land sued for, and costs; that since said trial and decision no bill of costs, or copy thereof, was served on the attorneys for the defendants, or either of them, or upon said defendants or either of them, nor was there any admission or pretended admission of the service of a bill of costs, or a copy thereof, nor any affidavit or service upon defendants, or either of them, or upon defendants' attorneys, or either of them, or any proof of service of any bill of costs upon them, or either of them, presented to, or filed with, or made before the clerk of said court, whereby the said clerk could have or acquire power or jurisdiction to add to, or include as a part of, said judgment the amount of any bill of costs, or any amount, for any such purpose.

"Fifth. And this plaintiff further says that afterwards, to-wit, on the thirteenth day of March, 1884, the said plaintiff, Jasper Harrell, caused an execution to be issued in said case, out of and under the seal of said court, directed to the sheriff in Tulare county, commanding him to make $113.50 (being the amount alleged as costs in said judgment) out of the property of the defendants; that thereafter said sheriff, under and by virtue of said execution, levied upon and advertised for sale four well-known and separate and distinct parcels or lots of land, and so described in said levy and notice of sale, belonging to the defendant Speer Riddell, and being the same property hereinbefore described; and on the nineteenth day of April, 1884, the said sheriff fraudulently, in violence of his duty, and contrary to law, sold the said four well-known, separate, and distinct parcels or lots of land en masse for $400 to Jasper Harrell, plaintiff in said suit, as is shown by said execution and sheriff's return indorsed thereon, now on file in said cause, copy of which is hereto attached, marked 'Schedule B,' and which is made part thereof; and that on the day last named the said sheriff made, executed, and delivered to said Jasper Harrell his certificate of sale, showing that he had sold the said four well-known, separate, and distinct parcels or lots of land en masse, to said Harrell, for $400, and each of said parcels or lots of land is herein separately described, as in said levy and notice of sale, and the same was filed for record in the county recorder's office of Tulare county on the thirtieth day of June, 1884, copy of which is hereto attached, marked 'Schedule C,' and which is made part hereof. And plaintiff further says that W. F. Martin, said sheriff of Tulare county, on the twenty-third day of October, 1884, made and executed on the thirteenth day of November, 1884, acknowledged and delivered to said Jasper Harrell, his deed purporting, in consideration of $400, to convey to said Harrell all the right, title, and interest of the said defendants in and to four well-known, separate, and distinct parcels or lots of land, same as hereinbefore described; and on the day last named the same was filed for record in the county recorder's office of Tulare county, to which reference is hereby made, and which is hereby made part hereof.

"Sixth. And plaintiff further says that neither the attorneys of said defendants, nor either of them, nor the defendants, nor either of them, nor the plaintiff in this suit, had any knowledge, notice, information, or belief that any amount as for costs had ever been added to or included in the judgment made and entered in said cause, or that any cost-bill had ever been filed by said plaintiff or his attorney with the clerk of said court, or that any execution had been issued in said cause, or that any sheriff's sale under execution of any property of any of the defendants had been made, or that the sheriff of Tulare county had made any certificate of sale of any such property, or had made any sheriff's deed of any such property, to any person whatever, until the seventeenth day of November, this present month and year, when said facts first accidentally became known to this plaintiff.

"Seventh. And said plaintiff further alleges that the said four parcels or lots of land are now, and were at the time of said levy and sale, greatly in excess in value of the said supposed judgment for costs; and that each parcel or lot of said land now is, and was at the several times last aforesaid, largely in excess in value of the amount of said costs, and would have sold, at a fair and honest sale, for more than enough to pay said alleged judgment for costs; and that the aggregate value of said four parcels or lots of land was at several times last aforesaid, and is now, the just and full sum of $25,000. Wherefore, plaintiff prays," etc.

We think the complaint is not one to be commended as a model pleading, but are compelled to hold it not fatally defective.

1. It is contended by respondent that the demurrer was properly sustained, because there is no sufficient allegation that plaintiff ever had any interest in or title to the lands described in the complaint. The complaint avers that Speer Riddell died, leaving a last will and testament, wherein and whereby he devised to the plaintiff the whole of his estate, real and personal. But, it is said, there is no allegation that the will was proved or established by the decree of a court of competent jurisdiction. The complaint avers that the will "has been duly probated by the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, where the said Speer Riddell resided and owned property at the time of his decease." If the judgment admitting the will to probate is pleaded at all, the Code of Civil Procedure only requires the prefix "duly." Section 456. The real question, then, is whether an averment that the will was "probated by the superior court" is, in effect, an averment that the will was admitted to probate by the judgment of the superior court. As a will can only be admitted to probate by a judgment, an averment that a will was admitted to probate by the superior court, having jurisdiction to make and enter the judgment, is an averment of the judgment. It would be difficult to distinguish between an allegation that the will was probated "by" the superior court and one that is admitted to probate by that court. The verbalizing of the word "probate" ought not to take from the intended meaning.

2. It is urged the complaint contains no averment that Speer Riddell had any interest in the lands described in the complaint at the time of his death. The averment is that Speer Riddell was, "during his life-time," the owner, etc. This is a statement that he was the owner continuously throughout his life-time.

3. The respondent insists the complaint shows that the judgment in Harrell v. Riddell was a valid judgment, and the execution sale valid.

Sections 510 and 511 of the former practice act provided:

"Sec. 510. The party in whose favor judgment is rendered, and who claims his costs, shall deliver to the clerk of the court a memorandum of the items of the costs to which he is entitled. He may include in the costs * * *. The memorandum shall be accompanied by the affidavit of the party. * * *. The memorandum and affidavit shall be delivered to the clerk within twenty-four hours after the rendition of the verdict, or the costs shall be deemed waived.

"Sec. 511. The clerk shall include in the judgment entered up by him the costs, the percentage allowed, and any interest on the verdict from the time it was rendered." St. 1851, pp. 131, 132.

In Chapin v. Broder, 16 Cal. 418, it was held that the insertion of a sum as costs in a judgment by the clerk was a mere ministerial act, depending entirely on the filing of a memorandum for its authority, and that the judgment, so far as the costs were concerned, was void unless based on a memorandum filed; that a party who failed to comply with the statute by filing his memorandum waived all claim for costs.

Sections 1033 and 1035 of the Code of Civil Procedure read:

"Sec. 1033. The party in whose favor judgment is rendered, and who claims his costs, must deliver to the clerk, and serve upon the adverse party, within five days after the verdict or notice of the decision of the court or referee,—or, if the entry of the judgment on the verdict or decision be staid, then before such entry is made,—a memorandum of the items of his costs and necessary disbursements in the action or proceeding, which memorandum must be verified by the oath of the party, or his attorney or agent, or by the clerk of his attorney, stating * * *. A party dissatisfied with the costs claimed, may, within five days after notice of filing of the bill of costs, file a motion to have the same taxed by the court in which the judgment was rendered, or by the judge thereof at chambers."

"Sec. 1035. The clerk must include in the judgment entered up by him any interest on the verdict or decision of the court from the time it was rendered or made, and the costs, if the same have been taxed or ascertained; and he must, within two days after the same are taxed or ascertained, if not included in the judgment, insert the same in a blank left in the judgment for that purpose."

If the insertion of costs in the judgment is merely the ministerial act of the clerk,—an act which can only be performed in the cases in which the statute allows it,—the judgment for costs is void, as well when the memorandum has not been served on the opposite party, as when no memorandum has been filed. The omission from section 1033 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the clause in section 510 of the practice act, which provided that a failure by the prevailing party to file his memorandum of costs within the time limited should be deemed a waiver of his costs, is not a material circumstance. The Code contemplates that such shall be the result, since the only costs which the clerk is authorized to insert are those claimed, and “taxed or ascertained,” in the manner provided.

4. It is said plaintiff, as successor in interest of Speer Riddell, is estopped from seeking relief in equity, because the latter ratified the sheriff's sale by receiving from the officer the excess of the proceeds of the sale beyond the amount of the judgment and the accruing costs. It does not appear from the complaint that Speer Riddell received, or that there was tendered to him any part of the proceeds of the sale. And even if it should be conceded that there would be any presumption that the sheriff paid or tendered such excess to Speer Riddell, the defendant in execution,—in other words, a presumption that the officer discharged his duty,—this would be met by the averment in the complaint that neither Speer Riddell nor plaintiff had any knowledge, notice, information, or belief that any amount as for costs had been inserted in the judgment, or that any cost-bill had ever been filed, or that any execution had ever been issued, or of any sale thereunder, or of any certificate or deed by the sheriff, until the seventeenth of November, 1875. Moreover, if defendant here could rely on a presumption that the sheriff did his duty, that officer fully discharged his duty by tendering the excess of the proceeds of the sale of any excess there was to Speer Riddell. There is no presumption that Speer Riddell received the money.

5. The mere fact that several separate tracts were sold together by the sheriff would not constitute a cause of action.

6. Respondent relies upon the omission to allege that the amount of costs inserted by the clerk was not justly due as costs. But if the service of the memorandum is a jurisdictional fact, and the claim of the plaintiff to any costs existed as an enforceable claim only after the statute was complied with, no sum was legally due for costs when the clerk inserted a sum in the judgment.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded, with instructions to the court below to overrule the demurrer, with leave to the defendant to answer.

PEOPLE v. STOKES. (No. 20,221.)

1. ADULTERY—PROOF OF MARRIAGE—MARRIAGE CERTIFICATE—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.
St. Cal. 1871-72, p. 380, providing for the punishment of adultery, and making a recorded certificate of marriage proof of marriage for the purpose of the act, does not exclude other proof of the marriage.

2. SAME—EVIDENCE—MARRIAGE CERTIFICATE—INDICTMENT—VARIANCE.

Where, in a trial of John W. Stokes for adultery, the record of a marriage certificate introduced in evidence shows a marriage of John Stokes to Rebecca Gibson, the testimony of a witness that he was present when defendant was married to Rachael Gibson, in the year when, at the place where, and by the person by whom, the record shows the marriage was performed, is admissible as tending to identify the parties named in the certificate.

3. SAME—COHABITATION.

Evidence that defendant and Rachael Gibson lived as man and wife for many years, and that she bore him children, if not admissible as proof of marriage in a trial on a charge of adultery, is admissible as tending to identify the parties named in the certificate.

4. SAME—NAMES IN MARRIAGE CERTIFICATE.

Evidence of the real names of the parties, contradicting the names in a marriage certificate, does not contradict the certificate, the minister not being required to guaranty that the persons named were married in their true names.

5. HUSBAND AND WIFE—MARRIAGE—PRESUMPTION OF CONTINUANCE OF STATUS.

The status of marriage, having been proved, is presumed to continue, and the presumption can only be overcome by evidence of death or divorce.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county.

Atwell & Bradley, for appellant. E. C. Marshall, Atty. Gen., for the People.

McKINSTRY, J. The defendant was found guilty of the misdemeanor defined in the first section of "An act to punish adultery," which reads: "Every person who lives in a state of open and notorious cohabitation and adultery is guilty of a misdemeanor, and is punishable," etc. St. 1871-72, p. 380. The third section of the act provides: "A recorded certificate of marriage, or a certified copy thereof, there being no decree of divorce, proves the marriage of a person for the purposes of this act."

At the trial the prosecution called the county recorder of Tulare, the custodian of the records, who read from his records as follows:

"John Stokes to Rebecca Gibson. This certifies that on the twenty-second day of May, in the year of our Lord 1859, John Stokes, of Tulare county, Cal., and Rebecca Gibson, of the same county and state, were by me united in marriage at the school-house, in the Persian district, in the said county, according to the laws of California and the customs of the church to which I belong.

E. B. LOCKLEY, Methodist Preacher."

"Filed for record June 18, 1859, at 10 A. M., and recorded same day, at 2 o'clock P. M.

E. E. CALHOUN, Recorder."

To the record the defendant objected that it was irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent, because it did not appear that the John Stokes married was the defendant. When the objection was made the district attorney said: "We propose to follow this up with proof that the John Stokes mentioned in this record is the person mentioned in the indictment as John W. Stokes," and thereupon the objection was overruled.

The prosecution subsequently called a witness, who testified that, in the year 1859, he was present in the "Persian school-house," when a marriage was celebrated by a Methodist preacher, named Lockley, between the defendant and Rachael Gibson. This, of itself, was evidence of the defendant's marriage. The statute does not exclude all evidence of marriage other than the record of the certificate. If it be suggested that the jury may have disbelieved the witness, and relied on the record of the certificate as proof of the marriage, still the testimony of the witness was admissible as tending to identify the parties named in the certificate. There was also evidence that the defendant and Rachael lived together, avowedly as man and wife, for many years. Under our law, that would be evidence of a marriage in prosecution for bigamy. Pen. Code, 1106. Even if it should be conceded that in this action it would not be evidence of marriage, it was evidence tending to identify the defendant and Rachael Gibson as the persons mentioned in the certificate.

It is said the record of a marriage between John Stokes and Rebecca Gibson was contradicted by evidence tending to prove that John W. Stokes was married to Rachael or Rachael M. Gibson. Counsel argue that, in a criminal case, the jury "could not infer" against the defendant, that Rachael M. Gibson was the person referred to in the certificate. But the jury were not left to infer the identity of the persons from the bald fact of identity in their surnames. There was evidence tending to prove that John W. Stokes and Rachael M. Gibson were the very persons married by the Methodist preacher, Mr. Lockley, in the Persian school-district, in the year 1859; and other evidence tending to prove that John W. and Rachael M. were the persons mentioned in the certificate of record by the names, John and Rebecca. The marriage was a valid marriage, even if the parties gave the wrong names to the preacher, or the latter mistook the names. Men and women are conjoined in matrimony, and a defendant charged with bigamy or adultery cannot, in this country, base a defense on the ground that he or his wife was married under an assumed name, not his or her real name. In such case, evidence of the real names does not contradict the certificate, since the minister or other person authorized to perform the marriage ceremony is not required to guarantee the fact that the persons married were married in their true names. Certainly the omission of a middle name or initial does not invalidate the marriage nor detract from the effect of the recorded certificate.

At common law, in cases of alleged bigamy, proof of an actual marriage, or at least an admission of former marriage, was ordinarily required. The presumption of a marriage, (in favor of morality), arising in civil causes, from open and avowed cohabitation as man and wife, was overcome, in cases where the person was charged with the crime of bigamy, by the counter-presumption of defendant's innocence. If the common-law rule obtain in prosecutions like the present, still evidence that the defendant and Rachael M. lived together for 20 years as man and wife, and that she bore children to him, tended to identify John W. and Rachael M. as the persons mentioned in the certificate by the names of John Stokes and Rebecca Gibson.

It is said that the prosecution, relying on the statutory evidence of the marriage, should have proved that the parties had not been divorced. But the statute does not declare that a recorded certificate of marriage proves marriage only when accompanied by evidence that the parties have not been divorced. It proves that marriage, and also the continuance of the marriage, "there being no decree of divorce." Aside from the inherent difficulty of proving the negative, a decree of divorce could not affect the evidence of the fact that marriage was contracted, since marriage must precede divorce. The status of marriage being proved, is presumed to continue until death or divorce. This presumption can be overcome only by proof of the dissolution of the marriage. It was incumbent on the prosecution to prove a subsisting marriage at the time of the offense charged, but the subsisting marriage was proved prima facie by proof that the marriage was contracted.

Appellant also claims that there is no proof the defendant's wife was living at the time of his alleged cohabitation with the woman named in the indictment. In the absence of affirmative evidence, the dissolution of the marriage is not to be presumed to have occurred, either by divorce or by the death of one of the parties to it. In the latter case, the presumption of death is created by evidence that a party to the marriage has not been heard from in seven years. Code Civil Proc. 1963. There is no presumption of law that life will not continue for any period, however long. But juries are justified in presuming as a fact that a person is dead who has not been heard of for seven years. Roscoe, Crim. Ev. 18. Under our Code, the jury is bound to presume that a person not heard from in seven years is dead. But this presumption is disputable, and may, in its turn, like the presumption of continued life, be overcome by other evidence. Code Crim. Proc. 1963. Moreover, there was affirmative evidence that the wife was still living at the time of the trial of this action. The witness Elizabeth Balaam testified: "She is in San Luis Obispo county." It would be to distort the ordinary meaning of language to hold that the witness said, or intended to say, her sister was buried in San Luis Obispo.

The jury were justified in holding that the defendant was a married man. There was abundant evidence that while married he "lived in a state of open and notorious cohabitation and adultery."

Judgment and order affirmed.

An undertaking stating that its purpose is to stay execution on appeal, and following Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 942, which provides for undertaking for that purpose, will not be construed to include the $300 undertaking on appeal required by Code Civil Proc. Cal. §§ 940, 941.

BY THE COURT. Motion to dismiss an appeal. There is no $300 undertaking on appeal as required by sections 940 and 941, Code Civil Proc. The undertaking closely follows section 942, Code Civil Proc., which prescribes the requisites of the undertaking to stay execution. We are therefore of opinion that the undertaking must be construed to be given for the purpose stated in the undertaking; that is, to stay execution. We cannot construe it to include the $300 undertaking on appeal. Motion granted.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action to recover a fund composed of moneys deposited with defendant, from time to time, by "Division No. 1," Ancient Order of Hibernians. Judgment for plaintiffs, and motion by defendants for a new trial. Motion overruled, and defendants appeal. The facts are sufficiently stated in the opinion.

M. C. Hassett, J. D. Sullivan, and D. T. Sullivan, for appellants. D. L. Smoot, for respondents.

McKEE, J. This is an appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial. The order appealed from was made upon a statement of the case. The case shows that plaintiffs and substituted defendants, respectively, claim to be the officers and directors of an association or society in the city and county of San Francisco known as the "Ancient Order of Hibernians, Division No. 1," and entitled to a fund composed of moneys paid into court by the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society, which were deposited with it from time to time by said division No. 1.

Upon the trial of the issues raised by the pleadings between these rival claimants of the fund, the court found as facts: "First. That the $3,349.15 paid into court by the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society, and now in the treasury of the city and county of San Francisco, is the property of Division No. 1 of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, of the city and county of San Francisco. Second. That the plaintiffs constitute and represent the said division, and the substituted defendants do not. Third. That the said division is not a corporation, but a voluntary association of persons for benevolent purposes, and that the substituted defendants, designated as the 'Ancient Order of Hibernians' General Benevolent Society of California,' is not an existing corporation, with title to said money. Fourth. That the said division annually selects certain of its members to take charge of the division's property, and styles them trustees; that these trustees at present are John Collins, John Breslin, P. M. Cleary, Michael Sullivan, and Daniel O'Leary."

Upon these facts the court awarded possession and control of the fund to the plaintiffs, in trust for the use and benefit of division No. 1.

The principal grounds assigned by defendants upon their motion for a new trial were that the findings, conclusions of law, and judgment are wholly unsupported by the evidence, and that the findings are not responsive to the issues made by the pleadings. It is upon these grounds that the case has been argued and submitted.

As to the first finding, both parties concede that the fund in controversy belonged to division No. 1 of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, of the city and county of San Francisco.

As to the second finding, the evidence contained in the record clearly shows that the "division" was organized by authority, in January, 1869, as a voluntary Catholic association or society for benevolent purposes; that it has since continued to exist, maintaining fraternal relations between all its members, and with other divisions of the order, until the year 1878; that in that year the division had on its roll-call the names of 500 members, and on deposit in bank several thousands of dollars; that it held annual elections of officers in June of each year; and that in June, 1878, the plaintiffs were regularly elected and qualified as its officers and directors. The election of these officers was never contested, and for several months they exercised their functions without dissension or disorder. But in September, 1878, the county judicature of the order in San Francisco discovered that the president and other officers of the division, in initiating new members into the order, worked under a formula which it considered illegal, because it was not in conformity with the rules and regulations upon the subject promulgated by a national convention of the order held in Boston in May, 1878, and it directed the president to change the mode of initiation, so as to conform to the law of the order as established by the Boston convention. In the same year, however, a national convention of the order which was held in New York denounced the Boston convention as an illegal body, wholly without authority to give law to the order in the United States; and division No. 1, in San Francisco, following New York, refused to obey the "county delegate," and continued to work under the formula of initiation which, it claimed, was prescribed by the "head of the order" in Ireland. This created dissension in the order, and, upon a question as to the proper form of initiation, not only division No. 1, but the order itself, "split" in two.

Admittedly, however, certain of the defendants, in connection with such others of the members of division No. 1 as recognized the authority of the Boston convention, refused to attend the division meetings; and on the eighth of November, 1878, they held a special meeting outside the division room, presided over by the county delegate of the order, at which a resolution was passed declaring that the offices of president and treasurer of the division were vacant, and two of the defendants were selected to fill the vacancies, and others of them were chosen to act as trustees. But such action was without color of authority. Neither opposition to the authority under which officers of an association act in the performance of their functions, nor irregularity in the performance of their functions, will authorize members of the association to secede for the purpose of expelling its regularly elected officers, declaring their offices vacant, and constituting themselves as their successors in office. For any offense committed by a division officer the laws of the order provided a remedy within, and not without, the division itself. An outside movement would be wholly ineffectual to disturb him in his office; so that, when the plaintiffs commenced their action in January, 1879, they were legally in possession of the organization, as the legally elected officers and trustees of the division, and the finding of the court that they represented the division, and were entitled to the possession and control of its funds, is fully sustained by the evidence.

As to the third finding, there appears to have been no conflict in the evidence upon which it is founded. The only evidence upon the question is that in July, 1869, when the division numbered 50 or 60 members, 2 of them,—Bernard Conlan and William Dolan,—on the fourteenth of July, 1869, prepared a certificate to the effect "that on the twelfth of July, 1869, a meeting of the members of a society or association, not yet incorporated, known as 'The Ancient Order of Hibernians' General Benevolent Society of California,' * * * was held for the purpose of incorporating themselves according to law; that at the meeting it was resolved that the said society should be incorporated and assume corporate powers under the laws of the state, and exercise such powers under the said corporate name, having its principal place of business in the city of San Francisco; and that there was then chosen, by ballot, seven persons to act as a board of directors of said corporation for one year." This certificate Conlan and Dolan signed, acknowledged, and caused a copy to be filed in the office of the secretary of state. But as articles of incorporation, the certificate was legally defective for want of conformity to the statutory requirements under which it purported to have been made; and, aside from the defects which rendered it inapt, Conlan and Dolan, and those acting with them in the movement, did not attempt to exercise corporate functions under it, in connection with or as "Division No. 1 of the Ancient Order of Hibernians." Therefore the certificate was not proof of a corporation in esse. Wood, Dig. 119, § 2; Hill v. Woodbury, 14 Cal. 425; Harris v. McGregor, 29 Cal. 127; People v. Selfridge, 52 Cal. 331.

Besides, it was not claimed by the defendants that there existed at the commencement of the action a society or association by the name of "The Ancient Order of Hibernians' General Benevolent Society of California," as a chartered corporation, or that they were, under that corporate name, entitled to the funds of the division; and the finding that the division was not a corporation, and that the defendants were not a corporation with title to the division's funds, was fully sustained by the evidence.

But it is insisted that the order appealed from should be reversed, because the court did not find upon an issue of compromise presented by certain supplemental pleadings in the case. There was evidence given, without objection, which proved that a state convention of the order had met at San Jose, after the commencement of the action, and proposed a compromise of the dissensions in the division, and that the plaintiffs and the defendants afterwards held a meeting for the purpose of harmonizing and settling their disputes; but the meeting was discordant and resulted in failure. Whether that was in consequence of the conduct of one or the other of the contesting parties is of no moment. The proposed compromise did not affect the title of the plaintiffs to their offices; and by the failure to compromise, from whatever cause, they did not waive any of their legal rights. So far as the question of their rights was concerned, the issue of a compromise was immaterial, and it was not necessary for the court to make any finding about it. Order affirmed.

TRIAL—SUBPENA DUCES TECUM—IDENTIFICATION OF TELEGRAMS—CONTEMPT.

A witness served with a subpœna duces tecum, requiring him to search for and produce all telegraphic messages from a number of persons to many other persons, between certain specified dates, with no further identification of the messages, is not bound to respond.

In bank. Habeas corpus.

The petitioner was an employe of the Western Union Telegraph Company. On the trial of a cause involving the ownership of property in another state, some of the parties believing that frauds were being perpetrated concerning such property, in pursuance of telegraphic directions by one claiming the ownership of the property, applied for a subpœna duces tecum, to compel petitioner, who had charge of all the messages sent through the Western Union Telegraph Company, to produce all messages sent by the company between certain dates, from such claimant of the property to a number of designated persons in the place where the property was situated, and who were supposed to have control of the property. This petitioner refused to do, unless the particular messages sought were identified. Petitioner was then adjudged guilty of contempt, and committed to jail, whereupon he applied for a writ of habeas corpus.

BY THE COURT. The petitioner was served with subpœna duces tecum, requiring him to produce telegraphic messages, but there was nothing to point his attention to any particular message or messages.

He was required to search for and produce all messages from a number of persons, to many other persons, between certain specified dates. The service of the subpoena was an evident search after testimony. The petitioner was not bound to respond, and committed no contempt in failing to examine the papers under his control to ascertain if any such messages had been sent or received.

COURTS—STATE—PROBATE—ORDER TO PAY IN—TITLE INVOLVED—CONTEMPT.

The probate court has no authority to make an order for the payment into a bank, subject to its further orders, of money of the decedent claimed by the party holding it as her money in virtue of the gift of the decedent, or to commit such party for contempt in disobeying such order, as no power to make such order is conferred by Code Civil Proc. Cal. §§ 1459-1461, nor by § 572.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Committal by probate court for contempt. Application for writ of habeas corpus.

G. W. Langan and H. C. Newhall, for petitioner. M. Cooney, contra.

FOOTE, C. Mrs. Ellen Casey, the petitioner, is in possession of a sum of money which the executor of a certain Mrs. Zephyr claimed as belonging to the estate of his decedent. After an examination under the statute, (sections 1459-1461, Code Civil Proc.,) Mrs. Casey was cited to show cause why she should not be punished for a contempt of the probate court in not obeying its order commanding her to deposit the money in a bank, subject to that tribunal's order. She appeared, claimed that the money had been given to her by Mrs. Zephyr before the latter's death, and introduced evidence tending to establish her own title to it. The court heard testimony in favor of and controverting her right to the money, and then made its order committing her for contempt in refusing to deposit it in a bank. The petitioner has sued out a writ of habeas corpus for the purpose of regaining her liberty.

According to the evidence adduced in this proceeding, the petitioner was either the owner by gift from Mrs. Zephyr of the money in controversy, or she had embezzled it after the latter had intrusted it to her to be deposited in bank. The dispute between Mrs. Casey and the executor necessarily involved the title to that money, and the question for determination is whether or not the probate court had the right, upon such a summary proceeding as that taken here, to order Mrs. Casey to be committed for contempt in failing to obey its order, which involved the transfer of the property which she claimed and asserted title to into the custody of a bank of the court's choosing. If the evidence had shown that Mrs. Casey claimed no title to the money in dispute, but admitted it to be the decedent's property at her death, the question presented would be different. But here the claim is made, and supported by some evidence, at least, although there is a sharp and decided conflict about it, that the money which the executor claims as assets of the decedent's estate was given to Mrs. Casey, and was in her possession as her property, before the decedent's death. It necessarily follows, then, that, in order to commit Mrs. Casey for contempt in not obeying the order of the probate court, that tribunal must have decided that the title to this property was not in her. Can such an issue, vital to the exercise of the court's power, be legally determined in such a proceeding?

The question, it seems to us, is very clearly answered by this court as follows: "The title upon which his adverse claim was founded may be invalid. It may have been obtained by fraudulent and corrupt practices. It is a principle which underlies all institutions and forms of government that no man can be deprived of his property, except in proceedings according to law, unless it be confiscated for the necessities or good of the public. If his title is claimed to be invalid or fraudulent and void, he is entitled to be heard according to the forms of law. Proceedings to punish him for contempt, for not delivering it up without a trial according to law, to another who claims it, are not the appropriate proceedings for the trial of an issue of title. The issue as to such title should be tried in an appropriate action, in which the verdict of a jury or the findings of the court may be had upon issues properly framed for the purpose of definitely determining the question of title." Ex parte Hollis, 59 Cal. 406-413. "Proceedings to punish a party for contempt are not the appropriate proceedings for the trial of the issue of title." Larrabee v. Selby, 52 Cal. 506-508.

It is true that in the present case the order of the court did not command the petitioner to pay over the money to the executor; but it did command her to deposit what she claimed was her money in a bank subject to the further order of that tribunal. To give the right to the court to make such an order, it must first have determined that she had no title to it; for if otherwise, and her right was not determined or considered, she being in possession of the money, claiming it as her own, then that tribunal had no legal authority to make any such order, and therefore the question of title must necessarily have been passed upon.

Sections 1459 to 1461 of the Code of Civil Procedure—portions of the statute appertaining to probate proceedings—provide, it is true, for the citation and examination of parties alleged to have in their possession property belonging to an estate; but they do not declare that the court may, after such an examination, when the title to the property is in dispute, order such effects to be delivered up to the executor or administrator, or deposited where the court may order; and if such had been the legislative intention it was easy to have asserted it in apt language.

Section 572, Code Civil Proc., refers to property which is, without question, in the hands of a trustee as trust property, or which belongs to or is due to another. It does not refer to that where the party alleged to hold as a trustee claims title to it in his own right.

We fail to find anywhere in our constitution or statutes any language which gives to a superior court, in a summary proceeding of the kind invoked here, the right to adjudicate the title to property.

For these reasons the petitioner should be discharged from custody.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; BELCHER, C. C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the petitioner is discharged.

THORNTON, J. I concur in the order directed in this case. I can see no power in any court in this state to appoint a receiver without an action brought to which the person to be affected by the order is a party. This appears from section 564, Code Civil Proc. In this case no action has been brought, and, conceding that power to make the order which was made in this case is included in the power to appoint a receiver, the circumstance that no action has been instituted is conclusive to show that the court had no power to make the order. No power to make such order is conferred by sections 1459 to 1461, Code of Civil Procedure, nor by section 572 of same Code. In this last section, by the words "shown by the examination of a party," reference is had to a party to an action. That is plainly evidenced by the preceding words, "when it is admitted by the pleading." The pleading spoken of can only be the pleading in an action, and the examination of a party can have reference only to a party to the action. The meaning of the section is the same as if it commenced with the words, "In an action, when it is admitted by the pleading," etc.

It may be said here that, granting that the case before us is such as is specified in section 572, the order authorized by that section has not been made. The order made directs the petitioner here to deposit the sum of money about which the controversy has arisen in a bank; the order allowed by section 572 is that the party pay the money into court, or to the party to whom it is admitted by the pleading, or shown by the examination of the party, to belong or be due. The order made in this case, directing the petitioner to deposit the money in a bank, was made without authority.

For the above reasons I think that the applicant for the writ should be discharged, and concur in the order discharging her from custody.

Where a prospecting partnership has been dissolved by mutual consent of the partners, there is no implied duty upon any of the partners to go on, and complete defective locations, and, having done so, they are not chargeable as trustees of the others.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Mono county.

April 15, 1881, plaintiffs and defendant Young entered into an agreement to form a prospecting company to discover and acquire mining claims in Mono county, California. All were to be equally interested, and share alike, in all mining claims located by the company in name or names of any of its members. April 27, 1881, defendant Young and plaintiff Frost made a discovery of a claim, erected a monument, with notice of claim thereon, and called it "Kentuck." May 5, 1881, they located in the same way the "May Bell." These are the claims in controversy. May 12, 1881, the partnership was mutually dissolved. May 19, 1881, the defendants and plaintiff Frost located these claims and set up proper boundary monuments. Frost afterwards conveyed all his interest to the defendants. Plaintiffs seek to compel defendants to convey to them title of their share of the claims, and account for the proceeds of the mining.

Stewart & Herrin, for appellants, Page and others. Bennett & Reddy, for respondents, Summers and others.

MCKINSTRY, J. The court below found "that on the twelfth day of May, 1881, the said J. H. Page withdrew from the said prospecting company, and the said prospecting company was dissolved, and the said prospecting agreement was terminated between all the parties thereto."

It is insisted by counsel for appellants that the parties to the prospecting contract were partners, or at least occupied a fiduciary relation towards each other, like that existing between partners; that it was the duty of Frost and Young to complete the defective locations commenced before the dissolution, and that the subsequent locations made by Frost and Young should be treated precisely as if they were the completion of their prior attempted locations; that neither Frost nor Young could get rid of his obligation to complete the original locations by removing the original notices, and posting others, and marking the boundaries of the claims asserted in the notices last posted. Further, that G. M. and J. N. Summers, who took with notice of the prospecting agreement, should be held as trustees.

Where a partnership has contracted engagements which cannot be fulfilled during the time limited for its existence, the partnership continues for the purpose of performing such outstanding engagements, and of taking and settling all accounts, and converting the property, means, and assets of the partnership existing at the time of its dissolution, and for these purposes the authority of each member of the firm remains the same after as before the dissolution. Robbins v. Fuller, 24 N. Y. 570; Murray v. Mumford, 6 Cow. 441; Western Co. v. Walker, 2 Iowa, 504.

The interest of the parties herein, in the completion of the defective locations, ought not to be estimated by reference to events which happened after the termination of the agreement, even if it appeared that the rights acquired by the subsequent locations were valuable. The agreement was made in Mono county, the mines located were within that county, and, for aught that appears, all the parties to the agreement resided there. There is no finding of the concealment of any fact from the plaintiffs. It must be presumed that, with full knowledge of the existing conditions, all parties to the agreement terminated it, and dissolved the contractual relations arising from it. Page, Fulmore, and Blake may have concluded that the ground was valueless, or that it would be fruitless to complete the locations, or to expend money in developing them. Whatever motive may have influenced them, they saw fit to dissolve the company, and end the agreement and enterprise. It may be conceded that the parties to the prospecting contract might, had they deemed it for their interest to do so, have completed the locations previously commenced within a reasonable time, and that they would have been protected, during such reasonable time, from the interference of third persons. But it was for them to determine whether it was advisable to complete the locations or abandon them.

None of them had contracted an obligation with the government, or with any third person, to be performed after May 12, 1881. No duty remained with any of them to acquire property not contracted for prior to the dissolution. They had acquired no inchoate interest in property which they were under obligation to complete, notwithstanding the dissolution. The plaintiffs (other than Frost) could not have been compelled to take a conveyance of aliquot portions of the ground subsequently located, nor were they liable to the actual locators for part of the cost of making the subsequent locations, nor subject to pay any part of the expense for work done under such locations. It may be added, the court below found that Frost and Young removed and destroyed the original notices. It does not appear but this was done after the dissolution of the agreement, nor does it appear but it was done with the knowledge and consent of the other plaintiffs.

There are reasons, not necessary to mention, why (independent of the termination of the prospecting contract) none of the plaintiffs could demand a decree for a conveyance of any portion of the "Georgie Howell," located by Frost; why Frost is not entitled to any relief; why neither Frost nor Blake could enforce the agreement as against any of the mines located. Reasons, also, why, in any event, the defendants G. M. & J. N. Summers would hold two-thirds of the "May Bell" and one-half of the "Kentuck" free from any trust.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. ALIENS AND NATURALIZATION—SUCCESSION BY NON-RESIDENT FOREIGNERS—ARTICLE 1, § 17, CONST. CAL.

Article 1, § 17, Const. 2. SAME—CODE CIVIL PROC. CAL. § 671—LAW HAVING EXTRATERRITORIAL OPERATION.
Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 671, providing for succession by non-resident foreigners, confers a right to be enjoyed within the state, and is not beyond the legislative power as a law having an extraterritorial operation.

Under section 672, Civil Code Cal., requiring a non-resident alien, in order to take by succession, to "appear and claim the property," etc., appearance in person or by attorney, and claim by taking possession, or conveying or contracting with respect to the property, or any acts in the state indicating that the alien asserts a right to it, are sufficient.
4. SAME—ESCHEAT—ACTION PREMATURE—OFFICE FOUND—CIVIL CODE CAL. § 672.
Under Civil Code Cal. § 672, providing that the non-resident alien must appear and claim the property "within five years from the time of succession," or be barred, a proceeding brought by the attorney general to secure to the school fund, under Const. Cal., art. 9, § 4, the estate of an intestate who left no resident heirs as an escheat, is premature if instituted within five years after the death of the intestate.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county.

John Smith, a native of England, a resident of California, and a naturalized citizen of the United States, died intestate in Sacramento, California, November 3, 1883, leaving an estate of real and personal property. He left no heirs resident in the United States, but did leave one nephew and three nieces in England, his only next of kin. The nephew, the defendant, John Smith, Jr., came to California, obtained letters of administration after having declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, and, for himself and the other next of kin, "appeared and claimed the estate." Under this claim the estate was distributed equally to the next of kin, from whom the other defendants derive their title. In January, 1885, this action was brought by the state to declare said estate escheated to the state. The superior court rendered judgment for defendant, and the plaintiff appeals.

McKINSTRY, J. The constitution (article 1, § 17) prohibits the legislature from depriving resident foreigners of any of the rights enjoyed by native-born citizens with respect to the acquisition, possession, enjoyment, transmission, or inheritance of property. There is no provision of the constitution which prohibits the legislature from conferring the same rights upon those born in foreign countries who have never been residents of the state.

Section 671 of the Civil Code provides: "Any person, whether citizen or alien, may take, hold, and dispose of property, real or personal, within this state." It is suggested that, inasmuch as laws can have no extraterritorial operation, the legislature has no power to provide for succession by foreigners who have never been residents. But this section of the Code provides a rule with respect to property within the state. It confers a right to be enjoyed within the jurisdiction.

Section 672 of the Civil Code reads: "If a non-resident alien takes by succession, he must appear and claim the property within five years from the time of succession, or be barred. The property, in such case, is disposed of as provided in title 8, pt. 3, Code Civil Proc." The words "non-resident alien" are severely criticised by counsel for appellant. We find no difficulty in interpreting them as indicating those who are neither citizens of the United States nor residents of the state.

All aliens take by succession. Civil Code, 671. The failure of a non-resident alien to "appear and claim" within five years after descent cast, operates a bar of his right to assert any title in the property as against the state; and this, not on the idea that the property has escheated to the state as of the date of the death of the ancestor, but because by the law the "non-resident" takes subject to the loss of his right by a failure to make claim within the five years. The clause of section 672 is a limitation, applicable, however, not alone to the commencement of an action in the courts, but to any appearance within the state, and the assertion of a claim, whether by such action or otherwise. The claim may be in pais, as by taking possession of the property, or conveying, or contracting with respect to it. If he fails to appear and claim it, the property is escheat at the expiration of the five years. In "such case" the property is disposed of as provided in title 8, pt. 3, Code Civil Proc. It would seem to follow that a "non-resident alien" would have no defense to an inquest to "vest the title in the state" in the nature of office found, except a defense based on his "appearance and claim" within the five years, and it necessarily follows that a proceeding brought by the attorney general under title 8, pt. 3, is premature if commenced within five years after the death of the ancestor.

Section 1272 of the Code of Civil Procedure, so far as it applies to a non-resident alien, not a party or privy to the proceedings prescribed in title 8, only authorizes him to show that which he might have shown had he been made a party, to-wit, that he did appear and claim the property "within five years from the time of the succession." The statute gives to the non-resident alien full five years to "appear and claim" the property, and gives him no more. There is no limitation of time (certainly none less than 10 years after the "succession") within which the action provided for in the Code of Civil Procedure must be commenced by the attorney general. The five years given the non-resident alien can have no reference to the proceeding commenced by the attorney general. No statutory machinery is provided in accordance with which the alien must appear and give notice of his claim. The provision of section 672 of the Civil Code, requiring the alien to "appear and claim the property," relates to an appearance and claim, to be proved by acts within the state indicating that the alien asserts a right to it, or the provision means nothing.

Section 4 of article 9 of the constitution provides that "the proceeds" of the estates of deceased persons who may have died without leaving any "heir" shall constitute a part of the school fund. It does not limit the power of the legislature to declare that aliens may be heirs. Moreover, it speaks of the proceeds of the lands, evidently contemplating some procedure in the nature of office found, by which the right of the state shall be ascertained and determined, and legislation providing for the sale of the land. Judgment affirmed.

O'KANE v. HYDE. (No. 8,361.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 28, 1886.)

ASSIGNMENT FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS—PREFERENCES—PROPERTY—PARTNERSHIP CREDITORS—INDIVIDUAL CREDITORS.

An assignment by a firm of their individual as well as partnership property, directing the property first to be applied to the payment of partnership debts, is void, as giving a preference to the partnership creditors over the individual creditors as to the individual property.¹

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco. This was an action brought by John O'Kane, as assignee of Daly & Hawkins, to recover of the defendant the sum of $4,725, and interest, on two promissory notes. The defendant was indebted to that firm on these notes in the sum of $3,445, as admitted by him, or in the first-mentioned sum, as claimed by the plaintiff. The firm were indebted at the same time to the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society in the sum of $6,000, and the latter of them also owed an individual debt to the said corporation of about $5,000. Some time afterwards, and on the twenty-second of March, 1879, the said firm made an assignment for the benefit of their creditors, by which they conveyed all their partnership and individual property to the plaintiff, to be applied to the payment of partnership debts prior to the payment of their individual debts; and on the seventh of October, 1880, the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco directed the plaintiff to bring this suit against the defendant. It further appears that on the twenty-seventh of March, 1879, at the suit of the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society, the debt due by the defendant, Hyde, to Daly & Hawkins was garnished, and in the following month they recovered a judgment against the firm, and an execution was issued thereon. The defendant in these proceedings admitted the debt for the amount as before stated, and paid to the sheriff a large part of it, leaving a balance still subject to the execution. A demurrer to the complaint having been overruled, the defendant answered, denying generally the allegations of the complaint, and alleging that he had paid to the firm of Daly & Hawkins all that was due on his notes to them, except the $3,445 which he had paid, or a large part of it, to the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society, and claiming that the assignment was void as against them, as an execution creditor of the firm. The plaintiff contended, among other things, that the question of the validity of the assignment was res adjudicata as to those creditors who were parties to a former suit brought by him against Daly, and that the Hibernia Savings Bank was one. But it was admitted that the defendant was not a party to that suit. There was a judgment for the defendant in accordance with the findings of the court, and plaintiff appealed.

Edward P. Cole, for appellant. Tobin & Tobin, for respondent.

MYRICK, J. The court below construed the assignment by Daly & Hawkins to O'Kane as an assignment of their individual as well as of their partnership property, and, as it directed all of the property assigned to be applied to the payment of partnership debts, held the assignment void as thus giving a preference to the partnership creditors over the individual creditors as to the individual property. We are of opinion this construction is correct, and that the assignment was void as to creditors. The defendant, Hyde, was a debtor of the assignors. The Hibernia Savings & Loan Society was their creditor. As such creditor it recovered of Hyde, by garnishment proceedings, the amount of its debt due from the assignors. Hyde, by reason of his relation to the society under the garnishment proceedings, and his payment to it under such proceedings, could make inquiry into the legality of the assignment. We are of opinion that the former action (O'Kane v. Daly & Hawkins) was not, as to the defendant herein, or as to the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society, an adjudication as to the validity of the assignment.

In bank. Appeal from the late district court, Twelfth judicial district, San Francisco.

Action against the city and county of San Francisco to quiet title to certain lands lying west of Larkin street, and within the city limits as defined by the charter of 1851. Judgment below for defendant. A motion for new trial was refused, and plaintiff appealed from the judgment, and from the order refusing a new trial.

S. W. & E. B. Holladay, John Currey, and W. C. Belcher, for appellant. John L. Love, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. This action was instituted to quiet title of plaintiff to two parcels of land situate in the city and county of San Francisco, and within that portion of said city and county to which the ordinances 822 and 845 of the common council of said city and county, and an order passed by the justices of the peace of the defendant corporation on the sixteenth of October, 1856, ratified by the act of the legislature of this state, approved March 11, 1858, apply. One of the parcels of land in controversy forms a part of Alta plaza, and the other a part of Hamilton square.

This cause was here before on appeal, (see 50 Cal. 265,) and on that appeal this court held that the plaintiff acquired no title to the lots or squares in question either by the Van Ness ordinance, or by adverse possession. The questions are presented now under the same state of facts, and the above rulings of the court must be regarded as the law of the case in all its stages. In this condition of things, we see no reason why the points above mentioned should be further considered. See Sawyer v. San Francisco, 50 Cal. 370; People v. Holladay, 5 Pac. Rep. 798; City of Visalia v. Jacob, 65 Cal. 434; S. C. 4 Pac. Rep. 433.

The point made on behalf of plaintiff, as to the fact that the squares in question embrace more than one-twentieth of the land in possession of the plaintiff, and that the excess above such one-twentieth was taken without compensation, as provided in section 6 of ordinance 822, we regard as settled by this court in Sawyer v. San Francisco, supra, adversely to the contention of the plaintiff.

The reasons on which the rule just above mentioned as to the taking of more than one-twentieth, as settled in Sawyer v. San Francisco, is rested, apply to the point made here that more than one block was taken to make up the squares in controversy. The survey and map of these squares, so including four blocks each, were approved, ratified, and confirmed by the act of the eleventh of March, 1858, (St. 1858, p. 53,) and from such approval the survey and map above mentioned acquired validity. Whatever rights the plaintiff acquired under the Van Ness ordinance he took subject to the act of 1858, which approved the survey and map above mentioned. This is true under any proper application of the doctrine of relation invoked on behalf of plaintiff. The act of approval ratified the ordinance 822, allowing title to be made under it by a possession designated in it, and ratified also ordinance 845, and the order of the justices approving the survey and map above mentioned; and, when the act of 1858 was passed, the doctrine of relation could vest in the plaintiff no greater rights than he took under the act of 1858. Any rights which plaintiff derived under the act of 1858 would be subject to all its provisions. At the same time that ordinance 822 was ratified the order approving the map and survey above mentioned was also ratified, and whatever rights plaintiff took under the act were subject to the provisions of the ordinance and order so ratified. We find in the case no trace of a contract between the plaintiff and any one which ever vested in plaintiff any rights different from those accorded to him herein.

The above embraces all the points in the case which are necessary to be considered. We find no error in the record, and the judgment and order must be affirmed. Ordered accordingly.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, county of Sacramento.

The plaintiff is a lodge or tribe of Red Men. The defendants Gibson, Bennett, and Dustman were members of it. Gibson was treasurer, and Bennett, Dustman, and Burt Worthington were the trustees of the tribe. The funds of the plaintiff were kept on deposit in the bank, subject to the order of the trustees. One of the by-laws of the tribe provided that the trustees should "keep the funds invested, for the best interests of this tribe, in such stocks, bonds, mortgages, or other securities as shall be approved by two-thirds of the members thereof present at a regular council." On the thirty-first of October, 1884, the trustees were instructed to try and invest the money in the bank, not to exceed $2,000; and defendants contend that they had full power to act regarding the investment of it.

Afterwards the defendant Gibson saw some of the trustees, and informed them that he had a lot and a half he would sell for $1,800. A conference having been held to consider the propriety of the purchase as an investment, it was agreed, on the twelfth of November following, the two trustees Bennett and Dustman conducting the negotiations, that the tribe should purchase the property at the above-mentioned price, which comprised the east half of lot 2, and the whole of lot 3, in a certain block in Sacramento. The money was thereupon paid, and a deed for the same delivered to the trustee Bennett, and by him duly recorded. At this time there was a mortgage on the property of $1,200, and interest, in favor of the Occidental Building & Loan Association, and which was a lien, also, on the west half of the said lot 2, which had not been conveyed except by this mortgage. This lien was paid off out of the $1,800, and the mortgage was surrendered up by the loan association, and canceled.

On the twenty-second of November of the same year, Edith L. Gibson, the wife of the defendant J. A. Gibson, filed a declaration of homestead upon the west half of said lot 2, claiming it as a homestead for the benefit of herself and husband. The plaintiff asks that the conveyance by Gibson to them be declared null and void; that the satisfaction of the mortgage be set aside; and that the association be required to transfer the mortgage to them; and that they be permitted to hold and enforce it against all the property therein described, notwithstanding the satisfaction thereof by Gibson, and the declaration of homestead by the wife. There was a verdict and judgment for the plaintiffs according to the prayer of the complaint, and also a personal judgment against Gibson for $600, and costs. A motion for a new trial having been made and denied, the defendants appealed from the judgment, and from the order denying a new trial.

Young & Dunn, for appellants. Freeman, Johnson & Bates, for respondent.

MCKINSTRY, J. There was sufficient evidence to justify the findings of the court below.

Evidence that the defendant Bennett acted without the concurrence of his co-trustee Dustman, or that the latter was induced to concur by reason of misrepresentations made by the former with respect to Worthington's concurrence, was admissible.

Evidence that Dustman understood the propriety of the purchase was to be submitted to the "tribe" was admissible.

The objection to the question asked on cross-examination of the witness Dustman, "Now, then, do you know of any unfair act that he [Gibson] did to induce the sale?"—was properly sustained, because calling for the inference of the witness. The witness had already stated, on his cross-examination, what Gibson had said and done to induce the purchase. He had also been asked: "Did Gibson do anything that you know of to induce you to purchase that lot and a half other than what you have testified to?" To this question the witness had answered, "Not that I know of." Whether the acts of Gibson were "unfair" was to be determined by the jury.

The court was authorized to revive the lien of the mortgage of the Occidental Loan Association in favor of the plaintiff if the satisfaction of the mortgage was part of the fraud practiced on the plaintiff.

The court below properly admitted evidence that the trustees never assembled, and, as a board, considered the transaction,—the purchase from Gibson.

The prompt disavowal of the act of one of the trustees was a fact which the plaintiff was entitled to prove. Gibson was a member of the tribe, and acquainted with the by-laws, which did not authorize the trustees to invest in lands. The order instructing the trustees "to try and invest the money in the bank, not exceeding $2,000," does not purport to authorize an investment of money of the tribe otherwise than "in stocks, bonds, mortgages, or other securities, approved by two-thirds of the members thereof present at a regular council." Moreover, the by-laws of plaintiff could not be amended by a simple motion or resolution.

The decree of the court below annulled the deed from Gibson to the plaintiff, and did not provide for a reconveyance from the latter to the former. This on the theory that the transaction was fraudulent, and, in equity, the deed conveyed no title. The deed being annulled, the plaintiff was entitled to a return of the money or its equivalent.

The minutes of the proceedings of the tribe, showing a disavowal of the transaction, were admissible, notwithstanding the objection that "there was no allegation in the complaint of a tender of reconveyance." The complaint did not pray for a reconveyance, and none was ordered.

Judgment and order affirmed.

SANTA CLARA MILL & LUMBER CO. v. BOARD OF SUP'RS OF SANTA CRUZ CO. (No. 9,698.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 15, 1886.)

COSTS—MOTION TO TAX—JUDGMENT.

Until a motion to tax costs has been disposed of, the clerk has no authority to enter a judgment for costs.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, county of Santa Cruz.

Mandamus. The Santa Clara Mill & Lumber Company sued the county of Santa Cruz, April 30, 1879, for $15,000 damages, caused by the location of a proposed public road across the premises of the company, according to the order of the board of supervisors of that county. On January 19, 1880, the action was dismissed on motion of the defendant, the order laying out the road having been rescinded, and judgment was ordered in favor of the company for its costs of suit. The company filed a memorandum on January 29th, verified by its manager, claiming, as its costs, "clerk's fees, $6.23; attorney's fees, $200; total, $206.23." On the same day the county filed a motion to tax costs, stating that the item objected to was the "attorney's fees, $200." The clerk on January 30, 1880, entered judgment according to the plaintiff's claim, allowing $206.23, costs. The motion to tax was never disposed of. The company, on refusal of the county to pay the costs as taxed, sued out a mandamus to compel the commissioners to pay.

Charles B. Younger, for appellant, Santa Clara Mill & Lumber Co. James A. Hall, for respondent, Board of Sup'rs of Santa Cruz Co.

BY THE COURT. The clerk had no authority to enter the judgment for costs while a motion to retax was pending. Riddell v. Harrell, ante, 67, (No. 11,363, filed November 4, 1886.)

WRIT AND PROCESS—SERVICE OF SUMMONS BY PUBLICATION—AFFIDAVIT—ACTIONS CONCERNING STATE LANDS.

In an action to annul a certificate of purchase of state lands for non-payment of principal or interest, the service of summons by publication must be made in the manner provided by the Code of Civil Procedure for service by publication. Such a service, therefore, without any affidavit for publication of the summons, or order therefor, is insufficient.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, county of Santa Cruz.

Action to foreclose defendant's interest in certain state lands by virtue of a certificate of purchase, and to annul such certificate on the ground that defendant was delinquent in the payment of part of the principal and interest. No personal service of summons was made on the defendant, but an alleged summons by publication was made, by publication in the county newspaper for the statutory time, and affidavit of service by such publication. There was, however, no affidavit for service by publication, nor any order of court therefor. Judgment by default against defendant, who moved to open the default on the ground that there had been no service of summons. The court, upon hearing of the motion, set aside the default. Plaintiff appeals.

W. F. Jeter, for plaintiff and appellant. J. M. Wood, for defendant and respondent.

BY THE COURT. On the authority of People v. Applegarth, 64 Cal. 229, and People v. Mullan, 65 Cal. 396, S. C. 4 Pac. Rep. 348, order affirmed.

Judgment in the lower court having been rendered for plaintiff, defendant gave notice of appeal. On the expiration of the statutory time for filing the transcript, plaintiff moved to dismiss for failure to file the transcript within the proper time, under rules 3 and 4 of the supreme court, and presented the certificate of the lower court stating the fact that such transcript had not been filed as required by such rules.

1. TRIAL BY COURT—FINDING—CONCLUSION OF LAW, WHAT IS.

Whether a finding is an ultimate fact or a conclusion of law depends upon whether it is reached by natural reasoning, or by the application of the artificial rules of law, and where plaintiff's mother owned property which, by proper steps, became the homestead of plaintiff's mother and father, and thereafter the mother died, and the father married again, and conveyed the homestead, his wife joining in the conveyance under the name of the first wife, a finding of the court that this conveyance passed the title, as against the plaintiff, is a conclusion of law.

2. HOMESTEAD—RIGHTS OF WIFE AND CHILDREN—DESCENT—ST. CAL. 1860, PAGE 311.

In this case, under the amended homestead act of 1860, (Cal. St. 1860, p. 311,) the plaintiff, being an only child, became the owner, by descent, of one-half of the homestead property, upon the death of her mother; section 4 of that act modifying the joint tenancy of the husband and wife created by section 1, so that, upon the death of either, one-half of the estate descends to the survivor, and one-half to the children of the deceased.

Commissioners' decision.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

S. F. Rhodes & Barstow, for appellant. Flournoy & Whoon and Jos. Rothschild, for respondents.

SEARLS, C. Action of ejectment to recover possession of the undivided one-half of a portion of 50-vara lot No. 469, in the city and county of San Francisco. The cause was tried by the court, written findings filed, and judgment entered for defendants, from which judgment, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals.

George W. Manchester and Mary Ann Manchester were husband and wife. On the first day of August, 1857, the land in question was conveyed to Mary Ann Manchester, by deed of grant, bargain, and sale, and thereupon Manchester and wife entered into possession, and occupied the same as a homestead, and continued to reside in a dwelling-house thereon, and to occupy the premises, except as hereinafter stated, until the third day of April, 1862, when the said Mary Ann departed this life. On the twenty-seventh day of April, 1861, George W. Manchester filed in the recorder's office of the city and county of San Francisco his declaration of homestead, executed and acknowledged in due form, as required by the provisions of the act of April 28, 1860, describing the premises in controversy, and whereby the homestead continued to exist as such under said act. The value thereof never exceeded $5,000. After the death of the said Mary Ann Manchester, George W. Manchester married a second wife, and on the third day of April, 1868, joined with her in an abandonment and conveyance of the homestead property, in due form, to Isaac M. Ward, under whom the defendants claim the property in question by sundry mesne conveyances, all of which were duly recorded. The second wife executed the deed and declaration of abandonment in the name of Mary Ann Manchester, the first wife, which was not her true name. Plaintiff is the only child of George W. and Mary Ann Manchester, or either of them, who survived the said Mary Ann Manchester, and was under the age of 22 years when this action was brought. A small portion of the lot was sold by Manchester and his first wife, which, however, cannot affect the case.

The court found, as a conclusion of law, "that the defendants are the owners in fee-simple, and entitled to the possession of the same, and that plaintiff is not entitled to any part of the same, or to any damage for the withholding thereof."

We are asked to determine whether the foregoing is an ultimate fact, to be found by the court as such, or a conclusion of law to be drawn from the facts as found. The line of demarcation between what are questions of fact and conclusions of law is not one easy to be drawn in all cases. It is quite easy to say that the ultimate facts are but the logical conclusions deduced from certain primary facts evidentiary in their character, and that conclusions of law are those presumptions or legal deductions which, the facts being given, are drawn without further evidence. This does not, however, quite meet the difficulty. We deduce the ultimate fact from certain probative facts by a process of natural reasoning. We draw the inference or conclusion of law, by a process of artificial reasoning; but this last process is often in such exact accord with natural reason that the distinction is scarcely appreciable.

If ultimate facts were found only from direct evidence to the very fact, the distinction between them and conclusions of law would be easily drawn; but, as they are to a great extent presumed from the existence of other facts, they are conclusions reached by argument, by reason,—are results deduced from an inferential process, in which the evidentiary facts become the premises, and the ultimate fact the conclusion; and this process, by which ultimate facts or presumptions of fact are reached, differs from presumptions of law only in this: that the latter "are reduced to fixed rules, and constitute a branch of the particular system of jurisprudence to which they belong;" the former, being "merely natural presumptions, are derived wholly and directly from the circumstances of the particular case, by the common experience of mankind, without the aid or control of any rules of law whatever." 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 44-46. "A presumption of fact is the natural connection of one fact with others by a combined process of proof and argument; a presumption of law is a similar connection, artificially made by annexing a rule of law or legal incident to a particular fact proved." Burrill, Circ. Ev. 52.

The result reached by a presumption of law may be a fact equally with that attained by a deduction of the same fact from the existence of other and evidentiary facts. It is the process by which the result is attained which is or may be different, and the tribunal through which such result is reached that differs, rather than the result itself. An act, deed, circumstance, or event is none the less a fact because reached as a conclusion of law. Sanity or insanity, guilt, innocence, fraud, and negligence are all facts; and whether their existence or non-existence is reached by a process of natural reasoning, or by artificial process known as "conclusion of law," does not in the least alter their status as facts.

Suppose A. sues B. for services performed. The latter pleads payment. Here payment becomes the ultimate fact to be established. B. proves that he employed a large number of men, and was accustomed to make weekly payments; that A. was observed among others at the time and place where payment was made; that a considerable period has elapsed since A. left the employ of B., during which time the former made no claim: these are circumstances from which, as evidentiary facts, a jury may presume the ultimate fact of payment; but the presumption is one of fact, and not of law. Again, suppose the same case, but that the time prescribed by the statute of limitations in bar of the action has run. The law steps in, and presumes payment. The result reached may be the same, but it is reached by a different process. Again, the same fact may be found to exist as a deduction from other facts, which, for that purpose, are treated as evidentiary; or the law will take such evidentiary facts, not as evidence in the sense in which we use that term when applied to the investigation of facts, but as a basis from which to presume the existence of the ultimate fact or conclusion. We have no doubt but that the terms "title" and "owner," considered in the abstract, are facts, and may be found as such.

The question which we are to determine—who has the title? who is the owner?—is quite a different one, and will usually depend, not upon the natural deductions from the facts in proof, but upon the application of those legal principles found to apply justly to all like cases; and, when necessary, and thus applied, to work out a result, the conclusion is one of law, or a mixed question of law and fact. To illustrate: A. and B., parties to an action tried by a jury, each hold a conveyance, in all respects regular and sufficient in form to convey the legal title, executed and delivered at different periods by the holder of the paramount title. These facts established, and manifestly, as we think, it would be the duty of the court to find as a conclusion of law, that the title vested in the one who first received a conveyance. Such duty arises, not because title is or is not a fact, but because it cannot be determined by the application of the process of reasoning adopted for the establishment of facts, pure and simple, and must be determined by the application of the process of artificial reasoning adopted by the law; and, when thus determined, we designate the result a "conclusion of law."

If we have made our meaning clear, we have conveyed the impression that in legal proceedings it is, in many cases, the means by which the result is to be reached which must determine whether a given conclusion is one of fact or of law. If, from the facts in evidence, the result can be reached by that process of natural reasoning adopted in the investigation of truth, it becomes an ultimate fact, to be found as such. If, on the other hand, resort must be had to the artificial processes of the law, in order to reach a final determination, the result is a conclusion of law.

A court of original jurisdiction, in determining issues of fact without the interposition of a jury, must, of course, apply the law, so far as it relates to the admissibility and weight to be given to evidence; but beyond that it simply finds the facts as a jury would do in the case of a special verdict. This accomplished, and the facts as found are subject to such intendments or conclusions of law as would apply to a special verdict. Applying this rule to the case at bar, and we are of opinion the court below properly treated the ownership and right to possession of the demanded premises as a conclusion of law, to be deduced from the facts as found.

The main question in the case is this: Did the plaintiff upon the death of her mother, Mary Ann Manchester, on the third day of April, 1862, succeed to the ownership of the undivided one-half of the demanded premises, or did the title thereto vest in George W. Manchester, her father, as survivor of said Mary Ann Manchester, deceased? The court below found, as we think properly, that the premises were community property of George W. and Mary Ann Manchester; or, rather, found facts from which this conclusion must be drawn.

Under the homestead act of 1851, no declaration, acknowledgment, or record was necessary to constitute a homestead. It consisted of a quantity of land, together with the dwelling-house thereon, and its appurtenances, not exceeding in value the sum of $5,000, to be selected by the owner thereof. St. 1851, p. 296. Occupancy of the premises by the family was treated as presumptive evidence of dedication to homestead purposes, and was notice to all the world. Taylor v. Hargous, 4 Cal. 268. It was necessary that such residence or occupancy as a family residence should be with the good-faith intention to dedicate the premises to the purposes of a homestead, in order to impress upon them that character. Holden v. Pinney, 6 Cal. 234; Moss v. Warner, 10 Cal. 296. The homestead thus dedicated under the act of 1851 was exempt from forced sale, and could only be conveyed in the manner prescribed by the statute. The statute did not in terms define the character of the estate which the husband and wife enjoyed in the homestead property during the existence of the marital relation. It did provide that upon the death of the head of the family the homestead, and other property exempt from forced sale, should be set apart by the probate court "for the benefit of the surviving wife and his own legitimate children, and, in case of no surviving wife or his own legitimate children, for the next heirs at law."

As might be expected, the supreme court was repeatedly called upon to define the estate held by the husband and wife in the homestead.

In Taylor v. Hargous, 4 Cal. 273, it was said: "As soon as a place acquires the nature of a homestead, the nature of the estate becomes changed without reference to the manner in which the title to the property originated, whether it was the separate estate of either husband or wife, or the common property of both. It is turned into a sort of joint tenancy, with the right of survivorship, at least as between husband and wife."

In Cook v. McChristian, 4 Cal. 24, the same general doctrine was enunciated.

In Reynolds v. Pixley, 6 Cal. 167, the court expressed its regret that no provision had been made in the act of 1851, for recording the homestead, and alluded to the laws as "a fruitful source of fraud and perjury."

In Poole v. Gerrard, 6 Cal. 73, and in Revalk v. Kraemer, 8 Cal. 66, the doctrine that the homestead is a joint estate of husband and wife, with right of survivorship, is recognized as well as in all other cases in which the question arose prior to Gee v. Moore, 14 Cal. 472. In this last-mentioned case the court (FIELD, C. J., delivering the opinion, concurred in by BALDWIN, J., and COPE, J.) reviews the former cases, compares them with the constitution and statute, and in referring to the law as announced in Taylor v. Hargous, Poole v. Gerrard, and Revalk v. Kraemer, says: "This doctrine has never met the approbation of the profession, and it is not warranted by any language of the constitution or the statute. There is nothing in the nature of the homestead right or privilege which justifies its designation as such an estate. The right or privilege has no single feature resembling a joint tenancy. The estate rests where it existed before the premises were appropriated as a homestead. The appropriation of them confers a right upon the wife to insist that their character as a homestead shall continue until she consents to the alienation, or another homestead is provided, or they are otherwise abandoned. The wife, if surviving her husband, takes the homestead not by virtue of any right of survivorship arising from the alleged joint tenancy, but as property set apart by law from her husband's estate for her benefit, and that of his children, if there be any. In the same way other property exempt from forced sale is set apart to her." This decision was rendered in October, 1859.

At the next session of the legislature the homestead act of April 21, 1851, was amended (St. 1860, p. 311) so as to require homesteads to be selected by the husband or wife, or both of them, or other head of a family, by a declaration in writing, executed, acknowledged, and recorded as in the statute provided. Persons holding homesteads under former acts were allowed one year within which to file for record their declaration, and, if not so filed, the homestead was deemed to have been abandoned. The declaration in the case at bar was executed and filed within the year.

By section 1 of this amendatory act it was provided that "from and after the filing for record of said declaration the husband and wife shall be deemed to hold said homestead as joint tenants; and all homesteads heretofore appropriated and acquired by husband and wife under the act to which this act is amendatory shall be deemed to be held by such husband and wife in joint tenancy." Section 4 of the amendatory act provided that "the homestead, and other property exempt from forced sale shall, upon the death of either husband or wife, be set apart by the probate court for the benefit of the surviving husband or wife, and his or her legitimate children."

As before stated, Mary Ann Manchester died in 1862, before the act of that year on the same subject took effect, and the rights of the parties are to be determined as fixed by the act of 1860. Under section 1 of the act of 1860, standing by itself, the husband and wife became and were joint tenants in the homesteads, with right of survivorship, and all other incidents which the term implies. Doubtless in some instances the relation was wanting in some of the unities which at common law were requisite to such an estate. We know of no reason, however, why the legislature, in its wisdom, may not create such an estate, without having at hand all the material requisite under the common law. We suppose that branch of the government might enact that a linear foot should consist of 13 inches, and that the act would not be void because ordinarily 12 inches have indicated such a measure. The real question is not what section 1, standing alone, imports, but is it modified, and its effect as a statute of descent controlled, by section 4 of the same act? Did section 4 regulate and establish the line of descent or succession of the title to the homestead otherwise than as it would have passed under section 1 standing alone?

Rich v. Tubbs, 41 Cal. 36, was a case in which Tubbs and wife acquired a homestead under the act of 1860. Tubbs died, and the probate court set aside the homestead property for the use of the family of the deceased, consisting of the widow and two children. The widow married Rich, and brought an action against the children to quiet title, which was decided in her favor in the court below. On appeal, the judgment was affirmed, upon the ground that the record failed to show that the husband died prior to the passage of the act of 1862, under which last-mentioned act the surviving husband or wife became entitled to the homestead. The court held: (1) That the act of the probate court in setting apart the homestead for the use of the family of the deceased husband, under the act of 1860, did not change nor transmit title; that the effect of such order is merely to relieve the property from administration; that it does not constitute assets of the estate to be administered; and that it leaves the title where it found it, to be determined by claimants thereto in another forum. (2) That although section 1 of the act of 1860 denominates the husband and wife "joint tenants," yet that section is so modified by section 4 that they are not such in the full definition of the common-law term, and that under the latter section the children take some interest by inheritance from their deceased father or mother. The precise interest thus taken, it was said, was not in that case necessary to be determined.

In Estate of Headen, 52 Cal. 294, the court, in referring to Rich v. Tubbs, said: "The fourth section of the homestead act of 1860, which was involved in that case, is clearly a statute of descent and distribution, as applicable to property which had been appropriated as a homestead."

In Herrold v. Reen, 58 Cal. 443, the doctrine of Rich v. Tubbs is referred to and approved.

There can be no question but that the first section of the act of 1860, standing alone, creates a joint tenancy in the homestead between husband and wife, with all the incidents and consequences which the term implies, including its principal incident of the jus accrescendi. But in the light of the construction which has been given to section 4 of the same act by this court, we are constrained to hold that such section modifies the joint tenancy, so that upon the dissolution of the marital relation by death, prior to the amendment of the act in 1862, one-half of the homestead descends to the survivor, and the other half to the legitimate child or children of the deceased. This result follows from the theory that section 4 of that act was in effect a statute of descent, regulating the succession, and that no act on the part of the probate court was necessary to or could change the title, as was said in Rich v. Tubbs, supra, and in Estate of Headen, supra.

It follows from this construction that upon the death of Mary Ann Manchester on the third day of April, 1862, the undivided one-half of the homestead property descended to and vested in her only child, the plaintiff herein; and that, as the statute is one of descent, regulating the succession, no action on the part of the probate court was necessary to vest the title in the latter.

It results from these views that the conclusion of law by the court below was erroneous, for which error the judgment and order appealed from should be reversed, and the court directed to enter judgment upon the findings in favor of plaintiff for the undivided one-half of the premises described in the complaint.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, with directions to the court below to enter judgment in favor of plaintiff for the undivided one-half of the premises described in the complaint.

HEINLEN v. BEANS and others. (No. 9,121.)

APPEAL—BOND—CODE CIVIL PROC. § 945—CONSTRUCTION OF—SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

Where, upon an appeal from a judgment for specific performance, the defendants, in order to retain possession of the land during the pendency of the appeal, enter into an undertaking under section 945, Code Civil Proc., conditioned, in case the judgment is affirmed, or the appeal dismissed, that they will pay the value of the use and occupation of the property from the time of the appeal to the delivery of the possession thereof, held, in an action on the undertaking, that the extent and meaning of the undertaking is that they will pay the judgment appealed from, if affirmed, as rendered by the court below.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county.

Action on an undertaking under section 945, Code Civil Proc., to recover the value of the use and occupation of land during the pendency of an appeal from a judgment in a suit for specific performance. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants appeal. The facts are stated in the opinion.

Houghton & Reynolds, for appellants. J. C. Black and G. A. Heinlen, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. In an action for specific performance, brought by John Heinlen against Calvin Martin and Wayne B. Rogers, judgment was rendered on the twenty-eighth of January, 1873, that plaintiff recover of the said defendants the sum of $10,000, the value of the use and occupation of the land in controversy from the twenty-seventh of November, 1868, to the date of the rendition of the judgment; that defendants execute a deed of conveyance of the land above mentioned, and deliver possession thereof to plaintiff, with costs of suit. Defendants, in the same case, made a motion for a new trial, which was denied on the eleventh of December, 1873, and they appealed from the judgment and the order denying their motion for a new trial. On these appeals the defendants, on the date last mentioned, filed the $300 undertaking required by sections 940, 941, Code Civil Proc., an undertaking of stay as to the $10,000 above mentioned, under section 942, Code Civil Proc.; and, as they desired to retain possession of the land involved in the suit, they executed and filed a further undertaking for that purpose, under section 945, Code Civil Proc. These undertakings were executed by T. Ellard Beans and E. Auzerais, the defendants herein.

This action is brought on the undertaking last above mentioned, to recover the value of the use and occupation of the land above mentioned during the period of the pendency of the appeal, and until the delivery of possession of said land to the plaintiff. The extent of the engagement of defendants under the provisions of the undertaking above mentioned may be perceived from the following portion of it, viz..

"And whereas, the appellants are desirous of staying that part of said judgment directing said defendants and appellants to execute a deed to said plaintiff and respondent of the premises described therein, and the judge of this court having fixed the amount of the undertaking for that purpose at $5,000: Now, therefore, in consideration of the premises, and the said stay of the execution of the judgment, we do further, jointly and severally, undertake and promise, and do acknowledge ourselves bound in the further sum of $5,000, that during the possession of such property by the appellants they will not commit, or suffer to be committed, any waste thereon; and that if judgment be affirmed, or the appeal be dismissed, they will pay the value of the use and occupation of the property from the time of the appeal to the delivery of the possession thereof, pursuant to the judgment, not exceeding said sum of $5,000.

T. ELLARD BEANS. [Seal.]
"E. AUZERAIS." [Seal.]

The above-named appeals came on for hearing in this court, and were determined by it in January, 1879. This court reversed the judgment, remanded the cause, and directed the court below to modify the judgment in accordance with the opinion. See report of the cause entitled Heinlen v. Martin, 53 Cal. 321-346. The remittitur was transmitted to the court below with the judgment of this court, and its opinion containing the directions given to the court below.

The court below had adjudged that the plaintiff was entitled to a conveyance and possession of the whole land in suit, and to rents and profits of the entire tract during the period above mentioned. This court held plaintiff entitled only to a conveyance and possession of five-sixths of the tract of land, and to the same proportion of the rents and profits, commencing, not from the twenty-seventh of November, 1868, as in the judgment appealed from, but from the tenth day of May, 1870, the date of the commencement of the action. The remittitur was filed in the court a quo on the third day of April, 1879. The court, proceeding to follow the directions of this court, on the third day of April, 1879, modified its judgment as required, as of the twenty-eighth of January, 1873, the date of the judgment previously rendered by it. It gave judgment in favor of plaintiff for the rents and profits accruing previous to the twenty-eighth of January, 1873, in the sum of $5,260, which judgment was affirmed, (see Heinlen v. Martin, 59 Cal. 181,) and held to accord with the former judgment of this court. The amount last mentioned was paid by Martin & Rogers, the defendants in the action.

The contention of defendants is that there is no breach of the undertaking committed by them until the affirmance of the judgment, or the dismissal of the appeal. The plaintiff concurs in this view, and such are the express words of the undertaking. By its express words, the defendants only agree to pay when the judgment is affirmed or the appeal dismissed. But the plaintiff puts forward the contention that the judgment in Heinlen v. Martin was affirmed. The court below was of the same opinion, and so held. Now, if this judgment was affirmed at all, it was only affirmed in part, and the undertaking does not impose on the parties the obligation to pay on any such contingency, but only in case the judgment appealed from is affirmed. We construe this to mean affirmed as rendered by the court below. It does not mean affirmed in part. The conclusion that affirmed in part is not here meant is strengthened by the language used in section 942, Code Civil Proc., where the requisites of the undertaking to stay execution in case of an appeal from a judgment or order directing the payment of money is prescribed. In that section the obligation of the sureties is expressed as follows: "That they are bound, in double the amount named in the judgment or order, that if the judgment or order appealed from, or any part thereof, be affirmed, or the appeal be dismissed, the appellant will pay the amount directed to be paid by the judgment or order, or the part of the amount as to which the judgment or order is affirmed, if affirmed only in part." There is no such language in section 945, under which the undertaking sued on herein is given, and the language of which section it follows. This omission in section 945 is significant, and manifests the intention of the legislature that the sureties were not to be bound in case of a partial affirmance, but only in case the judgment was affirmed as rendered and entered in the court below.

The conclusion here reached is sustained by the judgment of this court in Chase v. Ries, 10 Cal. 518, which was an action on an appeal-bond executed by defendants, conditioned to pay the judgment appealed from, if the same should be affirmed by the appellate court. It appeared from the record in that case that the judgment appealed from was reversed, with directions to the court below to enter a different judgment; consequently no liability attached to the defendants under the conditions of the bond.

The meaning attributed to section 945 in this case is, in our judgment, in accord with the intent of the legislature as manifested by the language employed in it; and, when we are satisfied that the meaning and intent of the law-making power have been arrived at, it is useless to speculate as to the views with which it was enacted. We must presume that the members of the legislature who enacted the law deliberated fully on the subject-matter of the enactment, and that, after full consideration, their deliberate views were embodied, and their intention manifested, in the statute as enacted, in which they laid down, as the best rule, that sureties were not to be bound if the judgment was, in effect, affirmed in part. The construction put on section 945, and the undertaking executed under it, accords with the rule laid down in section 2836, Civil Code, and with what is said in People v. Breyfogle, 17 Cal. 509.

For the reasons above given the judgment and order are reversed, and cause remanded, and the court below is directed to enter judgment for defendants.

INTEREST—JUDGMENT—APPEAL—CODE CIVIL PROC. § 945.

Where, in an action on an undertaking on appeal, given to secure rents and profits of certain real estate pending an appeal to the supreme court of California, under Code Civil Proc. § 945, if the judgment is affirmed, but not as rendered by the court below, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover anything of defendants, and therefore a ruling of the lower court adverse to his claim of interest, in this action on the judgment appealed from, is not erroneous.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county.

Action on an undertaking under section 945, Code Civil Proc., to recover interest on a judgment. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appealed. The facts are stated in the case with the same title, (No. 9,121,) ante, 167.

G. A. Heinlen and J. C. Black, for appellant. Houghton & Reynolds, for respondents.

BY THE COURT. This is an appeal by plaintiff from the judgment and certain orders in the case with the same title, (No. 9,121,) ante, 167. The court below rendered judgment herein in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $5,000. The plaintiff claimed that he was entitled to legal interest on this sum from the fifth of April, 1879, the day on which possession of the land involved in the suit of Heinlen v. Martin and Rogers was delivered to him. The court held against him on this contention, and this appeal was prosecuted, to have it determined whether he was so entitled or not.

Inasmuch as we have held in case 9,121 that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover anything of defendants, he was not hurt by the ruling of the lower court adverse to his claim of interest, and there was no error in the court's so ruling. The same contention is presented on the orders appealed from, and the same conclusion follows.

As regards the above-mentioned appeals of plaintiff, the judgment and orders are without error, and are affirmed; but, on the return of this cause to the court below, that court will enter judgment as directed in case 9,121.

1. ASSIGNMENT—INTEREST IN ESTATE—COLLATERAL SECURITY.

An assignment by a legatee of his interest in the estate of the testator, as security for a debt, entitles the assignee to receive, in the distribution of the estate, so much of the legacy as is necessary to pay the amount due upon the debt at the time of distribution.

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—DISTRIBUTION—LIS PENDENS.

Distribution of a person's interest in an estate to his assignee's assignee should not be refused on account of the pendency of a suit to set aside the assignment, brought a few days before the date fixed for distribution, against the original assignee, in which suit no service had been had or appearance entered at said date.

Commissioners' decision.

Department 2. Appeal from decision of superior court, Sonoma county, upon petition for distribution.

Chas. F. Hanlon, for appellant. J. T. Campbell and A. W. Thompson, for respondents.

FOOTE, C. Margaret Phillips died on the twelfth day of December, 1882, leaving a will, which was probated, and an administrator with the will annexed appointed. The estate was composed of $17,963 in money, of which the sum of $6,000 was bequeathed to one William R. Johnson, who on the first day of December, 1883, borrowed of one Joyce $425, executing and delivering therefor his promissory note for such amount, and securing its payment by a written instrument reading as follows:

"Know all men by these presents, that I, William R. Johnson, of the city of Petaluma, county of Sonoma, state of California, the party of the first part, for and in consideration of the sum of $425, gold coin of the United States, in hand paid by Martin Joyce, of the same place, party of the second part, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, have bargained, sold, and conveyed, and by these presents do bargain, sell, convey, assign, and transfer, unto said party of the second part, all and singular, my rights, titles, and interests, of any and all kinds of, in, and to the estate of Margaret Phillips, deceased, and each and every part and parcel thereof, and the property of any and all kinds belonging to said estate. And I do hereby nominate and appoint said party of the second part my attorney in fact, and irrevocably (except as herein provided, on payment of the promissory note hereinafter mentioned) for me, and in my name, place, and stead, to receive, receipt for, take, and have all my share, part, and interest in said estate, and the property thereof. The foregoing transfer, conveyance, and assignment is made for and as security to secure payment of a certain promissory note for $425, bearing even date herewith, of which the following is a copy:

PETALUMA, December 1, 1883.

"On demand, for value received, I promise to pay to Martin Joyce, or order, the sum of four hundred and twenty-five dollars, with interest from date till paid, at the rate of 1 per cent. per month, payable in United States gold coin.

WM. R. JOHNSON."

"—And upon full payment thereof, principal and interest, this assignment to become void; the said party of the second part, under the foregoing assignment and power, to collect and receive the principal and interest due upon said note.

"In witness whereof the party of the first part has hereunto set his hand and seal this the first day of December, A. D. 1883.

"WM. R. JOHNSON." [Seal.]

On the eighth day of December, 1883, as the record discloses, this note and security were assigned for value to one Hill, the respondent here; who thereupon duly notified the administrator of the assignment and transfer, and filed the same among the papers in the court having jurisdiction on the probate of the will. On the seventeenth day of December, 1883, Johnson made another assignment of his interest in the estate to his sister, who is the appellant here. The assignment is in due form. On the eighteenth day of December, 1883, she notified the administrator of the assignment made to her, and filed it.

On the first day of February, 1884, she filed her petition for distribution, claiming all that had been bequeathed to her brother, William R. Johnson, admitting notice of the Joyce assignment and note, and averring that a suit had been instituted in another court to set it aside, but not stating by whom instituted. She prayed that the matter of the Joyce assignment be settled in the court having jurisdiction of the estate of the decedent, and made no claim to have such proceedings stayed to await the determination of the suit to set aside the note and assignment. Before the filing of her petition the administrator had filed his final account and petition for distribution. The assignee, Hill, duly filed his petition to have the amount of the note and interest distributed to him out of Johnson's share of the estate. Upon the three petitions the matter of distribution was heard before the superior court of Sonoma county. The trial resulted in the distribution to Hill, from Johnson's share of the amount due upon the note and interest, and the balance to his sister, the appellant here. The due execution of the note to Joyce, and that it was for value, and that the assignment to him was for value, and duly made, executed, and delivered, served on the administrator, and filed in court, was admitted by counsel for the appellant. This trial was had on the fourth day of February, 1884, and by the record it appears that the action to cancel the note was commenced by the appellant on the thirtieth day of January, 1884, five days before the trial, and against Joyce, not Hill, the then assignee, and that no service of the summons or complaint therein had been had, and no plea or appearance made or had, by the defendant Joyce therein.

It does not appear from the record precisely what the grounds of the suit for cancellation of the note were. According to the admissions of the appellant's attorney, the note was made for value, and no fraud appears to have tainted it. The appellant contends, however, that the assignment conveyed no interest in the estate to Joyce or his assignee, Hill, but was a mortgage, with a defeasance to secure a debt, without authority to pay it; that neither of such parties were the grantees of W. R. Johnson, and therefore not entitled to have any distribution made to them directly; and that the plea of lis pendens was sustained by the evidence, and should have been held good.

As we view the matter, the assignment and note, taken together, transferred to any bona fide assignee thereof the legal title to so much of the money bequeathed to Johnson as should be due on the note when the distribution was made, and that, therefore, so far as that matter is concerned, Hill was entitled to that which the court awarded him. A similar assignment and decree for the distribution of money, as distinguished from real property, was upheld in Estate of Hite, Myr. Prob. 232, and, as we think, properly.

There certainly was no other suit pending to which Hill was a party, nor does the record sufficiently disclose that any other was pending which could affect the rights of the parties to the proceedings in the matter of the distribution; for the petition which assumes to allege the pending suit as a bar to the respondent's right does not state who the parties to that action were, or the grounds upon which it was based. The evidence does not show that Hill was a party to that suit, but, to the contrary, that it was brought against Joyce, and there is no pretense made therein but what the note was made for a valuable consideration, and without fraud. To us it is clear that Hill was entitled to that which the court awarded him, and we perceive no ground, either legal or equitable, upon which to reverse the decree of that tribunal.

It, and the order denying a new trial, should be affirmed.

WE CONCUR: BELCHER, C. C.; SEARLS, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

GILBERT v. SLEEPER. (No. 9,473.)*(Supreme Court of California. November 23, 1886.)1. VENDOR AND VENDEE—ORAL AGREEMENT FOR EXCHANGE OF LANDS—OBLIGATIONS OF GRANTEE OF ONE PARTY—TRUSTS.

In 1875, A. and B. orally agreed upon an exchange of lands. Possession was taken by each under the contract, and it was agreed that deeds should be given when B., who had only a swamp-land certificate for his land, should obtain a patent. In 1881, A. conveyed all his property, including the land so sold, to his wife, who agreed to carry out the contract made with B. About the time of this conveyance B. paid the balance due upon the price of the swamp land, but did not then take out a patent. In January, 1883, A.'s wife brought an action against B. to recover the land in the latter's possession under the contract. She had meanwhile filed a homestead upon it. B. had made improvements thereon without objection being made by A. or his wife. The wife since A.'s death had been in possession of the swamp land. Held, that plaintiff held the title impressed with a trust in favor of B.; and that the latter having obtained a patent soon after the beginning of the action, and tendered a deed to plaintiff, he was entitled, under a cross-complaint praying for such relief, to a performance of the contract by her.¹

2. STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS—TRUSTS—VENDEE IN POSSESSION.

The statute of limitations will not run against a vendee in possession of lands agreed to be sold, as he is to be regarded as a cestui que trust.²

Commissioners' decision.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Lake county.

Action to recover possession of lands. Defendant filed a cross-complaint, and had judgment below. Plaintiff appealed.

R. W. Crump, for appellant. E. W. Britt, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This is an action to recover possession of 17.67 acres of land. The defendant answered, and, by way of cross-complaint, set up an equitable defense. The plaintiff demurred, and then answered to the cross-complaint. After trial judgment was entered in favor of the defendant, from which, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appealed.

The demurrer to the cross-complaint was properly overruled. If the facts were as alleged, the plaintiff held the legal title to the land in controversy in trust for the defendant, and he was entitled to the relief demanded.

It appears from the record that in September, 1875, one Jacob Gilbert, the husband of plaintiff, was the owner of 160 acres of land in Lake county, and the defendant had a certificate of purchase from the state of a tract of swamp and overflowed land lying adjacent thereto. In that month the parties entered into a verbal contract to exchange parcels of their lands, Gilbert taking the parcel described in the cross-complaint, and the defendant the parcel described in the complaint. Under the contract each party was to take and thenceforth hold possession of the parcel given him, and they were to execute deeds, each to the other, whenever the defendant should obtain a patent for his land from the state. Gilbert took possession of the parcel given him, and remained in possession of it till he died, in April, 1882, and since his death the plaintiff has continued in possession without offering to surrender it to the defendant. When the contract was made defendant was in possession of the parcel given him, and has ever since continued in such possession, and, without objection from Gilbert or plaintiff, has placed permanent improvements on the land of the value of $400. On the third day of December, 1881, Gilbert, being then in very bad health, under advice given him by defendant, and to save the expense and trouble of a settlement of his estate in the probate court, for the expressed consideration of five dollars, conveyed all of his property, including the 160 acres of land before mentioned, to the plaintiff. Before making the deed he exacted from plaintiff, and she agreed, that, when defendant should obtain a patent for his swamp land from the state, she would execute to him a deed for the land in controversy, in accordance with the terms of the contract for exchange. On the sixth day of December, 1881, plaintiff filed a homestead upon all the land conveyed to her by her husband, and on the thirtieth day of January, 1883, she commenced this action. The defendant paid the balance of the purchase money due on his swamp land in December, 1881, and on the twentieth of February, 1883, received a patent therefor. Thereafter, on the tenth of March following, he tendered to plaintiff a good and sufficient deed of the parcel which her husband took in exchange, and which is described in the cross-complaint, and she refused to accept it.

The court below found the facts to be substantially as above stated; and, as a conclusion of law, decided "that plaintiff took the deed of December 3, 1881, which included the land here by her demanded, charged with the duty of conveying to the defendant such demanded premises in accordance with the previous promise of her husband, and upon receiving a deed from defendant for the 17.67 acres of land described in his cross-complaint."

The Civil Code provides as follows: "Exchange is a contract by which the parties mutually give, or agree to give, one thing for another, neither thing, or both things, being money only." Section 1804. "The provisions of the title on sale apply to exchanges. Each party has the rights and obligations of a seller as to the thing which he gives, and of the buyer as to that which he takes." Section 1806.

Under these sections, a contract for the exchange of lands is a contract of sale, which, as in other cases of contracts for the sale of lands, may be enforced in a court of equity by a decree for specific performance. Bigelow v. Armes, 108 U. S. 10; S. C. 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 83. When, therefore, Gilbert and defendant agreed to exchange their lands, and, under the contract, took possession of the parcels exchanged, each became the vendee and equitable owner of the parcel received by him. The legal title was retained by the seller, but it was held by him in trust for the buyer, to be thereafter conveyed at the stipulated time and on the stipulated conditions. If Gilbert had lived, and, retaining the legal title in himself, had commenced this action, there can be no question that a defense to the action like that interposed here would have been entirely good.

Has the plaintiff any greater rights than her husband would have had in the case supposed? We fail to see that she has. "It is a universal rule that, if a man purchases property of a trustee with notice of the trust, he shall be charged with the same trust, in respect to the property, as the trustee from whom he purchased. And even if he pays a valuable consideration, with notice of the equitable rights of a third person, he shall hold the property subject to the equitable interests of such person. Of course, a mere volunteer, or person who takes the property without paying a valuable consideration, will hold it charged with all the trusts to which it is subject, whether he have notice or not; for in such case no wrong or pecuniary loss can fall upon him, in compelling him to execute the trust to which the property that came to him without consideration was subject." Perry, Trusts, § 217.

It is unnecessary to consider whether the plaintiff paid a valuable consideration for the property conveyed to her by her husband, or took the title as a mere volunteer, for the reason that, when she received her deed, she had actual knowledge of the exchange that had been made, and of all its attending circumstances. It must follow then that plaintiff took the title charged with all the rights, liabilities, and duties which at that time rested upon her grantor.

But it is insisted that defendant lost the right to demand a deed from the plaintiff because he did not perfect his title, and tender his deed, until after the commencement of this action, and so his cause of action was barred by the provisions of section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure. There are two sufficient answers to this: First, the statute of limitations was not pleaded; and, second, Gilbert, while he held the title, acquiesced in defendant's delay in procuring his patent, and, besides, the statute never runs in favor of a trustee, as against his cestui que trust, while the latter is in possession of his estate. Love v. Watkins, 40 Cal. 547; Beebe v. Doud, 22 Barb. 255.

There was no error in refusing to admit in evidence plaintiff's declaration of homestead. Obviously she could not, by filing it, defeat or impair the previously existing rights of defendant.

The point is made that defendant has no title to a small part of the land described in his cross-complaint as having been exchanged to Jacob Gilbert. No such issue was presented by the pleadings, or appears to have been raised at the trial. On the contrary, the pleadings admit that the legal title was in the defendant, and the court so found.

On the whole, we find no error in the record, and the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; FOOTE, C.

By THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. July 15, 1886.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS—CALIFORNIA SWAMP LANDS—PATENTS—ACTION FOR CANCELLATION—ATTORNEY GENERAL—DISMISSAL.

When a suit is instituted, in the name of the state, by the permission of the attorney general, upon the relation of the real party in interest, seeking the cancellation of a patent for state swamp lands, and the state has no direct interest in the event of the suit, the attorney general is not authorized to move to dismiss, or to withdraw his consent to the use of the name of the people, to the prejudice of the relator.

2. APPEAL—TRANSCRIPT—MISSING PAPERS—IMPROPER CERTIFICATE—MOTION TO DISMISS.

Where respondent, in his brief, suggests imperfections in the transcript because of the absence of necessary papers, and because the transcript is not properly certified, and appellant, at the hearing, files the requisite papers with the proper certificate, the motion to dismiss will be denied.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county.

Action brought by the attorney general, January 19, 1884, to cancel a patent issued by the state of California to the defendants, November 23, 1883, for a tract of swamp and overflowed land in Tulare county. On motion of the attorney general the action was dismissed July 11, 1885. The relators appealed to the supreme court.

The motion to dismiss the appeal was based on the fact that the clerk had not properly certified the transcript, as required by rule 4 of the supreme court, and that certain papers had been omitted; and was made under rule 13, which is as follows: "Exceptions or objections to the transcript, statement, the bond or undertaking on appeal, the notice of appeal, or to its service, or any technical exception or objection to the record in civil cases, affecting the right of the appellant to be heard on the points of error assigned, which might be cured on suggestion of diminution of the record, must be taken and notified to the appellant in writing, at least five days before the hearing, or they will not be regarded; and, when so noted, it shall be the duty of the appellant to present and file at the hearing of the cause such additional record, certificate, or other matter, if such there be, to remove or answer the objection or exception so taken; otherwise such objection or exception, if well taken, shall prevail."

The following is rule 4: "On a motion to dismiss an appeal for a failure to file the transcript within the prescribed time, there shall be presented the certificate of the clerk below, under the seal of the court, certifying the amount or character of the judgment or order appealed from, the date of its rendition, the fact and date of the filing of the notice of appeal, together with the fact and date of service thereof on the adverse party, and the character of the evidence by which said service appears; the fact and date of filing and undertaking on appeal, and that the same is in due form; the fact and the time of settlement of the bill of exceptions and the statement on appeal, if there be any; and also that the appellant has received a duly-certified transcript, or that he has not requested the clerk to certify to a correct transcript of the record, or, if he has made such request, that he has not paid the fees therefor, if the same have been demanded."

Frederick P. Stratton, Latimer & Morrow, and Wm. M. Pierson, for appellants. Brown & Daggett, for respondents.

BY THE COURT. The certificate of the clerk of the court below, filed at the hearing, is sufficient, and the motion to dismiss is denied.

On the authority of People v. North San Francisco H. & R. R. Ass'n, 38 Cal. 564, the judgment is reversed, and cause remanded.

BATES v. BATES. (No. 9,586.)

PARTITION—NEW TRIAL—PLAINTIFF'S MOTION TO SET ASIDE DECREE IN HER FAVOR.

Where plaintiff in partition proceedings has obtained the decree asked for in her complaint, based upon and in accordance with all the facts alleged therein, and admitted by the answer, she is not entitled to a new trial upon affidavits setting forth facts tending to prove that she was mistaken in her rights when she commenced her action, and which, if they exist, are contradictory to the averments of the complaint.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county.

Bill for partition. Decree. Motion for new trial denied. Plaintiff appeals.

The plaintiff and appellee was the widow of A. S. Bates, deceased, her second husband; she and the defendant, Otis Bates, being the only heirs. After the husband's death, the widow, besides being unacquainted with her husband's investments, was prostrated with grief, and unable properly to instruct her counsel, who, having to make the best of her imperfect instructions, brought this action for partition in her name, assuming the property left by the husband was common property of the widow and the heir. After a preliminary decree of partition had been made in accordance with her complaint, affidavits were obtained in British Columbia tending to show that she had inherited a fortune from a first husband, and that the deceased Bates had invested part of the same in the property sought to be partitioned by her. A motion for a new trial by plaintiff, based on such affidavits, was denied.

Philip G. Galpin, for appellant.

The mistake of fact was not made known until after a preliminary decree for partition had been made. Before any notice was given of the making of that or any other decision, the error was discovered, and a motion was made for a new trial. Had it been granted, the plaintiff would have amended her complaint so as to ask partition of the common property only, and a new decree could have been made to conform to the truth. The appellant asks for a new trial on the ground of subsequently discovered evidence, and insists that the court below did not lose jurisdiction to correct the evident mistake of fact so long as a motion for a new trial was pending. The appeals are from the judgment, and from the order denying a new trial. The court had power to grant a new trial on the ground of subsequently discovered evidence, and no necessity exists to file a new complaint to set aside the judgment.

A. M. Rosborough, for respondent.

MCKINSTRY, J. The record brought here contains no matter which would justify the reversal of the final judgment. There are many reasons why the order denying a new trial should not be disturbed. It is enough to say, however, that a plaintiff who has obtained exactly the decree to secure which the action was brought and prosecuted, and which is based upon, and is in accord with, all the facts alleged in the complaint and admitted by the answer, is not entitled to demand a new trial, upon affidavits setting forth matters which may tend to prove that she was mistaken in her rights when she commenced her action. It is perfectly apparent that a new trial of the issues must result in the same decision and interlocutory judgment. A new trial is a re-examination of an issue of fact in the same court, after a trial and decision, etc. Code Civil Proc. 656. The former decision may be vacated, and a new trial granted, on the application of the party "aggrieved," for certain causes, (specified in section 657.)

Here the affidavits of the plaintiff do not tend to prove (1) irregularity in the proceedings of the court or opposite party; or (2) "accident or surprise," within the meaning of the third subdivision of section 657, Code Civil Proc.; or (3) newly-discovered evidence, which could have been given under the pleadings; or (4) insufficiency of the evidence; or (5) error in law occurring at the trial. The real purpose of the plaintiff here, as clearly appears, was to have the decision and judgment set aside, that she might amend her complaint, and thus be enabled to prove facts which, if they exist, are contradictory of the averments of the complaint on which the trial was had. She certainly was not entitled to a new trial of the issues made by the pleadings on which the judgment was based.

Judgment and order affirmed.

BOARD OF COM'RS OF FUNDED DEBT SINKING FUND v. BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF CITY OF SACRAMENTO. (No. 11,560.)

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—RETROACTIVE OPERATION—MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—COMMISSION—CONST. CAL. 1879, ART. 11, § 13; ART. 22, § 1.

The prohibition of Const. Cal. 1879, § 13, art. 11, providing that "the legislature shall not delegate to any special commission, private corporation, company, association, or individual any power to make, control, appropriate, supervise, or in any way interfere with any county, city, town, or municipal improvement, money, property, or effects, whether held in trust or otherwise, or to levy taxes or assessments, or perform any municipal functions whatever," is not retrospective, and, notwithstanding section 1, art. 22, providing that "the provisions of all laws inconsistent with this constitution shall cease upon the adoption thereof," a law establishing such a commission prior to 1879 is not repealed, nor are proceedings by such board thereafter prohibited.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county.

Application of the board of commissioners of the funded debt sinking fund to compel the board of trustees of Sacramento city, by mandate, to levy a certain tax, under an act of the legislature of 1872. The court below issued the writ, and the trustees appealed. The facts are sufficiently stated in the opinion.

W. A. Anderson and E. C. Hart, for appellants. H. O. & W. H. Beatty, for respondents.

MCKINSTRY, J. This is an application of the board of commissioners of the funded debt sinking fund to compel the board of trustees of Sacramento city, by mandate, to levy a certain tax which is ordered to be levied by an act of the legislature passed in 1872. The court below issued an alternative writ, and the city trustees made a response, not denying any fact set up in the petition and affidavit, but setting up matters of law only as a response to the alternative writ. The court overruled the legal objections raised, and made the writ absolute. From this the trustees appealed.

Appellants contend the petition is fatally defective, in that it does not appear therefrom that petitioners have not a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law, and in that it does not appear therefrom that defendants have any municipal function to perform. The facts alleged in the petition show that there is no other plain, speedy, or adequate remedy. The powers and duties of the defendants are declared and determined by a public statute, of which we take notice.

Appellants further contend that petitioners have no legal capacity to maintain this action. The petitioners are parties "beneficially interested," within the meaning of section 1086 of the Code of Civil Procedure. County of Contra Costa v. Board of Sup'rs, 26 Cal. 641.

The main contention of appellants is that the act of March 25, 1872, (St. 1871-72, p. 546,) was repealed on the adoption of the constitution of 1879, by reason of the clause in section 1, art. 22, of that instrument, which reads: "The provisions of all laws inconsistent with this constitution shall cease upon the adoption thereof." It is said that the provisions of the act of 1872 are "inconsistent" with section 13, art. 11, of the constitution. That section reads: "The legislature shall not delegate to any special commission, private corporation, company, association, or individual any power to make, control, appropriate, supervise, or in any way interfere with, any county, city, town, or municipal improvement, money, property, or effects, whether held in trust or otherwise, or to levy taxes or assessments, or perform any municipal functions whatever."

That the prohibition is prospective, and applies to the legislature created by the constitution in which the prohibition is found, seems too clear for argument. The prohibition became operative with the rest of the constitution, and could only limit the power of the legislature provided for in the constitution. Its language does not purport anything more or different. This much being conceded, is necessarily follows that the act of 1872 is not inconsistent with the section of the constitution above quoted. It is not pretended that it is inconsistent with any other provision of the constitution.

The prohibition of future enactments, of a particular character, by houses of the legislature brought into existence by the same constitution which contains the prohibition, cannot be held to annul past legislation without violating the plain meaning of the language. It may be that some provisions of the constitution prohibit future action, authorized in the past by a statute in force prior to the adoption of the constitution. In such cases, the prohibition (it might be argued) is pointed at such future action, and is not a repeal of the statute which originally authorized it. Thus, "no county-seat shall be removed unless two-thirds of the qualified electors shall vote in favor of such removal." Section 2, art. 11. This may not only prohibit any legislation attempting to authorize a removal, without the two-third vote, but may prohibit also the removal itself. Other examples might perhaps be put to illustrate the distinction. But, in each case, the meaning of the prohibitory clause must be ascertained by reference to its subject-matter, and to the other provisions of the constitution. There is no clause of the constitution which can be construed to prohibit proceedings, under the prior law, by the board of commissioners established by the act of 1872, or by other like boards.

In their original points counsel for appellant say: "It is contended by respondents that sections 12 and 13 of article 11 are not retrospective. Standing alone, this would be true, and there are numerous authorities sustaining that construction; but the plain intent to make them retroactive is disclosed by section 1 of article 22 of the constitution of California." In their brief in reply, however, counsel seem to contend that section 13, art. 11, of itself, and independent of section 1, art. 22, of the constitution, repealed the act of 1872. For the reasons above set forth, this view cannot be upheld.

Our conclusion is that the act of 1872 is not inconsistent with the constitution, and that it will remain in full force until altered or repealed by the legislature. Const. art. 11, § 1.

CRIMINAL LAW—EVIDENCE—OPINION—APPEARANCE AS TO BEING RATIONAL.

In the trial of a defendant charged with felony, a question propounded to a witness, who was present at the time of the arrest, "What was the appearance of this man [the defendant] at that time, with reference to his being rational or irrational?" is admissible, on the ground that the evidence sought to be elicited thereby is as to a fact,—namely, his appearance at the time,—and not the opinion of the witness as to the sanity of the defendant, based upon an acquaintance with him.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county.

Information for an assault with intent to commit murder. Judgment for defendant. The people appealed. The facts are sufficiently stated in the opinion.

Oregon Samlers, for appellant. W. B. Wallace, Dist. Atty., for respondent.

MYRICK, J. The defendant was accused by information of the crime of an assault with an intent to commit murder. Testimony had been given concerning the circumstances of the alleged assault. One Keener, a deputy sheriff, who was present at the time of the arrest, which immediately followed the alleged assault, was asked the question: "What was the appearance of this man [the defendant] at that time, with reference to his being rational or irrational?" This was objected to on the ground that it did not appear that the witness was competent to testify, from appearances, as to whether the man was rational or irrational. It is urged on this appeal that the court erred in overruling the objection, because the witness had not shown himself to be competent within subdivision 10, § 1870, Code Civil Proc. The evidence sought to be elicited was not the opinion of the witness as to the mental sanity of the defendant, based on an acquaintance with him, but was rather as to a fact, namely, his appearance at the time. The appearance of a person at a given time is one thing; the opinion of a witness as to the mental condition of that person, based on an acquaintance with him, is quite another.

No error appearing, the judgment is affirmed.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—ACTIONS AGAINST—PLEADING ISSUE—PRESENTATION OF CLAIM—DENIAL—CODE CIVIL PROC. CAL. § 475.

Where, in a suit against executors upon a claim against decedent, plaintiff alleges in his complaint that on the ninth day of December, 1881, his claim, duly verified, was duly presented to defendants, as executors, for allowance, and defendants in their answer "deny that on the ninth day of December, at said city and county, or elsewhere, the claim of the plaintiff for $36,000. * * * or the claim as in plaintiff's complaint set forth, or the claim upon which this action is founded, or any claim whatever, was duly presented to these defendants for allowance," the allegation of presentation of the claim to the executors is material to plaintiff's complaint, and the denial of it in the answer, though open to criticism, is sufficient to raise an issue under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 475.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

Action against executors. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appeals.

Moses G. Cobb, for appellant. A. N. Drown and W. H. Fifield, for respondents.

SHARPSTEIN, J. The plaintiff sues the defendants as executors of the last will and testament of Jane Rowland, deceased, to recover the sum of $36,- 000, which he alleges was justly due to him from said testate at the time of her decease; and he further alleges that on the ninth day of December, 1881, said claim, duly verified by the oath of plaintiff, was duly presented to the defendants as executors of the will of said Jane Rowland, deceased, for allowance. The defendants in their answer deny that on the ninth day of December, 1881, the claim of plaintiff for said sum, or any claim whatever, was duly presented to these defendants for allowance, or that any proper or legal claim, or any of the matters or things in the plaintiff's complaint alleged, has been at any time duly or otherwise presented to these defendants for allowance. Upon this issue the court finds that the alleged claim of plaintiff was not, nor was any claim verified by the oath of plaintiff, duly or otherwise, presented to defendants, as executors as aforesaid or otherwise, for allowance on the ninth day of December, 1881, or at any other time.

The finding is not against the evidence, and appellant does not attack it on that ground. He contends that the pleadings do not raise any such issue; that the allegations of the complaint as to that matter, are wholly immaterial; but, if material, they are not sufficiently denied to raise an issue.

As to the materiality of the allegations we entertain no doubt. The case differs but little, if at all, in principle, from Lathop v. Bampton, 31 Cal. 17, in which it was held that the due presentation of the claim, in that case, to the executors, was a prerequisite of the right to maintain an action against him.

Treating the allegation as a material one, was it sufficiently denied to raise an issue? The defendants in their answers "deny that on the ninth day of December, at said city and county, or elsewhere, the claim of the plaintiff for the sum of $36,000, * * * or the claim as in plaintiff's complaint set forth, or the claim upon which this action is founded, or any claim whatever, was duly presented to these defendants for allowance." It appears by the record that this was treated as a denial, sufficient to raise an issue upon the plaintiff's allegation of a presentation of his claim to the defendants. It is doubtless obnoxious to criticism, but, under section 475, Code Civil Proc., the defect must now be disregarded.

Other questions are discussed by counsel upon which it is unnecessary to express any opinion at this time.

Where, in an action by a husband for divorce, judgment is given against the defendant, and a motion by her for a new trial is denied, and she appeals from the judgment and the order, on motion for new trial, the court may, in its discretion, by special order made after final judgment, order plaintiff to pay the attorney of defendant a sum for costs of her appeal.

Appeal from special order, after decree of divorce, allowing wife's costs.

Thos. H. Smith and Mastic, Belcher & Mastic, for appellant. Charles F. Hanlon, for respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J. This is an appeal from an order made after final judgment in an action of divorce. The judgment was in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant appealed from it, and the order denying her motion for a new trial, to this court. After taking such appeal she applied to the court below for an order that the plaintiff pay to her (defendant) a reasonable sum for costs and counsel fees with which to prosecute her said appeal. The motion was heard on the affidavits of the respective parties, and an order made that the plaintiff pay the attorney of the defendant $175 as costs of her said appeal. From that order this appeal is taken.

In Ex parte Winter, 11 Pac. Rep. 630, it was held that the superior court had the power to make such an order, and to enforce compliance with it. Appellant, on this appeal, insists that the facts before the court were insufficient to justify the order. As we view it, there is sufficient in the record to sustain the action of the court. Order affirmed.

On the nineteenth of June, no transcript having been filed, and no order of record extending the time, the respondent moved to dismiss the appeal. Before the seventeenth of June the appellant obtained the signatures of four of the justices to an order extending the time, but this order was not filed until after the notice of motion to dismiss was given; it was filed, however, on June 21st. We are satisfied that the omission of the appellant to file the order of extension with the clerk was through inadvertence; and, under such circumstances, we do not think the ends of justice would be subserved by enforcing a strict rule, and dismissing his appeal.

LANDLORD AND TENANT—RENT—LIEN.

A landlord, in California, has no lien for rent reserved, or for the value of the use and occupation of the property leased; and an agreement made by a lessee of land and sheep, to deliver or ship wool to his lessor in payment of or as security for rent, creates no interest in or lien upon wool not shipped as against the lessee's assignee in insolvency. THORNTON, J., dissenting.

Commissioners' decision.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sonoma county.

James W. Oates, for appellant. J. H. McGee, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This is an action to recover possession of personal property. A demurrer was interposed to the complaint, which was sustained by the court; and, plaintiff declining to amend, final judgment was entered in favor of defendant, from which plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

The complaint shows that in 1878 plaintiff leased to one Arthur Thing, for a term of five years, certain premises in the county of Sonoma, with 1,300 sheep and other stock and property, at an annual rental of $1,540, payable one-half on the fifteenth of June in each year, and the remaining half on the first of November in each year. The lease provided that the wool sheared from the sheep should be delivered at Cloverdale by the lessee in the name of the lessor, plaintiff, to be sold by the latter, and the rent to be retained and the balance to be paid to the lessee.

In August, 1879, plaintiff, by a separate lease, let to Thing for three years, from May, 1879, 2,700 sheep additional, at an annual rental of $516, payable in May and November of each year. This last lease provided that the lessee should not remove the sheep from the ranch, and that the wool arising from the sheep should be marked on the ranch in the name of the lessor and shipped to him at Cloverdale or Healdsburg, as the lessee might elect.

The rent due plaintiff on the first of November, 1881, was $1,028. The lessee, Thing, sheared, and had on the ranch ready to deliver to plaintiff, 5,500 pounds of wool, when, on the twenty-ninth day of October, 1881, he (Thing) filed his petition in insolvency, and was duly adjudged an insolvent by the court. Defendant was appointed assignee in insolvency, took possession of all the property, and refused to deliver the wool to plaintiff upon demand, or to pay the rent due. The wool is of the value of $1,500. Plaintiff demanded judgment for possession of the wool, or the value thereof if possession could not be had; and, second, if not entitled to possession of the wool, that a lien be established thereon in his favor for the rent due, and that defendant, as assignee, be ordered to pay the sum of $1,208, and interest, out of the proceeds of the sale of the wool.

It is apparent from the foregoing statement that the sheep and other property were leased for a rent reserved or covenanted to be paid in cash, at stated intervals. No interest was retained by the lessor in the wool, but it was made a medium through which, when delivered to the lessor, payment of the rent was to be made. Under one of the leases the wool was to be sold by the lessor, and the rent to be retained out of the proceeds of the sale, and the balance to be paid to the lessee. The other lease is silent as to what disposition is to be made of the wool; but as the rent is fixed, and is payable in cash, it must be presumed it was to be delivered either in payment at its cash value, or as security for the payment of the rent due.

A landlord in this state has no lien for rent reserved, or for the value of the use and occupation of property. The plaintiff, under his lease, had no property in the wool, as such, until it was sheared from the sheep, and delivered to him, under one of the leases, and under the other until marked and shipped to him. The property was not of the character specified in section 2955 of the Civil Code as that upon which a valid mortgage, usually termed a chattel mortgage, could be made, without delivery of possession; and, had it been, there was no attempt to execute such a mortgage. It was not pledged, and could not have been pledged without delivery of possession to the pledgee or a pledge-holder. Civil Code, § 2988.

If we treat it as an agreement to pledge, and assume the complaint to be broad enough in its allegations to warrant a decree enforcing it as such, the case is not altered. An agreement to pledge, as distinguished from an actual pledge, creates no lien as against a creditor of the intended pledgeor, or as against his assignee in bankruptcy or insolvency.

Equity will not regard as done that which one has agreed to do, when to so regard it would be to the injury of third persons who have acquired rights before the execution of the agreement. Jones, Pledges, § 28. "An agreement to deliver property in pledge amounts to nothing as security. The pledgee acquires no right of property until delivery is actually made." "A delivery cannot be dispensed with by a written agreement that the party making the pledge will hold it as the bailee of the pledgee." Jones, Pledges, § 29, and cases cited.

It follows that the plaintiff had no such interest in the wool, or lien thereon, as entitled him to a recovery, or to a judgment establishing a lien thereon in his favor, against the defendant, as assignee in insolvency of Arthur Thing, the lessee, and the order sustaining the demurrer was proper, and the judgment appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

In re Estate of Crowey, Deceased. (No. 9,574.)

(Supreme Court of California. November, 1836.)

1. HOMESTEAD—RIGHTS OF WIDOW TO—CALIFORNIA—LEASE OF HOMESTEAD.

In proceedings by a widow to have a homestead set apart to her out of her deceased husband's estate under the California law, it appeared as follows: During the husband's life-time the husband and wife recorded their joint homestead declaration, claiming a tract of land, and two houses thereon, as a homestead. Of this tract the larger part was at that time rented to a tenant, who farmed it, and occupied the farm-house under a lease from the husband's ancestor, the term of which was unexpired at decedent's death. The husband, till his decease, occupied the other house, with five acres of land adjoining it. Held, the widow was entitled to have set aside to her as a homestead, only the house in which she and her husband lived, together with the five acres on which it was situated.¹

2. APPEAL—REVIEWING EVIDENCE—SETTING ASIDE WIDOW'S HOMESTEAD.

The supreme court of California will review the evidence upon an appeal from a judgment confirming the appraiser's report in proceedings to set aside a widow's homestead.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Napa county.

Proceedings by widow to have a homestead set aside. Order confirming appraisers' report. Heirs appeal.

One G. W. Crowey, by his will, devised a farm of 185.73 acres to his son William H. Crowey, (the decedent in the case,) subject to the proviso that no part of his estate (which included other property) should be distributed until five years from his death; the income during that period to be applied to the support of his wife and children, and the payment of taxes and expenses. Before his death he erected a dwelling-house on a portion of said land for the use of said W. H. Crowey and his wife, Mattie, (the widow,) and permitted them to take up their residence therein. On October 13, 1882, said G. W. Crowey leased said farm, "excepting the house now occupied by William H. Crowey, with five acres of land adjoining said house," to one J. C. Meredith for the term of one year. This lease was in writing, and signed by G. W. Crowey and W. H. Crowey, and did not expire till after the death of W. H. Crowey. Under it Meredith farmed the land, and occupied the farm-house, till after the death of W. H. Crowey. In the same month said G. W. Crowey died. On the twenty-fourth March, 1883, W. H. and Mattie Crowey, while living in the new house before mentioned, selected said farm as their homestead, and recorded their joint homestead declaration. On the seventh June, 1883, while residing in the said house upon said land, said W. H. Crowey died. The widow obtained a judgment of the superior court affirming the appraiser's report, setting aside to her as a homestead the house in which she and her husband lived, and 125 acres out of the land above described, from which judgment Jane Crowey, widow of said G. W. Crowey, appeals.

F. E. Johnston and Thos. P. Stoney, for appellant. Freeman, Bates & Rankin and Joy & Ham, for respondent.

MCKINSTRY, J. The appeal is from a judgment confirming the report of appraisers setting apart a homestead, and was taken within 60 days. We can review the evidence. Code Civil Proc. 939.

W. H. and Mattie Crowey, when they filed their declaration of homestead, did not reside in a dwelling-house "situated" on any other than the five-acre tract mentioned in the findings and evidence, within the meaning of section 1237 of the Civil Code. The adjoining 180-acre tract had been leased by the ancestor of W. H. Crowey for an unexpired term, and was in the exclusive possession of Meredith, the lessee, who resided in the dwelling-house on the demised premises.

It is urged by respondent that, when land is occupied as a homestead, the fact that a part is rented out, or is used for business purposes, does not vitiate the homestead, nor limit the area of land protected by it. The 180-acre tract was never occupied by the homestead claimants, and it is not necessary here to decide what would be the effect of leasing a part of the actual homestead after the homestead should be declared.

Two California cases are cited as supporting the judgment of the court below. Of these, Ackley v. Chamberlain, 16 Cal. 181, was a case where the homestead claimant resided on a tract of 160 acres, using the whole, with the barns and outhouses, for farming purposes. The principal occupation of the claimant being the working of the farm on which he resided with his family, it was held that the mere fact that he also kept a tavern at his residence did not deprive him of his right to claim as a homestead the property occupied by himself and family before he used it as a hotel. Under the circumstances, the accommodation of travelers by a farmer was said not to be inconsistent with the main purpose of taking up the 160 acres, and the erection of the dwelling-house. In Ornbaum v. His Creditors, 61 Cal. 457, it was held by a majority of the justices of this court that the claimant had sufficient possession and user of all the land described in his homestead declaration when he filed it.

Section 1237 of the Civil Code defines the homestead as consisting of "the dwelling-house in which the claimant resides, and the land on which the same is situated, selected as in this title provided." The homestead is selected by a declaration in which the claimant is required to state that he or she "is residing on the premises [described,] and claims them as a homestead." Civil Code, 1263. The act of 1860 exempted from forced sale, etc., "the homestead, consisting of a quantity of land, together with the dwelling-house thereon, * * * to be selected by the husband and wife, or either of them," etc. The selection was made by a declaration, in which the claimant was required to state that "he is, at the time of making such declaration, residing with his family on the premises, and that it is his intention to use and claim the same as a homestead."

In Gregg v. Bostwick, 33 Cal. 221, it was held, in accordance with all the decisions, that the word "homestead," in the statute of 1860, was used in its ordinary and popular sense. "Whatever is used, being either necessary or convenient, as a place of residence for the family, as contradistinguished from a place of business, constitutes the homestead." The use or occupation of the land must be by those residing in the house, and must be appropriate to and connected with the occupation of the dwelling-house. It is impossible to conceive of land constituting part of a "homestead" (as the term is commonly employed) of a family residing in a certain dwelling-house, which is not used at all by those living in the dwelling-house, and the right to use or occupy which is in no manner annexed to or connected with the occupancy of the house, but which, to the contrary, is used and possessed by the occupants of another dwelling-house, who alone have the right to the use and possession of the land, and is part of the "home" of those residing in that house.

As was said in Gregg v. Bostwick: "The written declaration for which the statute provides does not of itself impress upon the land the quality of a homestead. It was not intended for any such purpose, but merely for the purpose of a public record of what is in fact the homestead. The premises to be described in the declaration are such, and only such, as the parties are residing on and using as a homestead." And in Mann v. Rogers, 35 Cal. 319, it is said that, when part only of the land described in the homestead declaration is actually used and appropriated as the "home" of the family, the remainder, not so used and appropriated, constitutes no part of the homestead claim. To the same effect is Estate of Delaney, 37 Cal. 179.

It is urged that cases decided while former homestead acts were operative are not authority since the last provisions of the Code relating to the subject took effect. But the differences of the language of the various statutes are not such, in our view, as to affect the decision of the question we have been considering.

In Aucker v. McCoy, 56 Cal. 527, it was held that, under section 1263 of the Civil Code, to constitute a valid homestead, the claimant must actually reside on the premises when the declaration is filed; that is, as applied to the facts of that case, his "residence," in the popular signification of the word, must extend to the land claimed to constitute part of the homestead. We say that a man resides on a farm, or on a lot, by which is meant a farm or lot which has a relation, well understood, to the house in which he makes his home. In Tiernan v. His Creditors, 62 Cal. 289, it was decided that where one lived in half of a double house, the other half having been always occupied by his tenants, the half so occupied was no part of his homestead. Dorn v. Howe, 52 Cal. 635, seems to have recognized the rule that a claimant must "reside" on the "premises" claimed as a homestead.

None of the cases heretofore decided in this state go to the point of holding that one can claim, as part of his homestead, land entirely disconnected from and having no relation, as to its use or possession, with the occupancy of the dwelling-house. If the question were entirely a new one, we would have no difficulty in construing the sections of the Code as excluding from the homestead, land which was not in the possession nor under the control of the claimant when the declaration was filed, but was then actually possessed and controlled by another, claiming a right to the exclusive possession and control of it, and which was appurtenant to his dwelling-house.

There should have been set aside to Mattie Crowey, as a homestead, the house in which she and her husband resided when their declaration was filed, together with the tract of about five acres on which the house is situated.

Judgment reversed, with direction to the court below to enter a judgment in accordance with the foregoing opinion.

HEYWOOD, Ex'r, etc., v. BERKELEY LAND & TOWN IMP. ASS'N and others.
(No. 8,296.)

FERRY—LEASE—FORFEITURE—CONTINUOUS USE.

In an action for forfeiture of a lease of a wharf for covenant broken, a finding that "the leased premises have been used, in good faith continuously, for the usual and ordinary business of a ferry to and from San Francisco," will not be set aside, where it appears that the defendant's ferry-boat, being levied upon by a United States marshal under execution against defendants, failed to run for a month, and that in the interval a schooner ran irregularly, and carried all the freight that was brought for ferriage, and that the money paid as rent was nominal; the object of the lease being to enhance the value of neighboring lands of lessor and lessee.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county. On rehearing. See S. C. 11 Pac. Rep. 246.

Action of assumpsit. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals.

The plaintiff seeks to enforce the forfeiture of a lease for breach of covenant by the lessee. The lease is of a wharf or landing-place at Berkeley. The lessor and lessee are both owners of lands around the demised premises. The lease contained a covenant that "the leased premises shall be used in good faith, continuously, for the usual and ordinary business of a ferry to and from the city and county of San Francisco, and shall not be used for any other purpose whatever." The consideration was one dollar; the object of the lease being to establish a ferry which would enhance the value of the neighboring property of the parties. At the time of the leasing, the lessee had been using the leased premises in connection with a ferry established by it, and was under a continuous contract with the defendant the Standard Soap Company to land, at the wharf, goods of that company. The Standard Soap Company has its factory near the wharf, and is doing business to the extent of nearly $300,000 per annum. At the time of the leasing, April 4, 1877, the lessee had expended $15,000 upon the leased premises, and the service of the ferry was performed by the lessee with a steamer which had cost the lessee $45,000. The lease is for a term of 10 years, with covenant of renewal for another term of 10 years. On April 1, 1880, the steamer of the lessee, after having made one trip, was seized by the United States marshal under process from the United States district court, and was retained in the custody of the marshal. During this interval she made no trip. April 29, 1880, she was sold to defendant Thomas, the president of the Standard Soap Company. She resumed her trips on the same day, and has ever since regularly performed the ferry service. On the same twenty-ninth day of April the lease was assigned to the president of the Standard Soap Company. While the steamer was in the hands of the marshal, a schooner, Nicotine, ran to the wharf in question, whenever weather permitted,—was sometimes gone a week, sometimes half a day, according to the wind and weather. She made seven or eight trips in all. She carried no passengers, and only freight from the Berkeley side; she had no regular place to run from on the San Francisco side. Her master had no contract to do the ferry business while the steamer was tied, but ran to that wharf of his own free will, and as a matter of money; doing other business, and going off to other landings. As soon as the steamer resumed her trips all the regular freight business returned to it, and from that time "this business has improved." Under these circumstances the court below found, as an ultimate fact, that "the leased premises" had "been used, in good faith, continuously, for the usual and ordinary business of a ferry."

Selden S. & Geo. T. Wright, for appellant. Edward J. Pringle, for respondent.

BY THE COURT. The court below found "the leased premises in the complaint described have, since the first day of April, 1880, been used, in good faith, continuously, for the usual and ordinary business of a ferry to and from the city and county of San Francisco, and for no period since the first day of April, 1880, were the leased premises not used for the business or the purpose of a ferry;" and, as conclusion of law, the court found that the said lease was not and is not forfeited; that the defendants do not unlawfully withhold or detain the said leased premises from the plaintiff. We are of opinion that the finding of fact is justified by the evidence, and that no forfeiture was incurred. Judgment and order affirmed.

AYLESWORTH v. DEAN. (No. 11,327.)

(Supreme Court of California. August 28, 1886.)

ASSIGNMENT FOR THE BENEFIT OF CREDITORS—EXEMPT PROPERTY—FINDING.

An assignment for the benefit of creditors, that is shown not to include all of the debtor's property, will be held void, unless it is further shown that the omitted property is exempt from execution.¹

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, county of Plumas.

Plaintiff is the assignee of Tremain & Co., for the benefit of their creditors, and brings this action against defendant, as sheriff, for the recovery of property alleged to have been wrongfully taken from his possession, as such assignee, in pursuance of an attachment against Tremain & Co. Defendant claims that the assignment is invalid because it does not include all of the assignor's property. It seems that all of the debtor's property is not, in fact, included in the assignment, but plaintiff claims that such as is omitted is exempt by law. The findings show that the assignment does not include all of the property, but do not show that the omitted property is exempt. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals, assigning as error the insufficiency of such finding to sustain the judgment.

A. L. Shinn, E. T. Hovan, and W. W. Kellogg, for defendant and appellant.

R. H. F. Variel and M. Ball, for plaintiff and respondent.

BY THE COURT. It does not appear from the findings that the property omitted from the assignment was in fact exempt from execution.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded.

EMERSON v. BERGIN. (No. 9,487.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 30, 1886.)

1. WATERS AND WATER-COURSES—IRRIGATING DITCH—DIVERSION OF WATER—TRESPASS—STRANGER—INJUNCTION.

In 1865 one R. and E. owned farms upon a stream, R.'s farm being higher up the stream than E.'s. In that year, under an agreement with other owners, R. and E. went above their farms, and constructed a dam across the stream, and, by a flume and pipes, diverted its waters to their respective farms. E. paid one-half the expense of the dam and flume down to the point where R. used the water, and all of the expense thence on, to his own farm, and each of them took one-half of the water diverted. In 1868, R. sold his farm to D., and, in 1872, D. sold to P., the wife of B. From 1865 until June, 1881, the water flowed through the flume and pipes, and was distributed to the two farms, one-half to each, without objection or complaint from any one. In June, 1881, E. repaired the flume, and placed upon the land of P. a distributing cistern, into which all of the water was conducted. To distribute the water from the cistern, he inserted in the side of it two wooden pipes to carry the water, and then covered and locked the cistern up. On the fourteenth of July, 1881, B., without notice to E., so far as appears, and without any direction or authority from P., his wife, broke open the cistern, and plugged up the pipe leading to E.'s farm, thereby obstructing the flow of any water through it. Held, that B. had no greater rights in the premises than a stranger, and should be enjoined from any further interference with the cistern.

2. APPEAL—WHEN TAKEN—WITHIN A YEAR OF JUDGMENT.

Where an appeal from a judgment is not taken within one year from the date of rendition of the judgment, it should be dismissed.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county.

Action to restrain the obstruction of the flow of water. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appealed. The facts are stated in the opinion.

S. O. Houghton, for appellant. G. A. Heinlen, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This action was commenced to obtain a perpetual injunction restraining the defendant from obstructing the flow of water into a pipe leading from a distributing cistern, on land owned and occupied by the wife of defendant, to land owned and occupied by plaintiff. By his answer defendant admitted that he had obstructed the flow of water into the pipe, as alleged in the complaint, and then set up certain facts to show that he was justified in so doing. At the trial, after the first witness was sworn and had commenced giving his testimony, the defendant objected to the admission of any testimony under the complaint; but no reason was stated why the testimony was not admissible, and the objection was overruled. At the conclusion of the trial, findings were filed and judgment entered in favor of plaintiff. The defendant moved for a new trial, and, his motion being denied, appealed from the judgment and order.

It is now claimed that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and that the court erred in admitting any testimony in support of it. Doubtless the complaint might have been improved in some respects, but, in the absence of a demurrer, we think it sufficient, and the ruling proper.

The court found that plaintiff had complied with the terms of the agreement made between him and defendant in November, 1879, and there was testimony tending to support the finding. It is argued, however, for the appellant, that the defendant had no interest in the land, and so the agreement, though executed by him, conferred no rights whatever on the plaintiff. Assuming this to be so, it becomes unnecessary to consider what rights the agreement would, if valid, have conferred upon the plaintiff, and the case may be decided upon the other facts presented by the record.

The other facts are as follows: In 1865 one Robert McCubbin and the plaintiff owned farms situate upon a stream known as the Arroyo Permanente, McCubbin's farm being higher up the stream than the plaintiff's. In that year, under an agreement made with other owners of land upon the stream, McCubbin and plaintiff went above their farms, and constructed a dam across the stream, and, by means of a flume and pipes, diverted its waters to their respective farms, to be there used for domestic and other purposes. The plaintiff paid one-half of the expense of the dam and flume down to the point where McCubbin used the water, and all of the expense thence on to his own farm, and each of the parties took one-half of the water diverted. In 1868, McCubbin sold his farm to George Donner, and, in 1872, Donner sold to Francisca Price, who is now the wife of defendant, and, as defendant alleges in his answer, "is now the owner and in the exclusive possession" of the said property. From 1865 until June, 1881, the water flowed through the flume and pipes, and was distributed to the two farms, one-half to each, without objection or complaint from any one. In June, 1881, the plaintiff repaired the flume, and placed upon the land of Mrs. Bergin a distributing cistern, into which all of the water was conducted. To distribute the water from the cistern he inserted in the side of it, and on the same level, two wooden pipes of the same size and capacity to carry water, and then covered and locked the cistern up. One of the pipes took water to the point where Mrs. Bergin used it, and the other to the farm of plaintiff. The water continued to run through these pipes until the fourteenth day of July, 1881, and the court finds that all the water which came into the cistern "would be and was equally divided, and one full half of the water so flowing into said cistern, and so divided, would and did flow through one of said pipes to and into an open flume, out of and from which the defendant could use the same for his, or for his and his wife's, own purposes." On the last-named day the defendant, without notice to the plaintiff, so far as appears, without any direction or authority from his wife, broke open the cistern, and plugged up the pipe leading to plaintiff's farm, thereby obstructing the flow of any water through it. This action was commenced on the next day.

Conceding, now, that plaintiff had only a license to conduct water across the land of defendant's wife, which was subject to be revoked at any time, still no mere volunteer had any right to interfere with his works. Mrs. Bergin, and not the defendant, owned the property, and, if the plaintiff had only a license, she could have revoked it. So, too, if the cistern was not placed upon her land with her consent, and she was not satisfied with the method of distributing the water, she could have required the cistern to be removed. But the defendant had no such power. He does not allege or pretend that he was acting by her direction, or under her authority, and hence he had no greater rights in the premises than a mere stranger. The court below acted rightly, therefore, in enjoining him from further interference.

The appeal from the judgment was taken more than a year after the judgment was entered, and should be dismissed, and the order denying a new trial should be affirmed.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the appeal from the judgment is dismissed, and the order affirmed.

TIPTON and Wife v. MARTIN and others. (No. 11,109.)

HOMESTEAD—ABANDONMENT—REMOVAL—ST. CAL. 1860, §§ 1, 10, p. 311.

A homestead created under sections 1 and 10, St. Cal. 1860, p. 311, cannot be abandoned by the mere fact of a removal from the homestead premises, with or without the intent of not returning to them.¹

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Tehama county.

Action to enjoin the sale of land on the grounds that the premises constituted a homestead, and were exempt from execution. Judgment for plaintiffs. Defendants appealed. The facts are stated in the opinion.

Chipman & Garter, for respondents. John F. Ellison and W. Henry Jones, for appellants.

McKEE, J. It appears from the record in this case that defendant Martin, as the sheriff of Tehama county, had levied on a parcel of land, as the property of the plaintiff John C. Tipton, by an execution issued upon a judgment against said Tipton in favor of V. P. Baker, one of the defendants herein; and, being about to sell the land under said execution, the plaintiffs commenced the action in hand to enjoin the sale on the ground that the premises constituted their homestead, and were exempt from execution.

The defendants contend that the land, although selected by the plaintiffs as their homestead, was not exempt from execution, because the plaintiffs had relinquished their homestead right thereon by abandonment. This contention was made upon the following facts alleged by the defendants in their answer to show abandonment: "That in the month of —, 1878, the plaintiffs removed from said premises and from this state, and freely and voluntarily moved into the territory of Montana with the intention of remaining there and residing there permanently, and without any intention of returning again to this state, or upon said premises, and have since said month of —, 1878, continuously resided in said territory of Montana, and do now reside therein, and since they moved into said territory of Montana the said John C. Tipton has taken the initiatory steps to acquire title therein to United States land under and by virtue of the United States homestead laws, and the said application for said land under said United States homestead laws is still pending."

The plaintiffs demurred to the sufficiency of the facts as thus pleaded. The demurrer was sustained by the court. Defendants declined to amend their answer, and judgment final was entered against them, from which they have appealed; and the only question arising on the appeal is whether the facts, as set forth in the answer, are sufficient in law to constitute an abandonment of the homestead.

Under the homestead law of 1851 a homestead right was founded upon occupancy of the homestead premises by the family. Such an occupancy constituted presumptive evidence of the appropriation of the premises as a homestead, (Cook v. McChristian, 4 Cal. 26;) and, as it was founded upon occupation, cessation of the occupancy constituted an abandonment. Hence removal from the premises was considered as presumptive evidence of abandonment. Taylor v. Hargous, Id. 268. Under that law, therefore, abandonment was a question of act and intent, ascertainable and determinable from evidence, like any other fact in a proceeding. If removal was only for a temporary purpose, and there was no intent to remain away permanently, it would not constitute abandonment; but, if the act of removal was coupled with an intent never to return, abandonment was considered as complete.

¹See Honaker v. Cecil, (Ky.) 1 S. W. Rep. 392; Bowman v. Watson, (Tex.) 1 S. W. Rep. 273.

Benedict v. Bunnel, 7 Cal. 246; Moss v. Warner, 10 Cal. 296; Guiod v. Guiod, 14 Cal. 506; Harper v. Forbes, 15 Cal. 202. Thereby the homestead right was destroyed, and the land, upon which the right had existed, became subject to execution creditors of the owner thereof.

That continued to be the law of the homestead and of its abandonment until the year 1860. In that year there was a statute passed on the twenty-eighth of April which changed the character of the homestead. Instead of being a right founded upon occupancy by the family, a homestead created under its provisions was declared to be an estate in joint tenancy, which upon the death of either of the spouses, descended to and vested absolutely in the survivor, subject to the power of the probate court to set it apart for the benefit of the survivor and the legitimate children, (sections 1, 10, St. 1860, p. 311; McQuade v. Whaley, 31 Cal. 526; Estate of James, 23 Cal. 416; Barber v. Babel, 36 Cal. 11; Watson v. His Creditors, 58 Cal. 556; Herrold v. Reen, Id. 443;) and, as an estate in joint tenancy, it could not be transferred or abandoned except according to the provisions of the law under which it was created. Now, the statute of 1860 provided that, in the case of a homestead selected by a husband and wife under its provisions, the only evidence of abandonment should be a declaration of abandonment signed by the husband and wife, and acknowledged by them and recorded as a conveyance of real property. Section 2, St. 1860, p. 312.

The homestead in question was selected on the sixteenth of January, 1862, upon common property of the claimants; and the selection protected the land, as against subsequent creditors, as much as if the claimants were vested with the fee-simple title. Brooks v. Hyde, 37 Cal. 373. It is well settled that title to real property cannot be abandoned. Occupancy of the property is not, therefore, necessary to preserve the right. The right is not barred or destroyed except by an adverse holding for the statutory time necessary to create the presumption of an adverse title.

As an estate in joint tenancy with the right of survivorship, the homestead created under the act of 1860 could not be abandoned by the mere fact of a removal from the homestead premises with or without the intent of not returning to them. "A homestead," says the Code, which embodies the statutory provisions of the homestead laws of 1860 and 1862 upon the subject, "can be abandoned only by a declaration of abandonment, or a grant thereof, executed and acknowledged by the husband and wife if the claimants are married, or by the claimant if unmarried;" and "the abandonment is effectual only from the time it is recorded." Sections 1243, 1244, Civil Code. Abandonment of a homestead cannot be proved in any other way. As we have said: "The homestead having once been regularly created out of a parcel of land in accordance with the statute, the estate so created continues to exist until put an end to in the mode pointed out by the statute. * * * Under our law we know of no abandonment of the homestead except in the statutory mode." Porter v. Chapman, 65 Cal. 365; S. C. 4 Pac. Rep. 237.

It follows that the court below properly sustained the demurrer, and there is no error in the judgment appealed from.

Let the judgment be affirmed. So ordered.

TULLY v. TULLY. (No. 8,492.)*(Supreme Court of California. November 30, 1886.)JOINT TENANTS AND TENANTS IN COMMON—ESTOPPEL—BY DEED.

A deed of a squatter's interest in what was supposed to be public land, made to two men, one of whom paid the purchase money, the object of the joint deed being to use the name of the gratuitous grantee as a pre-emptor in procuring title from the United States to so much of the land as should be in excess of 160 acres, does not create a tenancy in common; and, in an action by the gratuitous grantee against his co-grantee to recover an undivided one-half of the lands described in the deed, the latter is not estopped, by that deed, from setting up as a defense a good title subsequently acquired by him from the true owners of the land. McKINSTRY and McKEE, JJ., dissenting.

See former opinion in 9 Pac. Rep. 841.

The facts in this action, as found by the court below, are that on November 11, 1856, the defendant and respondent purchased of Martin Murphy, the person in possession, his interest in 236 acres of land in Santa Clara county, California; paying therefor $900 from his private funds. The deed was made to plaintiff and appellant and defendant. The deed was delivered to the defendant, who also received the exclusive possession of the land. Both defendant and his grantor supposed, at the time the deed was made, that the land was a part of the public domain; and the object of the joint deed was to use the plaintiff's name as a pre-emptor in procuring title from the United States to so much of the land as should be in excess of 160 acres. Defendant continued in the exclusive possession of the land, from the time of the purchase from Murphy, until the commencement of this action, with the exception of the period from the fall of 1859 to the fall of 1860, when plaintiff occupied it, under a verbal agreement to farm it for one-fourth the product as rent. On the nineteenth November, 1858, one Antonio Chaboya received a patent from the United States of the rancho "Yerba Buena," which included this land. On the twenty-seventh February, 1861, defendant purchased the legal and equitable title to the land in dispute from Chaboya's grantees, and had the conveyance properly recorded March 9, 1861. He paid $4,400 for that title. Plaintiff has never offered to pay to defendant any portion of that sum, and has never requested defendant to convey to him any portion of or interest in said premises. At the trial judgment was entered for defendant. Plaintiff appeals.

W. G. Lorigan and S. F. Lieb, for appellant. L. Archer, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. This is an action of ejectment to recover a parcel of land in Santa Clara county. When the first purchase was made in 1856, the whole purchase money ($900) was paid by the defendant, John Tully. Under the purchase John Tully took and received from his vendor and grantor the exclusive possession of the land in suit. In pursuance of this purchase the deed was made by procurement of John Tully to the plaintiff, Owen Tully, and himself. Under this purchase of 1856, no title whatever was acquired. The land bought was at that time supposed, both by John Tully and his grantor, to be public land. This was not so. The land was part of a Mexican grant formerly made to Antonio Chaboya, to whom a patent including the premises was regularly issued by the United States in November, 1858. In February, 1861, John Tully acquired by a proper conveyance the true title to this land from the vendees of Chaboya, paying from his own funds therefor the sum of $4,400.

The history of the possession is correctly given in a dissenting opinion herein drawn up by Justice McKee. It appears that John Tully has been in the exclusive possession of this land, claiming the same as his own, for about 24 years prior to the commencement of this suit, and, since the purchase of the true title in 1861, plaintiff has never offered to pay to defendant any portion of said sum of $4,400, and has never requested defendant to convey to him any portion or interest in the premises, nor has he ever attempted or offered to enter into possession of this land, or claim any right to the possession thereof, until one year next before the commencement of this action.

In this action, which is ejectment, the paramount legal title usually prevails. This legal title is with defendant, and must prevail, unless the defendant is prevented by law from availing himself of it.

It is urged on behalf of plaintiff that he is so prevented; that he is estopped from using such title, because, when he acquired his title, in 1861, he was in possession as tenant in common with plaintiff. We do not think he was really so in possession. The plaintiff, though apparently tenant in common, really was not. He was a mere trustee of defendant for such title as was acquired by the purchase and conveyance made in 1856. The defendant, as appears from the above statement, paid the whole purchase money upon the purchase of 1856, and caused the deed thereon to be made to plaintiff and himself. The plaintiff's tenancy in common amounted only to holding the legal title in trust for defendant, which title the defendant had the undoubted right, when he made the purchase, in 1861, and received a conveyance thereunder, to have had conveyed to him by plaintiff. Plaintiff, being a mere naked trustee for defendant, would not, in offering to pay one-half of the purchase money under the purchase of 1861, be entitled to have any portion of the true title then purchased conveyed to him. Equity would not clothe plaintiff with any such right. His being a trustee for the defendant would rebut such equity. Under these circumstances, though the action is ejectment, we must hold that defendant is not estopped from availing himself of the true title to protect his possession.

We think the judgment and order should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: MORRISON, C. J.; MYRICK, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

MCKINSTRY, J. I dissent. It was held in Olney v. Sawyer, 54 Cal. 379, that, in an action at law by one tenant in common against another, to be let into the possession of demanded premises, the defendant cannot justify an ouster of the plaintiff by setting up an outstanding title—even if it be the true title—purchased by him while in possession under the common title. As this case is presented by the pleadings, the appeal must be determined by reference to the strictly legal rights of the respective parties. So regarding it, it was the duty of the defendant to let the plaintiff into the common possession. He might then have asserted his paramount legal title in a separate action.

It was decided by the former supreme court of New York, in 1841, that when a parent having a possessory title to lands dies in possession, leaving several children his heirs at law, who succeed to such possession, it is not competent for one of such heirs, who has obtained exclusive possession of the whole of the premises, to defeat a recovery, by his co-heirs, of their proportional parts or shares, by setting up a title acquired from the owners of the land. He must surrender possession to his co-heirs, and then bring ejectment. NELSON, C. J., said: "One of the co-heirs, having derived his possession from the common ancestor, as well as through his co-heirs, is disabled, while standing on this possession, from disputing their title. I do not deny that the title thus set up may be valid, nor but that the party may avail himself of it after surrendering this possession. In a court of law he clearly could. There might be considerations existing between the co-heirs that would lead a court of equity to declare the purchase to have been made for the benefit of all upon proper terms." Phelan v. Kelley, 25 Wend. 389. In the case at bar the plaintiff and defendant entered into the possession, as tenants in common, under a title derived from the same source; the defendant holding for the plaintiff to the extent of the latter's interest.

Under our system the equitable considerations referred to by Chief Justice NELSON, could be alleged in a cross-complaint; and if it appeared, for example, that the co-tenant who had been let into the possession by the purchaser of the outstanding title had paid or tendered, within a reasonable time, his proportionate share of the cost of acquiring the true title, (or elected with reasonable diligence to participate in the purchase,) equity might hold the purchase to have been made in part for his benefit. Mandeville v. Solomon, 39 Cal. 125.

But, even if it should be made to appear that the party had indicated his intention, with reasonable promptitude, to participate in the purchase of the true title, there might be controlling equities which would prevent him from obtaining a decree for a conveyance of such title to an aliquot portion. Thus, in the case at bar, it would seem that the present plaintiff had but the naked legal conveyance to an undivided moiety of the original possessory title; the defendant having paid the whole of the purchase price. If, in an action brought by the defendant here to recover the whole possession after letting plaintiff into the common possession, the defendant in such action should rely upon his equitable right to the benefit of the true title on payment of his share of the purchase money, and it should be made to appear that he had neglected and refused to pay to the plaintiff therein his part of the original purchase,—the purchase of the possessory title,—it may be a court of equity would refuse a decree for a conveyance of any portion of the true title. It is apparent, too, that the issues might be complicated by questions as to the validity of a purchase made in part in the name of Tully, (plaintiff herein,) with a view to securing for the present defendant the government title to more land than he was authorized to acquire directly under the statutes of the United States. It is enough to say that these matters cannot be gone into under the pleadings in the present action.

If facts exist (independent of the conveyance of the true title to him) which give the defendant a perfect equity on which he could defend his exclusive possession in the present action of "ejectment," those facts have not been pleaded herein. It is settled that to establish such a defense in ejectment the facts constituting the perfect equity must be alleged in the answer as fully as they are required to be in a cross-complaint. Arguello v. Bours, 8 Pac. Rep. 49; Kentfield v. Hayes, 57 Cal. 409. As I understand it, the defendant here has been given all the benefit of a decree declaring a resulting trust in his favor in land, to which he cannot deny the plaintiff has the legal title, without any pleading on which such decree could be based.

It may be said that, to prevent circuitry of actions, the defendant here should be permitted to retain the exclusive possession. Why compel him to let the plaintiff into the possession only that the plaintiff may be excluded again under a judgment in an action brought by the present defendant? But, first, it may be that in such new action the present plaintiff would be held entitled to participate in the true title; second, on authority of Olney v. Sawyer, supra, the defendant cannot in this action rely on his acquisition of the paramount title; third, the same objection might be made in every case where the rule applies that a tenant cannot dispute his landlord's title.

As was said in Phelan v. Kelly, supra: "The rule of law that a person coming into possession of lands under the agreement or license of another cannot be permitted to deny the title of the latter, when called upon to surrender, is of almost universal application. Even if he had a valid title at the time, he is deemed to have waived it, and, as between the parties, to have admitted title in the person under whom he entered;" citing cases.

Of course, one of two co-tenants may oust the other, and acquire the exclusive title by adverse possession. But the statute of limitations was not pleaded herein, and the plaintiff objected to evidence tending to prove the defendant's adverse possession on the ground that the same was irrelevant, incompetent, immaterial, and not pertinent to any issue in the case. Moreover, if the limitation had been pleaded, the transcript contains no finding of the fact that the defendant has had adverse possession for the statutory period, nor any finding which includes a finding of adverse possession. As a conclusion of law from preceding findings of fact, the court below held that the plaintiff was barred by sections 318 and 319 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the bill of exceptions expressly recites that no other facts were proved than those set forth in the five findings. The facts stated in the five findings do not establish adverse possession, for the reason, among others, that there is no statement that the defendant has paid any taxes on the demanded premises, or that no taxes were assessed thereon.

MCKEE, J. I dissent. The action is one at law in which the plaintiff asks to be let into possession of a tract of land containing about 236 acres, in which he claims to be a tenant in common with the defendant. The title asserted by the plaintiff to an undivided one-half of the land is derived from a deed made to himself and the defendant on the eleventh of November, 1856. Under that deed defendant entered into the exclusive possession of the land, and occupied it exclusively until the fall of the year 1859, when he delivered possession to the plaintiff, who entered upon the land and cultivated it, during the farming season of 1860, upon an arrangement with the defendant to cultivate the same on shares. In November, 1860, the plaintiff withdrew from the possession, and the defendant re-entered, and continued to exclusively occupy and enjoy the use of the land. Meantime the land was claimed to be within the boundary lines of a Mexican grant which had been finally confirmed to the claimant, to whom the United States issued a patent for the land; and on the twenty-seventh of February, 1861, the defendant, being in possession, acquired by purchase the outstanding patent title by a deed which he took in his own name, and caused to be recorded on the thirteenth of March, 1861; and from the date of the deed until the commencement of this action—a period of 24 years—he has been in the actual exclusive possession of the land.

Upon these facts the court below held that the defendant, having been continuously in the actual and exclusive possession of the land, claiming to be the owner thereof in hostility to the plaintiff, was the legal and equitable owner, and "that any and all right of the plaintiff, if any he ever had, was barred by the provisions of sections 318 and 319 of the Code of Civil Procedure, before the commencement of this action, and that defendant is entitled to judgment for his costs." I think the decision is erroneous.

The defendant did not claim by his answer to have derived any title to the land from an adverse possession of the same sufficient to give him title under the statute of limitations. The answer contained (1) a general denial; (2) affirmative allegations of seizin in fee for over 20 years; (3) allegations that the cause of action was barred by the provisions of section 319 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and (4) that the cause of action did not accrue to the plaintiff within five years before the commencement of the action. These were the only issues made by the pleadings.

Now, as plaintiff and defendant originally acquired title to the land in common, the actual and exclusive possession thereof by defendant did not affect the plaintiff's right; for defendant's possession as a tenant in common with the plaintiff, in whatever title they had to the land, was the possession of the plaintiff. Waring v. Crow, 11 Cal. 367; Knox v. Marshall, 19 Cal. 617; Coleman v. Clements, 23 Cal. 245; Owen v. Morton, 24 Cal. 373; Miller v. Myle, 46 Cal. 535. That possession continued while the relation of tenants in common existed; and the legal presumption is that the relation continued to exist until the defendant ousted and disseized the plaintiff, by notice, express or implied, that he claimed the land adversely to the plaintiff, or by acts and declarations equivalent to notice of such a claim. There was no evidence, and there is no finding, that defendant, in or by his actual possession, ever ousted and disseized the plaintiff. The basis of the decision and finding is the fact of 24 years of exclusive actual possession by the defendant. But that possession, held by the defendant as a tenant in common with the plaintiff, did not divest the plaintiff of his rights in the land, or vest absolute title to the land in the defendant, either by the purchase of an outstanding title or under the statute of limitations.

There is no doubt that a tenant in common, in exclusive actual possession of land held in common may buy in an outstanding title, and take a conveyance thereof to himself alone; but the purchase does not per se dissolve the tenancy in common between himself and his co-tenant. The title acquired inures to the benefit of both. The general rule is that a tenant in common who buys in an outstanding title holds it in trust for his co-tenants. Mandeville v. Solomon, 39 Cal. 134. The mere fact of the purchase does not affect their legal relation; nor is it affected by mere seizin and possession of one after the purchase, however long continued; nor does such a possession constitute an adverse possession which sets in motion the running of the statute of limitations. There can be no adverse possession against a co-tenant out of actual possession until ouster and disseizin. The tenant in common out of actual possession has the right to assume that the actual possession of his co-tenant is his possession, and is held under and in subordination to their common title, whatever it be, and that the exclusive possession is not adverse to him.

It is true, there arises out of the purchase of an outstanding title an additional relation between a tenant in possession and his co-tenant out of actual possession; namely, that of trustee and cestui que trust. But the rights and remedies incident to this new relation, being distinct from the legal ownership of the land, are exclusively cognizable in equity.

This is not an equitable action; it is an action at law,—ejectment for the recovery of real property,—in which the court below could only try and determine the issues raised by the pleadings in the case. There was no issue before the court that the defendant held and possessed the land upon a claim of title, written or unwritten, adversely to the title of the plaintiff, as tenant in common with the defendant, for five years before the commencement of the action. Sections 321–323, 325, Code Civil Proc.

Sections 318 and 319, upon which the court below based its decisions, are inapplicable. The first provides that no action can be maintained for the recovery of real property unless the plaintiff, his ancestor or grantor, was seized or possessed of the property within five years before the commencement of the action. But, being a tenant in common with the defendant, the plaintiff was so seized until the defendant's possession became hostile or adverse. Besides, section 318 is not pleaded at all. Section 319 is the only one pleaded; but, as has been held, that section was never intended to apply to an action of ejectment. It has reference only to personal actions founded upon title to real property. Richardson v. Williamson, 24 Cal. 301.

I think the judgment and order should be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

KETCHUM v. BARBER. (No. 11,423.)

(Supreme Court of California. August 31, 1886.)

1. DEED—DESCRIPTION OF GRANTEE.

A deed to Henry Stull & Co. vests the legal title in Henry Stull alone, and his deed will give to his grantee a good and valid title.¹

2. EJECTMENT—PROOF OF OUSTER—ADMISSIONS IN PLEADINGS.

In ejectment, if the defendant in his answer admits acts amounting to an ouster, but denies plaintiff's title or right to possession, plaintiff is not bound to prove ouster, and, if he prove title and right to possession in himself, is entitled to recover.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, county of Amador.

Ejectment for possession of a certain mining and water ditch running across defendant's lands. Plaintiff claimed title through one Henry Stull, who in turn derived, or claimed to derive, title from defendant by virtue of a deed made to Henry Stull & Co. Defendant in his answer admitted having given to Stull & Co. a right to dig and maintain the ditch, but claimed that it had been abandoned, and admitted that hence he had re-entered upon and used the ditch continuously to the time of trial. On the trial, plaintiff, to make out his title, introduced the deed to Stull & Co. in evidence, and also put in evidence the deed from Stull to himself, and proved by witnesses the possession thereunder of himself and Stull, and closed. Defendant moved for a nonsuit on the ground that plaintiff had neither proven title nor possession in himself, nor ouster by defendant. The nonsuit was granted and plaintiff appealed.

Eagon & Armstrong, for plaintiff and appellant. McGee & Farnsworth, for defendant and respondent.

BY THE COURT. The nonsuit was improperly granted. The deed to Henry Stull & Co. vested the title in Henry Stull. Winter v. Stock, 29 Cal. 411, 412. The answer shows a sufficient ouster.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

SCHWARTZ v. COWELL. (No. 9,691.)

1. EJECTMENT—TITLE—ATTACHMENT—OFFICER SERVING—CODE CIVIL PROC. CAL., § 542.
Where a plaintiff in ejectment claims title through an attachment, if it appears that the officer to whom it was directed failed to comply with the requirements of section 542, Code Civil Proc. Cal., the omissions on the part of the officer are fatal to his title, and plaintiff cannot recover in the action.
2. JUDGMENT—LIEN—JUSTICE'S COURT—COUNTY COURT—DOCKETING OF JUDGMENT.
S. recovered a judgment against B. before a justice of the peace, August 5, 1875, which, on appeal, was affirmed in the county court, April 10, 1877. On June 18, 1875, B. for a valuable consideration conveyed his land to C. by deed, duly recorded on the same day. Held, that C. thus acquired the title of B. before any lien was created in favor of S. by virtue of the docket of his judgment or otherwise.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county.

This is an action of ejectment. On June 16, 1875, one Charles Brown was the owner of the premises. On that day one Steen commenced an action against him in a justice's court to recover $150 upon contract, and on the same day a summons and a writ of attachment were duly issued against him. The said writ of attachment was on the same day delivered to a constable of the county, and on the seventeenth day of June, 1875, the constable attempted to levy the attachment on the premises by filing with the county recorder a copy of the attachment, together with a description of the property, and a notice that it was attached; but the recorder did not index the attachment when filed, nor did he do so until the twenty-fourth day of the said month. A final judgment was rendered in the cause against Brown, upon an appeal, in the county court, on the tenth day of April, 1877, and the judgment was on the same day docketed in the judgment docket of that court. An execution was issued on the judgment, and under it the premises were sold to the plaintiff, and thereafter conveyed to him by deed, by the proper officer, which was duly recorded. There was no evidence offered by the plaintiff showing, or tending to show, that any copy of the attachment, with a description of the property, and a notice that it was attached, or either of them, was ever left with an occupant of the property, or, if there was no occupant, by posting the same in a conspicuous place, or any place on said property. It further appears that on the eighteenth of June, 1875, the said Charles Brown duly granted and conveyed, for a valuable consideration, the said premises by deed to the defendant, which deed was duly recorded, and upon the delivery of the deed, on the said eighteenth of June, 1875, the defendant went into immediate possession, and has ever since been in possession, of the same. The cause was tried upon these and other facts not necessary to be stated, and resulted in a judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appealed.

Chas. B. Younger and J. M. Lesser, for appellant. Jos. H. Skirm and Pillsbury & Blarding, for respondents.

McKINSTRY, J. 1. The plaintiff derived no title through the attempted attachment in the action of Steen v. Brown. There is no finding, nor does it appear, that plaintiff offered any evidence tending to prove that a copy of the attachment, together with a description of the property attached, and a notice that it was attached, was left with the occupant of the property, or posted upon it. Code Civil Proc. 542, subd. 1. No lien was created by the attempted levy of the attachment, to which the right of the purchaser at the execution sale could relate. Watt v. Wright, 66 Cal. 202; S. C. 5 Pac. Rep. 91; Main v. Tappener, 43 Cal. 206; Sharp v. Baird, Id. 577; Porter v. Pico, 55 Cal. 172.

2. The judgment in the action of Steen v. Brown was entered by the justice of the peace, August 5, 1875; and the judgment was rendered in the county court, April 10, 1877. On the eighteenth of June, 1875, Brown, defendant in that action, for a valuable consideration conveyed, by grant, bargain, and sale deed, the premises herein demanded to the defendant Cowell, which deed was duly acknowledged and recorded on the same day. Cowell thus acquired the title of Brown before any lien was created in favor of Steen by virtue of the docket of his judgment, or otherwise. Judgment affirmed.

INTEREST—COMPUTATION—INTEREST ON COMPOUND INTEREST.

Where defendant, in California, executed her promissory notes payable in 30 days, with interest thereon at the rate of 4 per cent. a month, interest to be paid monthly in advance, and, if not so paid, to become a part of the principal, and bear thereafter the same rate of interest, compounding monthly in advance, the court may properly, in calculating the interest due to plaintiff, allow interest on compound interest, or "interest on interest on interest."

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county.

Action to enforce payment of notes and mortgage.

On or about the seventeenth day of June, 1881, the defendant borrowed from the plaintiff the sum of $200 in gold coin of the United States, and to secure the payment of the same, with interest, she executed and delivered to the plaintiff her four promissory notes, for $50 each; each being in the words and figures following:

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., June 17, 1881.

"Thirty days after date, without grace, I promise to pay to Asa Fisk, or order, the sum of fifty and 00-100 dollars, to be paid only in gold coin of the United States of America, for value received, with interest thereon, in like gold coin, from date at the rate of four per cent. per month until paid; interest to be paid monthly in advance, and, if not so paid, to become a part of the principal, and bear thereafter the same rate of interest, compounding monthly in advance, for value received. This note to be paid at the banking-house or office of Asa Fisk, in the city of San Francisco. ABBA LEE."

The defendant at the same time, to secure the said notes, executed a mortgage on certain lots in the town of Haywards, Alameda county, California, in which it was stipulated, among other things, that defendant should pay 30 per cent. on said principal and interest as attorney's fees in case of foreclosure, and would also pay taxes and assessments, which, if not paid, should be added to the principal, and bear interest at 4 per cent. a month. The defense was that the notes and mortgage did not correctly set forth the terms of the agreement made between plaintiff and defendant respecting the loan, and the terms of the agreement were that plaintiff would loan defendant $250 for five or six years, and defendant should pay interest therefor at 4 per cent. per annum; that defendant, being wholly inexperienced in business, had never previously executed any promissory note or mortgage, and had no one to advise her except plaintiff; that she was short-sighted, and unable to read without the aid of her eye-glasses, and, having left them at home, did not read over the notes and mortgage before signing them; that, in preparation of the notes and mortgage, she relied entirely on the plaintiff, and believed that they had been prepared in accordance with, and expressing therein the terms of, her previous agreement with plaintiff for the loan.

On the hearing judgment was given that plaintiff was entitled, on her said loan of $200, to the total sum of $744.31, and foreclosure sale was ordered, and, in case of the property proving insufficient, a judgment should be docketed for the balance against defendant, and execution issued thereon. The defendant appeals. Apparently there was an exception taken by defendant to the allowance of interest upon compound interest, which the appellate court overruled.

R. Percy Wright, for appellant. E. H. Rixford, for respondent.

BY THE COURT. The court below did not err in its calculation of interest. The mode adopted is in strict accord with the contract of the parties. Judgment affirmed.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS—DEBT OF ANOTHER.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Merced county.

Action by a physician to recover for professional services rendered to defendant's mother, and alleged in the complaint to have been rendered "at defendant's special instance and request." Plaintiff's own testimony at the trial showed that he had rendered part of the services at the special request of the mother herself. He offered, however, to prove by parol that, pending his treatment of the mother, at her request, the defendant had orally promised to pay plaintiff for the services he was rendering. Defendant objected to evidence of any such contract, unless it was in writing. The objection was overruled, and plaintiff was allowed to prove such a contract by parol. Judgment went for plaintiff. Defendant appealed.

J. K. Law, for defendant and appellant. F. H. Farrar, for plaintiff and respondent.

Ross, J. The complaint counts upon a contract alleged to have been made by defendant with plaintiff for the rendition of the services of the latter, and is sufficient. But the plaintiff's own testimony shows that prior to any agreement with defendant he had been employed by defendant's mother to attend her professionally, and, pursuant to that employment, had commenced his treatment of her. His recovery in the court below against the defendant included compensation for services rendered by him as well before as after the contract with defendant, and is not susceptible, as the record is presented, of severance. Certainly the services rendered prior to the contract with defendant were rendered at the instance of defendant's mother, and for them she was bound to pay. That debt was her debt, and for it defendant could, under the statute, only bind himself in writing.

It results that the judgment and order must be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial. So ordered.

JOHNSON v. WALDEN. (No. 11,176.)

ACTION—CHANGE OF VENUE—AFFIDAVITS OF MERIT—"THE CASE."

Where, on a motion by defendant to change the venue of an action, the affidavits of merit in support thereof fails to state that defendant has fully and fairly stated "the case" to his attorney, the court will not make the order for a change of venue.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county.

This action was brought by an attorney to recover money claimed to be due him from defendant for services performed for defendant, at his request, in Sacramento county, California. Defendant demurred to the complaint, and at the time of filing such demurrer made a demand and motion that the place of trial be changed to Stanislaus county, and filed an affidavit of merits in support thereof, the material part of which reads as follows: "I have a just and meritorious defense to said action, and I have stated fully and fairly all the grounds of my defense thereto to my attorney, S. W. Geiss, Esq., of Modesto, Stanislaus county, California; and I am by my said attorney informed, and I sincerely believe, that I have a good and sufficient and meritorious defense to said action." The superior court of Sacramento county, California, granted the motion, and ordered the place of trial to be changed to Stanislaus county. From that order plaintiff appealed.

Grove L. Johnson, in person, and Albert M. Johnson, for plaintiff.

The affidavit of merits is defective in not stating that defendant has fully and fairly stated "the case" to his attorney. People v. Larue, 5 Pac. Rep. 157; Nickerson v. California Raisin Co., 61 Cal. 268. Both these cases are directly in point. Both these cases were cited and read to the superior court of Sacramento county at the time of the argument of the motion to change the place of trial, and were by it overruled.

BISHOP v. GLASSEN. (No. 9,621.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 23, 1886.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS—HOMESTEAD—PRE-EMPTION.

Public lands of the United States, in the actual occupation and exclusive possession of one party, are not subject to pre-emption or homestead settlement by another.

2. APPEAL—REHEARING.

Where, on the hearing in the supreme court, there is no appearance for the appellant, and the judgment is affirmed, such judgment will not be vacated, for the purpose of another hearing, though a sufficient and good showing be made concerning such non-appearance, so as to authorize the court to do so, if it appears that it would be useless to do so for the reason that, upon another hearing, a like judgment must follow.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, county of Contra Costa.

Ejectment. The complaint alleged, and the court found, that plaintiff had been in the peaceable possession of surveyed United States lands which were open to pre-emption; that while in such possession and the actual occupation of such lands defendant forcibly ejected plaintiff from said land, and took, and continued to the time of the action to hold, said lands unlawfully from defendant. Defendant in his answer claimed to have entered on said lands as a homestead pre-emptor, and that, after his entry, he had tendered to the United States land-officer his claim for the same, together with the necessary fees, which, however, such officer had refused. The court found that such land at the time defendant entered was in the actual occupation and exclusive possession of plaintiff, and therefore not then subject to pre-emption or homestead settlement. Judgment went for plaintiff. Defendant appealed. At the time for hearing in the supreme court the appellant failed to appear. The supreme court affirmed the judgment, as appears below, and the appellant then made a showing of the absence of this attorney from the state as ground for his non-appearance.

B. B. Newman, for defendant and appellant. Mills & Jones, for defendant and respondent.

BY THE COURT. We have examined the transcript herein, and are of opinion that this case must be governed by the rulings of this court in Davis v. Scott, 56 Cal. 165; Hosmer v. Duggan, Id. 258, and McBrown v. Morris, 59 Cal. 64. This must result in an affirmance of the judgment. Conceding that the showing is sufficient to authorize the court to grant the motion here made, and vacate the judgment of affirmance heretofore rendered, it would be useless to do so where, upon the hearing, the like judgment must follow. The motion is therefore denied. Estate of Montgomery, 59 Cal. 584.

Ex parte ZEEHANDELAUR. (No. 20,230.)

1. HABEAS CORPUS—RETURN TO WRIT—CONTEMPT.

A return to a writ of habeas corpus, sued out by a witness who has been committed for contempt in refusing to answer a question, should show that the question which he refused to answer was pertinent to the matter in issue before the court, and, on the return failing to show this, the prisoner will be discharged.

2. CONTEMPT—WITNESS—REFUSAL TO ANSWER IMPERTINENT QUESTION.

Where a judge puts to a witness a question which is not pertinent to any issue before the court at the time the question is put, the refusal of the witness to answer it is no contempt, and the court has no jurisdiction to imprison him for such refusal.

In bank. On habeas corpus.

Charles F. Hanlon, for petitioner. Aylett R. Cotton and M. A. Wheaton, contra.

SHARPSTEIN, J. The Code requires the person on whom a writ of habeas corpus is served to make a return thereto, and if the party is detained by virtue of any writ, warrant, or other written authority, a copy thereof must be annexed to the return. Pen. Code, § 1480. Such a return has been made in this case, and the petitioner excepts to the sufficiency of it, because, as he insists, no legal cause is shown for his imprisonment. The return shows that during the progress of a trial in the superior court the petitioner was called and sworn as a witness, and was asked a question by the court which he refused to answer. For such refusal he was adjudged guilty of contempt, and ordered to be imprisoned until he should answer said question. There are no facts recited in the order which show, or tend to show, that the question was pertinent to the matter in issue. "A witness must answer questions legal and pertinent to the matter in issue." Code Civil Proc. § 2065. It is his right "to be examined only as to matters legal and pertinent to the issue." Id. § 2066. Such being his right, we think it follows that the refusal to answer a question not pertinent to the issue was no contempt, and that the order adjudging him guilty of a contempt, which fails to show that the question was pertinent to the issue, is invalid. Conceding as we do, that the court had jurisdiction of the action on trial, we cannot concede its power to inquire into matters outside of the issues therein. It had the power to order questions pertinent to the issues to be answered, but it had not the power to order questions not pertinent thereto to be answered. As to matters not in issue, it had no jurisdiction.

In order to show a legal cause for the imprisonment of the petitioner, the return in this case should show that the question which he refused to answer was pertinent to the matter in issue before the court, and, as this is not shown by the return, no legal cause for the imprisonment of the petitioner is shown, and he should be discharged, and it is so ordered.

MYRICK, J. I concur in the judgment. The question which the petitioner refused to answer, and for which refusal he was adjudged guilty of contempt, was not pertinent to any matter involved in any issue then before the court. Under such circumstances, his refusal was no contempt, and the court had no jurisdiction to imprison him.

The petitioner should be discharged.

MORRISON, C. J., (concurring.) The petition in this case shows that the petitioner was called upon to testify in a certain divorce case pending in the superior court of San Francisco, wherein one Alice Hinkle was plaintiff and P. Hinkle the defendant, and in the course of the proceedings the petitioner was asked the following question by the judge of the court: "I desire to know if Mr. Hinkle, or Mr. Lowenthal, or anybody connected with Mr. Lowenthal's office, who has been present during the trial, has made to you any statements as to what transpired during the progress of the trial?" This was the first and only question asked the petitioner, which the petitioner declined to answer, and was thereupon imprisoned for contempt of court for such refusal. It does not appear for what purpose the question was asked, and it is not clear how an answer thereto could have been material to the divorce case then on trial. Unless the matter sought to be elicited from the witness had some bearing on the case on trial, or was in some manner material to matter in issue, it is hard to understand what right the court had to inquire into it, or how the refusal of the witness to answer it constituted a contempt of the court.

By section 1211 of the Code of Civil Procedure it is provided that "when a contempt is committed in the immediate view and presence of the court, or judge at chambers, it may be punished summarily, for which an order must be made, reciting the facts as occurring in such immediate view and presence, adjudging that the person proceeded against is thereby guilty of a contempt," etc. If all the facts set forth in this case are admitted to be true, it does not follow therefrom that the defendant was guilty of a contempt of court in declining to answer the question, and that he thereby committed a contempt of court.

I am of opinion that the petitioner should be discharged, and it is so ordered.

THORNTON, J., (concurring.) I cannot perceive that the court had jurisdiction to compel, by imprisonment, an answer to the question put to the petitioner. It appears that during the progress of the trial of Hinkle v. Hinkle, which was an action for a divorce, petitioner was called and sworn as a witness, and one question only was put to him. It is not stated in the commitment that petitioner was called as a witness in the cause on trial, but the statement is made generally, as given above. The following is the question put: "I desire to know if Mr. Hinkle, or Mr. Lowenthal, or anybody connected with Mr. Lowenthal's office, who has been present during the trial, has made to you any statements as to what transpired here during the progress of the trial?" How such a question could be pertinent in the divorce case on trial I cannot perceive. It may have been pertinent with regard to a violation of an order made that the case of Hinkle v. Hinkle should be heard with closed doors, from which the public generally should be excluded, and on a trial of some one for such violation; but the commitment does not show that such an order for the pending trial had ever been made. But, without some regular proceeding against a person for the violation of such an order, I am of opinion that the court is without jurisdiction to put such a question to anyone. In my judgment the court had no jurisdiction, conceding that the order for the trial with closed doors had been made and entered, to ask such a question of a witness, with a view of ascertaining if a certain person had been guilty of such violation, and in advance of a regular trial for an alleged violation of such an order.

It is argued that the petitioner cannot urge such ground for his discharge as is above stated, because he did not urge it before the court which ordered his imprisonment. I cannot agree that such a contention is sound. If the court is entirely without jurisdiction, the order called in question here is void, and the petitioner cannot, for the reason alleged, be precluded from availing himself of it.

I concur in the conclusion that the prisoner should be discharged for the reasons above given.

PEOPLE v. JOHNSON. (No. 20,232.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—JUDGMENT FOR WRONG OFFENSE—STATEMENT TO PRISONER.

The misstatement of his offense, by the judge, to a prisoner appearing for sentence, is not ground for reversal, especially if the defendant has, after conviction, moved in arrest of judgment on the ground that the information charges no crime; but the entry of judgment of conviction as for an offense other than that charged in the information is ground for reversal.

2. EMBEZZLEMENT—INFORMATION—BAILEE—SECTION 507, PEN. CODE CAL.

That in an information for embezzlement of property, under section 507 of the Penal Code of California, the defendant is not named as "bailee" or "tenant" or "lodger," as the case may be, does not render the information demurrable, if the terms of the contract between the defendant and the person alleged to have been specially injured are specifically set forth, and the contract clearly shows that the defendant was thereby constituted a bailee, and received the property in that capacity.

3. CRIMINAL LAW—ARREST OF JUDGMENT—PEN. CODE CAL. 1185, 1004.

Under the Penal Code of California, 1185, 1004, a motion in arrest of judgment must be founded upon defects in the indictment or information appearing upon the face of it.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Yolo county.

Information for embezzlement. Judgment for the people. Defendant appealed.

Thomas & Hurst, for appellant. Atty. Gen. E. C. Marshall, for respondent.

MCKINSTRY, J. The information charges, if it charges any offense, embezzlement, and the verdict was guilty as charged. At the time appointed for pronouncing judgment, the following proceedings (as appears from the minutes) took place: "The district attorney, with the defendant and his counsel, Thomas & Hurst, came into court. The defendant was duly informed by the court of the information duly presented and filed on the tenth of April, 1886, by the district attorney of the county of Yolo, charging said defendant with the crime of grand larceny; of his arraignment and plea of 'not guilty as charged in said information;' of his trial and the verdict of the jury on the twenty-eighth day of July, 1886, 'guilty.' The defendant was then asked if he had any legal cause to show why judgment should not be pronounced against him, to which defendant replied he had not. And no sufficient cause being shown or appearing to the court, thereupon the court renders its judgment that whereas, the said R. H. Johnson having been duly convicted in this court of the crime of grand larceny, it is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said R. H. Johnson be punished by imprisonment in the state prison of the state of California, at Folsom, for the term of twelve months. The defendant was then remanded to the custody of the sheriff of the said Yolo county, to be by him delivered into the custody of the proper officers of said state prison, at Folsom."

The transcript contains no bill of exceptions, setting forth of what the defendant was informed when he was called up for judgment, or that defendant excepted to the statement by the court that the information charged him with the crime of "grand larceny." Conceding, without deciding, that the statement made by the court to defendant as to the contents of the information was properly entered as a portion of "the minutes of the trial," which by section 1207 of the Penal Code constitute a part of the "record" of the action, and that we should therefore take notice of any error in such statement, the defendant was not injured by the misnomer of the offense charged in the information.

The bill of exceptions shows that the defendant moved in arrest of judgment, basing his motion on the alleged insufficiency of the information, and on irregularities in the acts of officers which preceded the information. If it could be presumed that the defendant, to whom the information had been read, and who had been supplied with a copy of it, (section 988,) and who had been tried upon it, had forgotten the crime charged in it when he was called for sentence, the fact that he then and there moved in arrest because the information charged no crime, would seem to be sufficient to overcome such presumption, and to establish that he was fully informed of its contents. This court must give judgment without regard to errors which do not affect the substantial rights of the parties. Pen. Code, 1258.

But section 1207 of the Penal Code provides: "When judgment upon a conviction is rendered, the clerk must enter the same in the minutes, stating briefly the offense for which the conviction was had," etc. There can be no doubt that this statement of the offense is part of the judgment. The clerk has no power to enter, and it is at least error in the court to direct, a judgment declaring that a defendant has been convicted of one offense, when in fact he has been convicted of another and distinct offense. The entry of a judgment declaring that a defendant has been convicted of an offense of which he has not been convicted is more than a mere "technical" error. A judgment is a solemn record, which is ordinarily conclusive evidence of the facts recited in it, and we ought not to permit such evidence to stand when, on direct appeal, it appears that the matters recited in it are not true.

Inasmuch as no proper judgment has been entered in the court below, the judgment in form must be set aside, and a proper judgment rendered and entered. The court below should appoint a time for pronouncing judgment, on reasonable notice to defendant and his counsel, and defendant should be present, that the law may be complied with. Nevertheless, as the defendant has already had his day in court during the proceedings preliminary to the rendition of judgment, with an opportunity to show legal cause why judgment should not be pronounced against him, the court is simply to render judgment as required by law upon a conviction for embezzlement, which judgment the clerk is to enter as rendered. In other words, the proceedings are to be taken up at the point when they ceased to be sufficiently regular, and are to be regularly completed.

The appellant claims that his motion in arrest should have been granted. If he be correct in this, we will not direct a judgment to be rendered and entered simply that on another appeal it shall be reversed. The question as to the alleged error in denying the motion in arrest has been fully argued, and we proceed to consider and pass upon it. If no judgment ought to have been rendered or entered in the cause, the defendant should be discharged, and the proceedings based on the information be dismissed. By the information the defendant is charged with the crime of embezzlement, "committed as follows: The said R. H. Johnson, on the twenty-fourth day of May, A. D. 1884, in the county of Yolo, in the state of California, was intrusted with one sorrel horse, of the value of $100, by Joel Woods, said horse being then and there the property of said Joel Woods; that by the terms of said trust said R. H. Johnson was to use said horse for his own benefit for a part of one day, and return said horse to said Joel Woods on the twenty-fourth day of May, 1884; that said Johnson did not return said horse to said Joel Woods according to the terms of his said trust, but did then and there, on the said twenty-fourth day of May, 1884, in said Yolo county, willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, and fraudulently convert said horse to his own use, and embezzle the same, contrary to his said trust, and contrary to the form, force, and effect of the statute," etc.

Section 507 of the Penal Code reads: "Every person intrusted with any property, as bailee, tenant, or lodger, * * * who fraudulently converts the same, or the proceeds thereof, to his own use, * * * is guilty of embezzlement."

The defendant moved in arrest of judgment, and now here claims that the facts set forth in the information do not constitute a public offense. Pen. Code, 1004, 1012, 1185. It is insisted that the information is fatally defective in that it does not charge, in express terms, that the defendant was a "bailee." The decisions of the courts of the several states as to the sufficiency of the charging parts of indictments depend very largely on the various statutes. Under the section of the Penal Code of California we think it does not render the information subject to general demurrer that the defendant is not named therein as "bailee" or "tenant" or "lodger," as the case may be, if the terms of the contract between the defendant and the person alleged to have been specially injured are specifically set forth, and the contract clearly shows that the defendant was thereby constituted a bailee, and received the property in that capacity.

Of cases cited by counsel for defendant and appellant, People v. Cohen, 8 Cal. 42, was one in which the charge was that defendant, "being bailee of four hundred thousand dollars, the moneys, goods, and chattels of Adams & Co., did feloniously and willfully convert the same to his own use, with the intent to steal the same." The supreme court held that all conversions of property by bailees were not ipso facto felonies, but that the word "bailee," under the statute there considered, should be construed, in a limited sense, as designating bailees "to keep, transport, and deliver." The objection to the indictment was that the facts showing the nature of the bailment, and that it was of the class of bailments contemplated by the statute, were not alleged. In the information now before us the facts are stated to show the character of the contract of bailment under which the property was received by the defendant. In People v. Peterson, 9 Cal. 314, the defendant was charged, "being then and there the bailee" of certain money and gold-dust, "the money, goods, and chattels of John A. Clary," to have feloniously converted, etc. The indictment was held insufficient, because it did not state the "character" of the bailment. To the same effect is People v. Poggi, 19 Cal. 600. People v. Smith, 23 Cal. 280, points out the distinction, well established, between larceny and embezzlement, in cases where a bailee has obtained possession of property from the owner with the latter's consent. In Ex parte Hedley, 31 Cal. 109, the petitioner for habeas corpus had been held to answer on a charge of embezzlement. He was remanded by the court. He was held under a statute which related to embezzlement by "any clerk, apprentice, servant, or agent." It was not disputed that the petitioner was the "agent" of Wells, Fargo & Co., and there was no question as to averments in an indictment, for no indictment had been found. People v. Tomlinson, 66 Cal. 344, S. C. 5 Pac. Rep. 509, would seem to hold that the facts showing the character of the agency, where one is indicted under section 508 of the Penal Code, and is alleged to have been the agent, need not be alleged.

The cases cited from other states do not support the contention of appellant. Under a New York statute relating to "clerks and servants," it was charged in the indictment that the defendant received money "as the agent," and facts were not alleged showing that the defendant was either a clerk or servant. It was said by the supreme court of New York: "The term 'agent' is nomen generalissimum, and, although it includes clerks and servants, it is by no means restricted to such persons." People v. Allen, 5 Denio, 79. People v. Tryon, 4 Mich. 667, was decided upon a Michigan statute relating to embezzlements by attorneys of property of their clients. State v. Newton, 26 Ohio St. 265, holds that a county auditor is not an officer charged with the custody of money, within the meaning of a statute of Ohio. In Gaddy v. State, the court held that, to charge a bailee with embezzlement, the indictment must, by direct averment, charge that the embezzled property came into his possession, or was under his care, by virtue of his agency, or of the bailment. 8 Tex. App. 127. It was held that, under a statute of Minnesota which defined embezzlements of goods intrusted to a defendant for delivery to be carried for hire, an indictment was insufficient which failed to aver those facts.

None of the cases cited seem to sustain the proposition that where the facts showing that a party charged is a "bailee" are fully stated, and all the other facts necessary to constitute the offense are averred, an indictment is fatally defective because he is not in terms alleged to be a "bailee." On principle, we can see no reason why it should be so held. If it be necessary to allege facts showing the character of the agency, it becomes a question of law rather than of fact, whether, upon the averments, the defendant was or was not a bailee. If not necessary to state the facts showing the character of the agency, yet it is not a matter of which the defendant can complain if such facts are stated, and he thus given fuller notice of the charge than would be given by simply designating him as "bailee."

Another ground in arrest of judgment was that "the court had no jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, or of the offense charged." In support of this ground the defendant introduced certain evidence. We discover no reason why the proceedings before the magistrates should affect the validity of the information, or deprive the superior court of jurisdiction. Moreover, a motion in arrest of judgment must be founded upon defects in the indictment or information appearing on the face thereof. Pen. Code, 1185, 1004.

The judgment is reversed and set aside, with direction to the court below to render and enter an appropriate judgment.

GROSS v. SUPERIOR COURT. (No. 11,437.)

ACTION OR SUIT—CHANGE VENUE—APPEAL FROM JUSTICE'S COURT—CONST. CAL. ART. 6, § 5.

Under Const. Cal. art. 6, § 5, enacting that the superior courts in California "shall have appellate jurisdiction in such cases arising in justices' and other inferior courts in their respective counties as may be prescribed by law," a superior court to which an action has been appealed from a justice's court in the same county, where it was properly commenced, has no jurisdiction to make an order changing the place of trial to the superior court of another county.

In bank. Certiorari to superior court, city and county of San Francisco. Action for goods sold and delivered.

F. M. Husted, for petitioner. E. H. Wakeman, for respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J. Petitioner commenced an action in the justice's court at San Francisco, against John S. Cleland, a resident of Siskiyou county, upon a cause of action for goods sold to Cleland by petitioner at San Francisco. The defendant answered, and went to trial. Judgment was rendered against him, and he appealed to the superior court of San Francisco. After the papers were filed in the superior court on the appeal, the defendant moved for a change of place of trial, on the sole ground that he was a resident of the county of Siskiyou, which motion was granted. This proceeding is certiorari, to review the order granting the motion.

The constitution provides that superior courts "shall have appellate jurisdiction in such cases, arising in justices' and other inferior courts in their respective counties, as may be prescribed by law." Article 6, § 5. As this case did not arise in a justice's or other inferior court in Siskiyou county, it is quite clear that the constitution confers no jurisdiction of it on the superior court of that county, and that the appellate jurisdiction is exclusively in the superior court of San Francisco, where the case was commenced and tried in a justice's court. It therefore follows that the order changing the place of trial must be annulled. Order annulled.

WARREN v. ROBINSON and another. (No. 9,758.)

TRIAL—BY COURT WITHOUT JURY—FINDINGS—SUFFICIENCY TO SUPPORT JUDGMENT—SERVICES AND MATERIALS.

In an action for the value of services rendered and material supplied, where the complaint alleges that the services were rendered and material supplied at defendant's request, who agreed to pay what they were reasonably worth, that their reasonable value is so much, that defendants are and were husband and wife, and that the house at and upon which the services were rendered and the material supplied is the separate property of the wife, and defendants in their answer traverse all the allegations of the complaint, the finding of the court "that all the material allegations in plaintiff's complaint are fully sustained and proved, and that said labor performed and materials furnished, as alleged in said complaint, were and are for the benefit, profit, convenience, and use of defendants, and to said houses and premises, and that the charges for said labor performed and materials furnished were and are reasonable and proper," is insufficient to support a judgment for the plaintiff.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Mateo county.

Action for value of services rendered and material supplied. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants appeal.

Nygh, Fairweather & Durst, for appellants. Geo. H. Buck and Geo. E. Filkins, for respondent.

MCKINSTRY, J. The complaint alleges the defendants to be husband and wife, and that the services rendered and materials furnished (the value of which is sued for) were rendered at the special instance and request of defendants upon and furnished for a building the separate property of the wife; that the defendants promised to pay for such services and materials. The court found "that all the material allegations in the plaintiff's complaint are fully sustained and proved." This is insufficient. Cassidy v. Cassidy, 63 Cal. 352; Ladd v. Tully, 51 Cal. 277. The finding continues: "And that said labor performed and materials furnished, as alleged in said complaint, were and are for the benefit, profit, convenience, and use of defendants, and to said house and premises, and that the charges for said labor performed and materials furnished were and are reasonable and proper." There is no distinct finding that any labor was performed or that any materials were furnished. There is no finding that the services, etc., were rendered at the instance or request of the defendants, or either of them, or that husband or wife promised to pay therefor, or that the defendants were husband and wife, or that the services, etc., were rendered in or about the separate property of the wife, or that the house mentioned in the complaint was her separate property; nor is there any distinct finding of the value or reasonable worth of the services rendered or materials furnished.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

SEARLS, C. This is an application by W. O. Stuttmeister, as administrator with the will annexed of the estate of F. W. R. Stuttmeister, deceased, for a writ of certiorari, directed to J. V. An alternative writ issued, under which the record is before us, and from which it appears that on the twenty-third day of July, 1885, an order was made by the superior court, in probate, requiring the petitioner, as administrator of the estate of F. W. R. Stuttmeister, to sell, at public auction, certain real estate belonging to the estate of deceased, situate on Howard street, San Francisco. The petition for the order of sale was filed by and on behalf of John A. Collins, an adjudged creditor of the estate, and is in the usual form, showing the existence of debts, the necessity of a sale to pay the same, that the administrator has failed to apply for an order, etc. The order of sale recites the facts of notice, and service upon the administrator; finds the existence of debts against the estate; necessity of sale of the real property to pay such debts, etc., in the usual form; shows that the administrator was present by attorney, and consented to the order. Subsequently, and on the nineteenth day of February, 1886, after notice and hearing, an order was made by the court, reciting that the administrator had unreasonably neglected and refused to comply with the order of sale of July 23, 1885, and ordering him, without delay, to proceed to sell the property as in the order of sale directed, etc. Thereupon the writ herein was sued out.

"A writ of review [certiorari] may be granted by any court, except a police or justice's court, when an inferior tribunal, board, or officer, exercising judicial functions, has exceeded the jurisdiction of such tribunal, board, or officer, and there is no appeal, nor, in the judgment of the court, any plain, speedy, and adequate remedy." Code Civil Proc. § 1068. The writ will not lie where there is an appeal from the action complained of. People v. Shepard, 28 Cal. 117; People v. Turner, 1 Cal. 152; Clary v. Hoagland, 13 Cal. 174; Newman v. Superior Court, 62 Cal. 545; Golden Gate H. M. Co. v. Superior Court, 65 Cal. 187; S. C. 3 Pac. Rep. 628; Slavonic M. B. Ass'n v. Mason, 47 Cal. 8. An order of the probate court, directing the sale of real estate, is appealable. Code Civil Proc. § 963, sub. 3; Estate of Corwin, 61 Cal. 161. It follows that, as petitioner had a remedy by appeal for any errors or irregularities involved in the order of sale, the writ of review will not lie.

If it be urged that the order of February 19, 1886, requiring the administrator to proceed with the sale as directed in the previous order, is not appealable, it must be admitted. Estate of Martin, 56 Cal. 208. But the answer is, if the original order was regular and proper to be made, petitioner is not entitled to any relief; if it was not, he should have appealed from it. Were the rule otherwise, every defendant against whom a final judgment is rendered, requiring the performance of a specific act, could wait until adjudged guilty of contempt for non-performance of the required act, and then, by a writ of review, call for the examination of alleged errors in the judgment. The writ is not given in lieu of an appeal, but only to review errors in excess of jurisdiction, for which an appeal does not lie; and the error here (if any) was in the order of sale, and not in the subsequent order directing the administrator to proceed therewith.

The application should be dismissed.

PEOPLE v. MCCOY. (No. 20,190.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—MANSLAUGHTER—ARRAIGNMENT—STANDING MUTE—PLEA BY COUNSEL.

Where, upon an appeal from a judgment of conviction in a trial for manslaughter, the record shows that the defendant was regularly arraigned; that he was asked if he pleaded guilty or not guilty; and that he personally made no answer, but, in his presence, his attorney, answering, said, "We plead not guilty," whereupon the clerk of the court made an entry in the minutes of the court that the "defendant pleads not guilty of the offense charged in the information, and, by consent of all parties, the cause is set for trial on the twentieth of October, 1885:" held, that the substantial rights of the defendant were in no way prejudiced.

2. SAME—DUTY OF COURT—PEN. CODE CAL. § 1024.

Under section 1024, Pen. Code Cal., where, in the conduct of a criminal trial, the prisoner, on being arraigned, stands mute, it is the duty of the court to enter on the minutes a plea of "not guilty."

3. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS REFUSED EMBRACED IN CHARGE—FALSUS IN UNO FALSUS IN OMNIBUS.

Where, on a trial for manslaughter, the court is asked to instruct the jury, "A witness false in one part of his testimony is to be distrusted in all," the instruction is a plain proposition of law to which the defendant is entitled; but if, in the charge to the jury, it has been already substantially given, the court is not bound to repeat it.

4. SAME—JUROR—MISCONDUCT—WHEN TO BE TAKEN ADVANTAGE OF—NEW TRIAL.

Where a party in the trial of a criminal action sees or knows of an act of misconduct by a juror which he does not bring to the attention of the court, or object to at the time, or at any other time during the trial, or on the hearing of a motion for a new trial, it will be too late to make it the basis of objection and exception after the court has disposed of the motion, and pronounced judgment.

5. SAME—NEW TRIAL—GROUNDS FOR MOTION—RECORD—APPEAL.

If, in the trial of a criminal case, the record fails to disclose the grounds upon which a motion for a new trial was heard and determined, the ruling of the court upon the motion cannot be made the subject of review on appeal.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Ventura county.

Information for manslaughter.

Hall & Hamer, L. F. Eastin, J. M. Brooks, and L. C. Keeby, for appellant. Atty. Gen. E. C. Marshall, for respondent.

MCKEE, J. The defendant in this case having been convicted of the crime of manslaughter, appealed from the judgment of conviction, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The first assignment of error is that the verdict returned by the jury, and the judgment rendered by the court, are void, because the defendant did not personally plead to the information, and, in consequence, there were no issues raised upon which he could be tried and convicted. But the record shows that the defendant was regularly arraigned; that upon his arraignment he was asked if he pleaded guilty or not guilty; and that personally he made no answer, but, in his presence, his attorney, answering, said, "We plead not guilty;" whereupon, the defendant still standing mute, the clerk of the court made an entry in the minutes of the court, in the following words, namely: "Defendant pleads not guilty of the offense charged in the information, and, by consent of all parties, the cause is set for trial on the twentieth of October, 1885." The plea of the defendant, as it was formulated for him by his attorney, was therefore regularly entered upon the minutes. He consented to it, and in the form in which it was made we cannot see that any of the substantial rights of the defendant were in any way prejudiced. Besides, if the refusal of the defendant to answer in person was equivalent to a refusal to plead to the information, the law cast upon the court the duty of having entered on the minutes of the court a plea of not guilty. Section 1024, Pen. Code. That was in effect done, and thereby issues were raised according to law, upon which the defendant was legally tried and convicted.

The next assignment of error is that the court refused, at defendant's request, to give the jury the following instruction: "A witness false in one part of his testimony is to be distrusted in all." Unquestionably that is a plain legal proposition, which a court is bound by law to give to a jury on all proper occasions. Section 2061, Code Civil Proc.; White v. Disher, 7 Pac. Rep. 826; Brown v. Griffith, 9 Pac. Rep. 425. But the court in its charge to the jury had substantially given the proposition to them as law; and, as we have repeatedly held, a court is not bound to repeat any of its instructions.

Lastly, the refusal of the court to grant a new trial is assigned as error. The judgment roll shows that, on the day appointed for pronouncing judgment, the defendant moved viva voce for a new trial, "on grounds then stated, and taken down by the court reporter." But the grounds of the motion, whatever they were, are not embodied in the bill of exceptions prepared by the defendant and settled by the court.

There is in the bill an affidavit, made by one of the defendant's attorneys, which contains a statement that some of the jurors, while engaged in the trial of the cause, occupied their time by reading copies of a newspaper which contained an editorial condemnatory of the administration of justice in criminal actions in the courts of the country, but it had no reference to the case on trial. There is no doubt, however, that the reading of newspapers by jurors while engaged in the trial of a cause is an inattention to duty which ought to be promptly corrected; and, if the newspaper contains any matter in connection with the subject-matter of the trial which would be at all likely to influence jurors in the performance of duty, the act would constitute ground for a motion for a new trial. Jurors in a criminal action are sworn to render a true verdict according to the evidence. They cannot, under the oath which they take, receive impressions from any other source. If it be proved as a fact, or may be presumed as a conclusion of law, that their verdict may have been influenced by information or impressions received from sources outside of the evidence in the case, such a verdict is subject to be set aside on a motion for a new trial. Subd. 2, § 1181, Pen. Code.

But there is nothing in the bill of exceptions which affirmatively shows that the motion for a new trial was made on that ground. The affidavit itself, if regarded as a part of the bill, does not show it. It contains a statement that the affiant had no knowledge of the objectionable character of the editorial in the newspaper, in the hands of the jurors, until after the close of the trial and the recording of the verdict, and that, on the argument of the motion for a new trial, he brought it to the attention of the court, and made it a ground of motion for a new trial. But, assuming that the editorial contained matter which it was objectionable for a juror to read, there was no showing that any of the jurors read the objectionable matter, or that it in any way influenced their verdict, or prejudiced any substantial right of the defendant. Such a showing was not made on the hearing of the motion. The motion was heard and decided on the third of December, 1885, and the affidavit was not made until the sixteenth of January, 1886,—six weeks after the court had denied the motion and pronounced judgment. Therefore the affidavit could not have been used on the hearing of the motion; and, in fact, the bill of exceptions affirmatively shows that it was not used. Where a party, in the trial of a criminal action, sees or knows of an act of misconduct by a juror, which he does not bring to the attention of the court, or object to, at the time, or at any other time during the trial, or on the hearing of a motion for a new trial it will be too late to make it the basis of objection and exception after the court has disposed of the motion and pronounced judgment.

The judgment pronounced brought the proceeding to an end, and was final and conclusive, subject only to be reviewed and reversed for errors apparent on its own record; and, where such a record fails to disclose the grounds upon which a motion for a new trial was heard and determined, the ruling of the court upon the motion cannot be made the subject of review on appeal.

Judgment and order affirmed.

HARRIS v. HARRIS. (No. 11,223.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE—SEPARATE ESTATE—PRE-EMPTION—RIGHTS OF WIFE ON DIVORCE.

Where a wife, before her marriage, was the holder of a pre-emption right to land, which she paid for with funds loaned her upon her personal faith and credit, and, after her marriage, a patent was issued to her by the United States, the patent relates back to the date of her entry; and in an action for divorce, and a moiety of the land, brought by the husband, the land will be adjudged the separate property of the wife, free from all claim, interest, or control of the husband.¹

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Suit for divorce upon the ground of willful desertion, and for a division of land claimed to be community estate. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appealed. The facts are sufficiently stated in the opinion.

W. C. Green and J. B. Hall, for appellant. James A. Loutitt and Woods & Levinsky, for respondent.

MCKINSTRY, J. In this action for divorce the plaintiff claims a moiety of the land patented to the defendant, on the ground that the money paid for the government title belonged to the community.

1. Even if it appeared that the money was paid out of community funds, the land would be the separate property of the wife. With full knowledge and consent of the plaintiff, the land was proved up and paid for in her name, and the proof of her occupation and "declaration" or affidavit was as necessary a prerequisite to the acquisition of the government title as was the payment of the price. The patent is a record which proves the facts which preceded its issue, on proof of which the proper officers of the United States were authorized to issue it. For certain purposes the possession of either spouse is the possession of both. But here the pre-emption declaration and exclusive occupation of the defendant preceded her marriage with the plaintiff, and constitute part of the acts which culminated in the certificate of purchase and patent. The plaintiff ought not to be permitted to ignore her declaration and possession, (without proof of which she could not have received the benefits of pre-emption,) and treat the acquisition of the government title simply as an ordinary purchase, made after the marriage, with community funds. Under the pre-emption laws, a woman, after her marriage, may secure a pre-emption based on occupancy, the right to which is her separate property. That was done in this case, and the plaintiff, who seeks to benefit by the transaction, cannot say the pre-emption title was not acquired legally and regularly.

She then had a right to acquire the United States title. Can the husband say that he obtained an interest in the pre-emption claim, prior to the certificate of purchase, by reason of the payment, with his consent, of money of which he had the control? Such a claim would seem to be invalid, because the express or implied agreement that he should have such an interest would be in fraud of the United States statute. If she "directly or indirectly made any agreement or contract, in any way or manner, with any person whatsoever, by which the title she might acquire from the government of the United States should inure, in whole or in part, to the benefit of any person except herself," it was void. Act of congress of September 4, 1841, § 13. It will not do to say that no contract was made; that the interest of the plaintiff, as a member of the community, arose out of the relation the parties so occupied towards each other under the state law. If he has an interest in this land, it is not one created by the marriage, but by reason of the fact that community money was paid for it. This was done, as the case shows, with his express consent, and, in any event, his consent would be implied. The attempt of plaintiff, therefore, is to enforce a claim growing out of an agreement made before the certificate was issued. The court will not aid in the enforcement of such agreement, because it is in violation of the spirit and letter of the pre-emption law.

2. But there was evidence that the money used to secure the government title was paid to the defendant by Cahill, in consideration of a promise that she should convey to him 40 acres so soon as she should obtain the United States title to a tract of 160 acres under the pre-emption laws. That contract was fully executed. When it was entered into, the possessory title to the 160-acre tract was in the defendant as her separate property. If the land had never been proved up and paid for, the possessory right would still be her separate property as between herself and husband. It may be conceded that her mere possession, in connection with her pre-emption declaration, gave her no vested interest in the land which the United States was bound to recognize. But her possession commenced prior to the marriage,—was as to all persons except the United States a separate property right. In her possessory title the plaintiff had no part. The contract with Cahill was that she should convey, when she should get the government title, a portion of the tract, the possessory title to the whole whereof was in her as her separate property. She had a standing on which, and the payment of the money received from Cahill, she could acquire the true title. She, in accordance with her contract, perfected her title, as pre-emptor, by proceedings initiated by her "declaration" and sole possession, made and begun before her marriage. The plaintiff necessarily concedes the regularity and validity of those proceedings. The promise of defendant to Cahill could be performed only by and through a merger in the government title of her possessory title. The transaction was not a loan from Cahill to the community. The defendant parted with a portion of the right annexed to her possessory title, on which could be secured the government title; Cahill receiving the benefit of her possession pro tanto. The plaintiff had no interest in any part of the consideration which passed from the defendant to Cahill, either as a member of the community or otherwise. The money became her separate property when she received it, and continued such until she paid it to the United States.

Even if it should be conceded that the patent is absolutely void, the plaintiff could assert no claim here. It is only property "acquired" by either spouse after marriage which is community property.

Judgment and order affirmed.

BROWN v. WELDON. (No. 9,606.)

1. PROMISSORY NOTES—ACTION ON—PLEADING—COPY OF NOTE—CODE CIVIL PROC. CAL. § 447.

Under section 447, Code Civil Proc. Cal., providing that the "genuineness and due execution of a promissory note are deemed admitted" when a copy of the note is set out in the complaint, and no answer under oath is filed, a demurrer to a complaint in an action on a promissory note will not be sustained on the ground that it does not allege that defendant promised to pay the note, when a copy of the note is so set out in the complaint.

2. SAME—WHEN AND WHERE MADE—PRESUMPTIONS.

A copy of a promissory note being set out in the complaint in an action thereon, the complaint is not demurrable on the ground that it contained no allegation as to when and where it was made, as, prima facie, it was made when and where it bore date.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county.

This is an action on a promissory note. The complaint alleges that defendant is indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $765; sets up a copy of the note; alleges its delivery to Mrs. L. H. Brown, the payee, its indorsement by her to plaintiff, and his ownership; that the note is long past due and owing to him; that there is now due thereon the full sum of $500, and interest from its date at 1 per cent. per month, amounting to the full sum of $765, no part of either principal or interest having been paid. The defendant demurred to the complaint because (1) the court has no jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, or the subject-matter of the action; (2) the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; (3) the complaint is ambiguous, unintelligible, and uncertain, in this: that it does not state when or where said pretended promissory note was made, or that defendant ever promised to pay the same, or any part thereof. Demurrer overruled. Defendant answered. Cause tried. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals from the judgment, and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Welles & Whitmore, for appellant. H. P. Brown, for respondent.

McKINSTRY, J. The complaint is inartificially and loosely drawn. But we do not think it fails to state a cause of action; nor is it subject to demurrer as ambiguous or uncertain. But it so far departs from established precedents, and so nearly approaches the line which separates pleading which may be tolerated, though not approved, from pleading radically defective, that we refuse to treat this appeal as frivolous.

Defendant's motion for nonsuit was properly denied. The genuineness and due execution of the promissory note were admitted. Code Civil Proc. 447. Prima facie, it was made when and where it bore date. The findings are sufficient.

Judgment and order affirmed.

ROCHE v. WARE, Adm'r, etc. (No. 11,282.)

WITNESS—COMPETENCY—TRANSACTIONS WITH DECEASED PERSONS—PROOF OF ACCOUNT-BOOKS—CODE CIVIL PROC. CAL. § 1880.

Section 1880, Code Civil Proc. Cal., providing that "parties to an action * * * against an executor or administrator upon a claim or demand against the estate of a deceased person, as to any matter of fact occurring before the death of such deceased person," cannot be witnesses, does not prevent a party from testifying, in such an action, to prove his account-books as preliminary to their introduction in evidence; and, it not appearing that he was not within the jurisdiction of the court, books proven by the testimony of the party's wife are inadmissible.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Colusa county.

Stabler & Bayne, for appellant. T. J. Hart and Geo. A. Blanchard, for respondent.

MCKINSTRY, J. Plaintiff's books of account were admitted in evidence over the objection of defendant that they were not sufficiently proved. The only evidence on which the books were admitted consisted of testimony of the wife of plaintiff, which tended to prove that the plaintiff had no clerk; that entries were made in original books by the plaintiff on the evening of each day purporting to be charges for work done and material furnished during the day; and that the accounts, as entered in the blotter or day-book, were correctly transferred to the ledger.

In the English courts tradesmen's books were not formerly legal evidence in favor of the party making them. It would seem that the practice of allowing a party's books of account as evidence came into use in New York and New Jersey with the Dutch colonists, and into the eastern states with the English colonists from Holland, who settled in New England. Beach v. Mills, 5 Conn. 496; Conklin v. Stamler, 8 Abb. Pr. 395; Introduction to 1 E. D. Smith. It would seem, also, that, by the Dutch law, the cogeny, as evidence, of the books might be strengthened by the testimony of the party.

Yet in Vosburgh v. Thayer, 12 Johns. 461, it would appear to have been assumed that the party could not testify with respect to his own books. The supreme court of New York there held that books of account ought not to be admitted "unless a foundation is first laid for their admission by proving that the party had no clerk; that some of the articles charged have been delivered; that the books produced are the account-books of the party; and that he keeps just and honest accounts; and this by those who have dealt or settled with him." And the court added: "Under these restrictions, from the necessity of the case, and the consideration that the party debited is shown to have reposed confidence by dealing with and being intrusted by the other party, they are evidence for the consideration of the jury." In subsequent New York cases it was held that a party's books of account were inadmissible unless he proved, not only that he kept just and honest accounts by those who had settled with him by his books, but also that the party charged had dealt with him, and that some of the articles charged were actually tendered or delivered. Morrill v. Whitehead, 4 E. D. Smith, 239; Conklin v. Stamler, 2 Hilt. 432; S. C. 8 Abb. Pr. 395.

The practice of all the other states, so far as we are informed, where books of account are admitted in evidence, is to authorize, at least, the preliminary proof to be made by the party himself. In a note to section 118 of the first volume of Greenleaf's Evidence it is said, (many cases being cited to sustain the statement:) "The rules of the several states with regard to the admission of this evidence are not perfectly uniform; but in what is about to be stated it is believed they concur. * * * If the books appear to be free from fraudulent practices, * * * the party himself is then required to make oath, in open court, that they are the books in which the accounts of his ordinary business transactions are usually kept, and that the goods therein charged were actually sold and delivered to, and the services actually performed for, the defendant." He should also swear that "the entries were made at or about the time of the transactions, and are original entries thereof."

It may be conceded that, if able to do so, the party may prove by other witnesses the matters which he is allowed to testify to himself. But if the party who kept the books, being in a position to give testimony, does not offer himself as a witness to those matters, he must at least prove by others those things which he would be required to prove by his own testimony. It was said generally by DALY, C. J., and BRADY, J., in the New York common pleas, that, since the Code provisions allowing parties to testify, the books of account of a party are no longer evidence on his behalf; that the admissibility of such books, on certain preliminary proofs, had been put on the ground of necessity, arising from the former incompetency of a claimant to be a witness on his own behalf; and that the reason of the rule was destroyed by the legislation authorizing the examination of the parties. Conklin v. Stamler, 8 Abb. Pr. 400. But it would seem there to be admitted, not only that the books might be referred to to refresh the memory of the witness, but that the entries themselves might be evidence, if the witness could testify that the transaction was correctly recorded when the entry was made, although he might not be able to recollect the "fact."

In the case now here it is urged that the ruling of the court below should be sustained on the ground of necessity, because the plaintiff was prohibited from becoming a witness by section 1880 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It would by no means follow that the preliminary proof would be sufficient if the plaintiff was prohibited from making it by his own testimony. The section of the Code, however, did not forbid his being a witness for the purpose of making such proof. Section 1879 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "All persons, without exception, otherwise than is specified in the next two sections, * * * may be witnesses." And by section 1880 it is declared: "The following persons cannot be witnesses. * * * (3) Parties to an action * * * against an executor or administrator upon a claim or demand against the estate of a deceased person, as to any matter of fact occurring before the death of such deceased person."

The evident purpose of the provisions of the Code is to render competent (with certain exceptions) persons incompetent at the common law; as parties to the record, and those directly interested in the event of the action. The parties under certain circumstances excepted from the general rule established by the Code, continue incompetent in the same manner, and to the same extent, that all parties were formerly incompetent. But, before the Code, the party offering his books, although incompetent to be a witness with respect to the issues submitted to the jury, was competent to give testimony, addressed to the court, going to establish the facts which rendered the books admissible. This was determined in Landis v. Turner, 14 Cal. 573. There FIELD, C. J., said.

"The defendants objected to the examination of the plaintiff on the ground of his incompetency as a party to the suit, and to the introduction of the book of entries on the ground that it was not sufficiently proved. Neither of these objections was well taken. The evidence of the plaintiff was upon an incidental and preliminary matter, and the rule which excludes the testimony of parties has no application. That rule has reference to the matters in issue, and not to incidental matters auxiliary to the trial of the cause upon which the testimony is addressed solely to the court. Bagley v. Eaton, 10 Cal. 146. The book of entries constituted the evidence in the case bearing upon the issue. The testimony of the party only laid the foundation for the introduction of that evidence. The referee occupied the double character of judge and jury, and the admissibility of the book was to be decided by him, in the first instance, in his character as judge; and, to enable him to determine the question, the testimony was properly received. The credit and weight given to the entries were entirely distinct from the preliminary matter. There are, it is true, numerous decisions against the reception of the party's testimony in cases like the present, but the clear weight of authority is the other way. His testimony is taken in nearly every state of the Union. When this case was argued, we supposed the rule was otherwise, recalling at the time the decisions of the New York courts on the subject. A somewhat extended examination since has satisfied us that the prevailing and the better rule in the United States differs from that of New York. The testimony of the party must often be the only means of establishing the fact that the book contains the original entries, that the party kept no other books, and that he had no clerk; and, as it is subject to the scrutiny of a cross-examination, it must afford protection against the perpetration of fraud by false entries."

The plaintiff was competent to make the preliminary proof. There is no pretense he was not within the jurisdiction. For aught that appears he was present at the trial.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

DEMICK v. CUDDIHY. (No. 9,708.)

1. MORTGAGE—RIGHTS OF MORTGAGEE—MORTGAGEE IN POSSESSION—APPLICATION OF RENTS AND PROFITS—CONTRACT AFFECTING.

A mortgagee in possession may, under contract with the mortgagor to that effect, apply the rents and profits of the mortgaged premises, in excess of the interest due on the mortgage debt, to the payment of unsecured indebtedness due or to become due from the mortgagor to the mortgagee.

2. JUDGMENT—REVERSAL—FAILURE TO FIND ON ISSUES RAISED.

A judgment rendered upon a finding of the truth of the allegations of a cross-complaint, without any findings on the issues raised by the answer to the original complaint in the action will not be sustained, when the allegations of the cross-complaint do not cover the issues thus raised.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Del Norte county.

This is an action by Demick, appellant, as the grantee of one George H. Crumpton, to redeem a mortgage.

Cuddihy, the respondent, filed an answer and also a cross-complaint, in which he asked for a decree of foreclosure and order of sale of the premises, and recovered judgment in the court below. This appeal is taken from the judgment, and from the order of court refusing to grant a new trial; the contention being on the amount due. The mortgage was given by deed and defeasance on the twenty-ninth April, 1881, to secure payment of $800, with interest at 1 per cent. per month, and the mortgagee (defendant) went into immediate possession of the mortgaged premises. These premises consisted of several houses and lots in the town of Happy Camp, Del Norte county, California. The plaintiff claims that the rent received should be applied—First, to the payment of interest due on the mortgage; and, second, to the extinguishment of the mortgage debt. Defendant claims that there was, at the time of the execution of the mortgage, a parol agreement to apply the rents in excess of the interest on the mortgage to the payment of antecedent and subsequent debts of the mortgagor, Crumpton, to defendant. Plaintiff demurred to the defense made in the answer that there was an agreement between the mortgagor and mortgagee disposing of the rents and profits of the mortgaged premises. Demurrer overruled.

L. F. Cooper, for appellant. R. G. Knox, W. H. H. Hart, and Aylett R. Cotton, for respondent.

MCKINSTRY, J. The demurrer of plaintiff to "the second separate cause of defense" was not well taken. The answer alleges:

"(1) That, at the time of the execution of the mortgage in the complaint set forth, the mortgagor thereof was indebted to this defendant for goods, wares, merchandise, and money, aside from the consideration of said mortgage, had and received; (2) that from time to time since the execution of said mortgage, and prior to the deed from George H. Crumpton to the plaintiff herein, in the complaint set forth, the said Crumpton has incurred sundry items of indebtedness to this defendant; (3) that it was mutually understood and agreed, by and between said George H. Crumpton and this defendant, that any rents collected under and by virtue of said mortgage in excess of the interest on the principal sum thereof should be applied to the liquidation of the debts existing at the time of the execution of said mortgage and those thereafter to be incurred, and such excess was and has been so applied."

Counsel for appellant say: "Our theory is that in an action to redeem a mortgage, where the mortgagee is in possession of the premises, he is accountable for the rents and profits; and the same, as they are received by him, should be applied to the extinguishment of the mortgage debt. In support of this view we cite Story, Eq. Jur. (12th Ed.) § 1016a; Gibson v. Crehore, 5

Pick. 158; Jones, Mortg. §§ 671, 772; Morse v. Merritt, 110 Mass. 460, where the court say: 'So long as any portion of the mortgage debt remained due, the mortgagee would take the rents recovered, in trust, to account for and apply towards its payment.' "

But we know of no equitable principle which will prohibit a binding contract between mortgagor and mortgagee in possession, or mortgagee who has been authorized to collect the rents, by which it is stipulated that the excess of rents beyond interest of the mortgage debt shall be applied to other indebtedness due from the mortgagor, or to become due up to an assignment of the equity of redemption. The equity imposed upon the mortgagee receiving rents to apply them to the interest and then to the principal of the mortgage debt, etc., (in absence of specific agreement,) may be overcome and supplanted by a specific agreement between mortgagor and mortgagee for the disposition of the rents.

The court below, however, failed to find upon the issues made by the allegations in the answer above quoted, and the implied denials thereof. The court found "that all the allegations of the said defendant's cross-complaint are true." The allegations above recited are not in the cross-complaint, and there is no finding that the averments in the answer are true.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial, and with leave to the parties to apply to the court below for leave to amend their pleadings if they shall be so advised.

In re Disbarment of TYLER. (No. 11,442.)*(Supreme Court of California. December 3, 1886.)1. ATTORNEY AND COUNSEL—RETAINER—WHAT AMOUNTS TO.

An attorney who is retained by a guardian to recover the possession of certain promissory notes, and a policy of life insurance pledged as security for their payment, becomes the attorney of the person from whom the recovery is sought, when that person, at the attorney's request, places the papers in his hands for the collection of the loss under the policy, paying the attorney a fee, and taking from him a receipt, in which the attorney promises and agrees, when the money is paid, to turn over to such person, after the lapse of a certain time, and the non-occurrence of certain litigation, the part thereof claimed by him. MYRICK, J., dissenting.

2. SAME—UNPROFESSIONAL CONDUCT—WHAT IS—SUSPENSION.

A failure on the part of the attorney to pay over such money, when collected as agreed, coupled with the institution of a suit against his client, at his instigation, by a claimant to the fund,—the suit being brought in the name of another attorney to conceal from the client his connection with the claimant's case,—and the giving of a bond, with sureties known by the attorney to be insolvent, to stay execution on an appeal from a judgment rendered in favor of the client for the money appropriated, is such unprofessional conduct as to warrant the suspension of the attorney for two years, and until satisfaction of the judgment. MYRICK, J., dissenting, as to the term of suspension.

The action of a referee in refusing to adjourn a session immediately upon the withdrawal of an attorney from the case, in order to give his client an opportunity to secure other counsel, is not ground for interference by the supreme court, unless the client has been injured thereby.

In bank.

Pillsbury & Blanding, for complainant. James L. Crittenden, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. This is an application for the disbarment of George W. Tyler. The accusation is proffered by J. M. Hogan, in which it is stated that he (Hogan) was the plaintiff, and sued Tyler, the defendant, in an action entitled J. M. Hogan v. George W. Tyler, which has been heard and finally determined in this court; that on the thirtieth of March, 1882, he recovered a judgment in said action against Tyler in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, in the sum of $3,862, and $284.10 costs, with interest thereon from the date of judgment; that Tyler, on the nineteenth of September, 1882, appealed from this judgment to this court, which appeal was determined in this court on June 24, 1885, by affirming the judgment;¹ that thereafter a remittitur was issued in the cause, and was filed and docketed in the above-named superior court on July 30, 1885; that payment of said judgment has been demanded of said Tyler, upon execution issued thereon since the filing of the said remittitur; that Tyler has failed and refused to pay the same, and no part of it has been paid; that upon said appeal Tyler procured an undertaking to stay execution on said judgment to be given, and execution thereon was stayed, by virtue of this undertaking, pending said appeal; that the sureties on said undertaking, and each of them, is wholly irresponsible financially, and entirely unable to respond in damages; that each of them was so irresponsible when the said undertaking was given, and that this was then well known to Tyler; that he (Tyler) procured said sureties to make such undertaking, well knowing that they were worthless, and with intent to evade the law requiring such undertaking; that the money for which the judgment above referred to was had and recovered in the action above stated against Tyler, to-wit, the sum of $3,862, was by him theretofore collected and received as the agent and attorney of the complainant, Hogan, and which he failed and refused to pay over to complainant before the commencement of said action,—all of which will more fully appear by the transcript on appeal of said cause to this court, numbered 8,744 of the records thereof, to which special reference is made, and which is asked to be taken and considered as a part of this accusation.

Complainant charges that Tyler is, and was at all times hereinafter mentioned, an attorney and counselor of this court, and that he has willfully violated his duties as such attorney and counselor, and has been guilty of unprofessional conduct, more particularly in this:

First. That on or about the third of June, 1880, Tyler, in this state, agreed to act as the attorney of complainant in the collection of certain money, the sum sued for and recovered in the action hereinbefore mentioned, and by reason of such employment received from complainant certain policies of insurance, a promissory note, and an authority in writing to receive said money; that Tyler thereafter collected said money by virtue of said employment, and the confidence reposed in him as such attorney; that he (Tyler) violated the confidence so reposed in him, and his duties as attorney, and practiced deceit upon complainant concerning said money by instigating and procuring a suit to be brought against complainant and himself by one Fred N. Hedge, in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco to recover the said money, and to defraud complainant thereof, and concealed from complainant the facts concerning said suit, and converted said money to his own use, and has failed and refused to pay over this money to complainant.

Second. That on or about August 6, 1880, the said Tyler did willfully violate his duty as an attorney and counselor at law, and the confidence reposed in him as such by complainant, in this: That Tyler, being then the attorney and in the possession of $3,862 of the moneys of this complainant, which he had theretofore collected for complainant as his attorney, and contriving to cheat and defraud complainant, did instigate and procure a suit to be commenced in the superior court above mentioned, by Fred N. Hedge, against himself and complainant, for the recovery of the money above mentioned, and did procure said Hedge to falsely represent and allege to said court in his complaint in that action, that he (Tyler) threatened to pay said money over to complainant unless such action was instituted, and, wrongfully and without cause, to ask said court in said complaint to enjoin and restrain Tyler from paying over said money to complainant before the termination of said action, whereas, in fact, Tyler had then no intention of paying over said money to complainant; and thereby Tyler sought to mislead said superior court, and the judges thereof, by a false statement of fact, and failed to maintain the respect due by him to said court and its officers, as an attorney of said court.

Third. That prior to the sixth day of August, 1880, Tyler had collected the money for complainants as above stated, as his attorney, agent, and trustee, and held the same as such; that on or about the said last-named day, and while he was the attorney, agent, and trustee of complainant, and without complainant's knowledge, Tyler did instigate, encourage, and procure said Hedge to commence the action above mentioned against complainant and himself, and did thereafter encourage and procure said Hedge to continue the prosecution of said action, and did procure the said action to be commenced and continued, with intent to cheat and defraud said complainant, and to prevent said money from coming to the complainant, and with the corrupt motive to thereby wrongfully acquire said money, and the whole thereof; that Tyler did at all times have a corrupt interest in said action, and the result thereof, which interest was hostile to complainant, and Tyler was thereby making use of said Hedge to hide and conceal such interest, and to deceive and mislead this complainant, and did then and there, at all times, counsel and maintain said action, well knowing that the same was illegal and unjust, and was calculated and intended to cheat and defraud complainant, and in so doing he was violating his duty and obligations to complainant.

Fourth. The accusation in the fourth count or paragraph sets forth the same facts as to collecting, receiving, and holding the money aforesaid, the instigation and procurement of Hedge to commence the action against complainant and Tyler, the procurement of Hedge to continue the prosecution of said action, the intent with which Tyler procured it to be commenced and continued, and the motive thereof, as are contained in the third count or paragraph, and in addition states that prior to the commencement, to-wit, on the thirtieth day of July, 1880, Tyler being then the attorney, agent, and trustee of complainant, did, without the knowledge or consent of complainant, enter into an arrangement with said Hedge for the commencement and prosecution of said action, whereby it was agreed that Tyler should receive one-third of all said moneys so to be received of complainant, and thereafter, on October 7, 1880, the said Hedge, at the instance and procurement of Tyler, sold and assigned all his right in said suit ostensibly to one Walter C. Dimmick, but in reality for the interest and benefit of Tyler, and this assignment was so made to Dimmick with intent to cheat and deceive complainant; that Tyler never informed complainant during the pendency of the action that he had an interest therein, or that he had instigated or maintained the same.

Fifth. That on July 30, 1880, Tyler was an attorney and counselor of this court, and on that day, and by virtue of his position as such attorney and counselor, he did, with the consent and at the request of complainant, collect and receive the sum of money belonging to complainant, and did thereafter have and hold the same as the agent and trustee of complainant, and not otherwise; and while so holding and retaining said money of complainant, and without his knowledge or consent, Tyler, on said thirtieth day of July, did enter into an agreement with one Fred. N. Hedge to obtain and recover said money from complainant, Tyler to have one-third of all that might be so recovered; and to that end he (Tyler) caused a complaint to be drawn, and an action to be commenced thereon, on August 6, 1880, in the court aforesaid, for the recovery of said money, wherein Hedge was made plaintiff, and Tyler and complainant defendants; that he (Tyler) did thereafter secretly prosecute this action, until it was, on August 30, 1881, dismissed at the instance of Tyler, to avoid a trial thereof; that on October 7, 1880, Tyler procured Hedge to make a transfer of all his interest in said action, ostensibly to one Walter C. Dimmick, but in reality for the benefit of Tyler; that Tyler instigated and prosecuted said action during the pendency thereof, and until August 30, 1881, without the knowledge or consent of complainant, and during all times failed and neglected to inform complainant of the facts touching the action, and his connection therewith; that during said times, and prior to September 15, 1881, Tyler converted all of said money to his own use, and has entirely failed to pay over said money, or any part thereof, to this complainant; that Tyler has squandered said money, and is now unable to pay the same, and complainant is remediless in the premises; that by reason of the matters next hereinbefore stated, complainant charges that Tyler has been guilty of unprofessional conduct as an attorney, and as such has violated his duties, and the confidence reposed in him by complainant, and has practiced deceit upon complainant, and has encouraged and instigated the commencement and prosecution of an action, to-wit, the said suit of Hedge v. Tyler and Complainant, from a corrupt motive and interest, and is unworthy to be permitted to practice as an attorney and counselor of this court.

We have carefully examined and weighed the evidence, and consider the following facts established by it:

The respondent, Tyler, had been for many years prior to the fifteenth of May, 1880, and since that date, an attorney and counselor at law, duly admitted to practice by this court, and authorized to practice his profession in all the courts of this state, and since his admission has been engaged in practice in this court, and other courts of this state; that J. M. Hogan, on the fifteenth of May, 1880, and for some time prior thereto, had in his possession a promissory note, executed by Samuel Langdon, and two policies of insurance which had been issued upon the life of Langdon. The note and policies of insurance are described in a certain paper, which will be hereinafter inserted, executed by respondent on the third day of June, 1880, and delivered to Hogan. Hogan had received the note and policies above mentioned from Mrs. Charlotte Hedge in the capacity of her attorney and legal adviser. He was then practicing as an attorney and counselor at law, under an admission by one of the district courts of the state. Mrs. Hedge was the guardian of her two sons, George H. and Fred. N. Hedge. The note of Langdon was made payable to her as such guardian, and was executed for a loan of money held by Mrs. Hedge as part of the estate of her two sons above mentioned. The policies of insurance had been assigned to her by Langdon as security for the payment of his note.

While Hogan was holding this note, and the policies above mentioned, he lent Fred. N. Hedge various sums of money, in all amounting to $500, and, not long after Hedge became of age, Hogan purchased of him all his interest in the note and policies above mentioned, and in the estate of his deceased father, Nelson Hedge, for the sum of $850, which sum was made up of the $500 theretofore lent him, and $350 paid him at the time. At the time of this purchase Hogan took from Fred. Hedge an assignment to him of the interest so purchased. This assignment bears date the twenty-ninth of March, 1880. Prior to this assignment Langdon had died. Mrs. Hedge had, before the fifteenth day of May, 1880, demanded of Hogan the note and policies above mentioned, and he had refused to deliver them to her, on the ground that he was part owner of them by virtue of his purchase and assignment from Fred. Hedge, and had as much right to their custody as Mrs. Hedge. The claim of Hogan became known to the insurance companies who had issued the policies. Mrs. Hedge was demanding of the companies the payment of the policies, and Hogan had notified them that he had an interest in them, and warned them not to pay Mrs. Hedge. In this condition of affairs the companies were unwilling to pay until it was determined in some way to whom they could pay, so as to procure a discharge from their liability. Thus matters stood when Mrs. Hedge employed the respondent to get the note and policies from Hogan, without recourse to legal proceedings, if it could be so effected, or by such recourse if requisite. The respondent, after such employment, promptly addressed a letter to Hogan, of which the following is a copy:

"SAN FRANCISCO, May 15, 1880.

*"J. M. Hogan, Esq.—*DEAR SIR: Your letters to Mrs. Hedge and George Hedge have been placed in my hands to answer. I will say that I have been employed as counsel for Mrs. H. There is no desire on her part or mine to deprive any one of the money coming to them. The money, or the $10,000, must come through Mrs. Hedge. It will come into my hands, with your consent, and then every one shall have his own. Please call and see me when you come down. Very respectfully,
GEO. W. TYLER."

This communication seems to have been addressed to Hogan at Stockton, of which city he was then and still is a resident, and soon after its receipt Hogan came to San Francisco, and had an interview with Tyler in regard to the subject of Tyler's letter. The result of that interview was that Hogan surrendered the note and policies to Tyler, and gave his consent in writing that the money due on the policies should be paid to respondent. During the interview above mentioned Hogan explained fully to Tyler his relation to and claim on the note and policies, substantially as above set forth, and gave him a history of the mode in which he had acquired such claim. Upon the surrender of the possession of these papers to Tyler, he signed and delivered to Hogan a paper, of which the following is a copy:

"This certifies that I have, this third day of June, A. D. 1880, received from J. M. Hogan policy number 54,115, issued upon the life of Samuel Langdon by the Union Mutual Life Insurance Company of Maine, for the sum of $10,000, dated January 18, 1875, assigned to Charlotte Hedge; and also policy number 60,350, issued upon the life of Samuel Langdon by the New England Mutual Life Insurance Company of Boston, Mass., for the sum of $5,000, dated April 26, 1878, and assigned to Charlotte Hedge; also a promissory note made by Samuel Langdon, payable to Charlotte Hedge or order, guardian of George H. and Fred. N. Hedge, for the principal sum of $8,175.66, payable one day after date, bearing interest at 1 per cent. per month, credited on back thereof with payments,—January 11, '80, $35.69; January 27, '80, $200; February 11, '80, $300. I have received foregoing papers at the request of said Charlotte Hedge that said J. M. Hogan should deliver same to me as her attorney; and whereas, said J. M. Hogan claims to be the owner of, and entitled to receive, the one-half of all moneys due, payable, received, or collected upon said promissory note by said Charlotte Hedge or any person, and to have a lien interest upon said two insurance policies, as collateral security for payment of said promissory note, therefore, in consideration of delivery to me of said papers, and of request of said Hogan that I so act in the matter, I do promise and agree with said Hogan that I will receive from said two insurance companies whatever money is paid by either said insurance companies upon said policies, and to the extent of the one-half of the amount unpaid on said promissory note, and which said one-half at this date amounts to about $4,600, I agree to hold and retain the same. Inasmuch as I have been notified that Fred. N. Hedge has, or claims to have, some interest in said money, I agree to notify him of the payment of the same to me; and if he does not, within ten days from receiving such notice, bring some suit against said Hogan to determine the right to said money, I agree to pay the same to said Hogan on demand. In case such suit is brought, I will pay at once to whomsoever the court shall decide to be entitled to the same.

"GEO. W. TYLER,
"636 Clay Street."

It is contended that Tyler at the same time that he executed the foregoing paper also agreed with Hogan, as his attorney and counselor at law, to persuade and induce Fred. N. Hedge not to bring a suit for the portion of the money claimed by Hogan; but we are not satisfied that Tyler's engagement extended any further than set forth in the paper just above recited. At the same time it was agreed that Tyler was to receive of Hogan $100 of the portion claimed by Hogan when collected, whether as a payment for services to Hogan as his attorney, or as a gift to Tyler, does not clearly appear. Hogan testifies that it was to be paid for such services; Tyler says it was a gift from Hogan, and that he distinctly refused to be his attorney.

Tyler thus procured the possession of the note and policies, and, invested with the authority of Mrs. Hedge, and the further consent of Hogan to collect the money due on the policies, the money was paid by the insurance companies to Tyler. On the thirtieth of July, 1880, Tyler writes Hogan that on that day he had received from "the insurance company $8,260.05, and have this day notified Fred. Hedge of the fact, and unless he sues in ten days from to-day I will forward the one-half to you (less $100) as agreed." On the same day that Tyler wrote as above stated to Hogan, he received from Fred. N. Hedge the following paper:

"I hereby empower Geo. W. Tyler to take such steps as may be necessary to set aside and cancel an assignment of my interest in the estate of my father, Nelson Hedge, to J. M. Hogan, and to secure my interest in said estate. I agree to pay said Tyler one-third of all the moneys received by me for his services, and he is to receive nothing if he recovers nothing. Said Tyler is to pay expenses of suit, and deduct same from amount recovered.

"FRED. N. HEDGE.

"July 30, 1880."

On the sixth of August, 1880, an action was commenced in the superior court for the city and county of San Francisco by Fred. N. Hedge, as plaintiff, against J. M. Hogan and respondent, as defendants, to cancel and annul the above-mentioned assignment of Hedge to Hogan, and to enjoin Tyler from paying over to Hogan more than $850, with interest, until the final termination of the action, and for judgment against Tyler for the moneys received by him, less the sum above-mentioned, etc. The complaint in this action was prepared by the respondent; was filed with the clerk of the court aforesaid on the date last above-mentioned, having the name of H. H. Reid signed thereto as attorney for plaintiff. Tyler procured Reid to sign his name as attorney for plaintiff, but the action was really commenced by Tyler, and was to be managed, controlled, and prosecuted by him. The complaint set forth that plaintiff had been overreached and cheated by Hogan in the purchase and transfer of his interest in the note of Langdon and the policies of insurance, and that the same had been effected by Hogan when he (plaintiff) was intoxicated.

On the same day on which this complaint was filed Tyler wrote Hogan, inclosing in the letter a check for $888. At or about the same time he informed Hogan that Fred. Hedge had commenced suit against him. Hogan received the money ($888) on the check, and kept it. He acknowledged receipt of Tyler's letter inclosing the check on the seventh of August, 1880; and states in his reply to this letter that he does not admit "that $888 is the full amount of my claim, nor the full amount of the money in your hands, received by you from the Union Mutual Life Ins. Co., belonging to me. On the contrary, the one-half of that $8,260 belongs to me, and you will please not deliver to Fred. Hedge, or any other person, except by order of court or upon my order." This letter thus proceeds: "I am obliged to you for notifying me that Fred. has brought suit. You did not tell me when the suit was instituted, nor who are the parties defendant. Please let me know. If you are sole defendant, I will defend you in the action. I will get an attorney in San Francisco to do so. When was you served with papers? Please send me a copy of complaint."

To this letter Tyler replied. This reply is written on the sheet which contains Hogan's letter of August 7th. It is without date, and no doubt written soon after the receipt of the letter to which it is a reply, and it is as follows:

"J. M. Hogan, Esq.: I am not sole defendant; you and I are defendants. Of course I know $888 is not what you claim, and my receipt to you is security that I will only pay the money to whomsoever the court shall order it paid. I sent you the money for the reason that as to that amount there was no dispute, and therefore no reason for my keeping it. I understand you will be served in a few days. I shall simply answer that the money is in my hands, and ready to be paid over to either, as court may direct.

"Yours, truly,

TYLER".

Soon after receiving this letter Hogan came to San Francisco, and had an interview with Tyler. He told Tyler that he would employ E. S. Pillsbury, Esq., an attorney of San Francisco, to appear and defend them in the Hedge suit, to which Tyler consented.

On demurrer filed by Pillsbury on behalf of Tyler, it was held Tyler was not a necessary party to the action. Tyler dropped out of the action as a party thereto, as far as shown by the record. Hogan answered, denying, inter alia, all allegations of fraud, circumvention and concealment, and that he acquired his interest from said Hedge while he was in a state of intoxication.

While the cause of Hedge v. Hogan was pending, some depositions were to be taken of certain witnesses at Stockton. On these occasions Tyler appeared to represent plaintiff, and Reid made no appearance.

On the twenty-sixth of February, 1881, Tyler addressed a note to Hogan in the following words:

"J. M. Hogan, Esq.—DEAR SIR: One Walter C. Dimmick has notified me and left with me an assignment in writing from Fred. N. Hedge to him of all interest in the suit of Hedge v. You and Me. I hereby notify you of that fact, so you may be informed.

"Very truly,

GEO. W. TYLER."

The above-named Dimmick, a brother-in-law of Tyler, who resided in Colorado, was afterwards substituted as plaintiff in this action in place of Hedge.

The case was called for trial on the thirtieth of August, 1881. The respondent appeared for plaintiff, and moved, on his own affidavit, for a postponement of the trial. This was opposed by a counter-affidavit of Hogan. The court continued the cause until the Monday following, upon payment by plaintiff of defendant's witness fees, amounting to $16. Whereupon the respondent, for plaintiff, moved for a dismissal of the action, and on this motion a dismissal was ordered by the court.

That this action was encouraged and instigated by the respondent, and was maintained at his expense and by his efforts, we have no doubt. That he was personally interested in the cause, and was to share in the recovery, if any was had, the testimony distinctly establishes. In our judgment, the evidence shows that Tyler never informed Hogan of his contract with Hedge, or of his connection with the suit brought by the latter, and that he prosecuted that suit, concealing from Hogan his contract with Hedge, and his real connection with the suit, until the time it was dismissed.

On the trial of this cause one reason was alleged by Tyler for dismissing the action above mentioned, while the complainant contended that it was dismissed for another and a different one. Whether it was dismissed for the reason set forth by respondent, or for the reasons contended by complainant, is, in our view, entirely immaterial. It clearly appears that the cause was never tried, and that it was dismissed on the motion of respondent, who acted for plaintiff in making the motion, and that respondent was personally interested in whatever money might have been recovered in the action. As the reason for which the suit was dismissed by Tyler is immaterial, the depositions of Hedge, Clark, and Shurtleff may be excluded from consideration.

Soon after the dismissal of the action of Hedge v. Hogan, Hogan demanded payment of the portion of money coming to him on the policies above mentioned, and which Tyler had retained in his hands under the agreement above set forth. Tyler refused to pay him anything. Thereupon an action was brought by Hogan, as plaintiff, against Tyler, as defendant, to recover it. This action was instituted in the superior court for the city and county of San Francisco, and was commenced on the fifteenth of September, 1881.

The complaint therein contained two counts,—one based on the averment that the defendant had collected a certain sum as agent for plaintiff; the other, on an averment that the defendant had collected a certain sum of money as attorney at law for plaintiff. In both counts it was averred that the money had been demanded of defendant, and that he had refused to pay. The defendant answered the complaint, denying its material allegations. The cause came on for trial, was regularly tried, and resulted in a verdict for plaintiff for $3,862. The verdict was rendered on the twenty-fourth of March, 1882, and on the twenty-fifth of the same month judgment was entered on the verdict for $3,865.25, with interest, etc. This judgment was, on appeal, affirmed by this court, and a rehearing on said appeal was by this court, in bank, denied. The remittitur was in due time sent from this court to the court below. Subsequently, by letter, Hogan demanded of respondent payment of the amount due on the judgment so affirmed. A reply in writing to this letter was made by respondent, and sent to Hogan, in which, in language of defiance, bitterness, abuse, and insult, he refused to pay the money, or any part of it. Afterwards Hogan took steps to have the respondent examined on proceedings supplementary to execution on the judgment aforesaid. Such examination was had, from which it clearly appeared that respondent was totally unable to pay, and that he had converted to his own use and spent the money above referred to, which he had received, and which it had been adjudged was due to and belonged to Hogan.

On the appeal to this court in the above-mentioned cause of Hogan v. Tyler the defendant was desirous of staying the execution of the judgment pending the appeal. To effect this, an undertaking to stay execution was filed, two of the sureties to which were John S. Wheeler and Philip Schenck. This stay undertaking was in the form and with the condition prescribed by law. The sureties were irresponsible, and without the means of payment, when the undertaking was executed by them. Upon the affirmation of the judgment, and the rendition of judgment against the sureties on the undertaking, it was found that they were entirely without means to pay any part of the judgment. The evidence satisfies us that respondent, Tyler, knew, when the undertaking was executed, that the sureties were without means to meet the obligation of the undertaking, and that they were then without ability to respond to any judgment which might be rendered against them on it. We are forced to the conclusion that the respondent, by design, filed an undertaking the signers of which were worthless as sureties, with the intent that it should be worthless to the plaintiff as security, in case the judgment appealed from should be affirmed.

The paper of the third of June, 1880, above set forth, executed by Tyler, and delivered by him to Hogan, in which he receipts for the note of Langdon, and the policies of insurance, is not only a receipt, but a contract between Tyler and Hogan. The terms of the contract are set forth distinctly in the portion of said paper beginning with the words, "Therefore, in consideration of," etc. For a consideration expressed in this document, Tyler promises and agrees with Hogan. It so clearly states: "I do promise and agree with said Hogan that I will receive from said two insurance companies whatever money is paid by said insurance companies upon said policies; and to the extent of the one-half of the amount unpaid on said promissory note, and which said one-half at this date amounts to about $4,600, I agree to hold and retain the same." Tyler having here agreed with Hogan to hold and retain the money thus received, could not pay it over to Mrs. Hedge, for whom it is clear that he was acting as attorney at law. It is evident that he did not intend to recognize any right in his client, Mrs. Hedge, to have any portion of this half which he binds himself to hold and retain.

But the foregoing is not the whole of the agreement. The document sets forth further terms of agreement. It proceeds thus: "Inasmuch as I have been notified that Fred. N. Hedge has, or claims to have, some interest in said money, I agree to notify him of the payment of the same to me, and if he does not within ten days from receiving such notice, bring some suit against said Hogan, to determine the right to said money, I agree to pay the same to said Hogan on demand. In case such suit is brought, I will pay at once to whomsoever the court shall decide to be entitled to the same." In our judgment the above words show an agreement with Hogan to hold the money on certain conditions, which are thus expressed: If, upon his (Tyler's) notifying Fred. Hedge that this half of the money has been paid to him, Hedge does not bring suit for it against Hogan within ten days from the date of receiving such notice, he is to pay it over to Hogan. If suit is brought, and judgment on such suit is rendered in Hogan's favor, he is to pay it to Hogan; if in Hedge's favor, he is to pay it to Hedge. The legal effect of this agreement is that the money is held and to be held and paid over to Hogan, if suit is not brought within the time specified, and if suit is brought and determined in Hedge's favor, then to be paid over to Hedge. The money is only to be paid over to Hedge if suit is brought, and judgment passes for him. It turned out that suit was brought and dismissed. What was the effect of such dismissal? In our judgment, upon such dismissal, as the ten days referred to in the contract had then elapsed, Tyler held the money as the agent of Hogan, and was bound to pay it to him.

This document of the third of June certainly shows a contract with Hogan, and a contract of agency with him. Tyler received the half of the money by consent of Hogan, and he was then to hold it as above set forth. He seems to have had no doubt that he had a right to enter into such a contract. It does not appear that there was anything in his employment by Mrs. Hedge, or his relations to Fred. Hedge, which conflicted with it. In fact, Tyler stated that Mrs. Hedge consented that he should keep this money in his hands if Fred. Hedge had an opportunity to litigate the question whether it was to go to him or Hogan. The claim of Fred. Hedge, if he had any, was regarded in the contract, and a reasonable time was given him to bring the suit to enforce such claim. It does not appear that this contract conflicted with any duty that he owed to Fred. Hedge. There is evidence that he objected to contracting with Hogan to use his influence with Fred. Hedge or Mrs. Hedge to persuade the former not to sue Hogan for the money which Hogan claimed. Tyler refused to enter into any such agreement with Hogan, and, in our judgment, no such agreement was made.

From the relation which Tyler sustained to Hogan, it was his duty to make known to him all the facts in relation to his connection with Hedge, his agreement with him, and the relation he bore to the Hedge suit. This he did not do until about the time the suit was dismissed. The information then given was in his affidavit for a continuance. But, as above stated, the contract entered into does show a contract of agency, trust, and confidence by Tyler with Hogan; and to say that this contract was one in which Tyler became an attorney de facto, and not an attorney at law, for Hogan, would be making a distinction savoring too much of a mere refinement of words. Tyler was an attorney at law; had been for many years practicing as such when he entered into this contract. He was contracting concerning a matter of difference which might be, and did become, a matter of litigation. Tyler collected the money as attorney at law,—a business in which attorneys at law are much engaged. He collected it with the consent and by the authority of Hogan, on the conditions named in the contract; and by this contract, and on its terms, he became the agent and attorney of Hogan to collect and hold the money, and pay it over to him (Hogan) on the conditions named in such contract. If Hedge had brought the suit for this money within 10 days, and it had been adjudged in the action that he (Hedge) was entitled to the money, Tyler would then have ceased to be the attorney of Hogan. The suit brought by Tyler for Hedge was dismissed. Tyler's responsibility to Hogan, then, never ceased.

We think that the testimony justifies us in holding that he was the attorney at law of Hogan, on the terms of the contract which was made between them.

An exception was made to the ruling of the referee who took the testimony in this case, by which he stopped the cross-examination of one of the witnesses of complainant. The cross-examination of the witness had, in our judgment, been unnecessarily prolonged, and the referee acted within a proper discretion in stopping it as he did. On this ruling being made by the referee, counsel for the respondent, who was conducting the cross-examination, retired from the cause, and respondent then asked for time to procure other counsel. The referee said that it was not long before the noon recess, that the cause should proceed until that time, when respondent might procure counsel. If we could perceive that respondent was injured by this ruling of the referee, we would interfere for his relief, but we do not see that he did suffer any injury.

We will say, further, that in bringing the action of Hedge v. Hogan and Tyler the respondent was really on both sides of the case. He was really attorney for the plaintiff, and interested in any recovery of money by plaintiff, and was himself a defendant in the action. By this conduct he violated his obligations to Hogan under the contract as his agent and attorney, and violated his duties as attorney at law. In the relation of agent which he bore to Hogan under his contract it was in violation of his duty to Hogan, as his principal, to assume an attitude antagonistic to him, without his knowledge and consent.

We are of opinion that the accusation in regard to the undertaking on appeal, and the portion of the accusation numbered 1, is sustained by the evidence herein.

We concur: MORRISON, C. J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; MCKINSTRY, J.

McKEE, J. I concur in the opinion on the sole ground that the accusation is sufficiently sustained by the evidence of the acts and conduct of the respondent, in connection with the judgment and undertaking on appeal in the case of Hogan v. Tyler, referred to in the prevailing opinion.

MYRICK, J. From the statement contained in the foregoing opinion it appears that the respondent, G. W. Tyler, is charged in this proceeding with having agreed to act as the attorney for complainant in the collection of certain money, and, by reason of such employment, received from complainant certain policies of insurance, a promissory note, and an authority in writing to receive said money; that thereafter he collected said money by virtue of said employment, and the confidence reposed in him as such attorney, etc. It will be remembered that Mrs. Hedge had held the note and policies as guardian of her two sons, (to whose estates the note belonged,) and that she had placed them in the hands of Mr. Hogan as her attorney; that after one of the sons attained majority, Mr. Hogan, for the consideration of some $850, took an assignment of his interest, amounting to about $4,500; that Mr. Hogan then asserted his right to retain the possession of the note and policies, and refused to surrender them to Mrs. Hedge, from whom he had received them as her attorney; that Mrs. Hedge and the son claimed the latter had been overreached in the matter of the assignment, and Mrs. Hedge employed Mr. Tyler to get the note and policies from Mr. Hogan, of which employment the latter had notice. Mrs. Hedge was unable to recover the money on the policies, as they were out of her possession, and Mr. Hogan had given notice to the companies not to pay to her; neither would the companies pay to Mr. Hogan. Thereupon, at an interview had between Mr. Tyler and Mr. Hogan, the latter delivered the policies and note to the former, and Mr. Tyler gave his receipt therefor, in which he stated: "I have received foregoing papers at the request of Charlotte Hedge that said J. M. Hogan should deliver same to me as her attorney." The policies were paid without suits. It seems clear to me that, as between Mrs. Hedge and Mr. Hogan, Mr. Tyler was the attorney of the former, of which Mr. Hogan had notice, and that he (Hogan) delivered the papers to Tyler at the request and as the attorney of Mrs. Hedge, and not as the attorney of himself; that the allegation of employment of Tyler by Hogan as his attorney at law is not sustained. Whatever may have been the duty of Mr. Tyler to Mr. Hogan as attorney in fact, or agent, is not now for consideration; I am dealing only with his duty as an attorney at law.

In regard to the giving of the undertaking on appeal, I am of opinion that Mr. Tyler violated his duty and obligation as an attorney at law. Hogan had recovered a judgment against him. He gave notice of appeal, and caused an undertaking to be executed and filed. The statute requires that the undertaking be accompanied with the affidavit of each surety that he is worth the sum specified in the undertaking. In my opinion Mr. Tyler knew that the surety Wheeler was insolvent, and with that knowledge procured him to join in the execution of the undertaking. His object, doubtless, was to prevent Hogan from realizing the fruits of a successful litigation. In so doing he violated his duty as laid down in subdivision 4, § 282, Code Civil Proc. The acts done by Mr. Tyler and Wheeler, in regard to the deed from the former to the latter, do not render obscure the real transaction, and its purpose.

While I am of opinion the acts of the respondent deserve censure, and the imposition of a penalty, I am not in favor of his removal or his suspension for an extended period. I think the penalty of suspension for six months sufficient; but there should be added the provision that the suspension continue thereafter until the object of requiring an undertaking, viz., payment of the judgment, interest, and costs, in case of affirmance, be accomplished.

MORRISON, C. J.; THORNTON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; MCKINSTRY, J.; MCKEE, J. All the justices of this court being of the opinion that the evidence proves the respondent guilty of a violation of his duty as attorney and counselor, and of his oath of office as such, and that the allegations in the accusation with respect to his conduct in procuring and filing the undertaking to stay execution on appeal from the judgment in the case of Hogan v. Tyler have been fully proved, and no four of the justices concurring in any other judgment than that hereinafter stated, but five of the justices, after full consultation, having agreed on the judgment following, it is ordered and adjudged that respondent, George W. Tyler, be deprived of the right to practice as attorney or counselor in any and all the courts of this state, and be suspended from practicing as attorney or counselor at law in any of said courts for the period of two years from the date of the entry hereof, and until the judgment in favor of J. M. Hogan against the said respondent, mentioned and described in the accusation, shall be fully satisfied and paid, if the same shall not have been satisfied during such period of two years.

WHITTLE v. DOTY. (No. 11,170.)

APPEAL—ACTION TO QUIET TITLE—FINDINGS NOT CONTRADICTORY—MATERIAL ISSUES COVERED.

Where, on appeal from a judgment in a cause tried by the court without a jury, the findings are not contradictory, and cover all the material issues presented therein, the judgment of the trial court must be affirmed.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Amador county.

The plaintiff in his complaint, for a second cause of action, which is the one considered on this appeal, alleged that he was the owner in fee of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 23, in township No. 7 N., of range No. 9 E., Mount Diablo base and meridian, situated in the county of Amador and state of California. The defendant answered, and claimed an interest adversely to the plaintiff in and to the following portion of said land, to-wit: Commencing at the north-west corner of said subdivision, and running thence east, along the northern boundary thereof, to the north-east corner thereof; thence south, about nine and one-half rods, to a fence crossing said subdivision from east to west; thence west 80 rods, along said fence, to the western boundary of said subdivision; thence north seven and one-half rods, to the place of beginning,—said piece of land containing four and one-quarter acres, more or less. The plaintiff claimed that the claim of the defendant was without right, and prayed that he might be enjoined from asserting any claim whatever to the premises adverse to himself. The case was tried by the court without a jury, and, in accordance with its findings of facts, entered a judgment for the plaintiff, quieting in him the title to the land, and restraining the defendant from setting up any claim thereto. The defendant contended that the findings were contradictory, and failed to cover the material issues; but the court entered up its judgment, and defendant appealed.

Eagon & Armstrong, for appellant, Doty. Blanchard & Swisler, for respondent, Whittle.

BY THE COURT. The findings are not contradictory, and they cover all the material issues. Judgment affirmed.

CAHEN and others v. MAHONEY. (No. 9,850.)

1. ATTACHMENT—DISSOLUTION—AFFIDAVITS—COUNTER-AFFIDAVITS.

Where, upon a motion to dissolve an attachment, the counter-affidavits of the defendant are fully answered by the affidavits produced in behalf of plaintiffs, the court has no right to disregard or discredit the showing on behalf of plaintiffs, and, on appeal, the order dissolving the attachment will be reversed.

2. SAME—UNDERTAKING—SUFFICIENCY.

The undertaking in this case executed by the plaintiffs examined, and held to be sufficient.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Stanislaus county.

This was an attachment sued out by the plaintiffs against the defendant upon an alleged indebtedness. The affidavit required by law was made and filed in the cause, and an undertaking was executed by the plaintiffs in the following words:

"Whereas, the above-named plaintiffs have commenced, or are about to commence, an action in the superior court of the county of Stanislaus, state of California, against the above-named defendant, upon a contract for the direct payment of money, claiming that there is due to the said plaintiffs by the said defendant the sum of seven hundred and fourteen and 57-100 dollars of the United States, besides interest, and are about to apply for an attachment against the property of the said defendant as security for the satisfaction of any judgment that may be recovered therein, now, therefore, we, the undersigned, residents of the said county of Stanislaus, in consideration of the premises, and of the issuing of said attachment, do jointly and severally undertake, in the sum of five hundred dollars, and promise to the effect, that, if the said defendant recovers judgment in said action, the said plaintiffs will pay all costs that may be awarded to the said defendant, and all damages which he may sustain by reason of the said attachment, not exceeding the sum of five hundred dollars.

"Dated the twenty-sixth day of September, 1884.

[Signed]

"C. A. STONESIFER. [Seal.]

"J. C. TRANER." [Seal.]

The justification and verification were as follows:

"C. A. Stonesifer and J. C. Traner, the sureties whose names are subscribed to the above undertaking, being severally duly sworn, each for himself says that he is a resident and free, state of California, and is worth the sum in said undertaking specified as the penalty thereof, over and above all his just debts and liabilities, exclusive of property exempt from execution.

[Signed]

"C. A. STONESIFER.

"J. C. TRANER.

"Subscribed and sworn to before me this twenty-sixth day of September, 1884.

[Signed] "WM. O. MINOR, Notary Public."

Affidavits and counter-affidavits were filed by both plaintiffs and defendant in support of their respective claims and defenses; and at the November term, 1884, the defendant moved the court to dissolve the attachment on several grounds; among them, that no sufficient or proper undertaking was made or filed, and that the pretended undertaking was not properly verified or justified. The court below dissolved the attachment, and from this judgment plaintiffs appealed.

C. A. Stonesifer and Wm. O. Minor, for appellants, Cahen and others.
Stanton L. Carter, for respondent, Mahoney.

BY THE COURT. The court erred in dissolving the attachment in this case. The affidavit of the defendant was fully answered by the affidavits produced on behalf of plaintiffs. The court had no right to disregard or discredit the showing on behalf of plaintiffs. The undertaking was sufficient. Order reversed.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS—EJECTMENT.

Evidence held to sustain defense of statute of limitations, and judgment affirmed.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Mateo county.

Action of ejectment. Among other defenses, defendant set up the statute of limitations. It appeared that defendant claimed under deeds executed in 1858, had from that time claimed title, most of the time was in possession, and was in possession when this action was instituted, on May 10, 1876. The superior court held the action barred, and, plaintiff's motion for a new trial being denied, he appealed to the supreme court.

John Reynolds, for appellant. Fox & Kellogg, for respondent.

BY THE COURT. There was sufficient evidence to support a finding in favor of defendant upon the plea of the statute of limitations to uphold the judgment.

Order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial affirmed.

APPEAL—WHEN TAKEN—JUDGMENT—ORDER ON—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

An appeal cannot be taken from a judgment before the judgment is entered, but may be taken from an order denying a motion for a new trial before the entry of judgment.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco. John F. Burris, for appellant. E. W. Blaney, for respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J. Respondent moves to have the appeals from the judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial dismissed, on the ground that the appeals were taken before the judgment was entered. That is doubtless a sufficient ground for dismissing the appeal from the judgment. McLaughlin v. Doherty, 54 Cal. 519; Thomas v. Anderson, 55 Cal. 43. But the appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial was taken within 60 days after the order was made. That is within the time prescribed by the Code. Code Civil Proc. 939. We think no sufficient ground for dismissing the appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial has been shown in this case, and the motion to dismiss that appeal is denied.

Appeal from the judgment dismissed.

CRIMINAL LAW—INFORMATION—DESCRIPTION OF OFFENSE—ATTEMPT TO COMMIT ARSON—PEN. CODE CAL. §§ 447, 448.

An information alleging, in accordance with section 447, Pen. Code Cal., that the "defendant did, in the night-time of said day, willfully, maliciously, and feloniously attempt to burn, with intent then and there to destroy, a building," is sufficient to charge the crime of an attempt to commit arson. It is not necessary to set out the provisions of section 448 relating to the circumstances of the commission of the offense.

Department I.

The Attorney General, for the People. Wm. P. Veuve, for appellant.

MYRICK, J. The defendant was accused of the crime of an attempt to commit arson, the information alleging that the "defendant did, in the night-time of said day, willfully, maliciously, and feloniously attempt to burn, with intent then and there to destroy, a building," the property of, etc. No demurrer was interposed. The defendant was convicted of an attempt to commit arson in the second degree, and moved in arrest of judgment, on the ground that the information did not state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense, in that the information contained none of the definitions set forth in section 448, Pen. Code.

The offense was stated in accordance with the language of section 447, Pen. Code, and was sufficiently stated. As well might the provisions of sections 449 to 452 be held necessary to be stated, as those of 448. Section 447 declares the offense; and the following sections relate to circumstances of its commission.

There were circumstances tending to connect the defendant with the fire; and the question as to the sufficiency of those circumstances was with the jury. The court committed no error as to the instructions.

Judgment and order affirmed.

LANG v. SUPERIOR COURT.¹ (No. 11,367.)

APPEAL—FROM JUSTICE'S COURT—DEMURRER—REHEARING.

A demurrer to a complaint having been sustained in the superior court upon appeal from a justice's court, and a motion for a new trial made and denied, it is not competent for the court to afterwards set aside the ruling upon demurrer, and make another order in the case upon a rehearing or otherwise.

In bank. Writ of review.

F. J. Castlehun, for petitioner. Carl T. Graef, for respondent.

MORRISON, C. J. The following statement of facts in this case is admitted to be true and correct: On January 9, 1882, Holcomb et al. brought an action in the justice's court of the city and county of San Francisco against George Lang, the petitioner herein. He demurred to the complaint, and the demurrer was sustained. The plaintiff declined to amend, and judgment final was entered on the demurrer, whereupon an appeal was prosecuted by the plaintiffs in said action to the superior court, and on the eighth day of May, 1882, said superior court (Judge ALLEN, presiding) sustained the demurrer, without leave to amend. On September 29, 1884, plaintiffs in that action gave notice of a motion for a new trial, and on October 8, 1884, filed a proposed statement. On November 7, 1884, said motion was, on due notice given, stricken off the calendar. This was equivalent to a denial of the motion. Voll v. Hollis, 60 Cal. 569. On November 14, 1884, plaintiffs gave notice of a motion for a rehearing of the issue presented by the demurrer of defendant to the complaint of plaintiffs interposed in the justice's court in said action, and of the issue or question of law upon which plaintiffs rested the appeal in said action. On December 12, 1884, the motion was granted by Judge FINN, the successor of Judge ALLEN, whose term had expired. On March 26, 1885, the same judge made an order overruling the demurrer, and on April 1, 1885, the court made two additional orders in the case, reversing the judgment of the lower court, and also an order remanding the cause to the lower court for a new trial. An application is now made to this court for a writ of review on the facts hereinabove set forth.

In the first place, the demurrer to the complaint was sustained by the superior court (Judge ALLEN, presiding) on the eighth day of May, 1882, and it "therefore became the duty of the clerk to enter the appropriate judgment in the records of the court." Gallardo v. Reed, 49 Cal. 346; Barron v. Deleval, 58 Cal. 95. This would have ended the case, but it appears that subsequently, on the eighth day of October, 1884, a proposed statement on motion for a new trial was filed in the case, which statement was afterwards, on due notice, stricken from the calendar. The next step in the case was taken on November 14, 1884, when notice was given of a motion for a rehearing of the demurrer to the complaint "upon which rested an appeal in the action," which rehearing was granted by Judge FINN, superior judge, who had succeeded Judge ALLEN. This was on December 12, 1884, more than two years after the demurrer was sustained, and the case stricken from the calendar, on motion for a new trial.

We are not familiar with the practice of rehearings in the superior court; and what right or power the superior court had, on the twelfth of December, 1884, to order a rehearing in the case, we are at a loss to conceive. The demurrer and the motion for a new trial had been disposed of, and then, on what is called a "rehearing," the case was again brought before the court, and a new order made. This is a new practice with which we are not familiar, and we know of no statute authorizing it. When a motion for a new trial is made and passed upon,—either granted or denied,—it is not competent for the court afterwards to set its ruling aside, and make another order in the case. People v. Center, 61 Cal. 194; Coombs v. Hibberd, 43 Cal. 453. The subsequent orders in the case were equally unauthorized by law.

It follows from what has been said that the order of the court below, made December 12, 1884, granting the so-called "rehearing," and the subsequent orders in the case, must be set aside and annulled; and it is so ordered.

WAYS—ALTERATION—MISTAKE IN VIEW AND SURVEY—ESTABLISHMENT BY PRESCRIPTION—POWERS OF COUNTY SUPERVISORS—INJUNCTION—POL. CODE CAL. §§ 2618, 2681-2692.

The board of supervisors of a county in California has no authority to correct a mistake in the view and survey of a public road which has become a highway, without proceedings had under sections 2681-2692, Pol. Code Cal., to change or alter such road; and when, by mistake, a road is laid out on a line other than that intended, and used by the public for more than 10 years, it becomes a highway, (section 2618, Pol. Code,) and the road overseer, acting under orders from the board of supervisors of his county, without such proceedings had, will be restrained from opening the road on the line on which it was originally intended it should run.¹

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Butte county.

H. V. Reardan, for appellant. Hundley & Gale and John C. Gray, for respondent.

MCKEE, J. This action was brought by the plaintiff, as owner in fee, and in the actual possession, of a tract of inclosed land in Butte county, to enjoin the defendant from taking down his inclosure, and entering upon the land for the purpose of opening upon it a public road. By his answer to the complaint the defendant admits that he claims the right to enter upon the plaintiff's land for that purpose; and that, unless enjoined by the court, he will enter upon it, in pursuance of an order made by the board of supervisors of Butte county on the eleventh day of April, 1885, which commands him, as road overseer of the district in which the land of plaintiff is situated, "to remove all obstructions on a road as originally established and declared a public highway, and to open the same."

It is found as a fact that, on the third day of November, 1875, a strip of land 30 feet wide, within the inclosure of the plaintiff, was condemned for a public road; that the condemnation was made in a proceeding commenced for that purpose by the plaintiff himself and other real property owners; and that compensation was duly awarded and paid to the plaintiff for the land which was to be taken from him for the road. In law, payment of the compensation awarded vested in the public the right of way over the land; and, under the law, the public, acting by its authorized agents, had the right to proceed to locate and open the road upon the land, and, in the execution of that right, to remove any obstructions which might be upon it. Section 2631, Pol. Code. But the road was never, in fact, located and opened upon the land. The fact is, as the court finds, that the strip of land, within the plaintiff's inclosure, which was intended to be taken for the road, was situate south of a line "between sections 6 and 7 and 5 and 8, to the northeast corner of the north-west quarter of the north-west quarter of section eight, in township seventeen north, range four east, M. D. M.," and "has never been opened, used, worked, or traveled as a highway, except at a point on the east terminus of said line." The reason why the road was not opened and located upon the land is that the viewers appointed in the condemnatory proceedings laid out and opened the road on a strip of land 30 feet wide, from "a point on the township line between ranges 3 and 4 east, about 9 rods north of the line of road petitioned for, and thence running east, inclining south until it intersected the section line between 5 and 8, in said township and range;" and it is contended that the location was a mistake.

But the road, as laid out and opened by the viewers, has been used and traveled by the public as the true road since November, 1875, and has been graded and kept in repair by the road overseer of the district in which it is situated, as part of the public highway. No objections have ever been made by the owners of the land over which the road runs, to the public use; and, as it has been used and traveled by the public for more than 10 years, the legal presumption is that the owners abandoned the possession of the land for the road, and therefore the road established upon the land is the public highway. "Public highways," as defined by the Code law, are "roads, streets, alleys, lanes, * * * land laid out or erected as such by the public, or, if laid out and erected by others, dedicated or abandoned to the public." Section 2618, Pol. Code.

A highway thus created continues to exist until it is vacated or abandoned by order of the board of supervisors of the county in which it is situated, or by operation of law, or judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, (sections 2619, 2621, Pol. Code,) or it may be changed, altered, or discontinued in the mode prescribed by article 6, c. 2, of that part of the Political Code which regulates the subject of highways in the counties of the state. Sections 2681-2692, Id. But there was no proceeding commenced under that law for changing, altering, or discontinuing the road. After discovering by a survey of the line of the road, made in 1885, that the road, as it has been used and traveled for over 10 years, was originally located and opened by mistake of the road viewers, it was attempted to have the supposed mistake corrected by having the road relocated and reopened upon the true line, as disclosed by the survey.

But boards of supervisors have no jurisdiction of a proceeding to correct a mistake in the view and survey of a public road which has become a highway. They have only such jurisdiction and general supervision over roads within their respective counties as are given them by section 2643, Pol. Code. The order of the eleventh of April, 1885, by which the board of supervisors commanded the defendant, as road overseer, to open said road to the public on its true line, was therefore an excess of the jurisdiction of the board, and conferred no authority on the defendant to enter upon the plaintiff's inclosure for the purpose of locating and opening upon the plaintiff's land a new road in place of the road which has been opened and used for 10 years as the highway.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded.

PLEADING—AMENDMENT OF COMPLAINT AFTER DEMURRER.

If a demurrer to the complaint is sustained, the plaintiff is entitled to leave to amend, unless the complaint is so defective that it cannot be made good by any amendment.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Mariposa county.

Action to recover the proceeds of a note claimed to have belonged to plaintiff's decedent, and to have been wrongfully disposed of by defendant. Defendant demurred to the complaint, (1) because it did not state a cause of action; (2) because of defect or misjoinder of parties; and (3) because of ambiguity and uncertainty. The demurrer was sustained. Plaintiff moved for leave to amend, which motion was denied, whereupon plaintiff appealed, on the ground that he was entitled to leave to amend unless his complaint was so defective that it could not be made good by any amendment.

WATERS AND WATER-COURSES—IRRIGATING DITCH—INJUNCTION—ESTOPPEL.

land, that the right to use water from said canon therefor was appurtenant thereto. Defendant therefore purchased the land. Subsequently plaintiff's grantors, in order to save waste, proposed to run a pipe across defendant's land. Defendant assented on condition that the pipe should be so laid that he should be enabled to use therefrom the quantity of water to which he had theretofore been entitled. This was done, and defendants used the same until the bringing of this action. Held, that the plaintiff was estopped from interfering with the rights acquired by the defendants to the use of the pipe, and its appurtenances, as long as the same remain as conduit of the water over their land.¹

Commissioners' decision.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

The court below adopted findings of the jury, and made findings of its own, to the following effect: That plaintiff is the owner of all the water rising and flowing in that canon, in the county of Los Angeles, known as the "Kewen Mill" or "Lake Vineyard Canon," as alleged in the complaint, and of the right to use and appropriate the same, except that portion thereof belonging to the defendants; and, further, is the owner of the dams, ditches, reservoirs, and pipes that convey said water, subject to the right of the defendants to use the same for the purpose of taking the waters belonging to them; that the principal aqueduct used by plaintiff for conveying the water is an iron pipe passing through defendants' land; that J. H. Carpenter, a prior occupant of the Richardson place, asserted a right to use water from Kewen canon, and had a license from B. D. Wilson, under whom plaintiff claims; that Richardson used the water from 1867, uninterruptedly, under a claim of right, peaceably, adversely, exclusively, and continuously; that plaintiff and its grantor have known of defendants' claim, and have acquiesced therein; that defendant Richardson, before purchasing his lands, inquired of B. D. Wilson whether the water-right claimed by defendant was appurtenant to the land, for the purpose of determining whether he would buy the premises; that Wilson, knowing that such was Richardson's purpose, and being then the owner of all the rights claimed by plaintiff, stated that such water-right was appurtenant to said land, and Richardson, because of that admission, purchased the land, and made valuable improvements thereon; that but for that statement he would not have made the purchase; that defendants, since 1870, used the water in question for the purpose of irrigation, and for domestic and stock purposes; that the quantity requisite therefor is two and one-third inches, under a pressure of four inches; and that defendants' claim has been asserted and maintained by defendants, and their predecessors, openly, notoriously, under a claim of right, and adversely to all the world, for 20 years.

On which findings of facts the court found this conclusion of law: That "the plaintiff is the owner of all the water-rights set out and claimed in the complaint herein, and also of all pipes, ditches, aqueducts, and reservoirs appertaining thereto, as described in the complaint, except a constant flow of the waters of said canon of two and one-third inches, measured under a four-inch pressure, on defendants' said premises, which said quantity of water belongs to defendants for uses upon the lands belonging to them, as hereinbefore found; and that defendants are entitled to the use of said pipes, ditches, aqueducts, and reservoirs for the purpose of storing, preserving, and conducting the same upon their said land, for the purposes aforesaid, and the right to take said water from said pipe, as now constructed, at any point upon their said land;" and directed a decree accordingly.

The appellants, on their appeal, relied on the following points:

(1) The findings did not cover all the issues, since defendants, in their answer, claim under an agreement made in 1875, when the pipe was put through defendants' land, that defendants might tap the pipe, and use the water; and also that plaintiff is barred by section 318, Code Civil Proc. Cal.

(2) The findings were not justified by the pleadings, since defendants' utmost claim was that plaintiff's grantors agreed that defendants might tap the pipe, and use water therefrom, while the findings make plaintiff's ownership subordinate to defendants' right to use the dams, etc., for the purpose of taking water from Keweenaw canon.

(3) The findings are contradictory since at one place it is found that defendants' grantors used the water under a license from B. D. Wilson, and at another that defendants and their grantors, for more than 20 years, (which carries us back to a time anterior to Carpenter's selling out to Richardson,) have had the open, notorious use of the water, under a claim of right, and adversely to the whole world.

(4) The judgment is not warranted by the findings, nor the pleadings. It adjudges ownership of the waters and dams, etc., used in diverting the same, excepting that defendants own two and one-third inches of water, and are entitled to use the plaintiff's dams, etc., for the purpose of conducting, storing, and preserving the same, while the prayer of the answer asks for no such judgment; and the answer sets up the agreement that defendants might use the water, made at the time the pipe was laid, which was simply a license. The judgment is not warranted by the findings, because the court does not find that defendants owned the pipe, dam, etc.

(5) The findings are not supported by the evidence, which is discussed at great length.

(6) Errors of law at the trial, excepted to by plaintiff. Defendants Richardson and Hutchinson claimed that they had a right to the water, under Mr. Wilson's deed to Hutchinson, as appurtenant to the land conveyed. Plaintiff offered to prove declarations of Mr. Wilson concerning the water-right of the place prior to the making of the deed. Defendants objected, and the objection was sustained.

Chapman & Hendrick, Glassell, Smith & Patton, and T. B. Bishop, for appellant. Wells, Van Dyke & Lee and Bicknell & White, for respondents.

FOOTE, C. This action was brought with a view of obtaining a judgment affirming to the plaintiff the whole of the right, title, and interest in and to certain waters mentioned in the complaint, as well as to the pipe which conducted said waters over the defendants' land, as also to the water-works and appurtenances thereto belonging. An injunction was prayed for, restraining the defendants from tapping the pipe and taking water therefrom, or in any other manner interfering with or diverting the same.

The defendants' demurrer to the complaint was overruled, and then they answered, stating substantially that they owned a certain tract of land over which the pipe was conducted, and were entitled to take a sufficient amount of water therefrom to irrigate said land, and that such privilege they have exercised for more than 16 years, adversely, openly, notoriously, and uninterruptedly, under a claim of right. And with a view, evidently, to show an estoppel in pais as to the plaintiff's right to dispute the defendants' claim as aforesaid, the answer sets forth, in brief, this state of facts:

That before Richardson, one of the defendants, purchased the land upon which he claims the right to the use of said water, he asked Mr. Wilson, upon whose land the spring was situated from which the water took its rise and naturally flowed, whether that land, now called the "Richardson Place," was entitled to sufficient of that water for the purposes of its irrigation, and for the domestic uses of its occupants, and that Mr. Wilson, with a knowledge and understanding of the object of the inquiry and of the surroundings, stated that such land was entitled to such water, and that; relying upon this statement of Wilson, Richardson purchased from Hutchinson, his co-defendant, an interest in the "place" in good faith, and put thereon various valuable improvements; that for many years after that time, and up to the year 1875, the water in question flowed to the said premises in and through an open ditch; that this resulted in a waste of water; hence, for the purpose of preventing such waste, the plaintiff's predecessors in interest, who were entitled to all the waters flowing from said source on Wilson's land, except that acquired by defendants as aforesaid, concluded to dispense with the exposed conduit, and to run the water through an iron pipe; to this desire, expressed to them on the part of the plaintiff, the defendants assented, upon condition that the pipe should be so laid as that the latter would be enabled to use therefrom a quantity of water sufficient to irrigate their lands, which was the portion thereof to which they had theretofore been entitled; that upon this agreement the pipe was put down in 1875, and hydrants attached thereto for the defendants' use; and that such hydrants have ever since been used by them for the taking from the pipe the amount of water which they then, and for many years before had, claimed as their own.

The issues thus raised were submitted to a jury, and were passed upon by them favorably to the defendant. The trial court adopted such findings, and added others as to matters not fully covered by the interrogatories upon the subject submitted to the jury.

Upon all the findings, judgment was rendered for the defendants, upholding their claim to a certain portion of the water in dispute, and, as an incident thereto, the use, and an interest in it, (so long as the pipe should remain as constructed; that is, so long as it should remain as a conduit of the water over and through their land, and to the water-works, which were necessary to its being run through said pipe,) sufficient to enable the defendants to take from the pipe, and make use of it, at any point on their land, the quantity of water which of right belonged to them. At least, such is the proper construction of the language of that judgment as it appears to us.

The evidence, conflicting as it is, does not warrant a disregard of those findings. From the record, it appears in evidence, on the part of the defendants, that, under an agreement between the parties to this action, the defendants consented to discontinue the wasteful use of the water through the ditch, and allow the same to be conducted over their land by the plaintiff in a pipe, upon condition that the former might tap the pipe, and take the water which they then were, and had for many years been, the owners of, at any point on their said land, that this agreement was executed by both parties thereto, and that such execution has been continuous and uninterrupted for many years.

The findings of the court, as we think, are sufficient at least to show that it passed upon the issue raised, and believed such facts to be true. Hence it would appear that, as a matter of law, the plaintiff should be estopped from any interference with the rights acquired by the defendants to the use of the pipe, and its appurtenances, as long as the former remains a conduit for the water over the defendants' land, and that the defendants are entitled to tap said pipe, and use the water, which they are declared to be owners of, so long as said pipe remains, with its appurtenances, as "now constructed." It therefore becomes unnecessary to pass upon any of the other questions arising upon the record, as the issue thus properly made by the pleadings, and found in favor of the defendants, entitles them to the judgment, as we understand its meaning.

The judgment and order denying a new trial should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; SEARLS, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

MCCOMB v. SPANGLER. (No. 9,813.)

1. MORTGAGE—FORECLOSURE—DECREE, AND ITS EFFECT—ADVERSE TITLE—COMMUNITY PROPERTY—CIVIL CODE CAL. § 170.

A title adverse to that of the mortgagor cannot be litigated in an action to foreclose the mortgage; and therefore a decree foreclosing a mortgage given by a wife does not estop one claiming under her husband from showing that the lands mortgaged were community property, and an adverse title in the husband under section 170, Civil Code Cal., although he was a party defendant in the foreclosure proceeding, and the decree bars and forecloses all rights of the defendants, and those claiming under either of them, to the mortgaged premises.

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE—COMMUNITY PROPERTY—DEED OF LANDS FOR WIFE'S SEPARATE ESTATE—PRIMA FACIE TITLE.

The fact that a deed of lands was made to a wife "for her separate estate," even if construed to mean that the consideration money was paid from her separate property only, creates a separate estate in her prima facie, and does not preclude one claiming under her husband from showing that the purchase money was paid from community funds.¹

3. SAME—SEPARATE PROPERTY OF THE WIFE—LANDS MORTGAGED BY HER WHILE LIVING APART FROM HUSBAND—CIVIL CODE CAL. § 169.

"The earnings and accumulations" of the wife living separate from her husband are her separate property, (Civil Code Cal. § 169;) but the fact that a note and mortgage were given by a wife while living apart from her husband does not, of itself, prove that the lands described in the mortgage were her separate property.

Department 1. Appeal from supreme court, Alameda county.

This is an action of ejectment for certain lands in Alameda county, California. Plaintiff claims title by deed from John W. Brumagim to trustees, in 1872; from the trustees to Elizabeth McComb, wife of John McComb, and mother of plaintiff, July 19, 1873; from John McComb and Elizabeth, his wife, to William G. Hamilton, March 10, 1883; and from William G. Hamilton to plaintiff, March 16, 1883. Defendant claims under a foreclosure and sale under a mortgage on the premises executed by Elizabeth McComb, Sr., on October 12, 1878, and pleads the decree in that action in estoppel. Defendant introduced in evidence a deed from John W. Brumagim to Elizabeth McComb, Sr., dated July 2, 1873, which purports to convey the lands in question to her for her separate estate.

Chapman & Slack, for appellant. J. C. Plunkett, for respondent.

MCKINSTRY, J. The plaintiff deraigned title, through mesne conveyances, from John McComb and Elizabeth, his wife; the defendant, through purchase at a sale under a decree foreclosing a mortgage executed by Elizabeth McComb, his wife. The mortgage was executed prior to the deed by John McComb and wife, under which plaintiff claims.

The principal question to be considered on this appeal, and the question on which, apparently, the decision turned in the court below is whether the plaintiff is estopped from asserting herein that the demanded premises were community property of John McComb and his wife, Elizabeth, when the mortgage was executed by her, which was foreclosed in the action, Reid, Adm'r, etc., v. Elizabeth McComb and John McComb. The complaint in that action contained no averment either that the defendant John McComb had or asserted any claim adverse to the title of the mortgagor, or that any claim he had was subject or subordinate to the lien of the plaintiff's mortgage. It alleged him to be the husband of Elizabeth, and that she mortgaged property which was her separate property. But he was not called on to take issue on either of these averments. He could not, to any purpose, assert his adverse legal title in that action, since its validity could not properly be determined therein; and he was not required, for the protection of his rights, to make an issue which the court of equity would have refused to try in the suit for foreclosure. Nor could he say, as against the mortgagee, that the mortgage did not operate a lien on her estate, if she had any. The question whether she had any interest or estate, as between herself and the mortgagee, or whether she could or could not deny, as against the mortgages, an interest or estate, was one with which John McComb personally had no concern, inasmuch as his paramount title would not be affected by the decree.

The husband has the management and control of the community property, with the like absolute power of disposition, (other than testamentary,) as he has of his separate estate. Civil Code, 170. The community title, if it exists, is adverse and paramount to the asserted or pretended claim of separate property in the wife. For convenience, and we think accurately, the community title may be designated as his title, since the estate of the wife in any portion of the community property is but contingent,—an estate which never becomes absolute until she ceases to be wife by reason of the dissolution of the marriage. The default of the defendant, John McComb, did not admit any fact on which could be based a judgment or decree adjudicating the invalidity of the community title.

In an action to foreclose a mortgage, a person who sets up a claim to the land adverse and paramount to that of the mortgagor, and who, therefore, denies the efficacy of the mortgage as a lien on his own title, cannot properly be joined as a co-defendant. Such an adverse claim to the land, in opposition to the mortgage, cannot be tried in the equitable action to foreclose. So far as the mere legal rights are concerned in such an action, the only proper parties are the mortgagor and mortgagee, and those who have acquired rights under them subsequent to the mortgage. The mortgagee, or holder of the mortgage, cannot make one who claims prior and adversely to the title of the mortgagor a defendant for the purpose of trying his adverse claim. Pom. Rem. § 334.

The object of a suit to foreclose a mortgage, under our law, is to obtain the sale of the estate which the mortgagor held at the time he executed the mortgage. All persons beneficially interested in the estate mortgaged are proper parties to the suit. Titles adverse to that of the mortgagor are not the proper subject of determination in the suit. Such titles must be settled in a different action, giving rise, as they generally do, to questions of purely legal cognizance. San Francisco v. Lawton, 18 Cal. 474. "Where a party has a right under the mortgage, and also a right prior to it, he is not precluded, in respect to the prior right, by a judgment of foreclosure, though the terms of it are broad enough to cover both rights. Only the rights and interests under the mortgage, and subsequent to it, can properly be litigated upon a bill of foreclosure. One claiming adversely to the title of the mortgagor cannot be made a party to the suit for the purpose of trying his adverse claim. If he has a claim under the mortgage also, his claim prior to it cannot be divested by the decree. This prior claim is not a subject-matter of litigation in the foreclosure suit, and remains unaffected by it. The decree is final only within the proper scope of the suit, which is to bar interests in the equity of redemption." Jones, Mortg. § 1589; Kathbone v. Hooney, 58 N. Y. 463.

The decree can have no effect upon the rights of persons having priority, whether they are made parties to the action or not. Jones, Mortg. 1439, and decisions cited. In the exceptional cases, where prior mortgagees are made parties, this is done that the court may order a sale of the whole estate, and thus make a complete title in the purchaser. Id. In such cases the complaint may be treated as in the nature of a bill to foreclose, and to redeem from the prior mortgage. If the debt secured by the prior mortgage is past due, it would seem that the prior mortgagee may be compelled to accept the full amount of his claim from the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged premises, without any interference with the obligation of his contract.

Moreover the decree in Reid v. McComb, does not purport to adjudicate any title of John adverse to that of Elizabeth McComb, nor does the decree, in terms, adjudicate that the mortgage is a lien on the lands. The only clause which can be claimed to affect the right of John McComb is "that the defendants, and all persons claiming by, from, or under either of them, * * * be forever barred and foreclosed of and from all equity of redemption, and claim of, in, and to said mortgaged premises," etc. It may be conceded (although the complaint did not aver that he had any claim subject to the mortgage) that the defendant, John McComb, would have been barred of his equity of redemption, if he ever had had any. But it would be giving a meaning to the expression "mortgaged premises" which the scope and purpose of the action, and of the judgment taken as a whole, do not contemplate, to say that the decree by its terms bars John McComb of and from any claim based on a title adverse and paramount to that of the mortgagor. That which was mortgaged was the estate of the mortgagor, and as the purpose of the action was to secure the sale of that estate, and the foreclosure of all claims subsequently derived from the mortgagor, the portion of the decree which bars and forecloses all claims of, in, or to the "mortgaged premises," refers to the subject of the instrument of mortgage, to-wit, the interest of the mortgagor. It bars any claim in or to the estate mortgaged.

It is insisted that John McComb was a proper party to the foreclosure suit under section 370 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But, although he was a proper and necessary party under that section, he was such only because his wife was a party, and for the purpose of aiding in the protection of her rights. It was his duty, as husband, to prove on her behalf that the mortgage was never executed, or that the debt, to secure which it was given, had been paid, or to establish any other fact which would constitute a defense for her. In face of the default, we must assume that she had no defense to the suit. He was a party, made such by virtue of the provisions of the Code that he should have notice of the suit against her, with an opportunity to make a defense on her behalf. He would have the right to make such defense in her name if the law did not require him to be made a defendant for that purpose. Sued simply in his capacity of husband, and for the purpose referred to, he could not be compelled, in that suit, to litigate the independent legal title of the community.

It is suggested by respondent that if the judgment in Reid v. McComb fails to establish that the demanded premises were the separate property of Elizabeth McComb, such separate property was hers, because she and her husband were living separate and apart when she made her note, and the mortgage to secure its payment. We find no evidence of the fact in the record, but, had it been proved, it would not, of itself, have shown separate property in the wife. "The earnings and accumulations" of the wife, living separate from her husband, are her separate property. Civil Code, 169.

It is contended by respondent that we must hold the title to have been in Elizabeth McComb, as her separate property, when she executed the mortgage, for the reason that the deed from John W. Brummagim, in which she is named as grantee, contains the habendum clause: "To have and to hold, all and singular, the said premises, together with the appurtenances, unto the said party of the second part, her heirs and assigns forever, for her separate estate, and her sole and separate use, benefit, and behoof." All the cases hold, the deed being silent as to the source of the consideration, that when property is conveyed for a valuable consideration to either spouse, the presumption is that it belongs to the community. The claim of respondent is that, by reason of the clause in the deed above quoted, not only was the presumption of community property overcome, and a presumption created that the property was hers separately, but that the clause established indisputably a separate property in her.

Even if it should be conceded to the respondent (conceded for the purposes of this decision only) that the legal title was acquired—by the community or by Elizabeth, as the case may be—through the deed from Brummagim, and not through the deed from the trustees, to whom Brummagim had conveyed it, and if it should further be conceded that the clause in the deed from Brummagim, whereby, it would seem, the grantor attempted to limit the estate conveyed to the separate use of the wife, is the equivalent of a recital that the consideration money was paid out of funds which were the separate property of the wife, (Morrison v. Wilson, 13 Cal. 500,) the clause in the deed, giving to it the very greatest effect which can be claimed for it, only creates a separate estate in Elizabeth McComb, prima facie.

In Peck v. Brummagim, 31 Cal. 448, it is said: "The question presents the same features as it would if it arose between husband and wife, and related to a deed that recited that the purchase money was paid out of the separate estate of the husband or of the wife, and must receive the same solution. Neither the husband nor the wife is estopped from showing, against the other, the true nature of the consideration of the deed, or from whom it proceeded. Between them, or between one of them and the heirs of the other, no question of notice can arise."

In Ramsdell v. Fuller, 28 Cal. 33, it was decided that parties purchasing of the husband real estate deeded to the wife, for a money consideration, during coverture, do so at their peril. The record of the deed to the wife is notice to all the world that the land may be the separate property of the wife, and is sufficient to put purchasers on inquiry; and this, notwithstanding the presumption that the land is community property. By parity of reason, parties purchasing from the wife real estate deeded to her for a money consideration do so at their peril, notwithstanding the presumption arising from a clause like that in the deed from Brummagim, that the land is her separate property,—if, indeed, the clause creates any such presumption,—since they take with notice that the land may be community property.

At the very most, then, the clause in the Brummagim deed established prima facie only a separate estate in the wife, and the court below erred in refusing to permit the plaintiff to prove that the land was paid for out of community funds. Whether the clause in the deed from Brummagim was any evidence of separate property in the wife is a question which the exigencies of the present case do not demand of us to decide. We remark, however, that what was said in Morrison v. Wilson, with respect to the effect of a recital in a deed that the consideration was paid by a third party for the exclusive benefit of the wife, was dictum. See opinion on rehearing in the same case, 30 Cal. 344. In Peck v. Brummagim the deed contained no such recital. It may be that the consent of the husband to a deed containing a clause like that from Brummagim, indicated by his knowledge of it, and his failure to object to it when it was made, is some evidence of an intended gift by the husband to the wife of the community funds paid for the conveyance. But whatever its effect, if any, the clause in the deed, disconnected from other evidence, cannot be more than evidence prima facie that the land conveyed became the separate property of the wife, and it was clearly error to sustain an objection to evidence offered to prove "the true nature of the consideration," and that it proceeded from the community.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

SMITH v. TREFRY. (No. 11,876.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 15, 1886.)

APPEAL—TRANSCRIPT NOT FILED IN TIME—PENDING OF MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL AND SETTLEMENT OF BILL OF EXCEPTION IN COURT BELOW.

When no transcript on appeal is filed within the prescribed time, but it appears that a motion for a new trial, and the settlement of a bill of exceptions to be used on the hearing of that motion, are pending in the court below, the effect of such proceedings will be considered, if an appeal is taken from the ruling on the motion; but the appeal from the judgment will be dismissed without prejudice.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county. J. T. Carey, for appellant. C. T. Jones, for respondent.

MYRICK, J. Motion to dismiss appeal. Judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff, November 7, 1885. Notice of appeal from the judgment was filed and served June 18, 1886. No transcript on appeal has been filed, and we have the certificate of the clerk of the court below that the appellant has not requested the clerk to certify to any transcript. Under such circumstances, the motion must be granted. If, as is stated in a subsequent certificate of the clerk, a motion for new trial is pending in the court below, together with a settlement of a bill of exceptions to be used on such motion, the effect of such proceedings will be considered, if an appeal should hereafter be taken from the ruling, when made, on the motion for new trial. Until then we must regard the appeal, as the appellant has characterized it, an appeal from the judgment; and, no transcript having been filed or prepared within the time prescribed therefor, the appeal is dismissed, but without prejudice.

HEILBRON and others v. HEINLEN. (No. 11,433.)*(Supreme Court of California. August 27, 1886.)1. ANIMALS—TRESPASS BY—LIMITATION OF ACTION—CALIFORNIA ACT FEBRUARY 4, 1874, § 8.

The eighth section of the California act of February 4, 1874, entitled "An act to protect agriculture, and to prevent the trespassing of animals upon private property in Fresno and other counties in California," does not limit the right of a plaintiff suing for damages for the trespass of animals upon his land to the 60 days limited in that statute; but, where the complaint is not expressly brought under that statute, plaintiff may commence action for such trespass at any time within three years from the date of the trespass.

2. NEW TRIAL—MOTION FOR—TIME—NOTICE OF INTENTION TO MOVE—DISMISSAL.

Where, in an action for trespass, plaintiffs except to the ruling of the court refusing to admit certain evidence, and judgment is given for defendant, and plaintiffs file their bill of exceptions, of which defendant accepts service, and file their notice of intention to move to set aside the judgment, and for a new trial, of which defendant accepts service, and plaintiffs do not call up their motion till 20 months have elapsed, the court is not justified in dismissing plaintiffs' notice of intention to move for a new trial.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county.

Action to recover damages for the trespass of the defendant's cattle on plaintiffs' lands. At the trial, in January, plaintiffs' attorneys offered testimony to prove the trespass within two years prior to the commencement of the action. Defendant objected to any testimony showing any trespass for a period more than 60 days prior to the commencement of the action, on the ground that by the California act passed February 4, 1874, § 8, relative to trespass of animals in Fresno and other counties in California, plaintiffs' recovery was limited to trespass committed within 60 days next before the filing of the complaint. The court sustained the objection, and refused to allow plaintiffs to show any trespass taking place prior to the period so limited by the statute; to which ruling plaintiffs duly excepted. After the conclusion of plaintiffs' evidence the defendant declined to introduce any evidence, and the jury, after being instructed by the court, returned a verdict for defendant, and the court gave judgment in his favor. Plaintiffs filed notice of intention to move for an order setting aside the judgment, and for a new trial, service of which was accepted by defendant's attorneys, February 4, 1884. Plaintiffs made up their bill of exceptions, specifying as errors the exclusion of evidence as to any trespass prior to the 60 days before the commencement of the action, service of which was accepted by defendant's attorneys, February 12, 1884. On October 7, 1885, defendant, on notice, moved to dismiss plaintiffs' notice of intention to move for a new trial, whereupon plaintiffs called up their motion for a new trial. The court granted defendant's motion to strike out plaintiffs' notice of intention to move for a new trial, and denied plaintiffs' motion for a new trial. The plaintiffs appeal.

Ferry & Ferry, for appellants. G. A. Heinlen and Sayle & Harris, for respondent.

MYRICK, J. Judgment was entered in favor of defendant, January 30, 1884. Plaintiffs gave notice of intention to move for a new trial, the motion to be made on bill of exceptions. The bill was served February 12, and settled April 24, 1884. Nothing further was done in the case until October 7, 1885, when the defendant, on notice, moved the court to dismiss plaintiffs' notice of intention, on the grounds, among others, of negligence and delay on the part of plaintiffs in not prosecuting the intention to move for a new trial, and that the same had been abandoned by lapse of time. On the same day plaintiffs submitted their motion for a new trial. On the twenty-second of October, 1885, the court granted defendant's motion to strike out plaintiffs' notice of intention, and denied the motion for new trial. From this order an appeal was taken.

Whatever would have been within the discretion of the court in ruling on a motion (if made) to dismiss the plaintiffs' motion for a new trial, on the ground of laches or failure to prosecute, the court was not justified in striking out their notice of intention. The motion for a new trial should have been granted, on the authority of Trescony v. Brandenstein, 6 Pac. Rep. 384. The court erred in confining the proof by plaintiffs of trespasses committed by defendant's cattle to the period of 60 days next preceding the commencement of the action.

The appeal from the judgment has been heretofore dismissed, because not taken in time. The order appealed from—viz., the order granting defendant's motion to strike out plaintiffs' notice of intention, and denying plaintiffs' motion for new trial—is reversed, and the cause is remanded.

ARNOT and others v. BAIRD. (No. 11,200.)

MORTGAGE—FORECLOSURE—PLEADING—EXECUTION AND DELIVERY OF NOTES—ABSOLUTE DEED.

In an action to declare a deed absolute in form a mortgage, and sell the property conveyed thereby to satisfy certain notes described in the complaint, where the complaint states that the notes were made payable to parties named, and that a subsequent deed of trust reciting the former deed was made to secure the payment of the amount thereof, and the deed, which is set out in the complaint, states that it was given to secure the payment thereof, the allegations as to the making and delivery of the notes are sufficient to sustain a decree of foreclosure and sale.¹

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sierre county.

Action to have an absolute deed declared a mortgage, and have the property sold to satisfy certain notes described in the complaint.

Van Clief & Wehe, for respondents, Arnot and others. Cross & Simonds, for appellant, Baird.

BY THE COURT. Appeal from judgment. If the recital of facts contained in the decree is not to be treated as a finding of facts, it will be deemed that findings were waived. If the recital is to be treated as a finding of facts, the facts were therein sufficiently found to sustain the decree. There is no bill of exceptions; and it does not in any manner appear that findings of fact were not waived. It may be that findings were waived, and therefore the statement of facts in the decree may be treated as a useless statement. If findings were waived, the statement of facts in the decree would not necessarily show error.

The complaint states that the notes were made by the defendant, and were made to the parties respectively; and that the deed of trust was made to secure the payment of the amounts thereof; also the deed of trust (set out in the complaint) states that it was given to secure the payment of the amounts of the various notes. We think there are sufficient allegations as to the making and delivery of the notes. Hook v. White, 36 Cal. 300.

Judgment affirmed.

STATE v. FOLSOM WATER CO. (No. 11,174.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 15, 1886.)

DEED—CONSTRUCTION—CONDITION—CANAL—WATER COMPANY.

Deed construed, and held not to impose on defendant water company the obligation to complete a certain canal named therein.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county.

Action by the state of California to compel the Folsom Water Company, as assignee of the Natoma Water & Mining Company, to construct a certain canal according to the terms and conditions of a deed executed by the latter company to the state, in words as follows:

"This indenture, made this thirtieth day of June, Anno Domini eighteen hundred and sixty-eight, between the Natoma Water & Mining Company, a corporation, duly incorporated under and by virtue of the laws of the state of California, and having its principal place of business in the village of Folsom, in said state, party of the first part, and the state of California, party of the second part, witnesseth, that the said party of the first part, for and in consideration of the sum of one dollar, lawful money of the United States, to it in hand paid by the second party, receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, and in further consideration of fifteen thousand dollars ($15,000) in convict labor, rated at fifty cents per diem, to be furnished to said first party in aid of its water-power canal enterprise, by said party of the second part, but only at the convenience of the state, and whenever it may be deemed advisable and judicious by the board of state prison directors of said state, has granted, bargained, sold, conveyed, and confirmed, and by these presents does grant, bargain, sell, convey, and confirm, unto the said state of California, forever, all that certain piece or parcel of land situate, lying, and being in Granite township, Sacramento county, state of California, and being a portion of the larger tract patented by the United States government under the name of 'Rancho Rio de los Americanos,' the portion thereof herein conveyed being particularly and specifically described as follows, to-wit: Beginning at a point on the east boundary line of said rancho, fifteen feet from where said line, projected northwardly, intersects the American river at high-water mark; thence, along said east boundary of said rancho, south seventy-five (75) chains and fifty (50) links, to a point; thence, at a right angle west, to a point within ten feet of the eastern line of the water canal of the Natoma Water & Mining Company, which said canal is near the eastern bank of the American river; thence northerly, along said canal and ten feet from the eastern line thereof, to a point ten feet above the dam across said American river constructed by and belonging to said Natoma Water & Mining Company; thence, at a right angle westerly, to a point fifteen (15) feet above the American river at high-water mark; thence, along said river, north-easterly, following its meanderings on a line fifteen feet above high-water mark, to the place of beginning,—containing three hundred and fifty (350) acres of land; together with all and singular the tenements, hereditaments, and appurtenances thereunto belonging, or in anywise appertaining, with the timber standing thereon, and the granite quarries contained therein, and the reversion and reversions, remainder and remainders, rents, issues, and profits thereof, and also all the estate, right, title, interest, property, possession, claim, and demand whatsoever, as well in law as in equity, of the said party of the first part of, in, or to the above-described premises, and every part and parcel thereof, with the appurtenances; also the exclusive right forever to the use of the first fall five feet perpendicular of the whole water of the canal at the upper end of that place on the canal known as 'Prison Yard,' with all rights, privileges, and easements necessary for the taking and enjoyment of power from said fall; it being understood that the said party of the first part reserves to itself the subsequent power resulting from the flow of water in said canal after the first fall as aforesaid, and that this instrument is not to be construed as granting unto said state the right to divert said water, or any material quantity thereof, permanently from said canal. To have and to hold all and singular the above mentioned and described premises, together with the appurtenances, unto the said state of California, forever. And the said party of the first part warrants the said premises to be free from all and every incumbrance of any kind, character, or description, and against any and all incumbrances now existing upon said premises, created or suffered by said party, or by any other party, will forever warrant and defend. But, in accordance with the resolutions upon the branch state prison location passed by the board of state prison directors on the eighteenth day of June, A. (Supreme Court of California. September 27, 1886.)

INSOLVENCY—DISCHARGE—BOOKS OF ACCOUNT—CALIFORNIA ACT OF APRIL 16, 1880.

In section 49 of the California act of April 16, 1880, prohibiting the discharge of an insolvent merchant or tradesman who has not kept proper books of account, the words "subsequently to the passage of this act" are a limitation upon the general prohibition of the discharge of a merchant or tradesman who has not kept proper books of account, and authorize the discharge of a merchant or tradesman who was engaged in business as such, but who did not keep proper books, prior to the date referred to.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county
Ferdinand J. McCann, (Tyler & Tyler and Underwood McCann, of counsel,) for appellant. Lesser & Hall and J. M. Lesser, for respondent.

MCKINSTRY, J The motion to dismiss the appeal has been heretofore denied. Oppositions were filed to the discharge of Luke Lukes from his debts under the insolvent law. The issues made by the oppositions, and the answers thereto, were submitted to a jury, who found against the opponents upon all the issues submitted save one.

Among the objections to the discharge was this: "That said Luke Lukes, being a merchant and tradesman, did not, since the sixteenth June, 1880, keep proper books of account." The petitioner denied in his answer that "since the sixteenth day of June, 1883, he did not keep proper books of account," and averred that "he kept proper books of account during all the time he was engaged in business." The jury found that Luke Lukes had not kept proper books of account "since the sixteenth of June, 1880." The petition for discharge alleges that "your petitioner is, and for more than six months next preceding the filing of this petition has been, a resident of the county," etc., "and has since the twentieth day of July, 1881, been engaged in the business of milling and manufacturing flour at the county of Santa Cruz," etc. The petition was filed January, 1883.

Section 49 of the act of April 16, 1880, provides: "No discharge shall be granted * * * if the debtor, * * * being a merchant or tradesman, has not, subsequently to the passage of this act, kept proper books of account." It is manifest that the clause relates to merchants or tradesmen. The words "subsequently to the passage of this act" are a limitation upon the general prohibition of the discharge of a merchant or tradesman who has not kept proper books, and authorize the discharge of a merchant or tradesman who was engaged in business as such, but who did not keep proper books, prior to the date referred to.

There is nothing in the case tending to show that the petitioner was a merchant or tradesman, or that he was engaged in any business prior to July 20, 1881, and the uncontradicted testimony proved that he had been engaged in "milling grain, and selling the products thereof," since that date. There was no express finding that he had ever been a "merchant or tradesman." When the issues to be submitted to the jury were being settled, the petitioner asked the court to submit the issue, "Did Luke Lukes keep proper books of account since the twentieth day of July, 1881?" But the court adopted—and the same was subsequently submitted to the jury—the issue, "Did Luke Lukes keep proper books of account since the sixteenth day of June, 1880?" the same being the date when the insolvent law took effect. The petitioner objected to the settlement and submission of the issue last recited, upon the grounds—First, that the time specified is not within any of the issues made by the pleadings herein; second, that the same is immaterial. The court overruled the objections, and petitioner duly excepted.

If it be conceded that the petitioner was a "merchant or tradesman" from and after the date when he commenced the business of milling and selling flour and other products of the mill, the court below erred in submitting the issue to the jury; and, as the judgment refusing the discharge was based on the special verdict of the jury, the judgment is erroneous. As the case was presented, it was immaterial whether the petitioner kept any books prior to July 20, 1881. For aught that appears from the findings of the jury, he kept proper books after that date.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings.

Commissioners' decision.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Tehama county.

Chipman & Garter, for respondent, Tait. John F. Ellison, for appellee, Hall.

SEARLS, C. This is an action to restrain the defendant, as road overseer of Tehama road-district, in the county of Tehama, from opening a road for public use across the land of plaintiff. The cause was tried by the court without a jury. Written findings were filed, upon which a decree was entered in favor of the plaintiff, perpetually enjoining the defendant from entering upon, laying out, constructing, opening, or keeping open a road for public use through the land of the plaintiff, which is properly described.

From this decree, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Under the pleadings and evidence the case turned upon the question whether a strip of land 60 feet in width on the east side of the premises described in the complaint, and running across the same from north to south, was in fact a public road.

The findings on this branch of the case are as follows:

"(6) That the said strip of land, above described, has never been laid out or erected as a road or public highway by order of the board of supervisors, and has never become a public road by use or dedication by any owner of said land, or otherwise; nor has any part or portion of plaintiff's land described in his complaint in this action, and in the findings, become a public road by order of the board of supervisors, or by use or by dedication, or otherwise.

"(7) That the said defendant will carry out and perform the acts so threatened by him, unless restrained by the process of this court, and plaintiff will be irreparably injured thereby.

"(8) That A. G. Toomes, mentioned in defendant's answer, never, as owner or otherwise, on or about the year 1873, or at any other time, dedicated said strip of land, or any part thereof, to the public and for a public highway, either by spoken words of said A. G. Toomes, or by his conduct.

"(9) That the said strip of land was never accepted by the public as a highway, and the public, since 1873, or since any other date, have not traveled upon or over said strip of land, or any part thereof, or used the same continuously or at all as a public highway."

Appellant attacks these findings numbered 6, 7, 8, and 9, upon the ground that they are not supported by the evidence, and are contrary thereto.

There is a substantial conflict in the testimony, and, upon well-settled principles, we are not at liberty to disturb the findings under such circumstances. The findings cover all the issues in the cause necessary to a determination of the case. The allegation of the answer that A. G. Toomes was the owner of the land in 1870 was wholly immaterial, except as a predicate for showing that, as such owner, he dedicated the land to the purposes of a highway; and the eighth finding negatives the fact of such dedication.

The court having found that no highway ever existed over the land, and that plaintiff was the owner thereof, the further allegation of the answer, that plaintiff built a fence thereon, and across the highway, became immaterial. Manifestly, if he owned the land, and the public had no easement in it or right to it, he could build as many fences as he chose upon it, without incurring any liability thereby. So, too, if it was never a highway, there was no right in the public to be abandoned. The question of highway or no highway was one of fact, to be passed upon as such by the court, and was properly determined as such. Harding v. Jasper, 14 Cal. 642.

There was no error in permitting the witness A. J. Clark to testify as to the declarations of Toomes, deceased, made while he was having the land surveyed, to the effect that he was not going to have a road on the west line of the land he was surveying. The declarations of a party while engaged in the performance of an act, and illustrating the object and intent of its performance, are admissible in evidence. The evidence was admissible in rebuttal of the declarations introduced by defendant tending to show that Toomes had said, about the same time, that he would open a road at the point indicated.

The action of the court in ruling out the testimony of the witness Healy, so far as he proposed to give his impressions, was proper. The witness had stated that, in surveying off the west line of the land sold to Simpson by Toomes, he had run the western boundary on a line with the east side of Second street. The witness was then asked if he knew what the object of Toomes was in making the lines thus correspond, to which he replied that he did not recollect what Toomes said about it; and then was about to give his impression as to the object. The inference to be drawn from the acts of Toomes was for the court to draw from his acts, and the impressions or opinions of the witness were not admissible as aids to the deductions to be made by the court.

We find no error in the record calling for a reversal, and are of opinion the judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

SMITH v. FURNISH. (No. 11,300.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—CLAIM BY MARRIED WOMAN FOR NURSING DECEDENT—HOW PRESENTED.

A claim by a married woman for services rendered a decedent as nurse constitutes community property, and should be presented to the executors of the estate in the name of the husband; but when a claim, verified by the wife, is presented in her name by the husband, and rejected, a judgment in an action by husband and wife to recover for such services will not be reversed simply because the claim was not properly presented.

2. ELECTION—BEQUEST IN PAYMENT FOR SERVICES—ACTION.

Where a certain sum of money is bequeathed to a nurse by the testator in payment for her care and attention to him, an action against the estate to recover the value of such services will be considered an election not to claim the bequest, and it will not be a bar to the suit.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county.

W. H. Beatty and S. C. Denson, for appellants. Grove L. Johnson, for respondents.

Ross, J. The plaintiff Emma L. Smith, and her co-plaintiff, A. J. Smith, are husband and wife, and as such resided together in the house of the deceased, William Hicks, during which time Mrs. Smith rendered Hicks services as nurse, for the value of which this suit was brought. It is contended, on behalf of the appellants, that the claim for the services was not properly presented to the executors of the estate of Hicks. It was verified by Mrs. Smith, and presented in her name by her husband to the executors, and by them rejected. They claim that it should have been verified by the husband, and presented in his name; that the debt due by Hicks was due to A. J. Smith; and that it is indispensable to an action upon it that a claim for the amount should have been duly presented to the executors in his name.

It does not admit of doubt, we think, that the amounts due for the services rendered constituted community property. It is provided by section 162 of the Civil Code that "all property of the wife, owned by her before marriage, and that acquired afterwards by gift, bequest, devise, or descent, with the rents, issues, and profits thereof, is her separate property;" and, by the next section, that "all property owned by the husband before marriage, and that acquired afterwards by gift, bequest, devise, or descent, with the rents, issues, and profits thereof, is his separate property." By section 164 it is declared that "all other property acquired after marriage, by either husband or wife, or both, is community property." An exception to this last general provision is made in favor of the earnings and accumulations of the wife while she is living separate from her husband, by virtue of section 169 of the Civil Code, which reads: "The earnings and accumulations of the wife, and of her minor children living with her or in her custody, while she is living separate from her husband, are the separate property of the wife."

It would be clearly contrary to these provisions of the Code to hold that all earnings and accumulations of the wife are her separate property. The exception cannot be extended by the courts beyond its fair scope. The provision that the earnings and accumulations of the wife while she is living separate from her husband are her separate property, plainly assumes that such earnings and accumulations as are not so acquired do not constitute the separate property of the wife, but are embraced by the general provisions of section 164, and constitute community property. It is true that, by section 168 of the same Code, it is provided that "the earnings of the wife are not liable for the debts of the husband;" but what should be considered earnings of the wife, and what debts of the husband, within the true meaning of that section, are questions that do not arise in this case.

The debt due from the deceased, Hicks, for the services rendered him by Mrs. Smith, being the community property of Mr. and Mrs. Smith, was there such a presentation of the claim for the amount to the executors of the estate of Hicks as would authorize a suit upon its rejection?

As has been seen, it was verified by the wife, and presented in her name by the husband. That the claim was sworn to by the person best acquainted with the facts surely cannot be good ground of objection to its verification. Undoubtedly it ought to have been presented in the name of the husband, since the amount due constituted community property, but it was presented by the husband in the name of his wife. Had the claim been allowed by the executors, he would have been estopped from presenting another claim in his own name for the same services; and having, with his wife, brought this suit upon the rejected claim, a recovery thereon would equally estop him. A claim for the services, properly verified, was presented to the executors, who rejected it, but without objection to the manner of its presentation. Suit having been brought thereon, plaintiffs proved the rendition of the services and their value, and recovered judgment. Ought the judgment to be reversed only because the claim was presented to the executors by the husband in his wife's name instead of his own? Under the circumstances of the case, we think not. The substantial rights of the estate have not been affected by the manner of its presentation, and we do not think a just judgment against it ought to be reversed on that ground.

The only other points relied on by the appellants for a reversal grows out of the fact that the deceased in his will made a bequest to Mrs. Smith, of $3,000, "in consideration and in payment for her kind care and attention during my last sickness." It is said that the bequest was intended as full compensation for the services rendered by Mrs. Smith, and that it has not been renounced. The answer to this is that her action in respect to the claim was an election on her part not to rely upon the bequest; and upon the distribution of the estate the rights of the executors, and of all interested therein, can be properly and appropriately protected.

Judgment and order affirmed.

HUSCHEON v. HUSCHEON. (No. 9,832.)

1. MORTGAGE—ABSOLUTE DEED—CIVIL CODE CAL. §§ 2924, 2925.

Under the law of California (Civil Code, §§ 2924, 2925) every transfer of an interest in land, other than in trust, made only as a security for the performance of another act, is a mortgage; and the fact that the transfer was made subject to a defeasance may be proved, though it does not appear by the terms of the instrument.¹

2. SAME—WHEN DECLARED A MORTGAGE—INADEQUATE CONSIDERATION—PREPONDERANCE OF EVIDENCE.

A deed, absolute on its face, of land worth $4,000, by an ignorant man, made, under the pressure of debt and impending litigation, to a brother, in whom he placed great confidence, will be declared a mortgage, where it appears that the deed was given in consideration of the brother's settling the mortgagor's debts, present and prospective, and that the debts so paid amounted to only $1,500, and where the preponderance of evidence shows that, at the time the deed was made, a contemporaneous contract was executed which was subsequently lost, and by the terms of which the grantor was to be allowed to redeem the land so conveyed at the end of six years.¹

3. SAME—STATEMENT OF ACCOUNT.

An absolute deed having been declared a mortgage, the account should be stated between the parties as to credit the mortgagee with all sums of money paid out by him for the mortgage, and for taxes and improvements upon the property, and also with his expenses and a reasonable compensation for his time in attending to the mortgagor's business, and with interest on the several sums at 10 per cent. The mortgagee should be charged with the value of the rents and profits of the land while he held possession of it, with the amount of a mortgage which he had placed upon the land and had not paid, and with the value of certain labor which the mortgagor had performed for the mortgagee.

Commissioners' decision.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county.

S. M. Buck, for respondent. J. D. H. Chamberlain and P. F. Hart for appellant.

BELCHER, C. C. By this action the plaintiff seeks to have a deed, executed by him to defendant, adjudged to be a mortgage; and the facts of the case, as found by the court below, are substantially as follows:

On the fifteenth day of July, 1876, plaintiff was the owner of 760 acres of land in Humboldt county, of the value of $4,000. He was indebted to one Margaret Fitzgerald in the sum of about $500, for which an action had been commenced against him, and his property attached. He had been a partner with one Comise in the dairying business, and Comise was claiming that a considerable amount was due him on partnership account, and was threatening to commence an action to settle up the partnership affairs. Plaintiff had no money, but it was necessary for him to be prepared to meet and settle these demands.

Under these circumstances he applied to the defendant, who was his brother, and in whom he placed great confidence, for assistance. Defendant agreed to pay the Fitzgerald note, and also to defend any action that might be commenced by Comise, and to pay all the cost and expense of such action, and any judgment that might be recovered therein, provided plaintiff would execute to him a conveyance of all his lands. Thereupon plaintiff executed and delivered to defendant a deed of his lands, which was absolute in form. On the same day another paper was executed by the parties, which is now lost, but is called by some of the witnesses a lease, and by others a "back paper." By this paper it was, in effect, agreed that defendant should take and hold possession of the lands for six years, and that, at the expiration of that time, they should be reconveyed to the plaintiff, upon his paying to the defendant such sum or sums of money as might then be found due him. Under the agreement defendant took possession, and has ever since held it. A few days after receiving the deed he paid the Fitzgerald claim, amounting to the sum of $540, and thereafter, at divers times, paid out sums aggregating about $800, for costs and expenses incurred in the litigation between Comise and plaintiff, and to satisfy the judgment obtained by Comise in that litigation. After the expiration of the six years provided for in the agreement, plaintiff demanded from defendant an account of the rents, issues, and profits of the land, and of all sums of money due defendant, if any, and offered to pay him whatever sum might be found due; but defendant refused to account to or with plaintiff in any manner, and claimed to own all of said property absolutely. At that time the land had largely increased in value.

The action was commenced in January, 1883, plaintiff alleging in his complaint that the deed executed by him to defendant was intended to be, and was given and accepted as, security for the money to be paid for him by defendant, and praying that it be adjudged a mortgage; that an account of the dealings between them be taken; and that he be permitted to redeem the property so conveyed upon paying to defendant all sums of money found due him, if any, and for a reconveyance of the lands to him by defendant. Upon these facts, the court, by its judgment, granted to the plaintiff the relief demanded. The defendant then moved for a new trial, and, his motion being denied, appealed from the judgment and order.

In support of the appeal, it is now earnestly contended that the deed in question was an absolute conveyance in fact as well as in form, and that the finding of the court that it was only a mortgage is not justified by the evidence. In this state every transfer of an interest in real property, other than in trust, made only as a security for the performance of another act, is to be deemed a mortgage; and the fact that the transfer was made subject to a defeasance may be proved, though it does not appear by the terms of the instruments. Sections 2924, 2925, Civil Code. Whether a deed absolute in form be a mortgage or not is a mixed question of law and fact, to be determined from all the evidence, written and parol; and, in determining it, all the facts and circumstances attending the transaction should be considered. If it were given as a security for a loan of money, a court of equity will treat it as a mortgage; and whether it was so given or not is the test by which its character must be judged. Farmer v. Grose, 42 Cal. 169; Montgomery v. Spect, 55 Cal. 352; Peugh v. Davis, 96 U. S. 332.

In the last-named case, FIELD, J., delivering the opinion, it is said: "It is an established doctrine that a court of equity will treat a deed absolute in form as a mortgage, when it is executed as a security for a loan of money. That court looks beyond the terms of the instrument to the real transaction; and when that is shown to be one of security, and not of sale, it will give effect to the actual contract of the parties. As the equity, upon which the court acts in such cases, arises from the real character of the transaction, any evidence, written or oral, tending to show this, is admissible."

The debt to secure which the deed is given, may be an antecedent debt, or one created at the time, or it may be advances to be thereafter made by the mortgagee to or for the mortgagor, and no accompanying written promise on the part of the mortgagor to pay the debt is necessary. Pioneer G. M. Co. v. Baker, 10 Sawy. 539; S. C. 23 Fed. Rep. 258; Campbell v. Dearborn, 109 Mass. 130; Russell v. Southard, 12 How. 139; 4 Wait, Act. & Def. 541, 542; Horn v. Keteltas, 46 N. Y. 605. One of the circumstances tending strongly to show that a deed absolute in form was only a mortgage, is the fact when it appears that there was great inequality between the value of the property conveyed and the price alleged to have been paid for it. As said in Russell v. Southard, supra: "In examining this question, it is of great importance to inquire whether the consideration was adequate to induce a sale. When no fraud is practiced, and no inequitable advantages taken of pressing wants, owners of property do not sell it for a consideration manifestly inadequate, and therefore, in the cases on this subject, great stress is justly laid upon the fact that what is alleged to have been the price bore no proportion to the value of the thing said to have been sold;" citing Conway v. Alexander, 7 Cranch, 241; Morris v. Nixon, 1 How. 126; Vernon v. Bethell, 2 Eden, 110; Oldham v. Halley, 2 J. J. Marsh. 114; Edrington v. Harper, 3 J. J. Marsh. 354.

Tested by the foregoing rules of law, was the deed in question an absolute conveyance or a mortgage?

It is not pretended that the value of the property, when the deed was made, was less than $4,000, nor that there was any consideration for its execution except an agreement on the part of defendant to pay all of plaintiff's debts, including all claims then in litigation, or that might be brought against him. The amount to be paid on the Fitzgerald note was known to be only a little more than $500. The only other debt was the Comise claim, which was uncertain in amount; it might be nothing, or might be several hundred dollars. Taking both of the claims together, we are unable to see how it could have been anticipated that the defendant would be called upon to pay more than a thousand or twelve hundred dollars. The consideration for the deed was, then, altogether inadequate, and it seems quite incredible that plaintiff would be willing to sell out all his property, even to his brother, for about one-fourth of its value.

Upon the question whether a paper in the nature of a defeasance was executed by the parties or not, the testimony was conflicting, and upon that subject we quote and adopt what was said by the court below, in deciding the case: "Aside from the consideration of inadequacy of price, I am entirely satisfied from the evidence that, at the time of the execution of the conveyance, it was not only agreed and understood between the parties that plaintiff should have the right to redeem upon the payment to defendant of all sums which he had paid for plaintiff, but I am also satisfied that there was at the same time executed by the parties an agreement to that effect. This writing has not been produced in court, and diligent search and inquiry have failed to discover it. It is lost or destroyed. The defendant denies most emphatically that such an instrument was ever executed. He admits that there was some talk about it; that plaintiff wanted such a writing, but that he, the defendant, positively refused to execute it. In my opinion, the evidence as to the execution of this paper is so overwhelming as to place it beyond all doubt. The plaintiff swears positively to it, gave his reasons why he wanted it, testifies circumstantially to the reading of it by Watson in the presence of Walsh, himself, and defendant, of his signing it, and defendant attaching his mark, being unable to write; also as to the controversy between them as to the duration of the lease, as it was called, or the time within which he should be allowed to redeem, and finally, at the suggestion of Walsh, fixing the term at six years. Incidentally, it appears that he spoke of it to a number of parties at various times; sometimes calling it a bond for a deed, sometimes a lease, and sometimes using the homely but expressive term, a 'back paper.' The testimony of Walsh as to the execution of the paper is clearer and more satisfactory than that of the plaintiff. He was the mutual friend of the parties, and they consulted and advised with him, and discussed the matter in his presence, and adopted his suggestion in fixing the duration of the lease at six years. He heard it read by Watson to the parties, heard them express their satisfaction at its contents, saw plaintiff sign his name, and defendant make his mark; before this having sent them to Watson to get him to write it. He subsequently read it over himself, and kept it for about a year in his safe. He is quite certain that some one obtained it from him pending the Comise and Huscheon litigation. Watson remembers distinctly of writing two papers in which the parties were interested, and that Walsh had something to do with the negotiations, but fails to remember the contents or purpose. Walsh cannot testify minutely to all the terms of this lease, as he terms it, but does remember clearly that the purpose and object was to allow the defendant to use the land and stock for six years, the rents and profits to be applied in payment of plaintiff's indebtedness to him, and at the expiration of that time he was to deed back to plaintiff, upon the payment by him of the money expended in his behalf, if any should be due."

This is a fair review of the evidence, and, in our opinion, it correctly states its scope and meaning. It is true, it appeared that plaintiff had often spoken of the business relation existing between himself and defendant as that of a partnership, and that in a suit against the defendant, which involved the right to the personal property transferred, and was tried before a justice of the peace in 1877, he was a witness, and testified that he had no interest in the personal property, and incidentally that he had none in the land. But we do not consider these facts of any particular importance. Plaintiff was an ignorant man, and may well have supposed that the transaction established some kind of a partnership relation. So as to the testimony before the justice. If plaintiff testified just as it is claimed he did, it may have been done honestly. He knew that he had deeded the land to defendant, and that defendant was in possession of it, and had a right to retain that possession for several years. Under the circumstances he may have supposed that he had no interest in the land then, and would have none until he had settled with defendant, and paid back to him all sums of money which had been or should be advanced for his benefit.

Looking, then, at all the testimony, we agree with the court below that it clearly and satisfactorily appears that the deed in question was given as a security for the repayment of moneys to be thereafter advanced by defendant, and that it should be held and treated as a mortgage.

It is also argued for the appellant that the deed was made to hinder and delay the creditors of plaintiff, and therefore he is entitled to and can obtain no relief from the courts against it. On looking through the record we are unable to find anything to support this claim. In his very able and exhaustive brief, counsel for appellant says that, as the consideration for the deed, "defendant agreed to pay all plaintiff's debts, including all claims then in litigation, or that might be brought against him." If this be so, how can there be any plausible pretense that in making the deed plaintiff intended to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors? We, at least, are unable to see how a needy debtor can be said to have violated any rule of law or good morals, because, to raise money to pay his just debts, he has turned over all his property, as security, to some one, who has the ability, and has undertaken honestly and in good faith, to pay them.

Among other defenses interposed, defendant pleaded nearly all of the sections of the Code providing for the limitation of actions, and it is claimed that, under some one or more of these sections, plaintiff's cause of action is barred. If it be true, as found by the court, that defendant took and held possession of the land under a written agreement, which was executed by the parties, and provided, in effect, that plaintiff should have the right to redeem at the expiration of six years upon paying to defendant whatever should then be found due him, it is quite clear that there could have been no adverse holding of the land, and that defendant cannot now avail himself of any of the sections of the Code which provide bars against the recovery of real property. So, too, it is equally clear that the paper constituted a written recognition of the debt from plaintiff to defendant, and a promise to pay it when the right to redeem should accrue, and consequently that, if defendant had instituted an action to foreclose, plaintiff could not have availed himself of any of the sections of the Code which provide bars against the recovery of money. It must follow, therefore, that the rights of the parties were reciprocal and commensurable, and that the court properly held that the action was not barred.

In stating the account between the parties the court credited defendant with all sums of money paid out by him for the plaintiff, and for taxes and improvements upon the property, and also with his expenses and a reasonable compensation for his time while attending to plaintiff's business, with interest on the said several sums at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, but it refused to credit him with the money paid out for expenses in the lawsuit before the justice of the peace hereinbefore referred to; and it charged him with the value of the rents and profits of the land while he held possession of it, with the amount of a mortgage he had placed upon the land and not paid, and with the value of certain work and labor performed by plaintiff on another farm owned by defendant. As the accounts were thus stated it was found that the defendant had been fully paid, and that a balance of $217.80 was due the plaintiff, for which judgment was also entered in his favor.

It is now objected that the court erred in refusing to credit defendant with his expenses in the justice's court case, and in charging him with the rents and profits of the land, and for the work and labor of plaintiff. But in the rulings of the court upon these matters we see no material error. The action before the justice of the peace was brought by a third party against the defendant to recover the personal property, and it had no connection with the transaction in hand. The defendant was a mortgagee in possession, and chargeable with the rents and profits of the mortgaged premises, (Ruckman v. Astor, 9 Paige, Ch. 517; Strang v. Allen, 44 Ill. 428; 4 Wait, Act. & Def. 566, 577;) and there was testimony tending to show that the value of the rents and profits was even greater than the amount allowed. The court, in effect, found that the services of plaintiff were rendered in part payment of the sums advanced by defendant under the original agreement; and the testimony of plaintiff that he never made any separate contract about the work, and never expected defendant to pay him $25 per month in money for his work, but supposed he was working in the interest of the general partnership between them, is in support, we think, of the court's view of the matter.

The plaintiff seems to have thought that the transaction between himself and defendant created a partnership between them, and that he was working to discharge the duty cast upon him by that relation. He was mistaken about the partnership, but his work was nevertheless performed to release him from the burden of debt which the transaction had imposed upon him.

It follows that the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; SEARLS, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

PETERSEN v. WEISSBEIN. (No. 11,544.)

INJUNCTION—CROSS-COMPLAINT—DEMURRER—MOTION—AFFIDAVITS.

In an action of ejectment, where defendant files a cross-complaint, and seeks to enjoin plaintiff from asserting any title to the property, pending the decision of a demurrer to the cross-complaint, defendant cannot, upon motion, on affidavits, obtain a perpetual injunction, but must await the result of the proceedings.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Nevada county.

Cross & Simonds and E. H. Gaylord, for appellant. A. Burrows, for respondent.

ROSS, J. The complaint in this case is in the usual form of complaints in an action of ejectment. To it the defendants filed an answer, putting in issue its averments, and also pleading in bar of the action judgments in certain other actions, which, it is claimed, determined adversely to the plaintiff the title to the property in controversy. The defendants also filed a cross-complaint, by means of which they sought to have the plaintiff perpetually enjoined from asserting any right to the property, on the ground that his action was vexatious, to which cross-complaint the plaintiff filed a demurrer. Subsequently, and during the pendency of the demurrer, defendants moved the court, upon affidavits and the judgment rolls in the suits pleaded in bar, for an order perpetually enjoining the plaintiff from further prosecuting the action. The motion was granted, and the action of the court in that particular constitutes the ground of the present appeal.

It is not necessary in this case to determine whether, under any circumstances, it is competent to try, upon affidavits, the question whether or not the title claimed by plaintiff in an action of ejectment is the same title adjudicated against him in some other action, nor to determine the sufficiency of the cross-complaint in the present case to obtain the relief sought thereby. It is enough to say that defendants could not anticipate the result of the proceedings under the cross-complaint by the motion in question.

Order reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings.

A petition for rehearing was filed, and, upon the denial thereof, the opinion formerly filed in this case, and reported ante, 306, was, by order of the court, modified by striking out the following words on page 307:

"We are not familiar with the practice of rehearings in the superior court; and what right or power the superior court had, on the twelfth of December, 1884, to order a rehearing in the case, we are at a loss to conceive. The demurrer and the motion for a new trial had been disposed of, and then, on what is called a 'rehearing,' the case was again brought before the court, and a new order made. This is a new practice with which we are not familiar, and we know of no statute authorizing it."

PORTER v. MURRAY. (No. 9,384.)

1. FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER—COMPLAINT—CAUSE OF ACTION—JOINING WIFE OF PRINCIPAL DEFENDANT—DESCRIBING PREMISES.

A complaint in an action of forcible entry and detainer is not obnoxious to a demurrer as not stating facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action which sets up the plaintiff's ownership of certain described premises, his possession thereof on a day named, the unlawful entry of the defendants thereon on that day, and their forcible detainer thereof up to the time of bringing the action. Nor is it demurrable for joining the wife of the principal defendant as a party defendant, nor because it sets out one cause of action in several distinct counts, and only describes the premises in the first one.

2. SAME—MOTION FOR NONSUIT—STRANGER ENTERING BETWEEN GOING OUT OF TENANT AND ENTRY OF LANDLORD.

In an action of forcible entry and detainer, where the testimony for plaintiff tends to show that on a certain day the plaintiff's agent received notice that plaintiff's tenant would vacate the premises on the following day; that on that day at 8:30 A. M., the agent was on hand to take charge of the premises, and was told by the tenant's wife that the tenant would not go out until 1:30 P. M. of that day; that at 12:30 P. M. the agent returned and found one of the defendants in the house, with the windows and doors barricaded, and threatening to shoot the agent if he attempted to enter,—a motion for a nonsuit was properly denied.

3. SAME—FINDINGS—COMPLAINT—ALLEGED BY PLAINTIFF.

Where, in such an action, the findings show that, on the day mentioned in the complaint, the plaintiff was in the peaceable possession of the premises; that on that day the defendants wrongfully entered thereon, and have ever since forcibly detained possession thereof from the plaintiff; and the facts thus found, together with the admissions contained in defendants' answer, make out a cause of action alleged in favor of the plaintiff,—it is no cause of complaint on the part of defendants that the court did not find the facts in as many ways as they were set out in the complaint.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court of San Francisco.

Forcible entry and detainer.

This action was brought under the provisions of the California Code of Civil Procedure respecting forcible entries and unlawful detainers. Section 1159 et seq. The property is a small lot in San Francisco, California, and is the same property that was involved in the case of Murray v. Green, 64 Cal. 363. The complaint set out the one cause of action in four separate counts, to each of which a demurrer was interposed. One ground of demurrer to each count was that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The second, third, and fourth counts were demurred to for uncertainty in not repeating the description of the land given in the first count. Each count was demurred to for the misjoinder of Mrs. Lawler as a defendant. The demurrer was overruled. Defendants answered, and a trial was had. Defendants' counsel made motions for a nonsuit on behalf of each defendant, which were all denied. Findings were filed, and judgment went for plaintiff. Defendants appealed from the judgment. Objection is made to the findings, because, of the four causes of action stated separately in the complaint, there are no findings as to any one of them, but the findings are a medley of some parts of them all.

A. L. Rhodes, for plaintiff and respondent. Matt. I. Sullivan and E. A. Lawrence, for defendants and appellants.

Ross, J. The demurrer was properly overruled. The findings show that, on the day mentioned in the complaint, the plaintiff was in the peaceable possession of the property, and that on that day, during his absence, Murray wrongfully entered thereon, and has ever since forcibly detained possession thereof from the plaintiff. As there was no omission to find upon any material fact set up by the defendants, and as the facts found by the court, together with the admissions contained in the answer, sustain a cause of action alleged in favor of the plaintiff, defendants have no just ground of complaint because the court did not find the facts in as many different forms as the plaintiff, out of abundant caution, thought it best to employ in the statement of his cause of action.

In respect to the defendants Lawler and wife, it appears from the pleadings that they entered under Murray, and, together with him, detain the possession of the property from the plaintiff.

The motion for nonsuit was properly refused. The testimony on the part of the plaintiff tended to show that on the afternoon of the fourteenth of August, plaintiff's agent received notice that the tenant of the plaintiff, who had occupied the premises for many months, would vacate the premises the following day; that plaintiff's agent went to the premises at 8:30 A. M. on the 15th, and was informed by the wife of the tenant that they would not move out before 1:30 that day; whereupon she was informed by the agent that at 12:30 he would be there to take charge of the premises, and promptly at that hour he was on hand, when he found Murray in the house, with the windows and doors barricaded, and threatening to shoot the agent if he attempted to enter. Manifestly, when the tenant quit, the landlord was restored to the possession. It would be a monstrous doctrine to affirm that the landlord does not get possession of the premises upon the expiration of his tenant's lease if some third party can slip in between the moving out of the tenant and the moving in of the landlord. Judgment affirmed.

1. APPEAL—WHAT REVIEWABLE—INTERMEDIATE ORDER—EXECUTOR'S ACCOUNT.

Where a decree settling an executor's final account is afterwards set aside by the court making it, and the executor is required to render a new account, upon appeal from the decree settling the latter account the order setting aside the former settlement will be reviewed; and, if erroneous, the appeal will be sustained.

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—ACCOUNT—DECREE—SETTING ASIDE—CODE CIVIL PROC. CAL. § 473.

After the statutory period prescribed by Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 473, for obtaining relief against a decree settling an executor's account has elapsed, such decree cannot be set aside upon the petition of children of a deceased child of testator who were omitted from the will, alleging that they were omitted therefrom unintentionally, and that the order discharging the executor was made inadvertently.

Commissioners' decision.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county.

The final account of M. M. Cahalan, as executor of Michael Cahalan, was rendered and allowed in the probate court of said county, of which said superior court was the successor, August 7, 1875. April 30, 1880, the children of a deceased child of testator who had been omitted from the will filed a petition alleging that they had been omitted unintentionally, and that the order discharging the executor was made inadvertently, and praying that said order be set aside. June 11, 1880, an order was made in accordance with the prayer of the petition. From this order the executor appealed to the supreme court, which dismissed the appeal, on the ground that the order was not appealable. In re Estate of Cahalan, 60 Cal. 232. Another account was afterwards ordered to be filed in the court below, and was filed and settled, and thereupon the executor brought this appeal.

John Reynolds, for appellant. W. P. Veuve and J. J. Burt, for respondents.

FOOTE, C. An appeal from an order of the superior court of Santa Clara county, settling a final account of an executor, and distributing the decedent's estate.

Michael Cahalan, the deceased, departed this life on the sixteenth day of December, A. D. 1874, leaving a will dated February 13, 1872, in which the petitioners, (respondents,) the children of a deceased daughter of the testator, were not mentioned, and by which M. M. Cahalan (the appellant) was constituted executor and residuary legatee. The will was duly admitted to probate, and letters testamentary issued to the appellant on the ninth day of January, A. D. 1875. Notice to creditors to exhibit their claims was given February 7, 1875.

A final account was rendered and filed by M. M. Cahalan on the twenty-sixth of June, 1875. Accompanying that account was a petition setting forth that all debts had been paid, and all other directions of his testator's will had been faithfully carried out, and asking that a day be appointed for the settlement of his account, and for his discharge. It is recited in the decree ordering the allowance of that account, and the discharge of the executor, which order was made on the seventh day of August, 1875, that it had been proven to the satisfaction of the court (then the probate court) that due and legal notice had been given of the settlement of said final account; that the executor had paid all the expenses and just claims against the estate of his testator, and all legacies and bequests in said will mentioned; that he had fully and completely discharged the trust mentioned in the eighth subdivision of the will, paid over all the money, and delivered all the property, as provided in said will; that it fully appeared to the court, by documentary evidence and other good and sufficient proof, that said executor had fully and completely done, performed, and carried out the provisions of said last will of said deceased; that he had fully complied with all the orders of the court in the premises; that he had honestly and faithfully discharged all of his duties as such executor; that no other property remained in his hands belonging to the estate; that no further acts remained to be performed by him as executor of said decedent; that he be wholly and absolutely discharged from all further duties and responsibilities as such executor. His letters testamentary were declared vacated, the estate adjudged fully distributed, and the trust settled and closed.

Upon its face that decree was valid, (Dean v. Superior Court, 63 Cal. 473,) and, as the statutory period for obtaining relief against it, as prescribed in section 473, Code Civil Proc., had long since elapsed, it could only be attacked and set aside, on the ground alleged in the petition therefor, by a proceeding in equity, (In re Estate of Hudson, 63 Cal. 454; Dean v. Superior Court, supra.)

But it is said that this court cannot, upon the present appeal, review the order made on the eleventh of June, 1880, setting that decree aside. The order thus made was declared by this court to be one from which an appeal cannot be prosecuted. In re Estate of Calahan, 60 Cal. 232. It was clearly intermediate, and necessarily affects the judgment from which this appeal is prosecuted, and is reviewable on such appeal. Section 956, Code Civil Proc. For if the decree which the order set aside was valid on its face, and could not be, as it was, summarily held for naught, then that now appealed from was affected to the extent that it was utterly void, and no basis existed for the action of the court in making it, unless it had first swept away the former decree, and thereby made a starting-point for its jurisdiction and procedure in the premises.

As a result it follows that the order appealed from was erroneous, and should be reversed, and the cause remanded, to be proceeded with in accordance with the views herein expressed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; SEARLS, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order is reversed, and cause remanded, to be proceeded with in accordance with the views expressed in said opinion.

MCKENZIE v. BRANDON and others. (No. 11,037.)

(Supreme Court of California, October 26, 1886.)

1. PUBLIC LAND—STATE LANDS—AFFIDAVIT OF PURCHASER.

When one seeks to purchase land from the state, he must state in his affidavit, and state truly, all the facts required to be stated therein.

2. SAME—ADVERSE OCCUPATION.

Where, at the time of an application to purchase from the state the west half of a certain thirty-sixth section of land, a previous applicant had 18 acres of the half section inclosed with adjoining land owned by him, cultivated a part of this eighteen acres, and pastured his stock on the balance of the half section, held, that he was in such adverse occupation as contradicted the applicant's affidavit that there was no occupation adverse to his.

Commissioners' decision.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, El Dorado county.

Plaintiff and defendant were contestants as to the right to purchase lands. The decision of the court below was in favor of plaintiff, but a new trial was granted upon defendant's application, and from the order granting it plaintiff appealed.

Irwin & Irwin, for appellant. Blanchard & Swisler, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. C. In June, 1876, the defendant Brandon made application to purchase from the state the west half of a certain thirty-sixth section of land in El Dorado county. At that time he owned the south-east quarter of the section, and had that quarter and 18 acres of the south-west quarter inclosed by a fence, which he has since kept up. He has never resided on the west half of the section, but has usually, in connection with the cultivation of the south-east quarter, cultivated about seven acres of the south-west quarter, lying within his inclosure, and has used the balance of the half section to pasture his stock.

While the 18 acres were so inclosed, and a portion of it cultivated, by the defendant, the plaintiff, in February, 1884, made application to purchase from the state the same half section. In the affidavit on which his application was based he stated, among other things, "that there is no occupation of said lands adverse to any he has." The contest between the parties as to which had the right to purchase the land was referred by the surveyor general to the court below for determination, and, after a trial of the case, judgment was entered that plaintiff was, and the defendant was not, entitled to purchase it. The defendant moved for a new trial, and his motion was granted upon the ground "that the affidavit filed by the plaintiff, McKenzie, in the surveyor general's office, failed to show the adverse occupation of the defendant Brandon of a portion of the land." From the order granting a new trial this appeal is prosecuted, and the only question to be determined is, what constitutes an adverse occupation, within the meaning of the law, as it stood when the affidavit was filed?

It is argued for the appellant that, to constitute an adverse occupation, within the meaning of section 3495 of the Political Code, the adverse occupant must be an actual settler on the land; or, in other words, must himself be in such a position as would entitle him to purchase from the state. It is well settled that, when one seeks to purchase land from the state, he must state in his affidavit, and state truly, all the facts required to be stated therein. Woods v. Sawtelle, 46 Cal. 389; McCoy v. Byrd, 65 Cal. 92; S. C. 3 Pac. Rep. 121; Millidge v. Hyde, 6 Pac. Rep. 852; Plummer v. Woodruff, 11 Pac. Rep. 871, (opinion filed September 28, 1886.) And, when the case is brought into court for determination, each party must set forth his pleadings, and show by his proofs that he has strictly complied with the law. Gibson v. Robinson, 10 Pac. Rep. 193.

The land sought to be purchased in Woods v. Sawtelle, supra, was within Woods' inclosure, and had been so for several years. Sawtelle made the first application to purchase it, and in his affidavit stated "that there is no occupation of said land adverse to that he now holds." Woods, by reason of his delay, had lost all preference right to purchase the land; but it was held that the affidavit made by Sawtelle was not the one required by the statute in such a case, and so he had acquired no rights. The statute then, in reference to the sale of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, was substantially the same as in 1884, except that, after the amendment of 1880, the applicant was required to further state that he was himself an actual settler upon the land.

"The word 'occupation' may be so used, in connection with other expressions, or under peculiar facts of a case, as to signify a residence; but, ordinarily, the expressions 'occupation,' 'possessio pedis,' 'subjection to the will and control,' are employed as synonymous terms, and as signifying actual possession." Lawrence v. Fulton, 19 Cal. 690.

In Woods v. Sawtelle the word "occupation" was evidently treated as having its ordinary meaning, and we are unable to see anything in the constitution, or statutes since passed, tending to show that its meaning has been changed.

It follows that when the plaintiff made his affidavit he, in effect, stated that there was no actual possession of the lands adverse to any he had. This was not true in fact, and the affidavit was not the one required by the Code in such a case.

The order should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order is affirmed.

MOSELY v. TORRENCE. (No. 9,580.)

PUBLIC LANDS—CALIFORNIA STATE LANDS—ACTUAL SETTLERS—FALSE AFFIDAVITS—CONST. CAL. 1879, ART. 17, § 3.

In June, 1879, T. made application to purchase from the state of California a piece of land in Sonoma county, and M., in August, 1882, filed an application to purchase the same. Each was duly qualified to make the purchase. T.'s application was in proper form, and at the time of making it, he had all the land inclosed except a small piece on which M. afterwards made his settlement. T. never personally resided on the land, but occupied and managed it by servants and employes, and before August, 1882, had cultivated parts of it, and placed valuable improvements upon it. Before making his application M. settled upon the small piece outside of T.'s inclosure, and has ever since resided there, with his family. In the affidavit on which his application was made he stated, among other things, "that there is no occupation of said lands adverse to any he has." In an action brought by M. to settle the contest between himself and T. in respect to the land, held, (1) that T., under Const. Cal. 1879, art. 17, § 3, was not, and never had been, an actual settler on said land; (2) that the application of M. was defective, because he falsely stated that there was no occupation of said lands adverse to him; (3) that neither of said parties were entitled to purchase said land from the state.

Commissioners' decision.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sonoma county.

Action to determine a contest in respect to land purchased from the state of California. Case tried, and judgment entered that neither party was entitled to purchase the land, whereupon both parties appealed. The facts are sufficiently stated in the opinion.

G. A. Johnson, for appellant Mosely. John Brown, for appellant Torrence.

BELCHER, C. C. This action was commenced to determine a contest between the parties about the right to purchase from the state a part of a sixteenth section of land in Sonoma county. The case was tried, and judgment entered that neither party was entitled to purchase the land, and thereupon both parties appealed from the judgment.

It appears from the findings that the defendant made application to purchase the land in question in June, 1879, and the plaintiff in August, 1882, and that, at the time of making his application, each party possessed the qualifications required by law to entitle him to purchase school land from the state. The defendant's application was in proper form, and, at the time of making it, he had all the land inclosed, except a small piece on which plaintiff afterwards made his settlement. He has ever since kept up his inclosure, and has cultivated portions of the land, and been in the actual occupation of all of it, except the small piece before mentioned. Prior to August, 1882, he had placed improvements on the land of the value of $3,000, consisting of a good house and barn, and a half mile of picket fence, and had planted a vineyard of eight acres. He has never personally resided on the land, but has occupied and managed it by servants and employes. Before making his application the plaintiff settled upon the small piece outside of the defendant's inclosure, and has ever since been residing there with his family. In the affidavit on which his application was made, he stated, among other things, "that there is no occupation of said lands adverse to any he has." Upon these facts the court below found, as conclusions of law—"First, the said Torrence is not, and never has been, an actual settler on said land; second, the said application of Mosely is defective, because he falsely states that there is no occupation of said lands adverse to him; third, that neither of said parties were entitled to purchase said land from the state of California."

1. Under the provisions of the new constitution, adopted in 1879, lands belonging to the state, which are suitable for cultivation, can only be granted to actual settlers thereon, (article 17, § 3;) and the restriction operates as well on applications made before as after the constitution took effect, (Johnson v. Squires, 55 Cal. 103; Dillon v. Saloude, 9 Pac. Rep. 162.) Actual settlement means actual residence; and, as the defendant never had any actual residence on the land in question, it is clear that the judgment, so far as it affected him, was the proper one to be entered.

2. It is claimed for the plaintiff that his affidavit was not false or defective in any respect, because, as the defendant was not an actual settler on the land, and therefore not entitled to purchase it himself, his occupation of it was not an adverse occupation within the meaning of section 3495 of the Political Code. The same point was made in McKenzie v. Brandon, ante, 428, (decided October 26, 1886.) In that case, McKenzie sought to purchase land, a part of which was in the possession of Brandon, and made an affidavit like that made by the plaintiff here. Brandon was not himself entitled to purchase the land, but it was held that McKenzie's affidavit was not such a one as was required to give him a right to purchase, and that he therefore acquired no rights by making it. We are satisfied with the conclusions reached in that case, and the judgment here, as to both parties, should be affirmed.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

MILLER and others v. REA and others. (No. 9,847.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 17, 1886.)

APPEAL—SERVICE OF NOTICE—PARTITION—INTERLOCUTORY DECREE.

The notice of appeal from an interlocutory decree in partition need not be served on all adverse parties to the proceeding where the appeal is from specific parts of the decree only. A service on parties, or their attorneys, interested adversely in so much of the land as is involved in the appeal, is sufficient.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county.

On motion to dismiss.

Partition by Henry Miller, Thomas Rea, and Johanna Fitzgerald against Massey Thomas and some 1,200 other defendants. The land in question is the Rancho Las Animas, in Santa Clara county, California. The rancho was a Spanish grant to one Mariano Castro, who died in 1828, leaving a wife and eight children surviving him. Maria Lugardo Castro de Doak, one of his daughters, became the owner by inheritance of an undivided one-sixteenth of the rancho. The respective interests of the parties to this appeal are confined to this tract.

MYRICK, J. A motion was made to dismiss this appeal on the ground that the appellant had not served the notice of appeal on all the adverse parties, or their attorneys. The appeal is from specific parts of the interlocutory decree only, viz., the parts relating to certain portions of an undivided one-sixteenth of the Rancho Las Animas. The decree as to the remainder of the rancho is not involved in the appeal. The notice was served on the parties (or their attorneys) interested adversely to the appellant in so much of the undivided one-sixteenth as is involved in the appeal. The motion is denied.

MILLER v. THOMAS and others. (No. 9,933.)

APPEAL—SERVICE OF NOTICE—PARTITION—INTERLOCUTORY DECREE.

It is no ground for dismissing an appeal from an interlocutory decree in partition that the notice of appeal was not served on all the adverse parties, or their attorneys, where it appears from the transcript that the decree may be modified, if necessary or proper, without affecting the rights of the parties not served.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county.

On motion to dismiss.

For the facts in this case, see Miller v. Rea, ante, 431.

A. W. Crandall, for appellants. John Reynolds, for respondents.

MYRICK, J. Partition. Appeal by Pablo Doak and Isaac Doak. The attorneys for some of the respondents moved to dismiss this appeal on the ground that the notice of appeal was not served on all the adverse parties, or their attorneys.

The appeal was taken from so much of the interlocutory decree as directed the allotment of one-sixteenth of the rancho to Henry Miller and others, [not named in the notice.] In the decree specific tracts were allotted to said Miller, and other specific tracts were allotted to others. The claim made by appellants (denied by the court below) was to a specific tract of land. The notice was served on various parties.

So far as appears to us from the transcript, the decree might be modified (if necessary or proper) without affecting the rights of any party not served. If, however, it should appear on the final hearing that the necessary parties are not before the court on this appeal, the appeal will then be held ineffectual. Motion denied.

We concur: MORRISON, C. J.; MCKINSTRY, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

REYNOLDS v. LINCOLN and others. (No. 9,628.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 29, 1886.)

1. EXECUTION—SALE—JUDGMENT BY CONFESSION—EVIDENCE.

A judgment by confession on a statement not signed by the party personally is void, and a sheriff's deed under execution thereon is not admissible in evidence as to the title of the land sold.

2. SAME—SATISFIED JUDGMENT.

A sale of land under a satisfied judgment is a nullity, and does not affect the title.

3. EVIDENCE—COPY OF DOCUMENT, WHERE NO ORIGINAL PROVED.

Where there is no proof that the original of articles of association of a company ever existed, it is not error to exclude that which purports to be a copy.

4. TAXATION—SALE—TO HIGHEST BIDDER—ST. CAL. 1861, PAGE 120, § 5, ST. CAL. 1862, PAGE 520—TAX DEED—EVIDENCE.

Under St. Cal. 1861, p. 120, § 5, and St. Cal. 1862, p. 520, requiring lands at tax sale to be sold "for the smallest quantity that the purchaser would take and pay the judgment, and all costs," a sale to the highest bidder simply, is void, and the tax deed is not admissible as evidence.

5. ESTOPPEL—JUDGMENT IN EJECTMENT—SUIT TO QUIET TITLE.

Where one brings ejectment on an equity, and the judgment is adverse for the reason that the equity cannot be considered in the action of ejectment, such judgment is not a bar to a suit on the same equity, by one in possession, to quiet title.¹

6. EQUITY—SUIT TO QUIET TITLE—JOINDER OF PARTIES.

In an action to quiet title by one holding an equity, one holding the legal title, without any beneficial interest, may be joined as co-defendant.

7. APPEAL—MISJOINDER OF CAUSES OF ACTION NOT AFFECTING SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS.

Whether or not a cause of action to quiet title is improperly joined with one against a trustee of real estate having no beneficial interest, if the plaintiff is entitled to a conveyance from the trustee, and the trustee could have recovered from the other defendant in the cause of action to quiet title, the substantial rights of the parties are not affected, and judgment will not be reversed for such error.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county.

This action was originally brought to quiet title to the premises described in the complaint. Plaintiff applied to the court for leave to file an amended complaint, in which Francis E. Lynch was made a party defendant, and in which another and separate cause of action was set out in addition to that in the original complaint. This leave was granted. The first count of the amended complaint avers, in the usual form, that defendants Lincoln and Lynch "claim some estate or interest in the said premises adverse to the * * *, but which plaintiff avers is unfounded; and that said defendants have no estate, right, or title, either at law or in equity, in or to said premises. The second cause of action is that, in 1863, all the parties owning or claiming any interest in the premises conveyed the same to Martin and defendant Lynch, as trustees; that the object of the trial has failed; that Martin has died; that plaintiff holds the entire estates of all the beneficiaries under the trust deed, and asks that Lynch, the surviving trustee, convey to him. Defendant Lincoln excepted to the order making Lynch a party, and demurred to the amended complaint upon the grounds of a misjoinder of parties defendant, and an improper joinder of causes of action.

John Reynolds, for respondent. J. H. McKune and A. C. Freeman, for appellants.

THORNTON, J. There was no error in excluding the sheriff's deed to Miliken. The judgment on which the sale was made, and upon which the deed was executed, was void. The judgment was one by confession, and was made under the act of 1850. See St. 1850, p. 454, § 293.

The statement was not signed by the parties personally, as required by the statute. Cheever's name was signed to the statement by his attorneys, Kewen & Morrison. This was not sufficient. Chapin v. Thompson, 20 Cal. 687, 688. See, also, French v. Edwards, 2 Pac. Coast Law J. 149, where this judgment and deed were passed on, and held void. Further, it appears that an execution was issued on this judgment, and satisfied, on the first of October, 1850. Some six months afterwards, this judgment so satisfied was assigned to one of the defendants, and another execution was afterwards issued, on which the sale was made to Milliken. This sale under a satisfied judgment could not affect the title. French v. Edwards, supra.

We see no error in excluding the paper purporting to be a copy of the articles of association of the Sutter Land Company. There was no proof that the original of such articles ever existed.

The court did not err in excluding the tax deed to Lincoln. The return shows that the sale was made to the highest bidder, and not, as required by the statute, "for the smallest quantity that the purchaser would take, and pay the judgment and all costs." See St. 1861, p. 120, § 5; St. 1862, p. 520. The sale was not made as required by the law, and was void. The recitals to the contrary in the deed cannot be regarded. The deed does not follow the return, (see French v. Edwards, 13 Wall. 506,) and must be held void.

The judgment in Vance v. Lincoln was not a bar. Vance did not hold at that time the legal title. It was outstanding in the trustees Martin and Lynch. His title, at most, was an equity, which could not be considered in his action of ejectment against Lincoln. On this equity Reynolds sues here, and the judgment in Vance v. Lincoln could not bar the consideration of such equity. The court did not err, therefore, in ruling out the judgment roll in Vance v. Lincoln.

The evidence in this case did not disclose an adverse possession in Lincoln sufficient to vest him with title. The court was correct in refusing to sustain such a position.

As Reynolds, under the judgment in this case, is entitled to a conveyance from the trustee, who has not appealed, and the trustee could have recovered of Lincoln, no injustice is done the latter in holding Reynolds clothed with the legal title of the trustee, and, on that title, adjudged to recover the whole tract against Lincoln.

There was no misjoinder of parties here. On that point we concur in the opinion of the commissioners (9 Pac. Rep. 176,) and adopt that portion of their opinion. Conceding that there is a misjoinder of causes of action, still this does not affect the substantial rights of the parties, and the judgment should not be reversed for such error. Code Civil Proc. § 475.

Judgment and order affirmed.

MAGEE v. MCMANUS. (No. 9,411.)

(Supreme Court of California. August 31, 1886.)

1. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—CERTAINTY—BURDEN OF PROOF.

A court of equity will not decree specific performance of a contract unless the thing agreed to be done is definite and certain in its terms and in itself; and the party asking for performance must make out, by clear and satisfactory proof, the existence of the contract as he alleges it.

2. SAME—AGREEMENT OF MARRIED WOMAN TO MAKE NOTE AND MORTGAGE.

A verbal agreement between a married woman and a person who was her accommodation indorser, to the effect that, in consideration of his indorsing another note for her, she would execute a note and mortgage in his favor in such amount as to secure him against loss, her note to be made payable at the same time as the accommodation note, and to bear the same rate of interest, is not such a contract as can be specifically enforced; the agreement not being final, and being indefinite and uncertain in its terms.

3. SAME—DILIGENCE ON PART OF PLAINTIFF—STATUTE OF FRAUDS—CIVIL CODE CAL. §§ 2772, 2794, SUBD. 2.

A verbal agreement between a married woman and her accommodation indorser, whereby, in consideration of further indorsement, she agrees to execute her note and mortgage in his favor, is not within the California statute of frauds, (Civil Code, §§ 2772, 2794, subd. 2;) and the surety, after making such indorsement, has the right, at any time within which the promise can be fulfilled, to call for performance. But a failure to do so, until after she is brought under liability by the accommodation note falling due, will operate as a waiver of the right, when, at that time, the verbal contract in its original shape cannot be performed.

4. SAME—REMEDY AT LAW.

An accommodation indorser who pays the note of his principal is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the creditor whose claim against the principal he pays; and although, in a suit in equity by the surety for the specific performance of a contract of indemnity by his principal, the court finds that the principal is insolvent, yet it appears that she has homestead property, and does not appear that she is a married woman, or the head of a family, or that the homestead is not of the value of $1,000 upon lands worth several thousands of dollars, there is nothing shown to prevent the enforcement of a judgment at law, and therefore the surety is not entitled to relief in equity.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Marin county.

Specific performance.

Bowers & Crowley, for plaintiff and respondent. Thos. F. Barry, for defendant and appellant.

MCKEE, J. In this case the defendant was required, by the judgment of the court below, "forthwith to execute and deliver to plaintiff a note and mortgage, to-wit, her promissory note in the sum of $1,664.40, payable to plaintiff on demand, and bearing interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from the fourth day of October, 1882, secured by her mortgage on the lands and premises described in plaintiff's amended complaint,—the same being a certain lot of land and premises situate, lying, and being in the township of Nicasio, county of Marin, state of California;" and from the judgment and an order denying a motion for a new trial the defendant appealed.

The judgment was rendered in an action to compel specific performance of a contract to execute a note and mortgage.

By the allegations of the complaint it appears that the plaintiff had become liable to the Bank of Sonoma County upon two promissory notes, one for \$500 and the other for \$300, which had been executed by him as an accommodation surety for the defendant. Each of the notes bore interest at $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per month, payable quarterly, or to be compounded. On the twenty-third of June, 1881, both notes were past due and unpaid. As principal debtor, the defendant had paid the interest upon them as it became due, but failed to pay any part of the principal. She had not at that time the means to pay any part of it; and she wanted to negotiate with the bank for a fresh loan. To enable her to do so, she applied to the plaintiff to become surety for her upon a new note to the bank; promising him that, if he would join her in the execution of a note payable six months after date to the bank in the sum of \$600, with interest at the rate of 1 per cent. per month, payable every six months, or to compound,—upon which she could get the money from the bank,—she would, on demand, secure him against liability for her upon the three notes by giving him her individual note secured by mortgage upon her homestead property; the note to be made payable to him "at the same time as the \$600 note, * * * in a sum equal to the whole amount then due, and for which he was liable on the first two notes, and also upon the \$600 note, * * * with accruing interest," and "to bear the same rate of interest," and the mortgage to be made "in such amount as to secure plaintiff against any liability by reason of his becoming her surety as aforesaid." The plaintiff consented, and upon the faith of the promise made by the defendant he joined her in the execution of a note payable to the bank for \$600, upon which she procured the money from the bank; but she failed and refused to keep her promise, made default in the payment of any part of the principal and interest of the three notes; and, when the \$600 note became due, the plaintiff was compelled by the bank to pay \$1,664.40, in satisfaction of the three notes which he had signed as the accommodation surety of the defendant. The payment was made on the fourth of October, 1882.

The finding of the court states that, at the time and under the circumstances set forth in the complaint, the plaintiff, as the accommodation surety of the defendant, did join the defendant in the execution of a note for $600, which she had discounted by the Bank of Sonoma County; and that, in consideration of the execution of the note by the plaintiff, she verbally promised and agreed to secure him against liability already incurred upon the two notes, and to be incurred upon the $600 note, by her individual note, payable to himself, as stated in the complaint, and secured by a mortgage to be made "in such amount and terms to secure him against any liability by reason of his becoming her security as aforesaid." It is also found by the court that the plaintiff performed his part of the contract; that the defendant refused to execute and deliver to the plaintiff her note and mortgage according to her promise; that, after the twenty-first June, 1881, she made default in the payment of any part of the principal or interest of the three notes; that, after the $600 note became due, the plaintiff, on the fourth of October, 1882, had to pay to the bank for the defendant, in satisfaction of the three notes, the sum of $1,664.40, and that the defendant is insolvent.

It is a cardinal principle of natural justice that a person shall perform his agreement. Upon that principle a court of equity, in the exercise of well-regulated and judicial discretion, enforces the actual accomplishment of a thing stipulated for, on the ground that what is lawfully agreed to be done ought to be done. But the thing agreed to be done must be definite and certain in its terms and in itself; and the party who claims performance must make out, by clear and satisfactory proof, the existence of the contract as he alleges it. That has not been done in this case. The contract as it is stated in the finding of the court is not the contract as it is alleged in the complaint. Instead of a contract founded upon a consideration to become surety for the defendant upon a promissory note payable "six months after date," as alleged in the complaint, the court finds it was a contract made in consideration of becoming surety upon a note payable "one year after date." The consideration of a contract is a material part thereof. Two similar contracts, founded upon different considerations, cannot be regarded as one and the same. However, whether the true contract be that which the court finds, or that which the plaintiff alleges, it is indefinite and uncertain, not only as to the time of the payment of the note and mortgage to be executed, but as to the amount for which the mortgage was to be given, and the rate of interest upon the debt. It appears that these things were to be the subject of future ascertainment and agreement, so that the mortgage, when executed, would be sufficient security for the plaintiff. As, therefore, the agreement was not final, and it was indefinite and uncertain in its terms and in itself, specific performance of it could not be enforced in equity. Morrison v. Rossignol, 5 Cal. 64; Los Angeles, etc., Co. v. Phillips, 56 Cal. 539; Potts v. Whitehead, 20 N. J. Eq. 55.

Irvine v. Armstrong, 17 N. W. Rep. 343, cited in argument by respondent's counsel, does not conflict with these views. In that case "the terms of the notes and mortgage were definitely agreed upon."

Besides, the contract as it is alleged in the complaint was not a parol contract for the sale of real property, or any interest therein. In its nature it was a purely mercantile contract, whereby the defendant undertook to indemnify the plaintiff, in a particular mode, against any loss or damage on account of becoming surety for her. The undertaking was not within the statute of frauds, (sections 2772, 2794, subd. 2, Civil Code; Lerch v. Gallop, 8 Pac. Rep. 322;) and the person to whom the promise was made, after complying with it on his part by becoming surety for the promisor, had the right, at any time within which the promise could be fulfilled according to its terms, to call for performance. But such a right may be waived, (Price v. Dyer, 17 Ves. 356;) and, if it be waived by delay to call for performance until performance becomes impracticable in the mode prescribed by the promise, specific performance will not be decreed. Equity only enforces performance of a contract as it is made by the parties themselves. It has no power to make a contract for them. Grey v. Tubbs, 43 Cal. 359.

We think the plaintiff waived his right to call for a specific performance of the contract of indemnity in its original shape. The case shows that there was no subsequent ascertainment or agreement as to the amount and terms of the mortgage to be executed as security. There was no demand made for its execution within "six months" or "one year" after the date of the contract. It is alleged in the complaint "that on the thirtieth of August, 1882, plaintiff demanded of defendant execution of a note and mortgage in accordance with her agreement." The court finds "that the plaintiff demanded performance prior to the commencement of the action," and the action was commenced in October, 1882. So that, in fact, there was no demand made for performance until after the plaintiff was brought under liability by the debt falling due, and at that time the verbal contract in its original shape could not be performed. Yet, as a surety brought under liability to pay the debt of his principal, the plaintiff had the right, upon the doctrine of exoneration, if the principal was insolvent, to be substituted to any subsisting securities for the payment of the debt, and to be subrogated to the benefit of such securities. In case of the insolvency of the principal this right attaches and may be enforced before payment, and also after payment, whether the principal be solvent or insolvent.

In McConnell v. Scott, 15 Ohio, 401, a surety, after a judgment taken against himself and his principal, and before payment of the judgment, was held entitled to any credits of the principal, and to have them appropriated in payment of the judgment. And a like right was enforced in favor of a surety in York v. Landis, 65 N. C. 536, after payment of the debt of the principal. 1 Story, Eq. 322; 2 Story, Eq. § 730.

The cases of McCorkle v. Brown, 9 Smedes & M. 167, and Pratt v. Carroll, 8 Cranch, 471, have no application. Both cases involved rights arising out of contracts for the sale of real property by vendors who claimed enforceable vendors' liens upon the lands for the payment of unpaid portions of the purchase money. In neither was there any question of rights arising out of the contract to indemnity.

It is alleged in the complaint, and the court finds, that the defendant is insolvent. But, as there were no subsisting liens or securities for the payment of the debt to the creditor, no question of subrogation to securities could arise either before or after payment of the debt. When the plaintiff paid the debt to the creditor, he acquired all the rights of the creditor for the purpose of obtaining reimbursement. Section 779, Code Civil Proc. The only right which he acquired was an action at law to recover what he had paid, and his remedy for the enforcement of that right was ample and adequate; for, while it is alleged that the defendant is insolvent, it is admitted that she is the owner of certain land and premises which she claimed as her homestead. Although it is not alleged, it may be inferred, that the defendant is an unmarried woman; but it nowhere appears, in any way, whether she was or is the head of a family, or whether the value of the homestead exceeds or falls short of the statutory limitation. There is no allegation at all as to value. If it was a $1,000 homestead upon premises which were worth several thousand dollars, there is nothing to prevent the plaintiff from enforcing by execution any judgment which he may recover. Sections 1241 and 1245, Civil Code. Where a party has an adequate remedy at law, he is not entitled to relief in equity.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings.

FISH and others v. BENSON and Wife. (No. 9,451.)

1. APPEAL—MOTION TO DISMISS.

If notice of the motion for the new trial was not given, or the bill of exceptions was not filed in time, and these facts appear in the record, they may constitute a reason for affirming the order denying the new trial, but are no ground for dismissing the appeal from the order.

2. SAME—RECORD—AFFIDAVITS NOT IDENTIFIED, NOT LEGALLY PART OF.

Affidavits, copies of which are contained in the transcript, but not in any way authenticated or identified as having been used in the motion for a new trial, constitute no part of the record which can be considered upon appeal.

3. SAME—INSUFFICIENT IDENTIFICATION.

The fact that the court, in its order overruling a motion for a new trial, referred to certain affidavits of A., B., and C., and that there are found in the record affidavits of A., B., and C., is not a sufficient identification of the affidavits.

4. JURY—RIGHT TO TRIAL BY—EQUITABLE DEFENSE TO COMMON-LAW ACTION.

Where, in an action of ejectment, the cross-complaint of defendant sets up the defense, and makes a case involving the application of equitable doctrines, and seeks relief that only a court of equity can give, the defendant is not entitled to a jury trial.

5. ESTOPPEL—JUDGMENT—FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER—EJECTMENT.

A judgment roll, in an action of forcible entry and detainer of real property, is not admissible in an action between the same parties, involving the title to the same property, since the title to real property cannot be tried in that action.¹

¹See Reynolds v. Lincoln, (Cal.) ante, 449.

6. VENDOR AND VENDEE—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—ADEQUACY OF CONSIDERATION.

Plaintiff, claiming to be a bona fide purchaser of real property, paid $9,000 for property which, with a clear title, would have been worth $30,000. But action pending, involving the title to part, rendered it of no value, though for the purposes of this transaction it might fairly be considered worth $18,000. Held, that the consideration was not so small as to be notice to the purchaser of his grantor's fraud.

7. SAME—FRAUD—WHEN DEED VOIDABLE AND NOT VOID.

Where a party who is not incompetent to execute a conveyance by reason of mental incapacity or unsoundness of mind is induced to execute and deliver a conveyance by fraud, the deed is not void, but voidable; and a bona fide purchaser for value from the grantee acquires title free from the equities against his grantor.

8. SAME—NOTICE OF CONTRACT NOT NOTICE OF NON-PERFORMANCE OF ITS TERMS.

A contract for sale of real estate, duly recorded, is notice of its conditions; but if it provides that, when the deed shall be delivered, the trade shall be ended, a purchaser is not bound by notice of the contract after the deed is delivered; and if the party waives the conditions precedent of the contract, and delivers his deed, he cannot be heard to assert the non-performance of the conditions as against a bona fide purchaser of his grantee.

9. TRIAL—BY COURT—FINDINGS—WHETHER CONTRADICTING OR NOT THE PLEADINGS OF PREVAILING PARTY.

The court having found for plaintiffs, a finding that B., one of the plaintiffs, acting for himself, and F., another plaintiff, purchased the land in question, was objected to as contrary to plaintiffs' answer to defendants' cross-complaint. The cross-complaint had averred conveyance to B. and F., which the answer admitted. The answer further avers that defendant S. and F. and B. were purchasers for fair value without notice, and that plaintiffs purchased the property in question by deed to said F. and B. Held, that the answer does not state that S. bought jointly with F. and B., but indicate the opposite, and therefore there is no contradiction.

Commissioners' decision.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Contra Costa county.

Flournoy, Mhoon & Flournoy, for appellants. Edward P. Cole, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This is an action of ejectment to recover certain premises situate in Contra Costa county. Plaintiffs had judgment, from which, and from an order denying a new trial, the defendants appeal.

Respondents move to dismiss the appeal, so far as it relates to the order denying a new trial. The appeal was taken within the 60 days, provided by statute therefor, after entry of the order denying the new trial. If the notice of the motion was not given, or the bill of exceptions not filed, in time, and this is made to properly appear in the record, the fact may constitute a reason for affirming the order denying the new trial, but is no ground for dismissing the appeal from the order. In other words, an appeal is given, as matter of right, from an order granting or denying a new trial. If the proceedings on the motion, anterior to the order, are irregular or defective, such irregularity or defect is not cause for dismissing the appeal, but may, upon a proper showing, be passed upon in determining the same. In the view we have taken, it may be conceded to the appellants that the proceedings on motion for new trial were had in time, and that the bill of exceptions is properly before us.

To the consideration of the affidavits found in the record, objection is made by respondents upon the ground that they are not identified as having been used on the motion for a new trial. These affidavits are marked as filed by the clerk of the court in which the action is pending, but are not contained in and form no part of the bill of exceptions and statement certified by the judge, and are not identified by him in any way as having been used on the motion, unless a reference, in the order denying a new trial, to the affidavits of certain persons in such order named, whose names are appended to some of the affidavits in the record, can be deemed to identify them, or a portion of them.

In Johnson v. Muir, 43 Cal. 542, the court, in referring to affidavits on motion for a new trial, said: "But in such a case it is required that the affidavits should be identified by the indorsement of the judge or clerk, made at the time of hearing, that they were read or referred to on the hearing. It is evident that a mere ordinary indorsement of filing is not sufficient to identify the papers as having been used upon the hearing of the motion. They may have been deposited with the clerk for other and quite different purposes."

In Pieper v. Centinela L. Co., 56 Cal. 173, it was held that papers used upon a motion in the court below, and certified by the judge as having been so used, were properly authenticated.

In Walsh v. Hutchings, 60 Cal. 228, papers appeared in the transcript as printed, purporting to be an affidavit of defendant and a counter-affidavit of the plaintiff, but not embodied in a bill of exceptions, and not certified or identified by the judge who heard the motion as having been used on such motion; and, although certified by the clerk as true and correct copies of the papers used on the hearing of the motion, this court held that "it is not for the clerk to determine what papers or evidence the court acted upon," and discarded the affidavits.

In Nash v. Harris, 57 Cal. 242, this court said: "We cannot indulge in presumptions of papers which were used in the court below on the hearing of a motion. To be considered, they must be made a part of the record of the case by a bill of exceptions, or to be authenticated by the judge who tried the case in such a way as to leave no doubt, when found in the transcript, that they are the papers which were before him when he acted, and upon which he decided. Unauthenticated papers in a transcript, in which there is no bill of exceptions, constitute no part of a record which can be considered upon appeal."

Tested by the rules thus established by this court for the verification of its records, the affidavits, copies of which are contained in the transcript, but not in any way authenticated or identified as having been used on the motion for a new trial, constitute no part of the record which can be considered on this appeal.

If it be urged that the court below, in its order overruling the motion, referred to the affidavits of A., B., and C.; that there is found in the record affidavits of A., B., and C., and therefore as to such affidavits the identification is sufficient,—the response must be non constat that the affidavits found in the transcript are those referred to in the order. The court or judge not having designated those in the transcript as having been used on the motion, to presume from the evidence afforded that they were in fact used on the motion would lead to a loose system, under which abuses would be most certain to occur. The practice under which the judge who heard a motion certifies to a bill of exceptions or statement containing the papers used at the hearing, or identifies the papers considered on the hearing, in such manner as to leave no doubt of the fact of their having been so used, is simple and efficacious, and cannot with safety be departed from. We are therefore of opinion that none of the affidavits set out in the transcript as a foundation or in support of the motion for new trial can be considered on this appeal.

This view disposes of so much of the motion for a new trial as is based upon accident and surprise, and newly-discovered evidence. We say disposes of that branch of the motion, for the reason that the record, aside from the affidavits, affords no sufficient showing to warrant a new trial on such grounds.

Defendant's right to a trial by jury. The action, as hereinbefore stated, is ejectment. Defendants filed a cross-complaint in which they show, in substance, that defendant H. A. Benson, in 1881, was seized in fee of the demanded premises, then worth $50,000, and certain personal property worth $6,000; that he was 63 years of age, and, in consequence of sickness and trouble, had become weak, debilitated, and deranged; all of which facts were well known to J. C. Beatty, C. F. Jones, and J. C. Fisk, who, with a view and intent to defraud him, wrongfully combined and conspired to mislead and cheat him, induced him to sell and convey his property to Jones, and to receive in payment therefor certain Texas land-warrants, represented to be of great value, though, in fact, of trifling value. Numerous other fraudulent acts on the part of Jones, Beatty, and Fisk are set out in apt language, whereby Benson was imposed upon, cheated, and defrauded in the transaction; avers an offer to return the land-warrants and a demand of a reconveyance of the property, and prays that it may be adjudged and decreed that Jones, Beatty, and Fisk were guilty of fraud and undue influence in the purchase of the property; that plaintiffs became purchasers with notice of such fraud; and that the conveyances from Benson to Jones, and by said Jones to the plaintiffs Fish and Blum be canceled and annulled, and that Benson be reinvested with the real property, and that the plaintiffs be compelled to reconvey to him the demanded premises, and that, if they refuse so to do, commissioners be appointed by the court to make, execute, and deliver such reconveyance.

The cross-complaint states facts which, if true, constitute a cause of action of which a court of equity has jurisdiction, and the relief sought is such as can only be obtained in equity. It was entirely distinct from the action of ejectment; and, if successful, would result in divesting the plaintiffs of their legal title. Being an action cognizable in equity, and distinct from the legal action, it was the duty of the court below to first determine the issues involved under the cross-complaint; for the reason that, if the defendants succeeded on these issues, it would defeat the right of plaintiffs to recover in their action at law, however perfect their legal right. Lestrade v. Barth, 19 Cal. 660; Weber v. Marshall, Id. 447.

The fact that the cross-complaint charged fraud did not entitle defendants to a jury trial. Both courts of law and of equity, in proper cases, have jurisdiction in cases of fraud; and, when the facts constituting a fraud and the relief sought are such as are cognizable in a court of law, the parties are entitled to a jury trial; but where the case, as made by the pleadings, involves the application of the doctrines of equity, and the granting of relief which can be obtained in a court of equity, and not elsewhere, the parties are not entitled to a jury trial. Societe Francaise v. Selheimer, 57 Cal. 623; Jones v. Gardner, Id. 641; Lorenz v. Jacobs, 59 Cal. 262; McLaughlin v. Del Re, 64 Cal. 472; S. C. 2 Pac. Rep. 244; Cahoon v. Levy, 5 Cal. 294, Koppikus v. State Capitol Com'rs, 16 Cal. 248.

The court did not, therefore, err in separating the two causes of action, and trying the issues under the cross-complaint without the interposition of a jury, except as to the three special issues which were submitted to and tried by a jury; and, as the court might have tried all of these issues, it follows there was no error in refusing to submit the 16 additional issues to the jury, as requested by counsel for defendants.

A jury trial was not denied by the court upon the issues made on the common-law side of the case, but was expressly waived by the parties, and the case on those issues was submitted to the court upon the testimony previously taken upon the trial of the equitable action.

At the trial defendants offered in evidence a judgment roll in the case of Fish et al. v. Benson et al., (No. 236,) to the introduction of which plaintiffs objected, and their objection was sustained by the court. To this ruling an exception was taken, and the action of the court assigned as error. The judgment-roll in question is the record of an action of unlawful detainer, instituted September 12, 1881, by Fish, Blum, and Stovell, who are plaintiffs in this action, as plaintiffs, against I. J. Truman, Henry Johnston, Henry A. Benson, and Emeline Benson as defendants.

The complaint avers that on the fifth day of May, 1881, C. J. Jones, the grantor of plaintiffs, leased and demised the demanded premises to I. J. Truman for a term which expired September 1, 1881; that said Truman entered into possession under the lease; that the other defendants are subtenants under Truman; that the lease has expired; and that defendants refuse to yield up possession to plaintiffs, although duly notified so to do, and demands possession, with treble damages. A demurrer was interposed to the complaint, which was sustained under the doctrine of Martin v. Splivalo, 56 Cal. 128, upon the ground that no sufficient notice to defendants was averred, whereupon the complaint was amended.

Defendants Benson and wife answered, denying the leasing of the premises to Truman by Jones, and the ownership of either Jones or plaintiffs; deny that they are the subtenants of Truman, or that Truman is in possession through them; and set up that they are, and for many years have been, in possession and the owners in fee of the premises. They also plead the pendency of this action.

Defendant Truman answered, setting out a copy of the alleged lease, which specifies that Truman is to harvest certain crops upon the land, and divide the same between the parties as therein specified, to gather and sell the fruit growing thereon, and divide the proceeds; and that for such purpose he may have charge of the orchard, and remove the fruit up to November, 1881, and may enter and remove hay and barley which may be upon the ranch after September 1st, the date of the expiration of the lease. It is also provided that, if Jones shall sell the ranch prior to September 1st, he shall have the right to place the purchaser in possession, etc. Truman denies that the other defendants are or ever were his subtenants, or that he continues in possession, or that he failed to surrender possession, or that he has been in possession since September 1, 1881, and denies, as do Benson and wife by an amendment to their answer, that three days' notice in writing was given them, or any or either of them, to quit or deliver or surrender the premises.

Johnston answered, denying substantially the allegations of the complaint.

A trial was had, verdict for defendants, and judgment in their favor for costs was entered thereon November 18, 1881.

The judgment in the action of forcible detainer did not involve the question of title to the demanded premises, and was no bar to the action of ejectment. Kirsch v. Smith, 64 Cal. 13.

"Judgments in actions of forcible entry and unlawful detainer are, to the same extent as judgments in other actions, conclusive upon the questions within the issues, and determined by the court or confessed by the parties. The title to the property is never in issue in these actions; and therefore the judgment, whether for the plaintiff or defendant, cannot affect the title." Freem. Judgm. § 302.

The whole issues in the action of unlawful detainer related to the possession of defendants as tenants or subtenants of the plaintiffs subsequent to May 5, 1881, and to their holding over as such tenants after the expiration of the lease and notice to quit; and whether defendants had or had not title or possession except under the lease was not a question to be determined in the cause; and the judgment roll was not, therefore, evidence of title in the defendants, or of possession, except as the tenants of the plaintiffs; and, as no issue of that character is made on either the law or equity side of this case, the judgment was not evidence for any purpose. Freem. Judgm. § 257.

Findings. The facts as deduced by the court from the evidence establish the formation and consummation of a deliberate scheme on the part of Jones, Beatty, and Fisk to defraud Benson of his property, in the execution of which scheme they exercised energy and perseverance worthy of a better cause. The record is replete with evidence in support of the findings on this branch of the case. It unfolds a series of acts most reprehensible, and which it is the duty of courts of equity to condemn. We must not, however, in our zeal to punish the guilty, make our condemnation so broad as to involve the innocent.

The court below has found that plaintiffs were innocent purchasers of the demanded property for a valuable consideration, without notice of the fraud of their grantor, and without such knowledge as would reasonably put them upon inquiry. After a careful review and analysis of the testimony, we are of opinion that there is not only a substantial conflict in the evidence on this question of notice to plaintiffs, but that the proofs predominate in their favor.

Upon the question of inadequacy of the price, the court found that the demanded property with the title assured would be worth $30,000, but that a suit for the partition of the San Pablo ranch, of which the upland of the demanded premises were parcel, had been pending since 1867, was hotly contested, and is still pending and undetermined, in which action an interlocutory decree had been entered adverse to the claimants Benson; that a receiver had been appointed, and his appointment affirmed by this court, who claimed possession of the land, and the right to lease the same, as well as $3,000 back rent, etc.; also that a portion of the land designated as overflowed or salt marsh was claimed adversely to Benson by the owners of the Rancho Sobrante, which claim was pending on final survey before the United States land department, and the commissioner of the general land-office had rendered his decision sustaining said adverse claim,—in consequence of all of which, the right, title, and interest of Benson in and to the land was not worth and would not sell for what the land itself with a clear title was worth; that, in fact, the land had no market value, but that the real estate might reasonably be allowed to represent, so far as the transactions involved in this suit are concerned, a purchasing power equivalent to $18,000.

It is a fact open to observation that most men of means do not deal in and pay their money for property, the title to which is subject to the vicissitudes attending that of the demanded premises; and of the limited number who are willing to purchase under such circumstances it is not too much to say that the purchase price will be reduced to such sum, compared with the intrinsic value of the property, as to make the chances of gain commensurate with the risk taken. We are not, therefore, under the surroundings, surprised that the property sold for no more than $9,000 in cash, and find nothing in that fact to warrant an inference of notice to the purchasers of the fraud of Jones, their grantor; nor do we deem it sufficient, under the circumstances, to have put a reasonable man upon inquiry.

Appellants attack the findings as insufficient to warrant the conclusion that Benson conveyed the property, upon the grounds that his deed of conveyance to Jones was deposited in escrow with Haven; that the dispatch which he sent to Haven, from Texas, where he and Jones then were, under which the deed was delivered to the agent of Jones, was procured to be sent by the fraud of Jones, and by the exercise of undue influence on his part over Benson; and therefore that the deed thus procured did not vest title in the grantee; and Harding v. Handy, 11 Wheat. 125, and Allore v. Jewell, 94 U. S. 506, are cited in support of these positions.

A reference to these cases shows that in each of them the grantors were so incapacitated by age and disease as to be, if not insane, at least incapable of comprehending fully the nature and effect of the transactions in which they were engaged, when they executed the deeds; and, as against the grantees, they were set aside, although in one of the cases more than six years had elapsed between the delivery of the deed and suit brought.

In the present case the findings are against the incompetency of Benson, Cal. Rep. 12-15 P.—12 and established (1) the fraud practiced upon him by Jones, Beatty, and Fisk, whereby he was induced to convey his property and order the deed to be delivered to the grantee; and (2) that plaintiffs are innocent purchasers, etc.

Whatever the rule may be as to vesting of title in the grantee, or in an innocent purchaser, etc., under the latter, in cases where the grantor is incompetent to execute a conveyance of his property by reason of mental incapacity or unsoundness of mind,—questions which do not arise here,—we are clearly of opinion that where, as in the present case, there were parties competent to contract, and where a deed was executed and delivered through the fraudulent devices of the grantee, the conveyance was not void, but voidable, and liable as between the parties to be rescinded. Civil Code, §§ 1566, 1567, 1689. The title, in such cases, vests in the grantee, subject to be divested by a rescission of the sale. But where the grantee has, in turn, conveyed the property to an innocent purchaser for a valuable consideration without notice, the right of the defrauded grantor to recover his property ceases.

Pomeroy in his work on Equity Jurisprudence, (volume 2, § 777,) states the rule thus: "Where a conveyance has been obtained by the grantee's fraud, so that it would be set aside at the suit of the defrauded grantor, but the fraudulent grantee has in turn conveyed to a bona fide purchaser for value and without notice, the latter will take and hold the property free from all these equities, protected against the equitable remedies of the original defrauded owner."

We see nothing in the contention of appellants that the contract of March 1, 1881, between Benson and Jones, was notice to plaintiffs of certain conditions precedent to the delivery of the deed which can render them liable. That contract was properly recorded, and imparted notice of its terms and conditions to all the world; but it provided that when the deed was delivered the trade should be fully completed and ended, and neither party should have any claim upon the other. According to the cross-complaint, a new agreement was made between the parties after they arrived in Texas, and, through the fraudulent practices of Jones, Benson was induced to and did, as the evidence and findings show, on the fourteenth day of May, direct the delivery of the deed, which was accordingly done.

Plaintiffs, at the date of their purchase, were informed the deed had been delivered by direction of Benson, and, in corroboration of the statement, the agent and attorney in fact of Jones produced and delivered it to them as a muniment of their title. That Benson was entirely willing to deliver the deed, and ordered it to be delivered, there can be no doubt. If the purchasers, Blum and Fish, were bound to take notice of anything by virtue of the contract, it was of its contents as it existed and remained in force; and Benson cannot be heard to say he waived the conditions precedent to the delivery of the deed and delivered it, and at the same time hold Blum and Fish to a responsibility based upon the non-performance of the conditions which he had thus waived.

The nineteenth finding, or so much thereof as finds "that Blum, acting for himself and his copartner Fish, purchased the land described in the cross-complaint from Jones," etc., is objected to as being contrary to the sworn answer to the cross-complaint. The cross-complaint avers that "Walter Stowell claims some interest in said land, the nature and extent of which the defendants are ignorant, but that said Stowell took and obtained said interest and claim in said land with full knowledge and notice of said fraud and undue influence aforesaid, and that his grantors were not innocent purchasers of said land for value." The cross-complaint had previously charged that the land was conveyed by Beatty and Fisk, as attorneys in fact for Jones, to "L. J. Fish and Simon Blum for the alleged sum of nine thousand, five hundred dollars," and the prayer of the cross-complaint asks that the deed be set aside and canceled.

The answer to the cross-complaint admits the purchase from Jones by Fish and Blum; avers that it was without notice of fraud on the part of their grantor, etc.; says the deed to them was executed and delivered on the seventeenth day of May, 1881; and subsequently, after denying that Stowell took or obtained his interest or claim in said land with notice, etc., avers that the said Stowell and the said Blum and Fish were each and all of them purchasers for fair value of all said land, without any knowledge, notice, or suspicion of any of the alleged frauds and evil practices set forth in the bill. * * * They deny that said Stowell has paid no part of any sum of money or other consideration for said land, or any interest therein; but they allege that he paid his proportion of the purchase money, which was one-half, at the date and delivery of the deed to him, which was on the ——— day of May, 1881. So, too, the answer states that "plaintiffs, further answering, say that they purchased the said real estate from the said C. J. Jones, by deed bearing date the seventeenth day of May, 1881, for the consideration of $9,000. The said deed was duly executed and delivered on said day, * * * and said deed * * * grants, bargains, sells, and conveys unto the said Lafayette J. Fish and Simon Blum and to their assigns, forever," etc.

The term here used at the outset would indicate that all the plaintiffs were meant; but, when it proceeds to describe the deed, it clearly appears that it is the conveyance to Fish and Blum, which is being referred to.

We fail to find in these pleadings any allegation that Stowell purchased jointly with Fish and Blum, but, on the contrary, the inference from the cross-complaint and answer is irresistible that he did not do so; and the fact that the answer, after stating the facts as to the several purchases by Stowell and the other plaintiffs, proceeds to aver that Stowell, Blum, and Fish were each and all of them purchasers for fair value, without notice, etc., does not modify this inference. No doubt, the pleadings might have been more specific and precise, but they were not calculated to mislead the defendants; and, indeed, so far as the answer sets up, the particulars of the conveyances were immaterial averments.

The cross-complaint charged the plaintiffs as purchasers with notice of the fraud of their grantors. The answer denied such notice, averred their good faith and a valuable consideration. Beyond this it was not necessary to go. It devolved upon defendants, under the allegations of their cross-complaint, to prove the conveyances (if denied) which they alleged to have been made. This they did by offering in evidence (1) the deed from Jones to Blum and Fish, dated May 17, 1881; (2) the deed from Blum and Fish for an undivided one-half of the premises, dated June 2, 1881. We are of opinion that the pleadings, taken together, do not show a joint purchase by Blum, Fish, and Stowell, and therefore that the nineteenth finding is not subject to the criticism of being contrary to the answer.

We deem it unnecessary to discuss the other objections made to the findings of the court, as, upon examination, we think them insufficient to warrant a reversal of the cause.

The judgment of the court below, and the order appealed from, should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

SWAMP LAND DIST. NO. 307 v. GWYNN and others. (No. 11,596.)

(Supreme Court of California. August 31, 1886.)

1. DRAINS AND DRAINAGE—ASSESSMENT—ASSESSORS NEED NOT ACT JOINTLY—SECTION 3456, POL. CODE CAL.

Commissioners appointed to make an assessment for swamp-land purposes need not act jointly in viewing the lands.

2. SAME—VIEW OF LANDS—FINDING OF COURT.

The lands being mostly covered with water, and the commissioners having been at a point where they could look over the whole area, and see every part except a few parcels along its eastern margin, hidden by trees, the finding of the court that they viewed all the lands, and each and every tract thereof, was not, as a matter of law, erroneous.

3. SAME—ASSESSMENT BOOKS—PRIMA FACIE EVIDENCE—CAN BE CONTRADICTED.

The assessment books being merely prima facie evidence of the facts in them contained, evidence was competent to show that the assessment was not made according to law, and the exclusion of such evidence was error.

4. SAME—WARRANTS—TENDER.

A tender of a warrant in payment of an assessment, which tender was only for the purpose of having the assessment indorsed upon it, and not to be given up and canceled, is not sufficient.

Commissioners' decision.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Yolo county.

Section 3465, Pol. Code Cal. provides, in regard to the payment of assessments for swamp-land purposes: "Where payment is made in the warrants of the district, legal interest must be computed thereon from the date thereof to the time of such payment, when said warrant must be surrendered to the treasurer, and by him canceled."

The opinion states the facts of the case.

W. H. Beatty and S. C. Denson, for appellants. Armstrong & Hinkson, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This is an action to enforce payment of an assessment made for reclamation of swamp lands. The plaintiff recovered judgment, from which, and an order denying a new trial, the defendants appeal.

1. Under the provisions of the Code, when an assessment for swamp-land purposes is to be made, three commissioners must be appointed, who are disinterested persons and residents of the county, "and who must view and assess upon the lands situated within the district a charge proportionate to the whole expense, and to the benefits which will result from such works." Section 3456, Pol. Code. Under the statutes formerly in force, the commissioners were required to jointly view the land, and, failing to do that, their assessment was void. People v. Coghill, 47 Cal. 361; People v. Hagar, 49 Cal. 229. Now they are not required to act jointly in viewing the lands. It is sufficient if, as they did here, two go together, and the other alone, to view it.

But, if this be so, it is urged that they did not sufficiently view the land to enable them to make a valid assessment. The court found that they viewed all the lands in the district, and each and every tract thereof, and there was evidence, we think, tending to sustain the finding. It is true, the lands were mostly covered with water, but the commissioners were at a point where they could look over the whole area of the district, and see every part of it, with the exception of a few small parcels along its eastern margin, which were hidden from view by trees. Their duty was to make such an examination of the lands of the district as would enable them to form an intelligent judgment as to the benefits which each part would receive from the completed works of reclamation, and, as matter of law, we cannot say that they failed to perform their duty.

2. It is alleged in the complaint that the commissioners, after viewing each tract of land, assessed upon the same charges proportionate to the entire expense, and the benefits which would result to each tract from the works of reclamation, and on the same day made a list of the charges assessed by them, etc. The defendants, by their answer, denied that the commissioners assessed upon the several tracts of land charges proportionate to the entire expense, and to the benefits which would result to each tract from the works of reclamation. And they alleged that the commissioners did not make any examination, computation, or estimate as to the result or effect of the proposed work of reclamation upon each tract of land in the district, but arbitrarily assumed that each and every acre of land in the district should be assessed for an equal share of the entire sum to be raised; and, without considering whether some tracts would be benefited by the proposed work more or less than other tracts, arbitrarily assessed each tract at the same rate per acre, when in fact some tracts, if the proposed works should be carried out and completed, would be greatly benefited and enhanced in value, while other tracts would be benefited very little if at all. And they further alleged that the assessment was unfair, unequal, and unjust to the defendants, for that the lands described in the complaint would not be benefited to the same extent as other lands of other owners in the district.

At the trial the plaintiff, after introducing certain preliminary proofs, offered in evidence the assessment roll, with the certificate attached thereto, signed by the commissioners. Among other things the commissioners certify that "we did view said lands, and assess said sum of $39,000 as a charge upon the lands within said district, for the purpose of completing the reclamation of said district, which charge was and is made proportionate to the whole expense, and to the benefit which will result from such works of reclamation." The defendants objected to the assessment roll being received in evidence, and, in support of their objection, sought to prove by one of the commissioners that, in making the assessment, and apportioning the money to be raised among the several tracts of land in the district, the commissioners never considered, discussed, or in any way referred to the proportional benefits to be derived to each piece of land by reason of the work to be done for which the assessment was levied, but arbitrarily, and without considering the question of benefits to any piece of land in the district, assessed an equal sum upon each acre, in obedience to what they understood to be a by-law of the district; and, further, that some of the tracts of land in the district would be benefited very much more than other tracts by the work of reclamation. The plaintiff objected to each of the several questions asked, upon the ground that it was irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent, and the court sustained the objection; the defendants reserving an exception. Thereupon the court overruled the objections to the assessment roll, and admitted it in evidence, and the defendants excepted to that ruling.

It was proved that, about 10 days after viewing the land, the commissioners met at the office of the attorney for plaintiff, and found the assessment roll there, and nearly written up; that the attorney then, under their instructions, computed the amount to be charged against each tract, and entered the same on the roll, and that thereupon they signed the certificate. It is argued for the respondent that, when the commissioners signed the certificate, the assessment roll became a record of official acts, and could not afterwards be impeached or questioned, except for fraud; and, in support of this contention, among other authorities, sections 1920 and 1926 of the Code of Civil Procedure are called to our attention. Those sections read as follows:

"Sec. 1920. Entries in public or other official books or records, made in the performance of his duty by a public officer of this state, or by another person in the performance of a duty specially enjoined by law, are prima facie evidence of the facts stated therein."

"Sec. 1926. An entry made by an officer, or board of officers, or under the direction and in the presence of either, in the course of official duty, is prima facie evidence of the facts stated in such entry."

Conceding that, when the commissioners signed the certificate, it became an official record, and evidence of all the facts recited in it, still it was only prima facie evidence, and, as such, was subject to be contradicted.

"Prima facie evidence is that which suffices for the proof of a particular fact until contradicted and overcome by other evidence. For example, the certificate of a recording officer is prima facie evidence of a record, but it may afterwards be rejected upon proof that there is no such record." Section 1833, Code Civil Proc.

The commissioners were required to assess upon the lands "a charge proportionate to the whole expense, and to the benefits which will result from such works." When special duties are enjoined upon commissioners, as in this case, the law must be strictly complied with, and any substantial departure from its requirements will render their acts void. People v. Coghill, 47 Cal. 361; People v. Hagar, 49 Cal. 229; People v. Ahern, 52 Cal. 208.

We think that, notwithstanding the certificate signed by the commissioners, the defendants were entitled to prove, if they could, that the assessment involved in this case was not made in conformity to the requirements of the law, and so was not binding upon them, and that the court erred in excluding the proper evidence.

3. Without expressing any opinion as to the validity of the warrant tendered in satisfaction of the assessments sued for, we think the court did not err in finding that the assessments were not in fact satisfied by the tender. As pleaded and proved, the warrant was for a larger sum than the aggregate amount of the assessments, and was owned by D. O. Mills & Co., a banking corporation doing business at Sacramento. Under some arrangements made with the defendants it was tendered to the county treasurer only for the purpose of having the assessments indorsed upon it, and not to be given up and canceled. This was not sufficient. Pol. Code, § 3465. Nor was the tender in court at the trial of any avail. Such a tender is not authorized by any statute that we are aware of.

For the error above noted the judgment and order should be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

PLUMMER v. BROWN. (No. 11,335.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS—LAND-OFFICERS—CONCLUSIVENESS OF JUDGMENTS—FRAUD—TRUST.

The land-officers of the United States, on the hearing and determination of a contest between two rival claimants, act judicially, and their judgment is conclusive at law.¹ But if the successful contestant has acquired, pursuant to the judgment, the legal title affected with any fraud or trust in relation to it, he will be regarded in equity as trustee of the true owner, who may, by proper proceedings in equity, compel a conveyance to himself of the legal title.

2. TRUST—ACTION TO MAKE PATENTEE OF PUBLIC LAND A TRUSTEE—FRAUD AND PERJURY—PLEADING.

In a complaint seeking that the patentee of United States lands be declared trustee for plaintiff on the ground that, in a contest regarding the land, the United States land-officers decided against plaintiff in consequence of the fraud and jury of the patentee, the allegations of fraud and perjury were in general terms.

¹See note at end of case.

Held, bad, because no issue can be raised as to what was fraudulent and perjured. The complaint should have set forth the false and fraudulent act and statements with particularity.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Edwin Baxter, for plaintiff and appellant. Bicknell & White and C. Cabot, for defendant and respondent.

MCKEE, J. The only question for consideration on this appeal is whether the court below erred in sustaining a demurrer to the complaint upon the ground that it did not contain facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. It appears from the allegations contained in the complaint that there was a contest between the plaintiff and John A. Brown before the register and receiver of the United States land-office about the right to purchase from the United States, under the pre-emption and homestead laws, a tract of public land in Los Angeles county, described as the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 23, in township 1 S., range 14 W., San Bernardino meridian, the official plat and map of which had been filed in the year 1875 in the proper United States land-office. The commissioner affirmed the decision. Plummer then appealed to the secretary of the interior, and that officer also affirmed the decision; after which there was issued a patent, pursuant to the judgment, to Brown, confirmatory of his right to the land, under the provisions of the homestead law.

Notwithstanding the judgment, the plaintiff insists that the land ought to have been awarded to him, because, as it is alleged, he established his right to purchase it, under the laws of the United States, by satisfactory proof; and the register and receiver would have awarded it to him if he had not been imposed upon by "false and perjured testimony," which misled and deceived him, and biased him to decide in Brown's favor, upon facts which were found upon "the false and perjured testimony" and "incompetent and irrelevant evidence" given by Brown, by which, it is also alleged, the other officers of the land department were likewise fraudulently induced to affirm the judgment in Brown's favor. Upon these grounds the plaintiff asks for a decree declaring that Brown holds the legal title to the land in trust for the plaintiff, and that he be compelled to convey it to the plaintiff.

On the hearing and determination of a contest between two rival claimants of the right to purchase a tract of public land under the land laws of the United States, the register and receiver of the land department acts judicially; and his judgment, especially after it has been affirmed on appeal, is final and conclusive upon the contestants. So, also, is the patent issued upon the judgment. Neither can be collaterally assailed. Garland v. Wynn, 20 How. 6; Lytle v. Arkansas, 9 How. 328; Cunningham v. Ashley, 14 How. 382; Barnard v. Ashley, 18 How. 13. But, while the judgment is conclusive at law, there is no doubt of the equitable doctrine that if the successful contestant has acquired, pursuant to the judgment, the legal title, affected with any fraud or trust in relation to it, he will be regarded in equity as a trustee of the true owner, and the owner may, by a proper proceeding in equity, compel a conveyance to himself of the legal title. Stark v. Starrs, 6 Wall. 402; Johnson v. Towsley, 13 Wall. 72.

To entitle the alleged owner, however, to such equitable relief, he must show that he occupies such a status as entitles him to control the legal title; that the officers who awarded the land to another, to whom the title was issued pursuant to the judgment, were imposed upon and deceived by the fraudulent practices of him in whose favor the judgment was given, and that they were thereby induced to give judgment in his favor. These things must be distinctly alleged and clearly proven. Payne v. Elliot, 54 Cal. 339; Kentfield v. Hayes, 57 Cal. 409; Chapman v. Quinn, 56 Cal. 266; Burrell v. Haw, 48 Cal. 225; Powers v. Leith, 53 Cal. 711; Hosmer v. Duggan, 56 Cal. 257; Aurrecochea v. Sinclair, 60 Cal. 532.

The complaint under consideration contains no sufficient allegations of such issuable facts, and it does show affirmatively that the plaintiff was not entitled to the relief which he demands; for it appears that in the contest as to the right to purchase the land, which was the subject of the controversy, there were three issues presented, namely: (1) Had Brown settled upon and occupied the land before the plaintiff entered upon it? (2) Did Brown abandon his occupation, or did the plaintiff invade it? (3) Was the plaintiff a qualified pre-emptor?—and that those issues were found against the plaintiff, and in favor of Brown. It follows, therefore, as the issues were decided against the plaintiff, that he was a trespasser upon Brown's possession, and was not a qualified pre-emptor; so that he had no right of entry upon the land, and he acquired no pre-emption right by his unlawful entry upon it by which he could control the legal title issued to Brown pursuant to the judgment in his favor. Atherton v. Fowler, 96 U. S. 513; Hosmer v. Wallace, 97 U. S. 580.

But it is contended that the judgment is not conclusive against the plaintiff, because it was rendered "upon the false and perjured testimony" and "incompetent and immaterial evidence" of Brown, which the register admitted, "notwithstanding Brown repeatedly refused to submit to cross-examination," and "was prevailed upon, by Brown and his attorneys, to give it weight and credence, notwithstanding it was shown by record to be false and perjured," and "notwithstanding it was clearly inadmissible under all rules of law and of courts, and clearly incompetent and irrelevant;" and thereby "said officers were misled and deceived, and their judgment biased, by said defendant and his attorneys, and, in consequence thereof, said land-officers, * * * contrary to the law and contrary to undisputed facts, thereupon ruled and decided erroneously, falsely, illegally, and inequitably that said defendant Brown was entitled to said land, and awarded the same to him."

In these allegations there is nothing of an issuable character as to what evidence was false or perjured, incompetent and irrelevant, upon which a court could judicially determine whether, as evidence, it was improperly admitted or illegally considered; nor is there in them anything which shows what was the evidence upon which the decision was made, or that it was evidence which did not justify the decision, or showed that the decision was contrary to law. The allegations are of a general nature, and wholly insufficient. A person against whom charges of fraud and perjury are made is entitled to specific averments of the acts of fraud of which he is accused, so that he may admit or deny the acts, and present issues which the court may hear and decide.

In Vance v. Burbank, 101 U. S. 519, the rule is thus stated: "Where fraud and misrepresentations are relied upon as ground of interference by the court, they should be stated with such fullness and particularity as to show that they must necessarily have affected the action of the officers of the department. Mere general allegation of fraud and misrepresentations will not suffice." See, also, Marquez v. Frisbie, 101 U. S. 478; Quinby v. Conlan, 104 U. S. 426; U. S. v. Atherton, 102 U. S. 372; Steel v. Smelting, etc., Co., 106 U. S. 453; S. C. 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 389.

The demurrer to the complaint was properly sustained. Judgment affirmed.

KELLY, Ex'x, etc., v. MURPHY. (No. 11,543.)*(Supreme Court of California. August 31, 1886.)1. EXCEPTIONS—BILL MUST CONTAIN FACTS ON WHICH EXCEPTION BASED.

Where a defendant excepts to the admission of testimony on the ground that no bill of particulars has been furnished in compliance with his demand therefor, the exception cannot be considered if the bill of exceptions does not show the demand. In order to make his exception available on appeal, he must embody the facts on which it was based in his bill of exceptions.

2. PARTNERSHIP—DISSOLUTION—NOTICE—EVIDENCE.

The notice of dissolution of a firm, and that one of the members would thereafter conduct the business, is evidence of the facts therein contained, and admissible on the question in whose possession the firm property remained after the dissolution.

3. EVIDENCE—MATERIALITY—WHETHER ONE DOES BUSINESS IN HIS OWN NAME OR FOR ANOTHER.

As evidence that a business was carried on by a deceased person in his own name, and not for another, evidence of parties who sold deceased goods in his own name, and their bills, are admissible.

4. SALE—NON-DELIVERY—VOID AS TO EXECUTOR OF VENDOR.

A sale without delivery or a continued change of possession is void as against vendor's executor, since he stands in the relation of trustee of the estate of deceased for the benefit of others.

5. HUSBAND AND WIFE—MARRIAGE—PLEADING.

In an action by an executrix for conversion of goods of deceased by the defendant, sued as Margaret Murphy, averments in the answer that defendant's true name is Margaret Murphy Wearman, (the name of the deceased being Wearman,) and that she owned the goods in question as her separate goods, independent of her husband, the said William Wearman, the deceased, are not sufficient allegations of coverture to support proof thereof.

Commissioners' decision.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Yuba county.

J. H. Craddock, for respondent. E. G. Fuller, (S. M. Bliss, of counsel,) for appellant.

SEARLS, C. This is an action by the plaintiff, as executrix of the last will of William Wearman, to recover from the defendant damages for the conversion of certain personal property belonging to the estate of deceased. Plaintiff had judgment for $2,000, and costs, from which judgment defendant appeals. At the outset of the trial, defendant objected to the introduction of any evidence in support of the claim of plaintiff, upon the ground that he had served upon plaintiff's attorney a notice calling for a bill of particulars, which had not been furnished as required by section 454 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The objection was overruled by the court, and an exception taken.

1. There is nothing in the bill of exceptions to show that any demand for a bill of particulars was ever made. If defendant desired to avail himself of the benefit of his exceptions, it was incumbent on him to so embody the facts upon which the ruling was based in his bill of exceptions that this court could, with all the facts before it, pass upon the question.

The complaint was defective, in that it did not describe with sufficient particularity the goods alleged to have been converted by defendant, and, in the face of a special demurrer for that cause, could have been held bad; but it stated a cause of action, and, no objection having been made on the ground indicated, it was sufficient.

The notice of dissolution of the firm of Wearman & Serrett, and that Wearman would thereafter conduct the business, etc., was properly admitted in evidence. As published in the newspaper, this notice was such a public declaration as may reasonably be supposed to have come to defendant, and was a circumstance proper to be considered in determining who was conducting the saloon business, and in whose possession the disputed property remained after the dissolution.

Like considerations apply to the admission of the evidence of Marcuse and others tending to show that they sold goods to Wearman in his own name, and to introduce their bills for such goods to show they were charged to said Wearman individually, and not to defendant. As evidence that the business was conducted by Wearman ostensibly for himself and in his name, and not for or in the name of defendant, the evidence was proper.

The evidence as to the ownership of the property was conflicting, and we are not warranted in disturbing the findings on the ground that they are not supported by evidence.

There was evidence tending to show that, notwithstanding the sale of the property to the defendant, as claimed by her, such sale was not accompanied by an immediate delivery, and followed by a continued change of possession of the things transferred, and as a consequence of these facts, if they existed, the sale was void, not only as against creditors, but also as against any person on whom the estate of Wearman, the vendor, devolved in trust for the benefit of others than himself. Civil Code, § 3440. Plaintiff, as the executrix of the last will of William Wearman, deceased, the vendor of defendant, is a trustee, in whom the estate rests for the benefit of others, within the meaning of the Code.

There was not a delivery and continued change of possession of the property within the meaning of the rule enunciated in Stevens v. Irvin, 15 Cal. 503, which has been steadily adhered to in this state as a correct exposition of the law in numerous cases. Dean v. Walkenhorst, 64 Cal. 78; Watson v. Rodgers, 53 Cal. 401; Wideman v. Franks, 3 Pac. Rep. 494; Grum v. Barney, 55 Cal. 254.

There was no error in excluding the evidence offered on behalf of the defendant to show that she and Wearman lived together as husband and wife. If she desired to show coverture, it was incumbent upon her to plead it. In her answer she avers—First, "that her true name is Margaret Murphy Wearman;" second, that she owned and possessed the goods and chattels in her own separate right, "and controlled the same as her separate property, independent of her husband, the said William Wearman, now deceased." Beyond these expressions there is nothing in the pleadings to show that the relation of husband and wife existed between defendant and plaintiff's testator. As allegations showing the relation of husband and wife, they are wholly insufficient.

Again, the offer to prove that defendant and plaintiff's testator lived together as man and wife was not an offer to prove marriage. Letters v. Cady, 10 Cal. 533. Marriage being properly averred, the evidence indicated would tend to prove the fact,—nothing more. Taking the pleadings with the proffered testimony, and the only inference we can draw from them is, not that defendant desired to show that she had intermarried with the deceased, but that they had lived together as man and wife.

We are of opinion the judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

TURNER v. DONNELLY. (No. 8,383.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 2, 1886.)

- 1 PUBLIC LANDS—PATENT—AGREEMENT OF OWNERS TO CONVEY TO EACH OTHER SUCH PORTIONS OF LAND THEN HELD AS MIGHT BE EMBRACED IN THE PATENT TO EACH THEREAFTER—VALIDITY—REV. ST. U. S. §§ 2263, 2274.

Where parties who had purchased and improved land, without reference to the government subdivisions, entered into an agreement with each other that when the land was surveyed, and they obtained titles for the same from the government, that they would abide by their lines and subdivisions, as they then owned and possessed them, and would each of them deed to the other the parts of sections, or one-quarter sections, as they might purchase them of the United States, that was in possession of the party at that time, and bound themselves to convey to each other all the title they might obtain to lands of the United States, so as to give to each the land he then had in possession, according to each one's lines and fences then standing, held that, when they were not settlers upon the same legal subdivision, and did not have their improvements on the same subdivision, in the sense as contemplated by section 2274, Rev. St. U. S., and the lands patented to each, and referred to in their agreement, were not contiguous, but at least half a mile apart, and in two different sections, the agreement was void, under section 2263 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and the rulings of the supreme court of California in Danwell v. Meyer, 40 Cal. 166, 170, and Hudson v. Johnson, 45 Cal. 21, 25.

2. SAME—PATENT—ATTACK IN COLLATERAL PROCEEDING—EJECTMENT.

A patent once issued for public land remains good, as to all the world, until canceled for fraud, in an action brought by the United States government, and in a collateral proceeding, such as ejectment, cannot be successfully assailed.¹

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county.

Action of ejectment to recover possession of certain lands. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appealed.

Archer & Bowden, for appellant. D. M. Delmas, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. An action of ejectment for certain lands, in which the plaintiff obtained judgment, from which the defendant appealed. The former had a patent from the United States government to the land sued for, which was the basis of his claim. The defendant, in his cross-complaint, set out that, prior to the land sued for having been surveyed, pre-empted, or patented, an agreement in writing had been entered into between himself and the plaintiff that when they each should obtain title to the lands which they then occupied and claimed, that if the defendant's patent, thus obtained, contained any lands which the plaintiff then had in possession, that the plaintiff would abide by the lines and actual subdivisions as they then respectively owned and possessed them, so as to give to the defendant the land thus actually in his possession, and that he, the plaintiff, would execute to the defendant a conveyance to any portion of the land then in the defendant's possession to which he should thereafter obtain title; that the defendant has always been, since that agreement, in possession of the land sued for, and has remained in possession of it since the date of the patent issued to the plaintiff; that the plaintiff, although a patent has been issued to him of the land, refuses to convey it to the defendant, and prays that the plaintiff be held to be the defendant's trustee as to the land, and directed to convey it to the defendant, etc.

According to the findings of the court, the cause coming here on the judgment roll alone, it appears that—

(29,) in township ten (10) S., of range five (5) E., Mount Diablo meridian, in the district of lands subject to sale at San Francisco, California.

"(2) Thereafter, on said twentieth day of August, 1878, and before the commencement of this action, said defendant, Peter Donnelly, against plaintiff's will, entered on said premises, and ousted the plaintiff therefrom, and from thence hitherto has, and still does, detain the possession thereof from said plaintiff.

"(3) On the twenty-eighth day of September, 1871, the plaintiff, Thomas Turner, and the defendant, Peter Donnelly, were severally in possession, as bona fide settlers and residents thereon, of certain unsurveyed lands of the United States, being in the township hereinabove mentioned, the plaintiff being in possession of a portion of the south-east quarter of section 29, and the said defendant of a large tract of about six hundred acres, including portions of section 29, and a portion of the south-east quarter thereof, and section 30. The house and residence of the plaintiff were on the south-east $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 29, and the house and residence of said defendant were on section 30. The lands so respectively occupied were contiguous to each other, each tract being inclosed by a fence. The fences were built without reference to any government surveys or subdivisions, the lands not having yet been surveyed or subdivided by the government.

"(4) On the day last aforesaid, the plaintiff and defendant, together with other parties, signed and executed a written agreement, which is in the following words:

"'CANADA VALLEY, September 28, 1871.

"'Whereas, we, the undersigned, citizens of Canada Valley, have purchased and improved our lands without reference to the government subdivisions, and as our lines and fences do not correspond with the government subdivisions, therefore we, and each of us, whose names are subscribed to this agreement, do severally and individually agree, each with the other, that when the land is surveyed, and we obtain titles for the same from the government, or of the railroad company, that we will abide by our lines and subdivisions as we now own and possess them, and will each of us deed to the other the parts of sections or one-quarter sections, as we may purchase them of the United States, or of the railroad company, that is in possession of said party at this time; and hereby binding ourselves to convey all the title we may obtain to lands of the United States, or railroad company, to each other, so as to give each man the land that he now has in possession, according to each and every man's lines and fences now standing.

"'PETER DONNELLY, MARY DONNELLY, THOS. KIRKHAM, PETER TURNER, THOMAS TURNER, JOHN KIRKHAM, E. K. ROBINSON, JAMES DONNELLY, MATTHEW RAHEAL, PATRICK K. ROGART, DAVID N. NEEL, JAMES RAHEAL, JOSE B. GUTSWICK. Attest: WILLIAM ISAAC.'

"(5) In the year 1873 said township was surveyed and subdivided by the United States government. As thus surveyed, the south-east $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 29 lay mostly inside of plaintiff's inclosure; but about forty acres thereof were inside of defendant's inclosure.

"(6) On the twentieth of August, 1878, the United States issued its patent to Thomas Turner in the following words:

"'The United States of America, to all Whom these Presents shall come, Greeting:

"'(Certificate No. 6,014.)

"'Whereas, Thomas Turner of Santa Clara county, California, has deposited in the general land-office of the United States a certificate of the register of the land-office at San Francisco, whereby it appears that full payment has been made by the said Thomas Turner, according to the provisions of the act of congress of the twenty-fourth of April, 1820, entitled "An act making further provision for the sale of the public lands," and the acts supplemental thereto, for the south-east quarter of section 29, in township 10 south, of range 5 east, Mount Diablo meridian, in the district of lands subject to sale at San Francisco, California, containing one hundred and sixty acres, according to the official plat of the survey of the said lands returned to the general land-office by the surveyor general, which said tract has been purchased by the said Thomas Turner: Now, know ye that the United States of America, in consideration of the premises, and in conformity with the several acts of congress in such case made and provided, have given and granted, and by these presents do give and grant, unto the said Thomas Turner, and to his heirs, the said tract above described, to have and hold the same, together with all the rights, privileges, immunities, and appurtenances, of whatsoever nature thereunto belonging, unto the said Thomas Turner, and to his heirs and assigns, forever; subject to any vested and accrued water-rights for mining, agricultural, manufacturing, or other purposes, and rights to ditches and reservoirs used in connection with such water-rights, as may be recognized and acknowledged by the local customs, laws, and decisions of courts, and also subject to the right of the proprietor of a vein or lode to extract and remove his ore therefrom, should the same be found to penetrate or intersect the premises hereby granted, as provided by law.

"The lands thus patented to plaintiff and defendant, respectively, are not contiguous to each other, but are at least one-half mile apart, and the defendant has no title whatever to any lands in section 29."

The court below, in addition to the facts already found in said case, filed the following, its additional finding of fact therein:

"(6) That said plaintiff suffered no damages by reason of the said entry of defendant and ouster of plaintiff from the premises in controversy; that during the detention of said premises from plaintiff by defendant, as aforesaid, the rents, issues, and profits thereof were of no value, nor are they now of any value whatever."

Upon this state of facts, since the parties were not settlers upon the same legal subdivision, and did not have their improvements on the same subdivision, in the sense as contemplated by section 2274, Rev. St. U. S., and the lands patented to each, and referred to in the within contract, were not contiguous, but at least half a mile apart, and in two different sections, we are of opinion that the agreement under which the defendant claims an equitable title to the plaintiff's land was void, under section 2263, Rev. St. U. S., and the rulings of this court in Damrell v. Meyer, 40 Cal. 166, 170, and Hudson v. Johnson, 45 Cal. 21, 25, and authorities there cited. And the patent, once issued to the plaintiff, remained good as to all the world, until canceled for fraud, in an action brought by the United States government. Even granting that he, in making his application to pre-empt the land, had made a false oath, the defendant could not take advantage of this collateral matter to enforce his void agreement with the plaintiff. And the validity of the patent to the plaintiff, on account of his alleged false oath, could not be successfully assailed in such a collateral proceeding as the one resorted to by the defendant here. Moore v. Wilkinson, 13 Cal. 478, 488; Yount v. Howell, 14 Cal. 465-470. We are therefore of opinion that no prejudicial error is shown by the record to have been committed by the trial court, and that the judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; SEARLS, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

GULF OF CALIFORNIA NAV. & EXP. CO. v. STATE INVESTMENT & INS. CO.
(No. 9,111.)

1. MARINE INSURANCE—ACTION ON POLICY—BODY OF POLICY—INDORSEMENT—CONSTRUCTION.

A marine time policy, during its continuance, permitted a vessel insured to prosecute voyages anywhere upon the navigable waters of the globe, except that it was prohibited from using certain enumerated ports. But upon the back of the policy this indorsement was made: "Vessel to be employed on the Gulf of California and captain is privileged to act as his own pilot without prejudice to this insurance." Held, that the meaning of the indorsement was either that, while the vessel was employed in the Gulf of California, her captain might act as her pilot "without prejudice to the insurance," or that permission already granted in the body of the policy to navigate the Gulf of California was again given in the written indorsement, and that the captain might, while so navigating the ship, act as her pilot "without prejudice to the insurance."

2. TRIAL—ISSUE—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTION.

Where no issue is made up upon a fact in a cause upon which evidence can be properly submitted, the court will refuse to instruct the jury upon it.

Commissioners' decision.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action on a marine insurance policy. There was a trial to a jury, and a verdict and judgment rendered for the plaintiff. Defendant appealed.

Milton Andros and Chas. Page, for appellant. Whittemore & McKee, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. The plaintiff brought suit against the defendant on an insurance policy which the former had obtained from the latter upon a certain vessel. The cause being tried by a jury, the plaintiff had judgment for the amount of the policy, and from that, and an order denying a new trial, the defendant appeals. According to the terms of the policy as written, without the indorsement hereafter to be noticed, it was a time policy, which, during its continuance, permitted the vessel insured to prosecute voyages anywhere upon the navigable waters of the globe, except that it was prohibited from using certain enumerated ports. But upon the back of the policy, by agreement of the parties thereto, these words were written, and punctuated as follows: "Vessel to be employed on the Gulf of California and captain is privileged to act as his own pilot without prejudice to this insurance."

One allegation of the complaint is "that said vessel, while employed in the Gulf of California, was, on the ninth day of January, 1881, totally lost by the perils of the sea." The defendant meets this statement by the following language in its answer: "This defendant, on its information and belief, denies that said vessel, while employed in the Gulf of California, was, on the ninth day of January, 1881, or at any other time, totally lost by perils of the sea."

Upon the question of the sufficiency of the denial by the defendant of the plaintiff's allegation of "a total loss of the vessel by the perils of the sea," the defendant, in its brief, at page 6, says: "We are prepared to admit that the denial would be insufficient in this case if the action had been on a policy which covered a vessel generally against perils of the sea;" citing Doll v. Good, 38 Cal. 289, 290; 1 Wait, Pr. 422.

The plaintiff contends that its right to recover did not depend upon the fact that the total loss of the vessel took place in the Gulf of California, but by reason of the fact that it had a right to recover, in case of such loss, whether it took place in the Gulf of California, or in any other navigable waters not prohibited to the vessel in the policy; and that the defendant's denial, in the form in which it was stated, admitted a total loss of the vessel by the perils of the sea, which is claimed, and not that it took place in said gulf, was the material issue raised by the pleadings. So that the main question in this case, and that upon which all the others raised by the parties really depend, is, what construction is properly to be placed upon the words of the written indorsement on the policy?

The last words of it are, "without prejudice to this insurance." The natural inquiry is, what privilege or privileges were to be conceded "without prejudice to the insurance," and what else, if anything, did the sentence contain? It was unpunctuated save by a period at the end thereof.

We are of opinion that its meaning was either that, while the vessel was employed in the Gulf of California, her captain might act as her pilot "without prejudice to the insurance," or that permission already granted in the body of the policy, to navigate the Gulf of California, was again given in the written indorsement, and that the captain might, while so navigating the ship, act as her pilot "without prejudice to the insurance." It is much more reasonable to suppose one of these two to be the proper interpretation of the language in question than the one for which the defendant contends; viz., that the vessel was thereby restricted from all the waters which it was privileged to navigate in the body of the policy, and confined by the indorsement to the Gulf of California, as its navigable waters, where its captain was privileged to act as pilot.

Where so important and material a restriction, opposed, too, to the terms of the original contract, is intended to be made, it would seem that such intention, in order to bind the insured, should be expressed in plain and unambiguous terms. The construction which the defendant asks to have placed upon the words of the indorsement, taking all those words as written and punctuated, seems to us to be strained and unnatural. The circumstances, also, that surround the transaction are, we think, not calculated to induce the belief of the correctness of the defendant's construction of the language of the indorsement.

The plaintiff already had the right, before that indorsement was made, to navigate with its vessel the Gulf of California, but we may well suppose that it desired its captain to act, while in those waters, as the ship's pilot, and that it sought the modification of the policy with such end in view. And that must have been the prime object; for it did not need any permission, as we have seen, to run its vessel in said gulf,—that it already possessed; and it should not be presumed, under such state of facts, that this permission was given as asked, but only on condition that the other waters in which the vessel had been originally permitted to voyage should be entirely abandoned, unless such an intention had been most plainly and unmistakably expressed.

Nor can we believe that either of the parties to the modification of the policy, at the time it occurred, had such an understanding of its terms as that for which the defendant contends; for, had that been the case, the restrictive words, if any such were intended, would have been made as plain of comprehension as are those granting a privilege; and that they were not so is additional evidence in favor of the plaintiff's contention.

We think, therefore, that, considering the terms of the policy, which is made a part of the complaint, and the averments of that pleading, that the denial of the defendant was an admission of the truth of the material fact that the vessel was totally lost by perils of the sea, against which the defendant had insured her, and that the fact of her being lost or not in the Gulf of California was immaterial.

The defendant also contends that the court should have instructed the jury that plaintiff's verdict should be reduced by the sum of $610; claiming that this sum of money, which was the proceeds of the sale of the abandoned vessel, was presumed to have been received by the plaintiff, and defendant should have credit therefor. But there was no averment in the answer of any such liability of the plaintiff, or the facts out of which it grew. And the allegation in the complaint, of non-payment by the defendant of the plaintiff's demand, was not denied in the answer, nor was any payment to the plaintiff of any sum of money whatever therein averred. Thus no issue upon this point existed, or was made up, upon which evidence could properly have been submitted to the jury, or upon which they should have been instructed by the court. The instruction was therefore properly refused.

The propriety of the refusal by the trial court of the motion for nonsuit, to grant the defendant's instructions, and the granting of those given to the jury, and its order denying the motion for a new trial, all depended upon the questions above discussed. Hence the judgment and order last mentioned should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; SEARLS, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

WARE v. WALKER. (No. 8,905.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 2, 1886.)

1. PLEADING—AMENDED COMPLAINT—MOTION TO STRIKE OUT.

Where suit was brought, in the name of several plaintiffs, against several defendants, to enjoin the obstruction of a flow of water into a ditch of one of the plaintiffs, and an amended complaint was filed wherein one of them alone was named as plaintiff, and one alone as defendant, held, on a motion to strike out the amended pleading, that, the cause of action being the same, the motion was properly denied.

2. APPEAL—EVIDENCE—FINDINGS OF TRIAL COURT.

Where, in the trial of a suit to enjoin a defendant from obstructing the flow of water into plaintiff's ditch, the findings of the court below are sustained by the evidence, they will not, on appeal, be disturbed. Trenor v. Central Pac. R. Co., 50 Cal. 230.

3. WATERS AND WATER-COURSES—APPROPRIATION OF WATER AS AGAINST A SUBSEQUENT PURCHASER—GRANT.

The findings of the court in this case considered, and held, that the plaintiff, by the construction of his ditch, and the appropriation and user of the water of the stream, acquired, as against the defendant, a subsequent purchaser from the United States, as complete and perfect a right to maintain his ditch, and have the water flow to, in, and through the same, as though such right or easement had vested in him by grant.

Commissioners' decision.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county.

J. Alexander Yoell, for appellant. S. O. Houghton, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. The plaintiff obtained a final decree in this action, perpetually enjoining the defendant, Walker, from interfering with the ditch or dam of Ware, or his associates, in the bed of the Arroyo de Los Gatos, upon the land of the defendant, or from obstructing the flow of the water of said arroyo into said ditch, and for costs. From that judgment, and an order refusing him a new trial, the defendant appeals.

His first contention is that the court erred in not granting his motion to strike out the second amended complaint filed in the action. It appears that the cause of action, to-wit, the interference of the defendant with certain water-rights of the plaintiff, and a certain ditch and dam in which he had an interest, by obstructing the flow of the water therein from the Arroyo de Los Gatos, from which it was appropriated by plaintiff, was the same cause of action as stated in all the complaints, three in number, filed in the action, and the remedy of injunction was prayed for in all of them. Further, it appears that originally the action was brought by several plaintiffs, against the present and other defendants; such other defendants being joined because they had not voluntarily become parties plaintiff, although no injury was alleged to have been done by them, that being wholly charged against defendant, Walker.

The first complaint was demurred to, and the demurrer sustained. An amended complaint was then filed, which was also demurred to, and the demurrer sustained. A second amended complaint was then filed, wherein Ware alone was named as plaintiff, and Walker alone as defendant. That complaint the defendant moved to strike out, because it was not, as he claimed, a complaint proper to the original action, not being between the same parties, or stating the same cause of action.

The cause of action, as we have seen, was certainly the same. The fact that by reason of the demurrer which the defendant filed, and which was sustained, the plaintiff was compelled to discontinue his action as to all the plaintiffs who had not a joint cause of action with Ware, cannot be just cause of complaint by the defendant, for his objection obliged the plaintiff thus to frame his pleading. And the fact that the cause was discontinued as to those defendants brought in because they could not be made to join as plaintiffs, but against whom no cause of action was ever stated, was a mere discontinuance as to them, to which proceeding Walker has no legal right to object. Browner v. Davis, 15 Cal. 11, 12. Therefore the motion to strike out had no merit, and was properly denied.

There was evidence to support all the findings, and hence they should not on appeal be disturbed. Trenor v. Central Pac. R. Co., 50 Cal. 230.

It is urged by the appellant that the findings do not support the judgment. By them it is substantially declared, among other things, that the plaintiff, with others, appropriated certain water of the Arroyo de Los Gatos at a time when the land now owned and possessed by the defendant was still the property of the United States government; and that said water was taken out from the bed of said stream, at said time, with the approval of the party then in possession of said land, and who afterwards obtained a patent for it; that as part of the ditch which conducted the water to the plaintiff's land the bed of said arroyo was used; that after a time, when the defendant had become the owner of said land, he was not willing to allow the plaintiff to appropriate and use said water; and that, when the plaintiff undertook (by reason of the changes in the bed of the stream having diverted the flow of water away from the head of his ditch) to go higher up in the bed of said stream, which belonged to the defendant, and construct therein, at another point on his (defendant's) land, a certain dam and extension of the ditch, so as to again cause said water to flow into it, the defendant tore down the dam, and obstructed so much of the ditch as was upon his land above the original point of appropriation. It was to prevent further action of that kind, and to maintain his control over the water, thus flowing over a portion of the defendant's land, where the original ditch had not run, that the plaintiff brought the present action.

The conduct of the defendant in the premises, according to the findings, was not justifiable. The plaintiff was entitled to use the water of the stream, to which he had obtained the right of appropriation prior to the defendant's ownership of the land, through which the water flowed in its natural current. All that the plaintiff did in securing to himself the continued use of the water to which he had thus become entitled was to go higher up in the bed of the stream than he had originally done, and dig out a small ditch or channel in the gravelly surface thereof through a bar that had been formed by freshets in the stream, and erect, at the head of such ditch, a wing-dam to divert the waters of the stream, in the usual quantity that he had hitherto used, down along its bed into his original ditch. At no point where he thus used the bed of said stream (owing to the height of the banks thereof) could the defendant make any beneficial use of the water thus taken; and no portion of his land, available for any useful purpose, was invaded or taken. In fact, all that the plaintiff did was to remove obstructions to the flow of its waters from the bed of the stream, higher up on the defendant's land than the point from whence such waters could be originally diverted into the ditch.

The plaintiff did nothing more of injury to the defendant than if he had removed a number of fallen trees which might have been washed down by the floods of winter, and which had lain across the stream, obstructing the flow of the water, and causing it to run upon the further side away from the plaintiff's ditch; and such action was lawful. The plaintiff, by the construction of his ditch and the appropriation and user of the water of the stream, acquired, as against the defendant, a subsequent purchaser from the United States, as complete and perfect a right to maintain his ditch, and have the water flow to, in, and through the same, as though such right or easement had vested in him by grant. Where the use of a thing is granted, everything is granted essential to such use. Such a right carries with it an implied authority to do all that is necessary to secure the enjoyment of such easement.

"The express or implied grant of an easement is accompanied by certain secondary easements necessary for the enjoyment of the principal one." Gale & W. Easem. (Amer. Ed.) 231. So, also, "in the civil law, the right to a servitude drew with it the right to such secondary servitudes as were essential for its enjoyment." Id. Again, it is said that "by the civil law the owner of the dominant tenement had a right to do whatever was requisite to secure to himself the fullest enjoyment of his servitude." Id. 232. "But, in entering upon the neighboring soil for the purpose of doing these necessary works, the owner of the dominant tenement was bound, not only to exercise ordinary care and skill, but also to repair, as far as he could, whatever damage his labors might have caused to the servient tenement." Id. 235.

The stream had become obstructed by the deposits, from natural causes, of gravel in its bed, so as to prevent the flow of water to plaintiff's ditch. The defendant, as owner of the servient tenement, was under no obligation to remove these obstructions to the enjoyment by plaintiff of his right to the water.

The duty of making the repairs essential to his enjoyment of the easement devolved upon the plaintiff. Gale & W. Easem. 215; Taylor v. Whitehead, 2 Doug. 745. In the exercise of this right, plaintiff in a reasonable and proper manner, and, as is found by the court, without damage to the defendant, made such an alignment of the stream, and performed such acts as were essential to his enjoyment of the water. This he had a right to do. Prescott v. White, 21 Pick. 341; Prescott v. Williams, 5 Metc. 429.

The judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; SEARLS, C.

KAHN v. BAUER, Treasurer. (No. 11,764.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 22, 1886.)

MANDAMUS—MOTION TO QUASH—AFFIDAVIT FOR.

On a motion to quash a writ of mandamus compelling a state officer to redeem certain bonds in accordance with a state law, an affidavit which states, in substance, that the validity of the bonds had been passed on in the United States courts is insufficient.

In bank. Motion to quash alternative writ of mandate.

An alternative writ of mandate had issued in this case, compelling defendant to advertise for the redemption of the Montgomery avenue bonds, as provided in the act of April 1, 1872, (St. 1871-72, p. 919.) A motion was made to quash the writ, based on an affidavit which stated, in substance, that the validity of the bonds in question had been passed on in other actions, by the circuit court of the United States, and also that a writ of error was pending in the supreme court of the United States.

D. M. Delmas, for petitioner. John L. Love and P. G. Galpin, for respondent.

BY THE COURT. The facts stated in the affidavit on which the motion to quash the writ heretofore issued in this case is made, are insufficient to authorize this court to grant the motion.

The motion must be denied, with leave to respondent to answer within 10 days.

HAGGIN and others v. CLARK. (No. 9,280.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 27, 1885.)

1. JUDGMENT—SATISFACTION—DECISION ON APPEAL.

The decision of the supreme court, on an appeal in a case determining the proportion of the judgment to which, as between himself and his co-plaintiff, the appellant is entitled, becomes the law of the case to the extent thus determined, and upon a tender thereof by the defendant he becomes entitled to a satisfaction of the judgment.

2. SAME—MOTION TO SATISFY—PRACTICE.

Where the findings in a cause show that two plaintiffs are entitled to recover, and show the share or interest which each plaintiff has in the subject-matter of the litigation, neither oral testimony nor affidavits can be received, on a motion to have the judgment satisfied, to show that the interest of the plaintiffs in the judgment is other or different from that shown in the findings.

Commissioners' decision.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.
Moses G. Cobb, for appellants. E. D. Sawyer, for respondents.

SEARLS, C. This cause was decided by Department 2 on the thirtieth day of January, 1886, in an opinion to be found in 9 Pac. Rep. 736. A reargument in bank was ordered, and we are again called upon to review the cause.

It is claimed that in the former opinion too much weight was given to the previous decision in the same case, (61 Cal. 1,) and that what we extracted from the last-named decision as the law of the case, and treated as res adjudicata, on the question at issue, was in reality obiter dicta, or at least based upon a record in no respects binding upon the plaintiffs Haggin and Le Roy. The following summary will suffice to an understanding of the salient points involved in the case.

On the second day of May, 1864, Theodore Le Roy, as the assignee of Jacob P. Leese, recovered judgment in ejectment against defendant Clark for the undivided four-sixteenths of certain premises situate in the city and county of San Francisco. On the twenty-second of March, 1865, Haggin and Le Roy, as plaintiffs, recovered judgment against said Clark for possession of the same land, according to their respective interests; that is to say, the said Haggin four-sixteenths, and said Le Roy eight-sixteenths, undivided. On the eighth day of June, 1866, Theodore Le Roy and Rudolph Steinbach conveyed to Haggin seven-sixteenths, undivided, of, in, and to said land, which included the four-sixteenths of said land formerly owned by said Haggin, which still left said Le Roy the owner of nine-sixteenths of said land.

Two actions were brought against Clark to recover mesne profits of the land during the period of his wrongful possession. One of these actions was brought by Le Roy, and the other by Haggin and Le Roy. By consent of counsel, the two actions were tried together, upon an agreement that, in case of recovery by plaintiffs, one-half of the amount found in their favor should be awarded in each case. The causes were tried by the court without a jury, and all of the foregoing facts, as to title and the quantity of interest, appear in the findings of fact. Judgment was rendered in each case, about September 11, 1874, in favor of the plaintiff or plaintiffs therein for $5,400, and certain further sums by way of interest, which interest was, however, on appeal to this court, stricken out and disallowed, with costs to defendant, and thereafter judgment was entered in the court below for $5,400, with legal interest thereon from date of entry; and at the same time, and as a part of the same judgment, defendant recovered his costs of appeal, taxed at $79.50. Pending the appeal to this court, defendant Clark took from Le Roy an assignment of all his interest in the two judgments, and subsequently the court below ordered them satisfied on payment to Haggin of the share or proportion due him as per the findings in the case. This appeal is from the order so made satisfying the judgments in Le Roy and Haggin v. Clark.

The question presented for determination is this: Where the findings in a cause show that two plaintiffs are entitled to recover, and show the share or interest which each plaintiff has in the subject-matter of the action, can oral testimony or affidavits be received, on a motion to have the judgment satisfied, to show that the interest of the plaintiffs in the judgment is other or different from that shown in the findings?

By section 578 of the Code of Civil Procedure it is provided that the judgment may, "when the justice of the case requires it, determine the ultimate rights of the parties on each side, as between themselves."

In the present case it appears that the court did, by its findings, determine the interests of the respective plaintiffs as between themselves. We must presume, in favor of the findings; (in the absence of the pleadings,) that they are responsive to the issues made in the case. It is true, the appellant contends that there was nothing in the pleadings warranting these findings, but the pleadings, which are the only legitimate evidence on the subject, were not offered to substantiate their position. We must therefore hold that under the presumption in favor of the findings above referred to, that some necessity existed for the findings of the court, and that they were warranted by the issues in the cause.

In view of this position, it was not in order for plaintiff Haggin, upon a motion to have the judgment satisfied, to show by affidavits and deeds that his interest all along was greater than that found by the court. Non constat but this very evidence may have been introduced upon the trial, and overcome by the admissions of the pleadings or by other evidence. If injustice was done the appellant, he had his redress by a motion for a new trial or appeal to correct the error; but he cannot waive all these rights, and by a motion founded upon oral evidence or affidavits try the facts of the cause anew, or any portion of them, in a manner not known to the practice of our courts.

We may infer that it was in view of this reasoning that this court, when the cause was here before, (61 Cal. 1,) indicated as the data upon which the amount due Haggin was to be determined the proportion or interest to which the findings showed him to be entitled. We see no reason for modifying what was said in the opinion heretofore rendered by Department 2 on this appeal, to the effect that, the relative rights of the parties having been settled on the former appeal, (61 Cal. 1,) such decision became the law of the case. Waiving this conclusion, however, and we are of opinion that, if appellant has a remedy, it must be by appropriate action against his co-plaintiff, who he shows occupied the relation of a trustee to himself, and not by the means invoked on this motion.

We are of opinion the former decision of Department 2, affirming the order of the court below, should stand as the decision in the cause.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order is affirmed.

71 Cal. 470

PARTRIDGE v. SHEPARD and others. (No. 9,404.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 29, 1886.)

1. LIS PENDENS—EJECTMENT—CONVEYANCE—JUDGMENT BY STIPULATION—CALIFORNIA PRACTICE ACT, § 263.

A judgment by stipulation of parties will bind them, and those in privity with them; and as, by section 263 of the practice act of California, "an action for the recovery of real property against a person in possession cannot be prejudiced by any alienation made by such person, either before or after the commencement of the action," a judgment by stipulation will be a bar to a claim of title under a deed made by a person in possession, during the pendency of an action against him for the recovery of the land conveyed.

2. EJECTMENT—EVIDENCE—AFFIDAVIT TO SHOW FORMER JUDGMENT VALID.

In an action of ejectment, the defendant having introduced the record of a former judgment in evidence, as evidence of his title, the introduction of an affidavit to show that there was no fraud in the entry of that judgment was error, but, as the judgment was not subject to collateral attack in the action of ejectment, the error was harmless, and not ground for reversal.

3. SAME—SHOWING TITLE OUT OF PLAINTIFF'S GRANTOR AT TIME OF DEED—DEED OF TRUST—PAYMENT AND RECONVEYANCE.

A deed of trust is a conveyance of the legal title; and where, in an action of ejectment, the plaintiff claims under a conveyance made June 15, 1872, a deed of trust executed by his grantors January 29, 1872, is admissible as tending to show that the title was not in plaintiff's grantors at the time his conveyance was made. The questions of the payment of the debt which the deed of trust was given to secure, and of the reconveyance of the land, do not affect the admissibility of the deed.

4. SAME—PAYMENT OF TAXES—STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS—CODE CIVIL PROC. CAL. § 325.

In an action of ejectment, evidence of the payment of taxes by the defendant is properly admitted under the plea of the statute of limitations. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 325.¹

5. SAME—PAYING TAXES—LANDS SECURITY FOR A LOAN.

In an action of ejectment, the plaintiff, as a witness for himself, having testified to paying taxes and street assessments on a part of the premises in dispute on which one D. lived at the time, and that he had tried to get money out of D., and had spoken of moneys advanced to D. and his wife, a question asked him, on cross-examination, as to whether he held the property as security for the debt, was proper, as tending to show that he was not making the payment testified to for himself, as owner, but for D.

Commissioners' decision.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

E. A. & G. E. Lawrence, for appellants. Page Bells, for respondents.

SEARLS, C. This is an action of ejectment to recover portions of blocks 370, 371, 376, and 377, Western addition, San Francisco. The cause was tried by a jury, and a verdict rendered in favor of defendants, upon which judgment was entered. Plaintiff moved for a new trial, which was refused, and this appeal is by plaintiff from the judgment and order denying his motion. The complaint avers that on the second day of June, 1878, plaintiff was the owner and in possession of the demanded premises, and that on the third day of June, 1878, defendants entered and ousted him therefrom. Defendants Shepard and Judson answered separately,—the former by way of general denial of the allegations of the complaint, and the latter, in addition to a denial of the allegations of the complaint, pleaded the statute of limitations of five years, also that the claim of the plaintiff is barred by the provisions of the statute of March 5, 1864, entitled "An act to limit the time for the commencement of civil actions in certain cases;" and in a supplemental answer defendant pleads a former recovery by him and Gilbert J. Place of the same premises by a judgment of the district court of the Fourth judicial district of the state of California in and for the city and county of San Francisco, rendered in their favor, and against Paul Molloy, Michael Dalton, Richard Donovan, and others, on or about March 27, 1873.

At the trial there was testimony on behalf of plaintiff tending to show that, in 1863, Richard Donovan went to live upon the demanded premises with his family; that he inclosed the same, in company with Michael Dalton, with a good fence, and pastured his goats and a horse thereon; that in October, 1865, Dalton built a house on the premises, as Donovan had previously done; that they cultivated a portion of the premises for a couple of years, and held the land as tenants in common. Michael Dalton and Margaret C. Dalton, his wife, conveyed to the plaintiff herein their interest in the demanded premises, by deed dated June 15, 1872, and recorded February 3, 1873. On the twenty-third day of February, 1866, R. Donovan, M. Dalton, and Margaret Dalton, his wife, conveyed, to Alfred Borel, 50-vara lot No. 4, in block 377.

On the eighth of March, 1867, Richard Donovan, Michael Dalton, and Margaret, his wife, executed an agreement to Alfred Borel, in which the conveyance of lot 4, in block 377, is recited, and it is agreed that, upon a division of the property, Borel should be at liberty to so locate the interests of the grantors in the deed of lot 4, block 377, as to protect his (Borel's) title to said lot 4; and, in the event said lot should not be set off to Borel in a division of the property, then the parties of the first part convey to said Borel an equivalent amount of land, of equal quantity and value, in the tract of which they were the owners, etc. The deed from Donovan, Dalton, and wife to Borel was afterwards stricken out by the court upon the ground that lot 4, in block 377, was not in controversy in this action; and the agreement above referred to was also, on motion of defendants, stricken out, upon the ground that it did not appear that Borel had failed to procure title to lot 4, in block 377. A deed from Borel to plaintiff, Partridge, dated March 8, 1867, of lot 4, in block 377, was offered in evidence; and, on objection of defendants, was ruled out, upon the ground that the land therein described is not in controversy in this action.

Defendants Egbert, Judson, and Shepard introduced the judgment roll in Egbert, Judson and Gilbert J. Place v. R. Donovan, Michael Dalton, and others, as defendants, being an action of ejectment to recover by the plaintiffs therein possession of certain premises therein described, and which are shown to embrace the demanded premises in this action. That action was commenced as early as 1865; the answer of Michael Dalton having been filed March 31, 1865, and that of Donovan, May 13, 1865. Defendants denied plaintiffs' title, set up the statute of limitations in bar of the recovery, and some other defenses. On the twenty-seventh day of March, 1873, Richard Donovan, Michael Dalton, James Casey, and Daniel Cronin, defendants in said cause, appeared in court by counsel, withdrew the answers by them respectively filed, and consented that judgment be entered in favor of plaintiffs in accordance with the prayer of their complaint, whereupon judgment was entered by the court in favor of plaintiffs, and against said defendants, for the recovery of the possession of the premises described in the complaint. A writ of possession issued to the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco, on the twenty-eighth day of March, 1873, which was returned July 28, 1873, by the sheriff. The return shows that plaintiffs were placed in possession of that portion of the premises described in the map attached thereto, and made part of the return.

Defendants introduced evidence tending to show possession in themselves continuously since 1873; also deed from Jose R. Valencia and Torevia Tanfaran to Richard Donovan, dated February 4, 1863, conveying the demanded premises; also a quitclaim deed from Richard Donovan to Richard Whoulihan, dated February 28, 1863, conveying the Donovan and Dalton tract, except a lot on the south side of Page street, 20 feet front by 80 feet deep. On the twenty-eighth of February, 1863, Richard Whoulihan conveyed the one undivided half of the same premises to Susannah Donovan, wife of Richard Donovan, in consideration of love and affection. Defendants deraign title from Susannah Donovan and Richard Donovan by sundry mesne conveyances. Defendants also introduced a deed from Dalton and wife to E. W. Burr and Benjamin D. Dean, of the second part, and Savings & Loan Society, of the third part, being a deed of trust dated January 29, 1872, given to secure the payment of $2,000 and interest to the third party, and all further indebtedness, not exceeding $3,000. This deed conveys a lot on the south-west corner of Page and Fillmore streets, fronting 63 feet on Fillmore by 120 feet on Page street, and being a portion of block 371; also the undivided one-half of the residue of the demanded premises.

The first point made by appellant is that the court below erred in overruling his objection to the question put to plaintiff Partridge, who was a witness in his own behalf, and whom the court permitted defendants' counsel to ask, on cross-examination, as follows: "You held it [the property] as security for the debt, did you not?" The witness had testified to paying taxes and street assessments, not only upon lot 4, in block 377, but upon the lot where Dalton lived, and upon other portions of the property; that he had tried to get money out of Dalton, but could not, and the latter had come to him to pay his (Dalton's) taxes, and had spoken of "moneys advanced to Dalton and his wife." Under these circumstances it was proper, on cross-examination, to ascertain whether plaintiff was paying taxes and street assessments upon the property as an owner and for himself, or for Dalton; and, if he claimed the property as security for such payment, it would tend in some degree to show that he was not making the payment for himself, but for Dalton. The answer of the witness was: "Well, partially. Yes; partially. I was saving myself at the same time,—saving the property for which I have a deed." Conceding the question to have been improper, there was nothing in the answer which could have in the least injured plaintiff.

It is objected to the judgment roll in Judson et al. v. Molloy that it was a "consent judgment." We know of no good reason why a judgment entered by consent of parties, in a cause in which the court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties, is less efficacious than if entered after a trial of the issues. It may be impeached, like any other judicial record, by evidence of a want of jurisdiction in the court rendering it, by showing collusion between the parties, or by proof of fraud on the part of the party offering the record. Code Civil Proc. § 1916; Freem. Judgm. § 330; Seiple v. Wright, 32 Cal. 659; Secrist v. Zimmerman, 55 Pa. St. 446; McCreery v. Fuller, 63 Cal. 30. We conclude, therefore, that a judgment by stipulation of parties will bind them, and those in privity with them.

The action, as before stated, was commenced as early as 1865, pending which, and in 1869, Partridge took a conveyance of lot 6, in block 371, from Dalton, one of the defendants in that action, and subsequently, on the fifteenth day of June, 1872, plaintiff took a conveyance from Dalton and wife of all their interest in the demanded premises. The former deed was recorded November 30, 1870, and the latter on the third day of February, 1873. There is no evidence that defendants Judson and Shepard had any notice in fact of these deeds, or of either of them, or any interest in plaintiff; but, on the contrary, the evidence shows that they did not have such knowledge. Judson paid the defendants Donovan and Dalton some $12,000, to end the litigation, and procure the judgment in his favor; but we fail to see in this any evidence of fraud or collusion.

No notice of the pendency of the action was, so far as appears, filed in the office of the recorder. Prior to May 1, 1872, the provision of the practice act, § 27, in relation to filing notice of the pendency of actions, did not apply to the action of ejectment. Long v. Neville, 29 Cal. 131; Wattson v. Dowling, 26 Cal. 125. By the act of March 2, 1872, which took effect May 1, 1872, the practice act was so amended that notice of the pendency of an action applied alike to causes affecting the right to possession of real property with those relating to the title. At common law the purchaser pendente lite of the subject of the controversy took as a mere volunteer or intruder, and was bound by the result of the controversy. Richardson v. White, 18 Cal. 106; Debell v. Foxworthy's Heirs, 9 B. Mon. 228; Secombe v. Steele, 20 How. 105; Green v. White, 7 Blackf. 242; Baker v. Pierson, 5 Mich. 461. By section 263 of the practice act it was provided that "an action for the recovery of real property, against a person in possession, cannot be prejudiced by any alienation made by such person, either before or after the commencement of the action."

The defendant Dalton was in possession, and an action of ejectment was being prosecuted against him to recover possession. Pending such action, and before the amendment of March, 1872, he conveyed 50-vara lot No. 6, in block 371, a portion of the demanded premises in that cause, and a portion of which 50-vara lot is included in this action, to plaintiff, Partridge. His grantee was bound equally with himself by the judgment afterwards rendered in that action, and the judgment was admissible in evidence against the plaintiff in this cause, and plaintiff's objection thereto was properly overruled. Whether the judgment offered in evidence was a bar to the recovery by plaintiff of so much of the land as was conveyed to him by the deed of June 15, 1872, executed after the amendment of the practice act, so as to require notice of the pendency of actions of this character to be recorded, must depend upon the question whether or not the statute, when amended, applied to actions existing and pending at the date of such amendment. That question is not necessarily involved in the objection as made, because if the judgment was admissible for any purpose, or as to any part of the demanded premises, its admission was proper, and upon the question as indicated above we express no opinion.

The instruction asked by counsel for plaintiff in the following language: "I instruct you that the record of the judgment in the case of Judson v. Molloy against Dalton, given in evidence herein, is no bar to plaintiff's recovery herein,"—was properly refused, for the reasons given in disposing of the admissibility of the judgment as evidence.

We think the objection of plaintiff to the introduction of the affidavit of E. A. Lawrence should have been sustained. It was introduced to show that there was no fraud in the entry of the former judgment. Its introduction, however, could not injure the plaintiff, for the reason that in the present action of ejectment a collateral attack upon that judgment could not be made. Being fair upon its face, and rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction, in a proper case, it must stand until set aside by some direct proceeding for that purpose. Freem. Judgm. § 334. It follows that the affidavit could cut no figure, under the pleadings, in the determination of the cause, and the judgment should not be reversed on account of this error.

The deed from Dalton and wife to Burr and Dean, dated January 29, 1872, was properly admitted in evidence. It was a deed of trust given to secure the payment of money, but it conveyed the legal title. Koch v. Briggs, 14

Cal. 256; Grant v. Burr, 54 Cal. 298; Bateman v. Burr, 57 Cal. 480; Durkin v. Burr, 60 Cal. 360. It was therefore admissible to show title out of Dalton and wife prior to their conveyance of June 15, 1872, to plaintiff.

The question of the payment of the money, which the trust deed was given to secure, and of a reconveyance, did not affect the admissibility of the deed, but were questions to be determined upon proper testimony, and were, as we think, properly disposed of by the court.

The evidence of the payment of taxes by Judson was properly admitted under his plea of the statute of limitations. Code Civil Proc. § 325.

We think the evidence of adverse possession on the part of Judson was sufficient to authorize the verdict of the jury, and that, coupled with the other defenses set up and proved, defendants were clearly entitled to the judgment in their favor, and that the record presents no error calling for a reversal.

The judgment and order appealed from should therefore be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

MAXWELL v. SAN LUIS OBISPO CO. (No. 9,828.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 29, 1886.)

TAXATION—ACTIONS TO RECOVER BACK ILLEGAL LICENSE TAX—PAYMENT UNDER DURESS.

When it appears that there was no liability to anything beyond civil and criminal prosecutions in case of refusal to pay certain license taxes, and that in such prosecutions the invalidity of the law which authorized the collection of the taxes would have been a perfect defense, a party making payment is not under such duress or compulsion that he can recover back money so paid in an action brought for that purpose.¹

Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county.

This was an action by the respondent, Maxwell, as assignee of various parties, to recover from the defendant money paid by his assignors as license taxes for carrying on their business to the defendant, under duress, as was alleged. The defendant appealed from an order overruling its demurrer to the complaint.

J. M. Wilcoxson, William Graves, and William Leviston, for respondent, Maxwell. J. R. Patton, F. Adams, and V. A. Gregg, for appellant, San Luis Obispo county

SHARPSTEIN, J. The only question which we have to consider in this case is, does the complaint state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action? The action was brought to recover moneys alleged to have been paid by the assignors of plaintiff to the tax collector of San Luis Obispo county, and by him paid into the treasury of said county. Such an action may be maintained under some circumstances, one of which is that the money was paid under compulsion, or the legal equivalent.

"The illegality of the demand paid, constitutes, of itself, no ground for relief. There must be, in addition, some compulsion or coercion attending its assertion, which controls the conduct of the party making the payment." Brumagim v. Tillinghast, 18 Cal. 271.

In this case, plaintiff alleges that the moneys sued for were exacted and collected by the tax collector without authority of law, and as a condition precedent to the carrying on of business by the assignors of plaintiff, and by threats, and menaces of legal prosecutions, suits, actions, and processes against said assignors, and attachments, seizures, confiscations, and sequestrations,

which he, the said tax collector, gave out and made to said assignors, and to each of them, for the purpose of causing them, and each of them, to pay to him said moneys, and that said moneys were all paid under and by reason of such threats and menaces, and would not have been paid but for such threats and menaces.

The tax collector had no real or apparent power to execute the threats of seizures, confiscations, or sequestrations. The law under which he assumed to exact license taxes authorized him to direct suits to be brought for the recovery of such taxes, and to have attachments issue in such actions, (Pol. Code, § 3360;) and it is made a misdemeanor for any person to carry on business for which a license is required by law, without having a license, (Pen. Code, § 435.) The assignors of plaintiff were not liable to anything beyond civil and criminal prosecutions, in which the invalidity of the law which authorized the collection of license taxes would have been a perfect defense.

In Benson v. Monroe, 7 Cush. 125, the court said: "It is an established rule of law that if a party, with a full knowledge of the facts, voluntarily pays a demand unjustly made on him, and attempted to be enforced by legal proceedings, he cannot recover back the money as paid by compulsion, unless there be fraud in the party enforcing the claim, and a knowledge that the claim is unjust. And the case is not altered by the fact that the party so paying protests that he is not answerable, and gives notice that he shall bring an action to recover the money back. He has an opportunity, in the first instance, to contest the claim at law. He has or may have a day in court. He may plead and make proof that the claim on him is such as he is not bound to pay."

In Muscatine v. Keokuk N. P. Co., 45 Iowa, 185, the court said: "We are of the opinion that the mere danger of a multiplicity of suits is not sufficient to make these payments compulsory. No adjudicated case has been cited in favor of such proposition."

In Oceanic S. N. Co. v. Tappan, 16 Blatchf. 296, the court said: "It is stated, in general terms, in some of the decisions, that where money is paid to a public officer upon an unlawful demand to save the person paying from the infliction, under color of authority, of great or irreparable injury, from which he can only be saved by making the payment, such payment is made under an urgent and immediate necessity, and may be recovered back. But it will be found that none of these decisions were in cases where the injury apprehended by the party paying could only be inflicted by the decision of a court in favor of the validity of the claim made against him."

The question whether money paid to a tax collector, to avoid prosecution under a void law, constitutes a voluntary payment, has never before, so far as we are advised, been before this court. But it has been held that the payment of an illegal tax, under a threat to sell property in case of non-payment, was a voluntary payment. Bank of Santa Rosa v. Chalfant, 52 Cal. 170; Bucknall v. Story, 46 Cal. 589.

"When a voluntary payment is spoken of, the qualifying word is not used in its ordinary sense; and many payments are held to be voluntary which are made unwillingly, and only as a choice of evils or of risks." Cooley, Tax'n, 811. "All payments are supposed to be voluntary until the contrary appears." Id. 810.

Tested by what we must consider as an established rule, the complaint in this case does not show that the payments alleged to have been made were not voluntary, and therefore fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

Judgment reversed, and the court below is directed to sustain the demurrer to the complaint.

We concur: MCKEE, J.; THORNTON, J.

HEFNER v. URTON. (No. 9,018.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 29, 1886.)

1. MORTGAGE—FORECLOSURE—PARTIES.

In the foreclosure of a mortgage it is necessary to make parties of all persons who have succeeded to any of the rights of the mortgagor in the premises, and any person who claims an interest adverse to the plaintiff, if there is to be a complete settlement of the question involved.

2. SAME—HOMESTEAD—HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Where a married man makes a declaration of homestead in premises which he has previously mortgaged, his wife acquires such an interest in the premises as to be a necessary party in foreclosure proceedings for the complete settlement of the question involved.

3. SAME—ASSISTANCE, WRIT OF—WIFE NOT MADE A PARTY.

Where a wife is a necessary party to a foreclosure proceeding, but has not been joined with her husband, a purchaser at the sale will not be entitled to a writ of assistance against the husband to obtain possession of the land.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sonoma county.

James W. Oates, for plaintiff and appellant. J. T. Campbell and John Goss, for respondent.

MYRICK, J. In January, 1876, the defendant, W. L. Urton, being the owner of certain premises, executed to the plaintiff a promissory note for $2,000, and a mortgage upon the premises to secure the payment of the note, which mortgage was duly recorded. Urton was a married man, residing with his family on the premises. In April, 1876, Urton made and filed for record a declaration of homestead of the premises mortgaged. The note became due in January, 1877, and in February, 1881, an action of foreclosure was commenced; said W. L. Urton being the sole defendant. A decree of foreclosure was made in March, 1881. At the sale under the decree the plaintiff became the purchaser, and a deed was executed to him. After the execution of the deed the plaintiff demanded of defendant that he surrender possession. The demand being refused, plaintiff applied to the court for a writ of assistance. This application was denied, on the ground that the wife was a necessary party to determine the right to a lien upon the homestead. This is the question for consideration on this appeal.

At the time Urton executed the mortgage he had full power and authority so to do, and a lien was thereby created; and the subsequent declaration of homestead did not impair the lien. Civil Code, subd. 4, § 1241. But, in endeavoring to enforce that lien, it was necessary to make parties to the foreclosure all persons who had in the mean time succeeded to any of the rights of the mortgagor in the premises. So, also, any person who claimed an interest in the controversy adverse to the plaintiff, or who was a necessary party to a complete settlement of the question involved, should have been made a party. Urton was the owner of the premises when the mortgage was executed. By the declaration of homestead some portion of his title (just what portion is not necessary now to be determined) passed from him to his wife. He could no longer mortgage or sell unless she joined with him. She had the right of residence thereon with him and the family during their joint lives, with some rights in case she should survive him. She had a right of redemption as his successor in interest. Code Civil Proc. subd. 1, § 701. In order to foreclose her interest, and have a complete settlement of the question involved, viz., whether the mortgage was a lien, she was a necessary party. She would have had a right to question the execution or validity of the mortgage; whether it was barred; whether it had been paid.

It will not do to say that the writ was asked for only as to the husband, and that he should not be heard to object. It would be against the policy of the law to aid in separating the family; to remove the husband, leaving the wife on the premises, and subject him to punishment as for a contempt if he should return to visit her, or supply her with food. We agree with the judge of the court below, that the wife was a necessary party to the foreclosure; and, as she was not a party, the writ was properly denied.

The case of Graham v. Oviatt, 58 Cal. 428, is not in conflict with the views herein expressed.

Order affirmed.

McKINSTRY, J. I concur in the judgment.

Ex parte BERNARD. (No. 20,259.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 30, 1886.)

ARREST—CIVIL PROCESS—AFFIDAVIT FOR—CODE CIVIL PROC. § 479.

An affidavit for an order of arrest under section 479, Code Civil Proc. Cal., need not, in order to show that the defendant's proposed departure from the state is with intent to defraud his creditors, allege that he is about to remove any of his assets or property.

Department 1. On habeas corpus from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

This was a petition for a writ of habeas corpus filed by B. S. Bernard. The petitioner had been placed under arrest by an order of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, issued on an affidavit made by one Borowsky, plaintiff in an action on a contract pending in that court against the petitioner. The affidavit alleged, in substance, that the petitioner was about to depart the state with intent to defraud his creditors, but did not state or show that he was about to remove any of his assets or property from the state.

Wm. H. Sharp, for petitioner. Crittenden Thornton and F. H. Merzbach, for respondent.

BY THE COURT. We are of opinion that the affidavit on which the judge of the superior court made the order of arrest stated facts and circumstances tending to show that the petitioner was about to depart from the state with intent to defraud his creditors. We therefore decline to discharge the petitioner from arrest.

The petitioner is remanded to custody, and the writ is discharged.

THOMAS v. ENGLAND and another. (No. 9,805.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 28, 1886.)

1. WAYS—PRIVATE—PRESCRIPTION—ADVERSE POSSESSION—IMPLIED CONSENT OF OWNER OF SERVIENT ESTATE.

The laws of California, fixing the time in which a right by prescription shall be acquired, have not changed the common-law requirements as to the manner of acquiring such right. It must still be by adverse possession; and, one of the requisites of adverse possession being that it shall not be with the consent, express or implied, of the owner of the alleged servient estate, where, in an action to establish a right of way, the court finds that the use of the way by plaintiff, claiming title by prescription, was with the implied consent of the owner of the land over which the way passed, a judgment for defendant is proper.¹

2. SAME—QUESTION FOR JURY.

The question whether a possession is adverse is for the jury, or the court sitting as such, and, in an action to establish a right of way by prescription, the finding of the court on that question, in the absence of the testimony from the record, will be presumed to be correct.

Commissioners' decision.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Benito county.

Montgomery & Scott and Brotherton & Herrington, for appellant. N. C. Briggs, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This is an action to establish a right of way over the land of defendants, and to bar and enjoin them from closing or obstructing the same. The claim of plaintiff is that on the first day of September, 1874, he entered upon the land over which the right of way is claimed, constructed a roadway thereon, and thence hitherto, until the fourteenth of February, 1884, maintained said roadway, and continuously maintained said roadway under a claim of right, adversely to the defendants and their predecessors. The answer denies the adverse user of the right of way, avers that it was by permission of the owner of the land, and states facts which, if true, would constitute a license from the owner to plaintiff. Certain interrogatories were submitted to a jury, and passed upon by them. The court adopted these findings, and prepared others in addition thereto, upon which judgment was rendered in favor of defendants. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment.

Respondent moves to dismiss the appeal upon the grounds: (1) That it does not appear that the notice of appeal was ever filed; (2) that it does not appear that the notice, if filed, was filed before the filing of the undertaking on appeal herein.

The objections are met by the record and certificate of the clerk of the court below, showing the notice of appeal to have been filed October 18, 1884, and that the undertaking on appeal was filed the same day. The motion to dismiss should be denied. In former times prescription implied a claim to an incorporeal hereditament arising from the same having been enjoyed for so long a time that there was no existing evidence as to the period when such user and enjoyment commenced. Its origin must have been at a time "whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary." Prescription, as known to the common law, applied to the manner of acquiring or losing a right by the effect of the lapse of time, as contradistinguished from the mode of acquiring title to a thing itself by the effect given to a long possession or enjoyment of it. The former applied to intangible rights capable of enjoyment without title to the thing out of which they flow, or to which they attach, while the latter related to the thing itself. Prescription, as understood and interpreted in modern times, raises a legal presumption of title under a grant, but is not conclusive, and may be rebutted by other evidence. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 17; Sargent v. Ballard, 9 Pick. 251; Corning v. Gould, 16 Wend. 531.

In this state, however, under section 1007 of the Civil Code, "occupancy for the period prescribed by the Code of Civil Procedure as sufficient to bar an action for the recovery of the property confers a title thereto, denominated a title by prescription, which is sufficient against all." This section merely fixes the time in which a right by prescription shall be acquired, but does not alter the requisites which before the Code were essential to the growth of a prescriptive right. Woodruff v. North B. G. M. Co., 18 Fed. Rep. 753. The user must be adverse to the true owner. Anaheim W. Co. v. Semi-tropic W. Co., 64 Cal. 185.

If the user must be adverse, then it must be accompanied by the elements required to make out an adverse possession. These elements were well stated in Unger v. Mooney, 63 Cal. 595, as follows: "(1) The possession must be by actual occupation, open and notorious, not clandestine. (2) It must be hostile to the plaintiff's title. (3) It must be held under a claim of title, exclusive of any other right, as one's own. (4) It must be continuous and uninterrupted for a period of five years prior to the commencement of the action. (5) Since the passage of the proviso to section 325 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in 1878, payment of taxes."

For the findings it appears that William Thomas, deceased, and the plaintiff herein, were twin brothers, living upon adjoining land, to which they had applied for title from the government of the United States. The brothers sustained towards each other relations of a mutually friendly character. In going to and coming from the nearest highway leading to Hollister, plaintiff was accustomed from September 1, 1874, to February, 1884, to pass over the land of William. This was done by the implied assent of William. Plaintiff graded the road, and William placed gates thereon. Plaintiff claimed the right to use such road, but never informed William of such claim, and he was never aware thereof, nor were his heirs aware of such claim until 1883. William Thomas died January 4, 1880, leaving as his only surviving heirs his widow, Elizabeth, and a son, A. B. Thomas, then and now a minor under the age of 18 years. A patent issued from the government of the United States to the heirs of William Thomas, dated May 1, 1875, but such patent was not delivered to the heirs until November, 1882. Plaintiff offered to purchase the right of way from the heirs of William Thomas, deceased, but the date of such offer can only be determined inferentially from the findings.

To perfect an easement by occupancy for five years, the enjoyment must be adverse, continuous, open, peaceable. It must be adverse, and under claim of a legal right, and not by the consent, permission, or indulgence, merely, of the owner of the alleged servient estate. This is quite obvious in cases where the consent, permission, or license is expressly given. But it is no less true where the permission or license is implied, as it may well be from the facts and circumstances under which the use was enjoyed. Bradley's Fish Co. v. Dudley, 37 Conn. 136. The question is one for the jury, or for a court sitting as such, to determine as a fact, in the light of the relations between the parties, and all the surrounding circumstances. Putnam v. Bowker, 11 Cush. 542. The finding of the court is that the right of plaintiff to pass over the land was always with the implied permission of William Thomas, his heirs and personal representatives. In the absence of the testimony we are bound to suppose there was evidence sufficient to support this and other findings, and they are sufficient to support the judgment, and defeat plaintiff's right to recover.

We are of opinion the judgment of the court below should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed, and the motion to dismiss the appeal is denied

BLACKWOOD v. CUTTING PACKING CO. (No. 9,581.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 28, 1886.)

JUDGMENT—SETTING ASIDE DEFAULT—STIPULATION EXTENDING TIME TO ANSWER.

A complaint was filed on the fifth day of January, 1884, and on the same day it was stipulated with the defendants that they should have until the eleventh of the month in which to answer. On the ninth of the month this time was extended "to, and to include, February 17, 1884," which was Sunday and a holiday. On the eighteenth of the month a default was entered, and a judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiff for the amount of his demand, and costs. A notice of motion was then served and filed by the defendants, on the same day, to set aside the judgment, and allow an answer to be filed. Held, that although the stipulation was not filed or entered in accordance with subdivision 1, § 283, Code Civil Proc. Cal., and was not, therefore, legally binding upon the trial court, yet, as the defendants seem to have relied upon it in good faith as giving them the right to answer on the said eighteenth day of February, the judgment should be set aside, and defendant allowed to file his answer.

Commissioners' decision.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county.

Action to recover an alleged balance due on a sale of apricots. Judgment against defendants by default. Defendants, on the same day, moved the court to open the default, and its motion was denied. Chickering & Thomas and Warren Olney, for appellant. A. A. Moore and Geo. W. Reed, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. The plaintiff brought an action against the defendant for an alleged balance due on a sale of some apricots. The complaint was filed on the fifth day of January, 1884, and summons served on the eighth day of the same month and year. On the eighteenth day of February of that year a default was entered and a judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiff, for the amount of his demand, and costs. Upon that same day a notice of motion was served and filed to set aside the default and judgment, in these words:

"To the Plaintiff, and A. A. Moore and George W. Reed, his Attorneys: You will please take notice that on Friday, the twenty-ninth day of February, 1884, at the hour of 10 o'clock A. M., or as soon thereafter as counsel can be heard, at the court-room of this court, department No. 2, in the courthouse, at the city of Oakland, Alameda county, California, we shall move said court for an order setting aside the judgment and default heretofore entered against said defendant, and granting said defendant leave to file an answer to the complaint in said action.

"Said motion will be made and based upon the following grounds, to-wit: (1) That said default was taken against said defendant before the time allowed by law for answering, and the extension in writing, by the stipulation of said plaintiff's attorneys, had expired; (2) on the ground of the mistake, inadvertence, and excusable neglect of defendant's attorneys.

"Said motion will be made upon the papers on file herein, and upon the affidavits, copies of which are hereto attached and served herewith.

"Yours, etc.,

CHICKERING & THOMAS,

"Dated February 18, 1884.

"Attorneys for Defendant."

The affidavits of merit, made in support of the motion, by one of the attorneys for defendant, and Mr. Cutting, the vice-president of the corporation sued in the action, are as follows:

"State of California, City and County of San Francisco. William Thomas, being duly sworn, deposes and says: I am one of the attorneys for the defendant in the above-entitled action. The vice-president of the said defendant has fully and fairly stated to me the facts of the said case, and I have advised him and believe that said defendant has a good defense thereto on the merits. We were retained in the case on the fifteenth of February, 1884. As there was but little time to prepare the papers, I at once prepared a stipulation, allowing us a few more days within which to answer, and sent it to Oakland by B. Noyes, Esq., a member of the bar, employed in our office, requesting him to see one of the plaintiff's attorneys, and ask for such time. I am informed by said Noyes, and therefore believe, that he called at the office of said plaintiff's attorneys on the afternoon of the sixteenth inst., but could not find said attorneys, both of them being absent; that said Noyes believed and understood that defendant's time to answer did not expire until the close of the eighteenth day of February, 1884. I have always understood the terms of the stipulation set out in the affidavit of Francis Cutting, filed herewith, to give the whole of the succeeding day, when the last day expressed therein falls on a Sunday, and such, I am informed, is the general belief of the members of the bar of this city and county. WILLIAM THOMAS."

(Duly verified.)

"State of California, City and County of San Francisco. Francis Cutting, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is the vice-president of the defendant corporation in the above-entitled action; that he has fully and fairly stated the facts of the above-entitled case to his counsel, Chickering & Thomas, and that he is advised by said counsel that the defendant corporation has a good defense on the merits of the said action; that A. D. Cutler is an employe of said corporation, and was such employe on February 5, 1884; that on said last date George W. Reed, one of the plaintiff's attorneys, addressed to said Cutler a letter in the words following, to-wit:

" 'OAKLAND, February 5, 1884.

" 'Mr. A. D. Cutler—DEAR SIR: Mr. Blackwood called to see us to-day in regard to the last suit brought against Cutting Packing Company. He desired me to say to you that the defendant might have until February 11, 1884, within which time to answer, and the time is hereby extended until that time. In regard to the proposition made by you concerning the amending of the complaint, I will talk with Mr. Moore, and advise you to-morrow.

" 'Yours truly,

GEO. W. REED.'

"That the above-entitled action is the 'last suit' mentioned in said letter; that on February 9, 1884, affiant saw A. A. Moore, one of plaintiff's attorneys, who indorsed on the back of said letter the following, to-wit:

" 'Time to answer in this case is hereby extended to, and to include, February 17, 1884.

A. A. MOORE, Attorney for Plaintiff.'

"February 9, 1884.

FRANCIS CUTTING."

Upon the hearing of the motion, its counsel stated that the defendant had prepared a verified answer to the complaint, which was then and there offered to be filed if the court would allow it, after setting aside the default and vacating the judgment. The court denied the motion, and from the order made therein, and the judgment rendered against it, the defendant appeals.

It appears by the record, from a letter dated February 5, 1884, of one of the plaintiff's attorneys, that the defendant was granted until the eleventh of February, 1884, in which to answer; that on the ninth of the same month, this time was extended "to, and to include, February 17, 1884."

The affidavits of merit were sufficient in form and matter, and the stipulation under consideration, had it been entered or filed, in accordance with subdivision 1, § 283, Code Civil Proc., would have entitled the defendant to have answered at any time on Monday, the eighteenth day of February, 1884, (sections 10, 12, 13, Code Civil Proc.,) since the seventeenth day of February, 1884, fell on Sunday, which was a holiday, and that which was fixed in the stipulation to be performed on that day (viz., the filing of the answer) could have been done on the next day, which was Monday, the eighteenth day of February, 1884.

It was not filed or entered, and was not, therefore, legally binding upon the trial court. Nevertheless, the parties defendant seem to have relied upon it in good faith as a stipulation, which gave them the right to answer the complaint on the said eighteenth day of February. They appeared at once in court on the same day that default was taken, and offered to file an answer then and there if permitted.

Under all the circumstances of this case it would seem that it was one in which a wise discretion might have been exercised in granting the defendant's motion. Therefore we think that the judgment and order should be reversed, and the defendant given a reasonable time in which to answer the complaint.

We concur : BELCHER, C. C. ; SEARLS, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed and cause remanded, with leave to defendant to answer within a reasonable time.

McGRATH v. HYDE. (No. 11,607.)

APPEAL—WHEN TAKEN—FILING NOTICE AND UNDERTAKING—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—TRANSCRIPT.

Where final judgment was entered August 20, 1885, nunc pro tunc as of January 13, 1885, and notice of appeal from the judgment and decree, and undertaking on appeal, were filed October 10, 1885, by defendant, and the time for preparing and serving a bill of exceptions extended to that day, and the bill was served October 8, 1885, and submitted to the court October 28, 1885, pursuant to notice served on the plaintiff's attorney, October 23d, and finally settled May 7, 1886, a motion to dismiss the appeal made April 30, 1886, will be denied; the appellant, under rule 2 of the supreme court of California, having 40 days from the time of settling the bill of exceptions to file his transcript, and the bill having been served and filed in time.

Commissioners' decision.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

The grounds of the motion to dismiss were that no statement or bill of exceptions had been prepared, served, or filed, and that no transcript had been filed; that the time for filing said statement or bill of exceptions and transcript had expired.

E. B. Holladay, for appellant. M. Cooney, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This is a motion on behalf of the plaintiff to dismiss an appeal prosecuted by the defendant. Rule 2 of this court requires the appellant to file his transcript within 40 days after the appeal is perfected, and the bill of exceptions and statement (if there be any) are settled.

There are two certificates of the clerk of the superior court on file, from which it appears that final judgment was entered in the cause against defendant August 20, 1885, nunc pro tunc, as of January 13, 1885; that on October 10, 1885, defendant filed her notice of appeal from the judgment and decree, and on the same day filed an undertaking on appeal in the sum of $300. A notice of appeal by defendant from the final judgment had been previously filed on the seventeenth day of September, 1885; but, so far as appears, the appeal was not perfected by filing an undertaking. Defendant had also, on the twenty-ninth day of July, 1885, perfected an appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial in the cause. A bill of exceptions was prepared by defendant, and submitted to the court for settlement, on the twenty-eighth of October, 1885, pursuant to a notice served on plaintiff's attorney, October 23d, and such amendments were made thereto, and proceedings had therein, that the exceptions were finally settled and signed by the judge of the superior court May 7, 1886. It further appears that the time for preparing and serving the bill of exceptions was extended to October 10, 1885, and that it was served upon the attorney for plaintiff on the eighth day of October, 1885. Notice of this motion was served April 30, 1886.

As a bill of exceptions had been prepared and served, and had not yet been settled by the judge when this motion was made, the motion to dismiss the appeal should be denied. Appellant was entitled to 40 days within which to file her transcript after the bill was settled. If unwarranted delay was had in the settlement of the bill of exceptions after it was proposed, the court below was the proper forum in which to seek redress.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

FISK v. ATKINSON and another. (No. 9,017.)*(Supreme Court of California. December 27, 1886.)ACTION OR SUIT—ABATEMENT—ACTION PENDING APPEAL.

An action commenced during the pendency of an appeal from a judgment sustaining a demurrer to plaintiff's complaint, in a suit on the same cause of action brought by the same plaintiff against the same defendant, will be abated.

For commissioners' opinion, see 10 Pac. Rep. 374.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Joseph Mee, for appellant. A. Campbell, Sr., and Cambell & Sanderson, for respondents.

FOOTE, C. We adhere to the opinion formerly expressed by us in this cause, which was approved by Department 2 of this court. 10 Pac. Rep. 374. In the action instituted in San Mateo county, the pendency of which was pleaded in abatement of the present suit, a demurrer was sustained to the complaint, and, the plaintiff declining to amend his pleading, judgment passed for the defendants. From that judgment an appeal was taken by the plaintiff, pending which the present suit for the same cause of action, between the same parties, was brought in the city and county of San Francisco. The plaintiff had an opportunity in his former action to have amended his complaint, but did not choose to do so, preferring rather to prosecute an appeal from the judgment rendered therein, and to commence another suit, with the same subject-matter, against the same parties, in another county, without dismissing that appeal. His last action was therefore unnecessary and vexatious, and should be abated, and the judgment in this cause should be the same as that heretofore rendered by Department 2.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; SEARLS, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and cause remanded, with directions to the court below to enter judgment in favor of defendant Byrnes, that the action abate, and for his costs and disbursements.

COHN v. CENTRAL PAC. R. CO. (No. 11,519.)*(Supreme Court of California. December 30, 1886.)1. ACTION OR SUIT—VENUE—CHANGE OF—CORPORATION—PRINCIPAL PLACE OF BUSINESS—CONST. CAL. ART. 12, § 16.

Under section 16, art. 12, Const. Cal., providing that "a corporation or association may be sued in the county where the contract is made, or is to be performed, or where the obligation or liability arises or the breach occurred, or in the county where the principal place of business of such corporation is situate, subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial, as in other cases," a railroad company, the principal place of business of which is in San Francisco, when sued in Los Angeles county for damages for breach of a contract made in San Francisco, to be performed out of the state, and the breach of which occurred outside of the state, is entitled to a change of venue to San Francisco county.

2. SAME—CORPORATION—"RESIDENCE" OF—CODE CIVIL PROC. CAL. § 395.

When the affidavit on which an application for a change of venue is based, states that the principal place of business of the defendant, a corporation, is San Francisco, held, that such place is its "residence," within the meaning of that term as used in section 395, Code Civil Proc. Cal., fixing the place of trial of actions; following Jenkins v. California Stage Co., 22 Cal. 538. MYRICK, J., dissents.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Howard & Scott, for appellant. Glassell, Smith & Patton and Howard & Roberts, for respondent.

MCKEE, J. This is an action against the corporation defendant, in which the superior court of Los Angeles county changed the place of trial of the action to the city and county of San Francisco. The basis of the application upon which the court ordered the change of venue was an affidavit, verified by the attorney of the corporation, showing that the residence of the corporation was, at the commencement of the action, in the city and county of San Francisco, and that that was the proper place for the trial of the case. Upon that showing, in connection with the pleadings in the case, the court made the order from which the plaintiff appeals.

Section 16, art. 12, of the constitution, ordains: "A corporation or association may be sued in the county where the contract is made, or is to be performed, or where the obligation or liability arises, or the breach occurred, or in the county where the principal place of business of such corporation is situate, subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial, as in other cases."

Now, the action in hand was brought to recover damages for breach of a contract, which, as it appears by the complaint in the action, was made in the city and county of San Francisco, to be performed outside the state, and the breach of which occurred outside the state. The action was not brought in the county where the contract was made, nor where it was to be performed, nor in the county where the breach occurred, or where the obligation and liability arose; nor was it brought in the county of the alleged residence of the defendant. It was brought in Los Angeles county. Therefore the county designated in the complaint was not the proper county, unless the residence of the defendant was unknown to the plaintiff. If that were the fact, then the action was properly brought, under section 395, Code Civil Proc., and could be tried in the county designated in the complaint, subject, however, even upon that assumption, to the power of the court to change the place of trial to the place of defendant's residence. According to the uncontroverted statement in the affidavit, "the principal place of business of said defendant corporation was, at the time of the filing of the complaint in the action, and still is, at the city and county of San Francisco."

In Jenkins v. California Stage Co., 22 Cal. 538, this court held that the principal place of business of a corporation is its "residence," within the meaning of that term as used in section 20 of the practice act, fixing the place of trial. Section 20 of the practice act was re-enacted by section 395, Code Civil Proc. The order appealed from was therefore properly entered upon the authority of that case, unless the case itself had been overruled.

It is contended that it has been overruled by the decision in California Southern R. Co. v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 65 Cal. 394; S. C. 4 Pac. Rep. 344. But that case arose out of a proceeding in rem to condemn a tract of land under the law of eminent domain. Upon an application by the defendant in the case the lower court refused to order the place of trial to be changed from San Diego county to the city and county of San Francisco, the alleged residence of defendant; and this court, on appeal, affirmed the order entered by the court below, because the land sought to be condemned was situated in San Diego county, and the condemnatory proceeding was properly brought in San Diego county, and had to be tried there. That was the only question raised and decided in the case. The other question, whether a domestic corporation had any place of residence in the state where it was entitled, as matter of right, to the trial of a suit brought against it in another county, did not necessarily arise in the case, and the expressions of opinion in the case upon that question are not authoritative. Therefore the case does not overrule Jenkins v. California Stage Co.; and, under the constitutional provisions of section 16, art. 12, supra, and upon the authority of that case, the court below, upon the affidavit made in this case, properly granted a change of venue. Order affirmed.

We concur: MORRISON, C. J.; MCKINSTRY, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

MYRICK, J., (concurring.) I concur in the judgment, because, under section 16, art. 12, Const., the action should have been brought in the city and county of San Francisco. The contract was there made. It was not to be performed in the county of Los Angeles, nor did the obligation or liability arise, or the breach occur, in the latter county. Besides, the principal place of business of the corporation is situated in the city and county of San Francisco. I do not, however, join in approval of Jenkins v. California Stage Co.

MYERS v. MOULTON and others. (No. 11,108.)*(Supreme Court of California. December 31, 1886.)1. PARTNERSHIP—AUTHORITY OF PARTNER—SELLING ALL PARTNERSHIP PROPERTY—STALLION NOT MERCHANDISE—CIVIL CODE CAL. SUBD. 3, § 2430.

Under section 2430, subd. 3, Civil Code Cal., providing that a partner, as such, has no authority "to dispose of the whole of the partnership property at once, unless it consists entirely of merchandise," a stallion kept for breeding purposes is not merchandise.

2. SALE—BILL OF SALE—LIEN.

Plaintiff sold a stallion to A., who, as security for a loan, gave a bill of sale of 70 head of horses to B. The testimony tended to show that the stallion was included in the bill of sale. Plaintiff bought back the stallion from A., and directed that it be delivered into the possession of B., from whom he seeks to recover it. Held that, the court having found for B., it must have found, under the testimony, that the stallion was included in the bill of sale, and on delivery into his possession the lien arising from his bill of sale attached, and he was entitled to possession.

3. SAME—OFFER TO PAY ON CONDITION WHICH LIENEE WAS NOT BOUND TO PERFORM.
A. offered to pay up the debt to B. if certain horses that had been driven away were returned, but he did not in fact pay it, or tender any money to pay it. Held, the offer of A., on conditions which it does not appear that B. was bound to perform, did not release the lien.
4. REPLEVIN—JOINT JUDGMENT FOR DEFENDANTS HAVING SEPARATE DEFENSES.
Two defendants in replevin, sued jointly, answered separately; one claiming title to one-half the property, the other claiming a lien to secure a loan. The judgment for defendants was a joint judgment. Held that, as they were sued jointly, there was no error in entering a joint judgment in their favor.
5. SAME—JUDGMENT AWARDING VALUE IF NO RETURN, WHERE DEFENDANTS ASK ONLY FOR RETURN—CODE CIVIL PROC. CAL. § 667.
In replevin, defendants alleged, and the court found, the value of the horse, and that it was taken from them at the commencement of the action. Defendants prayed only for its return. Held to justify a judgment awarding defendants the value of the horse in case a return thereof could not be made; section 667, Code Civil Proc. Cal., providing therefor in such a case.

Commissioners' decision.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Lassen county.

E. V. Spencer, for appellant. J. D. Goodwin, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. C. This action was brought to recover from the defendants the possession or value of a wagon, set of double harness, and a horse. At the commencement of the action the plaintiff claimed a delivery of the property to himself, and by proper proceedings took it from the defendants. The defendants answered separately; each admitting that he was in possession of the property when the action was commenced, and denying all the other allegations of the complaint, and then, averring the value of the property, and that it had been taken from him, demanded judgment for its return.

After trial the court below found that the plaintiff was the owner and entitled to the possession of the wagon and set of harness, and that he was not the owner or entitled to the possession of the horse, but the defendants were lawfully in its possession, and, as against plaintiff, entitled to its possession. Judgment was then entered that the defendants have a return of the horse, with damages in the sum of $1 for its detention and their costs, or, in case a return could not be had, that they recover from the plaintiff its value, fixed at $600. The plaintiff moved for a new trial, and, his motion being denied, appealed from the judgment and order.

It appears from the evidence that the plaintiff and the wife of defendant Moulton were partners, engaged in the business of stock-raising upon a ranch owned by them in Lassen county. They owned, in equal shares, a large band of horses, and also the horse in question, which was a stallion, known as J. W. Mackay, and was kept upon the ranch for breeding purposes. Defendant Moulton lived upon the ranch, and took charge of the business and property for his wife. About the first of January, 1884, the horse was pledged to one Frank Horn to secure the payment of a sum of money borrowed for ranch purposes. Horn took and held possession of the horse till sometime in June following. On the seventh of June, 1884, plaintiff made a bill of sale, which reads as follows:

"MADELINE PLAINS, LASSEN COUNTY, CAL.,

"MOULTON & MYERS' RANCH, June 7, 1884.

"Know all men by these presents that I, Jacob Myers, party of the first part, do sell all my real and personal property located in Lassen county, Cal., to John T. Alexander and J. C. Frazer, of the same county and state, for the sum of $3,000, gold coin of the United States, for value received, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged.

[Signed]

"JACOB MYERS."

On the eleventh of June, 1884, Alexander, the grantee in the Myers bill of sale, executed a bill of sale to the defendant Bonyman, by which he bargained and sold "to E. Bonyman, seventy head of horses, more or less, wagons, hay-rake, mowing-machine, harness, stove, cooking utensils, all the hay on the land, and all appurtenances remaining on hand on the Myers & Moulton ranch, situate on the Madeline Plains, for the sum of $400 cash in hand paid."

This last bill of sale was given to secure the payment of $400, which Alexander borrowed of Bonyman, and for which he gave his promissory note. The plaintiff afterwards bought the horse back from Alexander, and then, with his individual money, paid to Horn the sum of $300, to secure the payment of which the horse was held by him in pledge. On redeeming the horse, plaintiff directed that he be delivered into the possession of defendant Bonyman, who was then with Moulton upon the Moulton & Myers ranch, and he was so delivered on the twenty-sixth day of June. At some time—it does not appear when—Alexander offered to pay the note given by him to Bonyman, if certain horses that had been driven away were returned, but he did not in fact pay it, or tender any money to pay it. Moulton and Bonyman remained on the ranch, and retained possession of the horse until this action was commenced, on the twenty-eighth day of November, 1884.

It is argued for appellant that when Myers made his bill of sale, on the seventh of June, he transferred the entire interest of Moulton & Myers in the horse and other property of the firm, and the partnership was thereby dissolved, and that when he bought the horse back from Alexander he became its sole owner, subject only to the lien of Horn. This claim cannot be maintained. "Every general partner is agent for the partnership in the transaction of its business, and has authority to do whatever is necessary to carry on such business in the ordinary manner, and for this purpose may bind his copartners by an agreement in writing," (section 2429, Civil Code;) but a partner, as such, has no authority "to dispose of the whole of the partnership property at once, unless it consists entirely of merchandise," (section 2430, subd. 3, Civil Code.)

The words used in the bill of sale are, "do sell all my real and personal property." This language does not purport to transfer the interest of the seller's copartner; and, if it did, it is clear that he had no power to transfer it. The horse was a stallion, kept and used for breeding purposes, and its sale was not necessary to carry on the business of the firm in the ordinary manner; and, besides, it was not "merchandise" within the meaning of that word as used in the subdivision above quoted from the Civil Code.

It must follow that, notwithstanding the bill of sale, Mrs. Moulton remained the owner of an undivided half interest in the horse, and, as such owner, had the same right to its possession as her co-owner. When, therefore, the plaintiff bought the horse back from Alexander, he bought only the half interest which he had sold, and that half interest was subject to any valid liens created upon it while Alexander held the title.

It is also argued that Bonyman acquired no interest in the horse by his bill of sale from Alexander, because the horse was not included in that bill of sale; and, if it was included, that then his lien was released, and his interest divested, when Alexander offered to pay his note if the horses which had been driven away were returned.

The answer to this is—First, that the testimony tends to show that the horse was intended to be and was included in the bill of sale, and, in support of the judgment, it must be presumed that the court so found; and, second, when the horse was delivered into the possession of Bonyman, and the lien upon a half interest in him, created by the bill of sale, at once attached, and that lien was not released by an offer from Alexander to pay his note, on conditions which, so far as we are advised, Bonyman was not bound to perform. Section 1494, Civil Code. This must be so, for the reason that it does not appear from the record what horses, if any, had been driven away, where they were driven to, who drove them, or under what circumstances or claim of right it was done. It may be that they were taken by Mrs. Moulton, the owner of the other undivided half interest in them, and, if so, she had a right to their possession. It cannot be said, therefore, that Bonyman was bound to return them.

The case, then, is this: When the action was brought, the horse was upon the Moulton & Myers ranch, in possession of the defendants Moulton and Bonyman. Mrs. Moulton owned one-half of the horse, and her husband held possession for her. Bonyman had the other half in pledge, and as pledgee also held possession. Plaintiff demanded that the horse be given over into his exclusive possession, and the defendants refused to comply with this demand. The question is, were they justified in their refusal? The court below thought they were, and to us its conclusions seem correct. Certainly the plaintiff could not have taken the horse from Mrs. Moulton, his co-owner; and, as her husband held for her, his possession was her possession. So the plaintiff had no right to take the horse from Bonyman so long as he held it under a valid pledge.

But it is said the judgment was a joint one, and erroneous for that reason. The defendants were sued jointly, and, though they answered separately, we see no error in entering a joint judgment in their favor.

It is further said that the judgment is erroneous, because it awards to the defendants the value of the horse in case a return thereof cannot be had. They alleged, and the court found, the value of the horse, and that it was taken from them at the commencement of the action. They prayed only for its return. This was sufficient to justify the judgment entered. The Code provides: "If the property has been delivered to the plaintiff, and the defendant claims a return thereof, judgment for the defendant may be for a return of the property, or the value thereof in case a return cannot be had, and damages for taking and withholding the same." Section 667, Code Civil Proc.

We find no error in the record, and the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

STARKIE v. PERRY. (No. 9,766.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 31, 1886.)

PARENT AND CHILD—ACCOUNTING MADE IN LOCO PARENTIS—CLAIM FOR BOARD AND CLOTHING.

Where plaintiff took defendant on the death of her mother, who was his sister, to live in his home "as a member of his family," where she continued during her minority, and, after she came of age, to labor constantly, doing house-work and helping in farm-work, plaintiff cannot recover from her, or set off against a judgment against him for a balance due defendant from him, as administrator of her mother's estate, sums claimed to have been expended by him in board and clothes for defendant during and after her minority, his position being that of a parent while she was in his house.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Marin county.

Action to settle a trust. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals.

E. S. Lippitt, for appellant. Wm. B. Haskell, for respondent.

MCKEE, J. In this case the plaintiff, by the allegations in his complaint, admits having received for the defendant, between the year 1873 and the commencement of the action, the sum of $575, as her portion of the estate of her deceased mother; but he claims to have paid, laid out, and expended for the defendant, between the same times, for the necessary clothing, board, and lodging, a sum of money exceeding that which he received for her, for which, it is alleged, defendant has refused to settle with him; therefore he brought the action in hand to have his account settled and allowed, and to obtain judgment that he be discharged and released from his trust as to the moneys which he received for her.

Upon an answer specifically denying the allegations of the complaint, and setting up a counter-claim for work and labor done by the defendant for the plaintiff at his request, the case was tried, and the court, by its decision, finds that the necessary board, clothing, and lodging of the defendant, for the time stated in the complaint, were furnished by the plaintiff under the following circumstances, namely: In the year 1870 the mother of the defendant died in Marin county, seized and possessed of some real and personal property; and the plaintiff, who was the brother of deceased and the uncle of defendant, was appointed and qualified as administrator of the estate; and, while acting in that capacity, he took his niece, the defendant, in the year 1873, to live in his home, "as a member of his family." At that time defendant was a minor about fifteen years old; and she continued to live with the plaintiff for about seven years; during which time, the court finds, "she labored constantly, doing house-work and helping in the farm-work, milking cows and working in the field," and he "boarded and cared for the defendant and expended for her for clothing $275.50." The value of her board and lodging was less than the value of her work and labor. How much the one exceeded the other the court does not find; but it held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover for the board and lodging of the defendant, but was entitled to recover the value of the clothes furnished her, and for that sum, with interest, judgment was given in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant.

The appeal is from the judgment. We think the judgment erroneous, because, when the defendant became "a member of the family" of her uncle, at his request, the uncle stood towards her in loco parentis, and, in that relation, he was bound in law to support and maintain her according to his circumstances. Section 196, Civil Code. Her support and maintenance included necessaries of food, clothes, and lodging, for which he could not charge her, as a member of his family, any more than he could charge for such things one of his own children. And the fact that the defendant continued to be a member of the family after she attained her majority did not change the quasi paternal relation existing between herself and her uncle. The relation still continued, unless changed by some understanding or contract, express or implied, between herself and her uncle, which brought her under an obligation to pay for her maintenance. But the plaintiff does not claim and there were no proofs of any contract, express or implied, which changed the relation established by the plaintiff himself between him and his niece into one of master and servant, or which bound her to pay him for a service he voluntarily assumed to perform for her.

The service rendered by the plaintiff in maintenance of the defendant as a member of his family was gratuitous. So, also, were the services rendered by the defendant in the home of the plaintiff. No cause of action arises out of gratuitous services; therefore, neither the plaintiff nor defendant had any cause of action against the other to recover for the value of such services.

Admittedly, plaintiff was trustee of the defendant as to the money which he received for her from the estate of her mother; and, as such, he must be held to the same degree of responsibility as if he had been formally appointed her guardian. In accounting for the fund, he will not be allowed to avail himself of his fiduciary character for any object of personal benefit. Hence, he ought not to be allowed for any portion of it which he may have appropriated as compensation to himself for a service voluntarily rendered in maintenance of his cestui que trust as a member of his family. For that purpose the trust fund was not legally chargeable. The court therefore erred in allowing the plaintiff, in the settlement of his trust, the benefit of any portion of the fund as compensation to himself, for clothes furnished to the defendant in her maintenance as a member of his family.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded.

COCHRAN v. JEWELL. (No. 9,365.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 31, 1886.)

DAMAGES—ACTION ON CONTRACT FOR SALE.

In this action, which is for a breach of contract for the sale of hops, held, on the evidence, that plaintiff was entitled to one-half the judgment rendered by the court below. THORNTON and McKEE, JJ., dissenting.

Commissioners' decision.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

E. S. Lippitt, for appellant. York & Whitworth, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This is an action to recover damages for the breach of a contract alleged to have been made on the twenty-fourth day of November, 1882, for the sale and delivery to plaintiff of 97 bales of hops, weighing 14,596 pounds, at the price of 80 cents per pound. The case was tried before a jury, and a verdict was returned in favor of plaintiff for $2,189.40, on which judgment was entered. The defendant moved for a new trial, and the plaintiff was required by the court to remit from his judgment $729.40, and, having done so, the motion was denied. The defendant then appealed from the judgment and order.

When the alleged contract was made, the defendant resided and had his hops in Sonoma county. The contract was made through the agency of his son, and a broker in the city of San Francisco. It is claimed for the appellant that neither the son nor the broker had any authority to sell the hops for less than 90 cents per pound, and the contract was therefore made without any authority, and was void. On the other hand, it is claimed, and we think there was testimony tending to show, that the contract was ratified by the defendant after he had knowledge of it. We cannot, therefore, reverse the judgment on the ground that the verdict was not justified by the evidence.

It is further claimed for the appellant that the court erred in giving and refusing instructions to the jury. After carefully looking at the instructions we are unable to see that any substantial error was committed in this respect. The instructions given by the court of its own motion and at the request of the parties seem to cover all the points involved, and to fully, fairly, and correctly state the law of the case.

But we are unable to see why, when the court below was requiring the plaintiff to remit from his judgment an amount equal to five cents for each pound of the hops, it did not make the amount equal to ten cents. It appears from the evidence that a few hours after the contract of sale was made the son went back to the broker's office, and told the broker that "he had sold too cheap," and that he wished to have the contract canceled. The son and broker then went to the plaintiff's office, and asked him to cancel the contract. The plaintiff declined, and, according to his testimony, the following conversation was had: "I told him I could not cancel, as hops were going up. He said his father was interested in the hops, and that his father had been offered 90 cents at Petaluma, and he had been offered 90 cents here after he had sold them. I told him I had been offered 90 cents per pound for them since I bought them, but that I would cancel the contract for 5 cents per pound. He wanted it left open until he could go and consult with his father to see whether he wanted to pay the difference—5 cents—or deliver. I told him I would leave it open till 12 o'clock the next day,—a Saturday. He said he would go home and consult his father, and would telegraph me what he wanted to do. The next morning he telegraphed me that he would keep the hops. The telegram marked 'F' is the one I received. It was received on the 25th, the day it was sent, before 12 o'clock M., according to agreement."

The telegram referred to was signed by the son, and in the following words: "Will keep hops and pay difference."

The plaintiff further testified that he afterwards met the defendant, and that, after stating to him in detail the facts of the case, the defendant said: "Well, we went, and we consulted a lawyer, and we telegraphed you that we would pay that." From this it appears that the plaintiff agreed in advance to accept five cents per pound as the measure of his damages in case of the non-delivery of the hops. This being so, why should he now be permitted to exact more?

Upon the question of what was the real damage sustained by the plaintiff, the evidence was very conflicting; some of the witnesses making it even less than the amount thus agreed upon. Under the circumstances, we think the damages still given by the judgment excessive, and that the judgment and order should be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial, unless within 30 days the plaintiff shall file with the clerk of this court a release of all the damages recovered over and above the sum of $729.80, and that upon his filing such release the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial, unless within 30 days plaintiff shall file with the clerk of this court a release of all damages recovered over and above the sum of $729.80; and upon his filing such release the judgment and order will stand affirmed.

GRUELL v. SPOONER. (No. 9,682.)

1. EJECTMENT—OUSTER, WHAT IS.

Where, when plaintiff is in possession of land, defendant erects a house on the land, and incloses it all but a few acres, on which plaintiff's house stands, and assumes and exercises control over it, there is a sufficient ouster to enable plaintiff to bring an action of ejectment on the ground of prior possession.

2. APPEAL—DISMISSAL—TIME.

An appeal to the supreme court of California, not taken within a year after the judgment appealed from, will be dismissed.

3. SAME—NOTICE—DESCRIPTION OF ORDER.

A notice of appeal, with caption, showing title of court and cause, which specifies the date of the order, and of the filing thereof, but does not mention the nature of the order made, is sufficient to inform respondent what order is appealed from, where no other order is entered on that day.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county.

Action of ejectment. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals.

F. Adams and V. A. Gregg, for appellant. Graves, Turner & Graves, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. The appeal from the judgment was not taken within a year after the entry of the judgment, and must be dismissed.

The notice of appeal described the order appealed from as one made and entered on June 2, 1884. The order denying a new trial was entered on that day, and it does not appear that any other order was on that day entered. The order was so described in the notice of appeal as to inform the respondent that it was appealed from. The appeal cannot be dismissed for the reason, as contended, that the order appealed from was not sufficiently designated and described in the notice.

The action is ejectment, and plaintiff recovered on the ground of prior possession. The evidence seems to be sufficient to sustain the finding to that effect.

It is said there is no proof of ouster; but the evidence shows that defendant erected a house on the land, and inclosed it, except a few acres on which plaintiff's house stands, and was assuming and exercising control over it. This was evidence of a withholding which is sufficient to sustain the action. Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 223. Where the defendant claims and exercises control over the land, the plaintiff can elect to be disseized, and bring his action to recover possession. He is not obliged to enter on the land, which might result in a breach of the peace, or from which he might be turned out for an unlawful and forcible entry, and have to resort to ejectment at last.

The defendant was called as a witness by plaintiff, and, on his cross-examination by his counsel, certain questions were asked him, objected to by counsel for plaintiff, and the objections sustained. The questions were answered at a subsequent stage of the trial, and the defendant sustained no injury for which a reversal should be had, granting that the court erred in sustaining the objections when first made.

Judgment and order are affirmed.

BROWN and others v. CENTRAL PAC. R. CO. (No. 11,383.)*

(Supreme Court of California. January 3, 1887.)

1. NEGLIGENCE—CONTRIBUTORY—PROXIMATE CAUSE—TRAIN CONDUCTOR.

Where, on the trial of an action for damages against a railroad company brought for the death of a train conductor in defendant's employ, it appears that such conductor was in absolute control of a long freight train; that there were three brakemen who were under him, and whose positions, respectively, were on the front, middle, and rear of the train; that the middle brakeman, when the train was leaving the last station at which it stopped before the accident, was about to go to his position, when he was stopped by the conductor to assist him in checking way-bills, and remained in the baggage car after such checking was finished, and until the accident happened, there is evidence of negligence in the conductor; but the verdict for plaintiff may be sustained, where the instructions of the judge are clear, on the theory that the jury considered that the negligence of the conductor did not contribute proximately to produce the accident.

2. TRIAL—GENERAL OR SPECIAL VERDICT—OMISSION TO MAKE SPECIAL FINDINGS.

When, on the trial of an action for damages, the jury are instructed that they may return either a general or a special verdict, but, if a general verdict is returned, they must also make written findings on the particular findings of fact submitted to them in writing, and the jury return a general verdict for the plaintiff, without passing on the special facts submitted, which is received and entered by the court without objection by counsel, the defendant cannot object to the verdict, on appeal, as irregular, as the reception and entry of the verdict by the court amounted to a waiver of the request for the special findings.

Commissioners' decision.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action for damages against railroad company. Judgment for plaintiffs. Defendant appeals.

Glassell, Smith & Patton, for appellant. Howard, Brousseau & Howard, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This is an action to recover damages by plaintiffs, the widow and children, as heirs, of Gilman George Brown, deceased, for the death of the latter, through the alleged negligence of defendant, a railroad corporation. Plaintiffs had a verdict and judgment for $10,000, and costs, from which judgment, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals.

The decedent of plaintiffs was a conductor on the railroad of defendant, and, as such, left Los Angeles on the evening of April 7, 1877, in charge of a mixed train, consisting of over 20 cars, drawn by a locomotive engine in charge of Frank Wilson as engineer. While proceeding on its way, about midnight of the same day, the train, when at or near the foot of a slightly descending grade, broke in two, or parted; the front part with the engine running a considerable distance before the accident was discovered. When discovered, the engineer, in obedience to the signal of the only brakeman left upon the front part of the train, reversed his engine, and backed up, in doing which he collided with the still advancing rear portion of the train, partially wrecking the latter, and killing the conductor, Brown.

The gravamen of the charge against defendant, as contained in the complaint, is that, through its negligence, carelessness, and default, it employed, as engineer upon its train, one Frank Wilson, an unsafe, unskillful, untrustworthy, and incompetent person, of whose unskillfulness, untrustworthiness, and incompetency defendant had notice; and that, by reason of the negligence, carelessness, and lack of skill of said engineer, the accident occurred, whereby Brown was killed. The answer denies all negligence on the part of defendant, and avers that the accident and its consequences were due to the negligence of Brown, the deceased conductor, in not having his brakemen at their posts, etc.

Plaintiffs' intestate, as conductor of the train, and Frank Wilson, the engineer, by whose negligence it is claimed Brown was killed, were co-employees in the same general business. It follows that defendant could only be liable for the negligent act of the engineer whereby deceased lost his life, upon the theory that it neglected to use ordinary care in the employment or retention of such engineer. Hogan v. Central Pac. R. Co., 49 Cal. 130.

"An employer is not bound to indemnify his employe for losses suffered by the latter in consequence of the ordinary risks of the business in which he is employed, nor in consequence of the negligence of another person employed by the same employer in the same general business, unless he has neglected to use ordinary care in the selection of the culpable employe." Civil Code, § 1970; Sweeney v. Central Pac. R. Co., 57 Cal. 15.

Under the pleadings and evidence in the cause, three propositions were essential to recovery by the plaintiffs: (1) Negligence or the want of ordinary care by defendant in the employment or retention of Frank Wilson as an engineer; (2) negligence of such engineer, whereby Brown was killed; and (3) the absence of concurring negligence on the part of Brown proximately contributing to the injury. There was evidence pro and con upon each of these propositions.

Upon the first, there was testimony tending to show that Wilson, the engineer, had been for some time addicted to the intemperate use of intoxicating drinks, to such a degree and in so public a manner that defendant's officers whose duty it was to employ, superintend, and discharge engineers, would be likely to know, and should have known, of his habit, and that he had been previously discharged once or twice by defendant on another division on account of intoxication. This was denied by defendant.

As bearing upon the first and second propositions, there was uncontradicted testimony that on the day of the accident Wilson had with him upon his engine a bottle of whisky, from which he and others drank freely; that, when the train had parted, he ran back over the road without sending a flag-man ahead, or sounding his whistle or bell, which was in violation of the rules of the company. There was also testimony to the effect that Wilson was either asleep, or stupid from drink, when the train parted, and had to be aroused by his fireman, and that in backing up he did so at a dangerous rate of speed. These last facts are contradicted.

Without proceeding to state the testimony, which is quite voluminous, it is sufficient to say there was evidence sufficient to uphold the verdict of the jury, and the cause should not be reversed for want of evidence, or because the verdict was contrary to the evidence.

The only branch of the case which has awakened serious doubts as to the correctness of the verdict is that relating to the contributory negligence of the deceased. He was conductor of the train, and was making his first trip over the road. The night was clear, and the moon shone, but upon the desert tract over which the train was passing the dust obstructed the view to a great extent. The road was composed of not heavy, but of varying and changing, grades. The train was a long and heavy one, and was supplied with three brakemen, one of whom acted also as baggage master. The conductor was master of the train, and, under ordinary circumstances and for all practical purposes, had absolute control over all persons employed thereon.

The position of the brakemen should have been, one in front, one at or near the middle of the train, and the other upon the rear car. The middle brakeman, upon leaving Indio, the last station at which the train stopped before the accident, was about to go to his place, when he was detained by the conductor to assist the latter in calling off and checking way-bills. That office performed, he remained in the baggage car with the conductor, and was lying down upon some mail-sacks when the accident occurred.

Neither the conductor nor brakeman was aware the train had parted. They felt a shock as if from passing over a rough joint, and, although the evidence is not clear upon the point, we suppose the detached portion, consisting of say six cars, slowed down. We infer this from the fact that the conductor asked the brakeman if they were approaching Walters, or "Is this Walters?"—a very natural inquiry for a stranger upon the road on finding the speed of his train checked. He was informed they had not run far enough for Walters. Mr. Brown then rose, looked out the side of the baggage car, and so far as appears saw nothing to indicate trouble. The crash came very soon thereafter.

It would seem to us that the conductor was negligent in not having his crew at their posts, and we can only uphold the verdict upon the theory that the jury, from all the facts presented, and under the very clear instructions of the court upon the point, must have come to the conclusion that the negligence of the conductor did not contribute proximately to produce the fatal result. We are not quite satisfied upon the point, but, as before stated, do not feel warranted in setting the verdict aside for this cause.

The giving of the following instruction is assigned as error: "Second. If you find from the evidence that the plaintiffs are the widow and children, respectively, of Gilman George Brown; that said Brown met his death in consequence of the negligence of the defendant, through its employe Frank Wilson, without such negligence on his part as to directly contribute to the accident,—then your verdict should be for the plaintiffs, and you should assess their damages at such sum as under all the circumstances of the case may be just; and, in determining the amount of such damages, you have the right to take into consideration the pecuniary loss, if any, suffered by these plaintiffs in the death of the deceased by being deprived of their support by him; also the relations proved as existing between the plaintiffs and deceased at the time of his death, and the injury, if any, sustained by plaintiffs in the loss of his society."

The instruction simply informs the jury as to their duty in the premises if they shall find that Brown, without contributory negligence on his part, "met his death in consequence of the negligence of the defendant, through its employe Frank Wilson." It does not state, or purport to state, the facts or circumstances which, under the pleadings and proofs, would constitute negligence on the part of defendant. It speaks of negligence in the abstract, for the apparent purpose of reaching the conclusions flowing therefrom and consequent thereto.

In a criminal case against a defendant charged with murder, there can be no impropriety in charging the jury that, if they find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree, they may fix the penalty at, etc., although such charge failed to define what constitutes murder. So, in the present case, the instruction under consideration defined the result from a given stand-point. The data from which this stand-point was to be determined—its existence or non-existence ascertained—was to be found in the other instructions given, between which and the one indicated there was and is no conflict.

We should be glad to insert at large the instructions given, containing, as we think they do, a clear exposition of the law applicable to the case; but their length precludes us from so doing.

After instructing the jury, the court, at the request of counsel for defendant, submitted to them certain questions of fact in writing, and in reference thereto instructed them as follows: "In this case you, in your discretion, may render a general or a special verdict; but the court instructs you that, if you render a general verdict, you will also find upon the particular questions of fact stated in writing, and herewith submitted to you, and make your written findings thereto." The jury returned a general verdict in favor of plaintiffs, but did not pass upon the special facts submitted.

One of the members of the firm of attorneys who acted in the cause for the defendant was present at the rendition of the verdict, polled the jury, and made no objection to the want of findings upon the special facts, and no notice seems to have been taken of the omission. The attorney so present had not participated in the trial, but consented, on behalf of his law firm, to receive the verdict.

The action being for the recovery of money only, it was discretionary with the jury to find a general or special verdict, subject to the provision that, if they found a general verdict, the court in its discretion might require them to find upon particular questions of fact in addition thereto. Code Civil Proc. § 625. This, as shown above, the court required, but the jury failed to respond. The verdict as rendered was complete, and such as the court was authorized to receive, and the reception and entry of verdict by the court and counsel without objection amounted to a waiver of the request for findings upon the particular questions of fact.

Upon the whole case as presented we are of opinion the judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

MCDONALD v. HANLON. (No. 11,832.)

APPEAL—STAY PENDING APPEAL—CODE CIVIL PROC. CAL. § 1176.

By Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1176, the power of accepting an undertaking, and directing a stay of proceedings, under a judgment, pending an appeal therefrom, is vested exclusively in the court that tried the case, and no appeal lies from its refusal.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco. Action under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1161, for the unlawful detainer of certain premises. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals, and, pending the appeal, makes this application to stay proceedings under the judgment. Joseph Kirk, for appellant. Thos. E. Curran and S. B. McKee, Jr., for respondent.

MORRISON, C. J. This is an application for leave to file an undertaking on appeal to stay proceedings in the cause on appeal, and to stay all further proceedings in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, wherein said action was pending. The action was brought under section 1161, Code Civil Proc., and a judgment therein duly entered in favor of the plaintiff, from which an appeal is being prosecuted to this court. An application similar to this was made in the superior court, and was denied. It is now renewed in this court, on the same grounds and for like reasons.

Section 1176 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "an appeal taken by the defendant shall not stay proceedings upon the judgment, unless the judge or justice before whom the same was rendered so directs." This was an amendment to the Code of March 9, 1880, and it is claimed that the power of accepting an undertaking, and directing a stay of proceedings, is vested thereby in the court that tried the case exclusively. Such seems to have been the understanding of the statute; for, as has been remarked, application for a stay was first made to the court that tried the case. In this interpretation of the statute we agree, and the motion must therefore be denied. So ordered.

ALAMEDA MACADAMIZING CO. v. WILLIAMS and others. (No. 8,194.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—IMPROVEMENT OF STREETS—AUTHORITY TO ORDER.
Under an act authorizing a city council to order the whole or any portion of the street macadamized, the ordering of the macadamizing and improving of specifically described portions of a single street, which portion included the whole of the street between certain points, except certain portions which had already been improved and macadamized, so as to make the whole improvement uniform, is not in excess of the authority of the board.
2. SAME—DEMAND OF ASSESSMENT—UNKNOWN OWNERS—PERSONAL DEMAND A NULLITY.
Where, in cases of local improvements, the statute provides but one mode of making a demand, when the property is assessed to "unknown owners," and that is by demand on the premises, the courts cannot substitute another therefor, and a personal demand is a nullity.
3. SAME—DEMAND IN HEARING OF PREMISES NOT A DEMAND ON THEM.
A demand near to or in the hearing of the premises does not satisfy the requirements of a statute providing for a public demand on the premises.
4. APPEAL—FINDING SUPPORTING JUDGMENT PRESUMED.
When evidence is introduced on a certain point, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, and of written findings, it will be presumed that the court's finding supported the judgment.
5. DEED—BOUNDARIES—SIDE LINE OF STREET.
Land expressly described as being bounded by a side line of a street is so bounded, and not by the center line of the street.¹

Commissioners' decision.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county.

George W. Gordon, for appellant. James C. Martin, for respondents.

SEARLS, C. This action was brought to foreclose a lien on block 52, East Fourteenth street, Oakland, based upon a street assessment made by the municipal authorities of the city of Oakland. Plaintiff had judgment, from which, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant Williams appeals.

The first point made by appellant is that the council exceeded its jurisdiction in attempting to let the work of macadamizing several separate and distinct portions of Fourteenth street in one contract. The jurisdiction of the municipal corporation to improve the street is contained in the Statutes of 1863-64, p. 333, and in 1869-70, p. 443. Section 2 of the latter act is in these words: "The city council are hereby authorized and empowered to order the whole or any portion of the streets, lanes, alleys, * * * macadamized," etc.; including the power to grade, construct culverts, curbing, cross-walks, etc.

The resolution of intention to do the work as adopted by the city council, September 17, 1877, described the portion of East Fourteenth street to be macadamized as follows: "From the easterly line of First avenue to the westerly line of Fifteenth avenue," except certain portions which are specified, "all of which has already been macadamized to the official grade." The two acts above referred to confer upon the municipal authorities of the city of Oakland ample authority to open and improve the public streets of that city, in all the various modes by which those objects are usually attained, and they might improve "the whole or any portion of the streets." The improvements to be made in this instance were confined to a single street, and included the whole surface thereof between certain terminal points, except certain portions which had already been improved and macadamized, and which portions were specifically described. There is no question but the city council clearly designated the portions of the street to be improved, and the character of the improvements to be made. Under such circumstances, we are of opinion the authority of the board was not exceeded by ordering the portions of the same street not yet improved to be macadamized so as to render it uniform with the portions already improved in that respect.

2. The court did not err in excluding the written protest offered in evidence. The proposed work was the macadamizing certain portions of East Fourteenth street, designating them; the construction of certain culverts and cross-walks, describing them, and their location, etc. The protest was "against the macadamizing of said East Fourteenth street, between the points named" as terminals, and did not relate to the cross-walks and culverts to be constructed, was not restricted to the portions to be macadamized, and professed to be made, not by the owners of property upon the portions of the street to be improved, but by property-owners on the line of East Fourteenth street, between First and Fifteenth avenues, non constat but that the protestants may have all been the owners of property upon the portions of the street already improved, and excepted from the work to be done. We may, however, waive these objections to the protest as technical; for it appears from the record that the issue was made by the pleadings as to whether a majority of the property-owners on the line of the street did in fact protest. At the trial the names of protestants and the number of front feet owned by each on the line of the work, were admitted, and we must presume, in the absence of written findings, that the finding on this issue was in favor of the plaintiff, who had judgment; and, as the admission of the plaintiff afforded defendant the benefit of the testimony which the protest would have furnished, he cannot complain.

3. Plaintiff introduced in evidence a book labeled "Book F, Street Assessment, Oakland," which defendant admitted was the proper street assessment book of the city of Oakland, in which the assessment mentioned in the complaint should have been recorded. Plaintiff's counsel then read therefrom the contract between the city marshal, as street superintendent, and the plaintiff herein, for the performance of the street improvements upon which the action is based; and, secondly, the record of the assessment, dated, "OAKLAND, June 4, 1878," signed by "J. R. CUTTING, Marshal City of Oakland," the diagram signed and dated in like manner, and the warrant attached thereto, authorizing and empowering the plaintiff to demand and receive the several assessments upon the assessment and diagram thereto attached, which warrant was of like date, and signed by the marshal as in case of the assessment and diagram, and duly countersigned by the mayor. The record is verified as follows: "Recorded June 4, 1878. J. R. CUTTING, City Marshal of the City of Oakland." Then follows the contractor's return, showing a demand, and recorded and certified, as in case of the other record, on the sixth of July, 1878.

The defendant on his part introduced evidence tending to show that on the sixth day of July, 1878, the name of J. R. Cutting was not at the end or bottom of the assessment; that the recollection of the witness (D. H. Whittemore) was that it was not at the end of the diagram, but of that fact the witness was not certain; that his impression was the warrant was signed and countersigned.

We do not find in the record of this cause any objection on the part of defendant to the introduction of this testimony. The statement of the defendant in his specification of errors upon which he would rely on his motion for a new trial, (transcript, folio 205,) to the effect that he objected to the testimony and excepted to the decision admitting it in evidence, cannot be received as a properly authenticated exception. This is but his specification of an alleged error, and which, upon turning to the statement, proves to be without foundation. We do not understand that the judge who settles and certifies to the correctness of a statement on motion for a new trial thereby gives validity to the statement of fact in the specifications of error. The specification of errors is essential to a statement, but its office under section 659 of the Code of Civil Procedure is to call attention to the precise ground relied upon, and not to fortify the alleged error by a statement of facts in its support. The specifications may be amended after the time has expired for preparing and settling the statement on motion for a new trial. Low v. McCallan, 64 Cal. 2.

But waiving this question entirely, and we fail to find any error in the action of the court admitting the record of the assessment diagram, warrant, and return. Section 18 of the act of April 4, 1864, (St. 1863-64,) provides that "the records kept by the marshal of said city, [Oakland] in conformity with the provisions of this act, and signed by him, shall have the same force and effect as other public records, and copies therefrom, duly certified, may be used in evidence with the same effect as the originals." As a public record, the evidence offered being fair on its face and signed by the marshal, was proper to be admitted in evidence. So, too, the certificate of record signed by the marshal was sufficient to authenticate it as a record. The finding of the court below being in favor of plaintiff, and the court having the record before it, with all the evidence on the subject, we do not feel at liberty to disturb the result for this cause.

4. The several lots of land of the defendant were assessed to unknown owners, and the plaintiff herein, after receiving the assessment diagram and warrant, caused payment to be demanded of defendant as follows: First, by a demand upon the defendant personally; second, by a demand made upon each and every of the assessed lots, by standing on the sidewalk in front of and close to the fence bounding such lots, but not actually upon them, (unless such lots extended to the middle of the street,) and there make a demand in an audible voice.

The statute of April 4, 1864, (St. 1863-64, p. 338,) provides that the contractor or his agents or assigns shall call upon the persons assessed, if they can be found, and demand payment; but whenever they cannot be found, "or whenever the name of the owner of the property is stated as 'unknown' in the assessment, then the said contractor, or his agent or assigns, shall publicly demand payment on the premises assessed." The street seems, from the record, to have been filled in front of the lots of the defendant, so that they, or a part of them at least, were in a hollow, and, so far as appears, such lots were unoccupied.

The questions presented are: First, did the lots in question extend to the middle of the street, so that the demand was in fact made by a person standing upon them? and, if not, then, second, was the demand so made, contiguous to the premises, and capable of being heard thereon, but by a person not actually standing upon the land, a sufficient compliance with the requirements of the statute?

Section 831 of the Civil Code is as follows: First, "an owner of land bounded by a road or street is presumed to own to the center of the way, but the contrary may be shown;" and by section 1112 of the same Code it is provided that "a transfer of land, bounded by a highway, passes the title of the person whose estate is transferred to the soil of the highway in front to the center thereof, unless a different intent appears from the grant." The conveyance under which defendant holds the property is not before us. The contention of appellant is that the assessment and diagram show that the line of the lots runs along the margin of the street, and not into it. The assessment describes the property as "fronting upon East Fourteenth street, in said city," etc., and the diagram attached thereto, and to which reference is made, simply shows the lots on each side of the street and the several cross-streets. Were these the only sources from which to arrive at a conclusion, we should doubt their sufficiency to overcome the presumption of the Code; but, turning to the complaint, we find a specific description of defendant's several parcels of land, from which it appears that the margin or line of the street is the boundary of the land.

In Severy v. Central Pac. R. Co., 51 Cal. 194, it was held that where a deed described the conveyed premises as running "thence along the easterly line of Sacramento street, one hundred and fifty feet," and no other language was employed to modify or affect this description, the eastern line and not the middle of Sacramento street was the boundary. Maynard v. Weeks, 41 Vt. 617; Tyler v. Hammond, 11 Pick. 193; O'Linda v. Lothrop, 21 Pick. 295. Land described in a deed as bounded by a street will be considered as bounded by the center of the street, unless it clearly appears that it was intended to make the side line of the street as a boundary instead of the center. Moody v. Palmer, 50 Cal. 31.

In the present case it does clearly appear from the complaint that the side line of the street is the boundary. To illustrate: In assessment No. 272 the land assessed is described as follows: "Commencing at the point of intersection of the westerly line of Second avenue with the northerly line of East Fourteenth street; running thence, westerly, along said line of East Fourteenth street, 145 feet; thence, at right angles, 140 feet; thence, at right angles, easterly, 145 feet, to the said line of Second avenue; thence southerly, along said line of Second avenue, 140 feet, to the point of commencement." With such a description, we hold the presumption that the lot runs to the center of East Fourteenth street and Second avenue is rebutted. There are four parcels of land described, all in like terms, and hence the conclusion is the same as to all the parcels.

As to the sufficiency of the demand made by a person not actually upon the premises. It is proper to say, before discussing this last question, that the demand made upon defendant personally was without authority of law. The statute provides but one mode of making a demand in cases where, as in the present, the property is assessed to "unknown owners," and that is by a demand upon the premises. It matters not that other methods may be as efficacious as the one provided. The law-makers have prescribed a method, and the courts are not at liberty to adopt a substitute therefor. This preliminary question disposed of, it only remains to determine the legality of the demand upon the premises made as hereinbefore stated.

The language of the statute is as follows: "Whenever the name of the owner of the lot is stated as 'unknown' in the assessment, then the said contractor, or his agent or assigns, shall publicly demand payment on the premises assessed." The contention of the respondent is that, if the person making the demand is in such close proximity to the premises that his voice can be heard thereon, all the objects of a demand are attained, and that a physical, corporeal contact with the premises by the person making the demand can add nothing to its efficiency, and such seems to have been the view of the court below. So far as the present case is concerned, at least, this view seems plausible. We must, however, give to this provision of the statute an interpretation alike applicable to all cases arising under it. If the demand may be legally made by one not actually upon the premises, then how far from such premises may he remain, and the demand still be held good? If it be answered that it may be made at any distance, provided the voice can be distinctly heard upon the premises, the response must be that the effect of this rule will tend to substitute the opinion of the person making the demand, as to whether he could be heard, for an essential fact in the case, and will tend to open a door for fraud. Premises of this character in a city will usually have an occupant, or some person in charge, to whom the presence of a person upon them in the attitude of an apparent trespasser will, in itself, many times attract attention, and cause the demand to be heard. Many reasons more or less cogent might be urged why the law-makers required a demand to be made upon the premises to be charged, but it is sufficient to say that the statute so requires, and that, in our opinion, by the term "on the premises" the law-makers meant, "by a person on the premises."

This provision seems to have been taken from the rule of the common law in relation to the demand of rent before entry or ejectment, where, in order to claim a forfeiture, it was held that, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, a demand must be made "upon the land, and at the most notorious place of it;" and such demand, it is said, must be made, although there be no person present to answer; and, as the tenant had the whole day upon which the rent fell due to make payment, the landlord or his agent, to complete the forfeiture, must not "only make the demand at the proper time and place, but must remain upon the land and continue the demand, actually or constructively, until after sunset." Wood, Landl. & Ten. § 452. And it was even held that a personal demand made off the land was not sufficient to work a forfeiture of a lease. The land was regarded as the debtor, and to create a forfeiture for non-payment of rent, the demand must be made upon it. So, in the present case, the land is charged with the payment of the assessment; and, where the owner is designated as "unknown," the statute is imperative in requiring the demand to be made publicly on the premises, and a demand made near to, in the neighborhood of, or within hearing of, the premises does not satisfy the requirements of the statute.

It follows that the demand, as made, was insufficient, and the judgment of the court below, and the order denying a new trial, should be reversed, and a new trial had.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

FITZGERALD v. FERNANDEZ and others. (No. 9,620.)

1. HOMESTEAD—TENANT IN COMMON—EXCLUSIVE POSSESSION—CALIFORNIA ACT OF MARCH 9, 1868.

When a person is entitled to a homestead, the California act of March 9, 1868, § 1, gives him one in a tract of which he has exclusive occupation, and which he duly incloses, selects, records, and resides on as such, although he has only an undivided interest therein. Held, that a tenant in common or joint tenant, having an undivided interest less than the whole, who, with his family, entered into actual possession of a part in the name of the whole, but did not inclose the same, acquired no homestead under this act.¹

2. SAME—CALIFORNIA ACT OF MARCH 9, 1868—APPLICATION TO PREVIOUSLY RECORDED HOMESTEAD.

The second section of the act says: "This act shall apply to all homesteads heretofore recorded under the laws of this state, as well as those that may hereafter be acquired." Held not to validate homesteads previously recorded on lands held in joint tenancy, or in tenancy in common, unless the first section was complied with.

3. SAME—FORECLOSURE OF MORTGAGE GIVEN BY HUSBAND ALONE—WIFE A PARTY—BOUND ON DEFAULT BY JUDGMENT.

In an action to foreclose a mortgage executed by a husband on lands claimed by his wife to be a homestead, she is a proper party; and if, after being duly served, she does not appear, but is represented by her husband's attorney, without her knowledge and consent, a judgment against her is binding, unless she can show a valid cause for her failure to appear.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Contra Costa county.

A. H. Griffith, for appellant. Eli Chase, W. S. Tinning, and Theodore Wagner, for respondents.

SEARLS, C. This is an action to set aside and annul a decree of foreclosure against the plaintiff herein, to vacate an order of sale issued under such decree, and to enjoin D. P. Mahan, the sheriff of Contra Costa county, and Bernardo Fernandez, the other defendant, from making a sale of the mortgaged premises, or from enforcing the judgment of foreclosure, upon the ground that the mortgaged property is the homestead of plaintiff. Defendants had judgment, from which, and from an order denying a new trial, the appeal is prosecuted by the plaintiff. There is no statement or bill of exceptions, and the case is presented on the judgment roll.

Two principal questions are involved in the appeal—First, were the premises in question the homestead of plaintiff and her husband at the date of the execution of a mortgage thereon (September 25, 1873) by the latter to defendant Fernandez? Second, was the plaintiff concluded, and her right to a homestead, if any she had, foreclosed, by the decree of May 6, 1880, rendered in an action to foreclose the mortgage of September 25, 1873, in which action plaintiff was a party defendant, was served with a summons, and was represented by an attorney, who answered for her, but who was employed by her husband without her knowledge or authorization?

The facts essential to an understanding of the first proposition, as gleaned from the findings, are as follows: John Fitzgerald and plaintiff were husband and wife. On the second day of December, 1860, the former purchased from tenants in common or joint tenants, who owned undivided interests therein, less than the whole, their interest in and to the premises in question, and with his family, including the plaintiff, entered into the actual possession of a part, in the name of the whole, of the premises so purchased, and has ever since resided thereon. On the tenth day of November, 1865, John Fitzgerald filed, and caused to be recorded in due and regular form, a declaration of homestead on said premises. The land was not in the exclusive occupation of John Fitzgerald, and was not fully inclosed prior to 1869 or 1870, and was and still is owned by said Fitzgerald and others as tenants in common. On the twenty-fifth day of September, 1873, John Fitzgerald executed a mortgage on the premises to defendant Bernardo Fernandez, to secure the payment of $1,500, and interest, payable on demand.

Was the lien of this mortgage superior to the homestead claim? Prior to the act of March 9, 1868, (St. 1868, p. 116,) a homestead could not be carved out of land held by one in joint tenancy, or as a tenant in common. Wolf v. Fleischacker, 5 Cal. 244; Reynolds v. Pixley, 6 Cal. 165; Giblin v. Jordan, Id. 417; Kellersberger v. Kopp, Id. 564; Bishop v. Hubbard, 23 Cal. 517; Elias v. Verdugo, 27 Cal. 419; Seaton v. Son, 32 Cal. 483.

The act of March 9, 1868, supra, under which appellant claims her homestead became valid, is as follows:

"Section 1. Whenever any party entitled to a homestead under the laws of this state shall be in exclusive occupation of any parcel or tract of land, having the same inclosed, and shall select and record and reside upon the same as a homestead, such party so selecting and claiming shall be entitled to such homestead, and to all the rights and exemptions provided by the general law relating to homesteads, to the extent of such claimant's interest in such homestead property, although such land be held in joint tenancy, or tenancy in common, or such claimant own only an undivided interest therein.

"Sec. 2. This act shall apply to all homesteads heretofore recorded under the laws of this state, as well as those that may hereafter be acquired."

As will be seen, the first section of this act gives to joint tenants or tenants in common, who shall be in the exclusive occupation of land, having the same inclosed, the right to select and record the same as a homestead; and the second section applies the act to homesteads theretofore recorded under the laws of the state, as well as to those subsequently recorded. John Fitzgerald was not in the exclusive occupation of the land upon which he sought to impress the homestead character, and did not have it inclosed. He did not, therefore, by virtue of the act, become entitled to a homestead in the premises. The contention of appellant that, by virtue of the second section, homesteads previously recorded upon lands held in joint tenancy, or in tenancy in common, were validated without reference to compliance with the provisions of the first section, cannot be maintained. The language of the second section is not that such second action applies, but that "this act shall apply to all homesteads heretofore recorded," etc. As the act, taken together, only gives the homestead right in such cases to those in the exclusive occupation of the land, and having it inclosed, plaintiff and her husband were wanting in an essential element requisite to a valid homestead.

The very question now under consideration was involved in Cameto v. Dupuy, 47 Cal. 79, in which a homestead had been declared in 1864, and this court held (1) that the homestead of 1864 was not valid, for the reason that the premises were then held in joint tenancy; (2) that the defect was not cured by the act of 1868, (St. 1867-68, p. 116.) for the reason that such last-mentioned act only provides for the acquisition of such right in lands held in joint tenancy, or tenancy in common, where the person filling the declaration is in the exclusive occupation of the tract sought to be dedicated as a homestead.

It follows that the premises in question were not impressed with the homestead character, and the court below did not err in its conclusion.

The conclusion reached renders an inquiry into the second proposition involved unnecessary to a disposition of the appeal. We may, however, say: (1) That where a mortgage is executed by the husband alone, upon property claimed by husband and wife as a homestead, the latter is a proper party defendant in an action to foreclose. Maybury v. Ruiz, 58 Cal. 11. (2) Where, as in this case, an action against husband and wife is brought to foreclose a mortgage, and process is served upon both, whereby the court acquires jurisdiction of the person of the wife as well as of the subject-matter, a decree of foreclosure entered therein is not void because the wife did not appear, but was represented by an attorney employed by the husband without her knowledge or consent, who appeared and answered for her. (3) In such a case, if there had been no appearance for her, the plaintiff would have been entitled to a default and decree against her, and his position should not be held worse by an appearance with which he had no connection. (4) As her complaint in this case fails to show any excuse or cause why she did not appear, or why she did not apply to the court in which the action to foreclose was pending for leave to defend, the court below properly held the decree of foreclosure valid and binding upon her, and a bar to her present cause of action.

The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

SALE—DELIVERY—ATTACHING CREDITORS.

In an action against a sheriff for the recovery of property attached by him as that of one C., where it is claimed that C. sold the property to plaintiff before the attachment, testimony of plaintiff and C. to the effect that on a day named prior to the attachment C. sold the property to plaintiff, taking his promissory note in payment, and gave him a bill of sale of the property, viz., saloon furniture and stock; that C. delivered to plaintiff the keys of the safe and the saloon, took his account-book, and left, and has had nothing to do with the business since, and that plaintiff has continued to own the property, and carry on the business, up to the time of the levy of the attachment; that there was but one advertisement in any paper authorized by C., and that was changed on the day of the sale by the insertion of plaintiff's name in the place of that of C.; that the advertisements that appeared in various other papers were not changed; that the sale was made in good faith; that the plaintiff was C.'s bar-tender at the time of the sale, and the business was conducted after the transfer just as it had been before, plaintiff continuing to tend bar: held, insufficient evidence of an immediate delivery and continued change of possession of the property in controversy.¹

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Modoc county.
Replevin.

The complaint in this action alleges that the defendant is sheriff of Modoc county, California; that on the first July, 1884, at Alturas, Modoc county, California, plaintiff was the owner and in the exclusive possession of certain saloon furniture, fixtures, and stock set out in the complaint; that the value of such goods was $1,109.75; that the defendant, as such sheriff, on the first July, 1884, without the consent of plaintiff, took such goods from the plaintiff's possession; that before the commencement of this action, on July 2, 1884, plaintiff demanded of defendant possession and return to him of such goods, which defendant refused, and still refuses, to do. Defendant's answer denies that plaintiff was the owner or in possession of the property; denies any damage to plaintiff; alleges that he, as sheriff of Modoc county, on July 1, 1884, levied upon and attached the property described in the complaint under process of court issued in the case of Sykes & Co. against Whiting & Culver; that the goods were the property of J. B. Culver, of the firm of Whiting & Culver; that any claim of title of plaintiff thereto, based upon any contract with said Culver, is fraudulent and void. There was a verdict and judgment for plaintiff. Motion for new trial by defendant denied by the court. Defendant appeals from the judgment, and from the order denying the motion for a new trial.

The testimony offered on behalf of plaintiff and defendant, respectively, is as follows:

W. D. Cook, having been duly sworn, testified as follows:

"I am the plaintiff. I am an unmarried man. I am twenty-four years of age. Have resided in the town of Alturas, in this county, for the past eighteen months. I had been laboring as a bar-keeper in the Branch saloon, in this town, during my residence here, up to about the twentieth day of November, 1883. Shortly after this I began laboring for John B. Culver, as bar-keeper in the Delta saloon, in this town, and continued so to labor for him until the twenty-sixth day of June, 1884, when I purchased of Culver all the property described in the complaint, and then took of him a written bill of sale therefor. Culver first proposed a sale to me of the property about the first of June, when I took the matter under advisement, and on the day we traded I approached him, and asked him if he was still willing to sell upon the terms he had offered. He answered that he was, and we closed the trade. No one was present at the sale other than Culver and myself. It was made at the saloon. The articles or property was not inventoried, nor in anywise examined or listed; but a lumping was made. I knew what there was in the saloon. Culver, a few hours after the sale, gave me a bill of sale, then took his account-books, and left. The purchase price was $1,183. I had no property nor money whatever at the time I made the purchase. I bought the property on credit. I gave my individual, unsecured promissory notes to Culver for the purchase money in part, and assumed, as between Culver and myself, only the payment of certain debts of Culver for the balance. I knew at the time of making the purchase that Culver was indebted to some parties in San Francisco for some of the stock on hand, but did not then know that he was indebted to E. Sikes & Co.

"As I have said, I assumed the payment of certain debts of Culver in San Francisco. I did not, in writing or otherwise, agree with Culver's creditors to pay these debts, but merely so contracted with Culver. Since this action was begun I have paid those debts so assumed, and also paid about all I owe Culver on the promissory notes. I made the purchase in good faith. I could make no money keeping bar, and I thought I could do no worse running the saloon on my own responsibility, was the reason I made the purchase. I did not know at the time I made the purchase that F. W. Ewing, attorney for E. Sikes & Co., was then endeavoring to collect their claim against Culver. Culver said nothing to me about it. The defendant, as sheriff, on the first day of July, 1884, levied upon and attached all of the property described in my complaint, and then took the same into his official custody, and so kept and detained the same continuously until the twenty-first day of that month. His taking was by virtue of a writ of attachment in the action then pending in the superior court of this county in favor of E. Sikes & Co. and against John B. Culver. At the time of the sale, nor at any other time thereafter, until attached, was anything done with reference to the property in controversy that would evidence to a person that there had been a change of ownership or possession thereof. The bar fixtures, and everything in the saloon, remained just the same, and I continued to tend the bar just the same as I had while laboring for Culver. On the same day that I purchased the property I went to the office of the Northern Picket, a weekly newspaper published in town, and ordered Culver's name removed and my own inserted in the advertisement as the proprietor of the Delta saloon, which was done, and have had the advertisement in that paper ever since. Culver did not stop there after the sale, but would come around, and be in the saloon; but he and I were in the saloon, sitting there, when the defendant came in to make the attachment. Culver then told the sheriff that he had sold out to me, but I did not say anything about it. I did not then, nor have I ever, shown him my bill of sale. I assisted the sheriff in making the inventory of the property. I did not make any demand upon the sheriff for the return of the property until the next day. The property in controversy was, at all times alleged, worth $1,109.75. I have been damaged $100 by defendant's keeping the said property from the time it was attached until the twenty-first July, 1884. After I had made the purchase, and immediately thereafter, Culver gave me possession by handing me the keys of the door and safe, and, with a wave of his hand, said, 'There is the property,' or words of similar import. Culver then took his account-book and left, and has never had anything to do with it since, and from that time has had no interest in it, one way or another."

John B. Culver, sworn on behalf of plaintiff, testified as follows: "When I made a sale of the property in controversy to plaintiff I was indebted to E. Sikes & Co., of San Francisco, to the amount of $350. I never have paid their claim, but I expect to as soon as I get able. I made the sale to Cook in good faith, and without any intention of defrauding E. Sikes & Co. The saloon building, and which I had rented, has been long known as the 'Delta Saloon,' and so advertised in various local newspapers, with myself as proprietor. There was but one of these advertisements, to-wit, the one in the Northern Picket, that was authorized by me. This advertisement was discontinued by me on the day of the sale. I have done nothing with reference to the other advertisements. At the time of the sale, nor at any time subsequently that I know of, was anything done to evidence the change of the possession of the property, other than that I took my accounts, and left the saloon, and gave plaintiff the keys thereto. When the sheriff made the attachment I told him the property belonged to Cook; that I had sold it to him five days before; and afterwards Mr. Cook told him the same."

C. C. Rochford, being sworn, testified as follows: "I am the defendant herein. I attached the property in controversy in the Delta saloon, in this town, on the first day of July, 1884. The plaintiff and John B. Culver were both in the saloon when I went into and when I did make the attachment. I had been well acquainted with Culver and Cook when Culver was proprietor of the saloon and Cook his bar-tender; had been in the saloon very frequently during that time. When I made the attachment of the property in controversy I did not see or know anything that evidenced a change of possession or ownership thereof, excepting only that Culver told me, while making the levy, that he had sold to Cook. Cook did not say a word about it, but assisted me in making the levy. He did not claim the property until the next day. I placed a keeper in possession of the saloon, and, at plaintiff's request, conducted the business, selling for cash only; all receipts of which were turned over to plaintiff on July 21, 1884, when he gave a bond for the return of the property. After plaintiff demanded a return of the property, E. Sikes & Co. indemnified me by their attorney giving me his word that I should be saved from all expense for damages in the premises if I would hold the property, but no writing of indemnity was given me, nor have I any now."

J. S. Whiting was duly sworn on behalf of the defendant, whereupon defendant offered to prove by this witness that E. Sikes & Co., by their attorney, had presented and were pressing Culver for the payment of their claim on the day before the sale from Culver to Cook, and that Culver replied, asking for an extension of time for a few days, that he might hear from E. Sikes & Co.; to which plaintiff objected on the ground that such testimony would be incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. The court sustained the objection, and the defendant excepted.

J. J. May, for plaintiff and respondent. Ewing & Claflin, for defendant and appellant.

BY THE COURT. The court below should have granted a new trial. The evidence was insufficient to show that there was an immediate delivery and continued change of possession of the property in controversy.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

DUFF and another v. DUFF and another. (No. 9,681.)

1. NEW TRIAL—MOTION—PRACTICE AS TO TIME—WHEN TRIAL CLOSED—FINDINGS BY JURY AND JUDGE—EXCEPTIONS ON APPEAL.

An action was brought in February, 1881, to have defendants adjudged trustees for plaintiffs of real estate alleged to have been fraudulently and collusively conveyed to them, and for an accounting and the appointment of a receiver. Certain special questions or issues were submitted to a jury for the court's advisement, which, in September, 1881, responded to the same by a verdict. In November, 1881, defendant moved to set aside this verdict, on grounds of error in giving and refusing instructions, and insufficiency of evidence to support certain of the findings. No statement or bill of exceptions was made on this motion, which was denied on the ground that the court would reserve its decisions on these findings till the conclusion of the trial. In February, 1883, the court filed a series of findings, followed by an interlocutory judgment filed in July, 1883, adjudging certain trusts in favor of plaintiffs, and directing defendants to account for rents and profits. The court itself took and stated the amount, and filed findings thereon on January 31, 1884, and gave final judgment on February 1, 1884. No notice was given defendants of the filing of the final findings of the court on January 31, 1884. On February 11, 1884, defendants filed and served notice of intention to move for a new trial, on the grounds of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the findings of the jury, and the findings of facts and decision of the court; that findings of the court were against law and evidence, and of error in law occurring at the trial, and excepted to by the defendants. A bill of exceptions embodying these objections was settled and certified by the court, both parties being present. Defendants' motion for new trial was heard and denied May 10, 1884, and on July 5, 1884, defendants appealed from the interlocutory judgment, from the final judgment, and from the order denying their motion for a new trial. Held, the trial did not end till the filing of the findings of the court on January 31, 1884, the notice for new trial was given in time, and the appellants had the right to be heard on the matters stated in their bill of exceptions; following Hinds v. Gage, 56 Cal. 486.

2. APPEAL—INTERLOCUTORY JUDGMENT.

No appeal lies from an interlocutory judgment in an action to have a trust declared in real property alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed.

3. EVIDENCE—ADMISSIONS—OF PARTY IN INTEREST—AGAINST INTEREST—DESCRIPTION IN PETITION FOR LETTERS OF ADMINISTRATION.

A statement in a petition for letters of administration, drawn by an attorney instructed to draw a suitable petition, which describes certain real estate by lots and block, or metes and bounds, as belonging to the estate, and signed, "F. S. D., by S. M. B., his Atty.," etc., is not admissible, in a suit against F. S. D., to recover from him lands answering such description, as an admission that said lands belonged to the estate, unless it is shown that such statement was made with his knowledge, direction, or sanction, and not merely under general instruction to draw the petition in which they occur.

4. SAME—STATEMENT FOR ARBITRATION OF ANOTHER MATTER.

Statements made by defendant, under his signature, for the purpose of submitting to arbitration matters of difference in another action, cannot be used against him as evidence of admissions made by him touching the subject-matter in litigation.

5. STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS—FRAUD IN RELATION TO REAL ESTATE—CODE CIVIL PROC. CAL. § 338, SUBD. 4.

Whether actions for relief, on the ground of fraud, in relation to real property, come within Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 338, subd. 4, as to limitation of actions, quere; but if not, they are governed by the same rules, as to limitation, as have been adopted and enforced with regard to such subdivision and section.¹

6. EQUITY—FRAUD IN RELATION TO REAL ESTATE—GROUNDS OF RELIEF—LACHES.

A complaint in an action for relief on grounds of fraud in relation to real property, which sets forth that plaintiff's husband in 1863 executed a power of attorney to defendant's ancestor, by which he authorized him, inter alia, to sell and convey for the constituent the property referred to therein; that, immediately after, he left the state, and never returned; that subsequently, from 1866 to 1872, said attorney conveyed, under the power, certain of the property to defendants, respectively, without consideration, for the purpose of defrauding plaintiff's ancestor, and in collusion with defendants; that plaintiff's husband died in 1875, having devised all his property, whatsoever and wheresoever, to her, without knowledge of such conveyances aforementioned; that, shortly after her husband's death, plaintiff was informed by defendants, his brothers, that he was not entitled to any of the lands sued for, and that she was only informed in 1879 of his title to such lands,—shows a case of concealed fraud, and a sufficient cause of action, not barred by laches or lapse of time.

7. SAME—JURISDICTION—CONCURRENT REMEDY AT LAW NOT GROUND FOR REFUSAL—LENGTH OF TIME.

In an action for relief on the ground of fraud in relation to real estate, where the complaint avers that the conveyances alleged to be fraudulent were without consideration, but the allegations in the complaints show that there has been a great lapse of time, the court, taking into consideration the probability of the statute of limitations being invoked, will not refuse relief in equity on the ground that, the conveyances being alleged to be without consideration, plaintiff's complaint shows a complete and adequate remedy at law by ejectment.

¹See note at end of case.

8. NEW TRIAL—APPEAL—INSUFFICIENT FINDINGS—TITLE.

In an equitable action involving the issue of the title of plaintiff's devisor to real estate, a finding that such devisor was "the owner of the legal title of the lands," is not sufficient, but it should be found that he was or was not the owner of the land; and where facts are alleged in the answer tending to show that the purchase of the land in suit was made, and the purchase money paid, by others, who caused the legal title to be made to such devisor, by which a resulting trust in favor of the parties paying the money was created, a finding that such devisor "did not acquire the legal title in trust for other persons" is not sufficient.

9. SAME—ACTUAL NOTICE.

Where, in such a case, there is an implication by defendants that circumstances were known to the constituent which should have stimulated him to inquiry, a finding that said constituent, in his life-time, had not actual knowledge or information of any deeds by his attorney, is not sufficient to support the allegation of want of notice.

10. SAME—POWER OF ATTORNEY.

A finding that property referred to in a letter, being a power of attorney, is held in trust for plaintiff, as stated in it, should find that the property referred to in the letter is held in trust "in the manner and proportions mentioned" in the letter.

11. SAME—FINDING AS TO BAR OF ACTION UNDER STATUTE.

A court, in its findings upon the question of an action being barred by the statute of limitations, should not only find facts on which its decision as to the defense of the statute of limitations may be based, but should find, in addition to such facts, whether the cause of action is barred by the statute or not.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county.

Action for a surrender of real estate. Judgment for plaintiffs. Defendants appeal.

S. M. Buck, James Hanna, and Horace L. Smith, for appellants. J. D. H. Chamberlin, J. J. De Haven, L. D. McKisick, and S. M. Wilson, for respondents.

THORNTON, J. The plaintiffs are Julia Duff, the widow, and Agnes Duff, the infant daughter, of William R. Duff, deceased. The defendants are Robert P. Duff and Frank S. Duff, the brothers of the decedent above named. The object of the action is to have defendants adjudged trustees for plaintiffs of the real property alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed to them by Richard Duff, their father, under powers of attorney executed to him by William R. Duff; that the defendants be decreed to reconvey the said real property to the plaintiffs, and that they account to them for the rents and profits received by them from the property aforesaid; and that a receiver be appointed to take charge of said property, and collect the rents, etc., during the pendency of this action.

Issue being joined by the several answers of the defendants, certain special questions on issues, 14 in number, were framed, and submitted to a jury, who, on the twenty-second of September, responded to the same by a verdict. On the fourteenth of November, 1881, the defendant moved the court to set aside so much of the verdict as answers the issues numbered 1, 10, 11, and 13, on the ground—First, that the court erred in giving the instructions to the jury as requested by plaintiffs; second, in refusing to instruct as requested by defendants; third, insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict. Under this last ground several particulars are specified in which the evidence was so insufficient. The record states that "the above motion is made upon the papers in the case, the documentary evidence introduced on the trial of said issues, and all evidence introduced on said trial, as shown by the minutes of the court." No statement or bill of exceptions was made on this motion. The court, on the thirtieth of July, 1882, denied the motion. In denying the motion, an opinion was filed, in which the learned judge said that it was conceded that the verdict or findings of a jury, in a case of the kind before the court, are merely advisory, and may be adopted in full, or modified or wholly rejected, by the court; that, if the court had mistaken the law, and misdirected the jury in the instructions given, or erred in refusing instructions asked, all such errors can be corrected when the case is finally submitted, and no injury can result to either party; that, though the case was tried half a dozen times, it would still be in the power of and the duty of the court "to reject, modify, or approve any or all the findings of the jury, and adopt such findings only as might be justified by the evidence."

The opinion proceeds as follows: "As far as I am now informed, I am satisfied that I will have to reject some of the findings, and perhaps modify others. My understanding is that other issues and further evidence are yet to be submitted to the court before the final submission of the cause for decision. I prefer withholding a definite and ultimate decision upon the matters involved in this motion until all the evidence is in, and the trial concluded. I see no impropriety in the practice, more particularly as the arguments and briefs of counsel on the motion seem to me to cover substantially the whole grounds of the controversy. Reserving the right hereafter to adopt such findings as are sustained by the evidence, to reject those which are not, and to modify others if necessary, I shall deny the motion."

On the twenty-third of February, 1883, the court filed a series of findings covering the most important issues in the cause. An interlocutory judgment followed, which was filed on the twenty-fourth of July, 1883. By this decree it was adjudged that certain trusts in said property existed in favor of plaintiffs, and defendants were directed to account to them for rents and profits, etc., and a referee was appointed to ascertain certain matters, and report to the court, and take and state the account above referred to. It appears that the referee never acted, and that the inquiry was made and the account was afterwards taken and stated by the court. Additional findings were made by the court covering the matters of which an account was to be taken. These findings were filed on the thirty-first of January, 1884.

The final judgment herein was filed on the first day of February, 1884, and on the eleventh day of the same month a notice of intention to move for a trial was, on behalf of defendants, served and filed. The notice stated that the motion would be made on a bill of exceptions to be settled and filed, and on the following grounds: "(1) Insufficiency of the evidence to justify the findings of the jury upon the issues of fact submitted; (2) insufficiency of the evidence to justify the findings of facts and decision of the court; (3) that the findings of fact and decision of the court are against law and evidence; (4) error in law occurring at the trial, and excepted to by the defendants."

Both parties appeared before the judge on the settlement of the bill, which was certified and allowed on the eighteenth day of April, 1884. On the tenth of May, 1884, defendants' motion for a new trial was denied, and the fifth day of July following the defendants appealed from the interlocutory judgment, from the final judgment, and from the order denying their motion for a new trial.

What can be heard by this court on these three appeals?

No appeal lies from an interlocutory judgment except in an action for the partition of real property. Code Civil Proc. § 939, sub. 3. The appeal from the interlocutory judgment may therefore be disregarded.

There is no appeal from the order of July 30, 1882, denying defendants' motion to set aside the verdict of the jury as to certain of the special issues above stated. It is urged, on behalf of respondents, that this motion was for a new trial, opportunely made, and its denial was appealable, and that on such appeal the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the findings of the jury and the errors of law properly reserved might have been considered; but no appeal having been taken from the order of the thirtieth July, 1882, which it is contended denied defendants' motion for a new trial, and no bill of exceptions or statement settled on such motion, the defendants cannot now be heard on their bill of exceptions as to that part of the trial which was had before the jury. Is this contention maintainable?

In Hinds v. Gage, 56 Cal. 486, which was an action to dissolve a partnership, for an accounting between the partners, for the payment of the partnership debts, and to set aside certain alleged fraudulent judgments and sales, the court below, on the twentieth of June, 1878, filed its findings of fact, and on the twenty-seventh of same month a decree was entered setting aside the judgments and sales, dissolving the partnership, directing the property to be sold by a receiver who had been theretofore appointed, and ordering a reference to a referee to take an account between the partners, and to ascertain the indebtedness of the firm to third parties and between themselves. It was also ordered that the referee report the result of the accounting, and that upon the coming in of the report, and its approval, the proceeds of the partnership property be applied as stated in the decree. On the fifth of July, 1878, defendants gave notice of their intention to move for a new trial, which motion was denied March 5, 1879. The report of the referee was filed October 18, 1878, and after hearing the objections of the defendants thereto, it was confirmed. The court held that, as the notice of motion for a new trial was given before the report of the referee was filed, it was therefore premature, and that the appeal from the order denying such new trial should be dismissed. The court relied on and followed Crowther v. Rowlandson, 27 Cal. 377, in which it was held that it was the intention of the legislature that the proceedings in new trials should be postponed until cases had been tried, and that the trial of the case was not complete until the final report of the referee was filed. The case of Hinds v. Gage has never been overruled.

In the case before us the referee did not act, and the account was taken and stated by the court. The findings on this branch of the case were filed on the thirty-first of January, 1884. If the trial in the case of Hinds v. Gage did not end until the report of the referee was filed, by a parity of reasoning the trial in this case did not end until the filing of the findings of the court on the day first above mentioned. The notice of new trial was served and filed on the eleventh of February following; and, though this was on the eleventh day after such filing, still, as it does not appear that any notice of the filing of these findings was ever served on the defendants, from which service the 10 days in which they had to be given notice of such motion is to be computed, we must hold the notice given in time. The appellants, then, on their appeal from the order of the tenth day of May, 1884, denying a new trial, within the reason of the rule laid down in Hinds v. Gage, have a right to be heard on the matters stated in their bill of exceptions.

Another view may be taken in relation to this matter, which would accord to the defendants the right to be heard as above stated. The case should be regarded as having been tried by the court, and the findings as incomplete until findings latest in date were filed. The defendants, then, have a right to be heard, on giving notice of their motion for a new trial within 10 days after receiving notice of the filing of the findings. As above said, they have received no notice of the filing, and, therefore, their motion was in time.

We think that it is eminently just that the defendants should be here heard on their bill of exceptions. The court, in denying the motion to set aside the findings above mentioned, seemed to be of opinion that the defendants would lose nothing by deferring their notice as they did. This is apparent from the opinion of the court above stated. It is evident from his remarks that the learned judge did not regard the case as finally submitted, and the motion seems to have been denied, without considering the merits of it, on the ground that it would be better to make it after the final decision,—a course of procedure from which he said “no injury could result to either party.” Though this course of procedure, taken at the suggestion of the judge, would not warrant us in establishing a practice not sustained by the Code, still, as we find the course proper, we advert to it to show that, if the defendants are not heard here in regard to the questions arising on their bill of exceptions, injustice would be done them. In fact, their motion for a new trial was not heard on the merits at all in the lower court until after the second set of findings was filed. When the bill of exceptions was settled, no objection was made to it as containing matters not proper to be inserted in it at that stage of the case, and the motion proceeded and was determined as if it was in all respects regularly made.

The parties appear to have acted on the intimation of the court. On the twenty-third of February, 1883, the court, after having been advised by the verdict, filed the first set of findings; and on the fifth of March, 1883, the parties consented in writing that defendants should have 20 days from March 1, 1883, to prepare and serve a bill of exceptions, and file and serve a notice of motion for new trial. On the same day, and in pursuance of this consent, an order of court was accordingly entered. This consent was continued in writing, and by order, to a day subsequent to the settlement of the bill of exceptions. Under these circumstances it would be most unfair now to hold that the bill of exceptions should not be considered in its entirety.

In the course of the trial several exceptions were reserved by defendants to the rulings of the court upon the admissibility of evidence offered on behalf of plaintiffs, which we proceed to consider.

The plaintiffs offered in evidence a petition signed, “F. S. DUFF, by S. M. BUCK, his Atty.,” for letters of administration on the estate of Richard Duff, deceased. The petition was filed in December, 1877, and described by metes and bounds, or by reference to lots in certain blocks in the city of Eureka, giving the numbers of the lots and blocks, certain parcels of land as belonging to the estate of Richard Duff, deceased, and stated that certain of the parcels described as belonging to the estate were held by Robert P. Duff. Some parcels of this property described as held by Robert P. Duff were really claimed by and had been conveyed to Frank S. Duff. These parcels, or some of them, are portions of the property involved here. When this paper was offered, there was no proof that F. S. Duff (who is the defendant Frank S. Duff) ever signed it, or knew of its contents, or, in fact, ever heard of it.

At no time has the statute ever required that the real property belonging, or claimed to belong, to the estate of a decedent, should be described in the petition for letters of administration. It is only required that the value and character of the property, “when known to the applicant,” should be stated. As the petition must state the facts essential to give jurisdiction of the case, it may in some cases be necessary to state that the deceased left property in the county in which the application is made. Code Civil Proc. § 1294. But the statute never required any further statement regarding the property than that above pointed out.

The paper in question was not offered to prove the fact that an application to procure letters of administration on the estate of the decedent was made by defendant Frank, but as an admission by Frank that certain statements made in it that certain parcels of the land individually claimed by him were not his property, but belonged to the estate of Richard Duff, deceased. This petition is a pleading, and the rules in regard to admissions in pleadings apply to it. Foster v. Wilber, 1 Paige, 540; Van Vleck v. Burroughs, 6 Barb. 344; Carle v. Underhill, 3 Bradf. Surr. 101; Code Civil Proc. §§ 420, 1371. Conceding that it contained the admissions of facts which would be evidence against a party who had knowingly made them, are they evidence against him under the circumstances above mentioned?

In 2 Whart. Ev. § 838, it is said "that the pleadings of a party in one suit may be used in evidence against him in another suit, not as estoppel, but as proof, open to rebuttal and explanation, that he admitted certain facts. But, in order to bring such admission home to him, the pleading must either be signed by him, or it must appear that it was within the scope of the attorney's authority to admit such facts." The learned author cites the following cases: Parsons v. Copeland, 33 Me. 370; Green v. Bedell, 48 N. H. 546; Currier v. Silloway, 1 Allen, 19; Gordon v. Parmelee, 2 Allen, 212; Bliss v. Nichols, 12 Allen, 443; Brown v. Jewett, 120 Mass. 215; Cook v. Barr, 44 N. Y. 156; Tabb v. Cabell, 17 Grat. 160; Hammat v. Russ, 16 Me. 171; Ayers v. Insurance Co., 17 Iowa, 176; Meade v. Black, 22 Wis. 241; Hobson v. Odgen, 16 Kan. 388.

In Cook v. Barr, 44 N. Y. 156, the commission of appeals, speaking by EARL, C., said: "When a party to a civil action has made admissions of facts material to the issue in the action, it is always competent for the adverse party to give them in evidence; and it matters not whether the admissions were in writing or by parol, nor when nor to whom they were made. Admissions do not furnish conclusive evidence of the facts admitted, unless they were made under such circumstances as to constitute an estoppel, or were made in the pleadings in an action, when they are conclusive in that action. They may be contained in a letter addressed to the opposite party, or to a third person, and in either case are entitled to equal weight and credit. They are received in evidence because of the great probability that a party would not admit or state anything against himself or his own interest unless it were true. And I am unable to see why the rule does not apply to admissions contained in the pleadings in an action under our system of practice, which requires the facts to be alleged truly in the pleadings. It must first be shown, however, by the signature of the party, or otherwise, that the facts were inserted with his knowledge, or under his direction, and with his sanction."

In Boileau v. Rutlin, 2 Exch. 664, a question arose on the admissibility of a bill in chancery as evidence of the admission by the complainant of the truth of the facts stated therein, and it was held inadmissible for any such purpose, but only for the purpose of showing that a suit was instituted, and the subject-matter of it. This case was decided in 1848, and Judge CURTIS, in Church v. Shelton, 2 Curt. 275, states that it was held as above after a very careful examination of all the previous authorities both in England and Ireland. The same learned judge further says of this ruling: "I consider this decision to be in conformity with the weight of authority in this country;" and cites Adams v. McMillan, 7 Port. (Ala.) 73; Durden v. Cleveland, 4 Ala. 225; and Isaac's Lessee v. Clarke, 2 Gill, 1.

In Church v. Shelton, supra, the question arose as to the admissibility of a libel as evidence of a confession, by the party filing it, of the particular facts stated in it. The learned judge held it inadmissible as a confession, but admissible on another ground and for another purpose. The purpose for which it was admitted in the case cited does not exist in the case before us.

In the cases excluding bills in chancery, they seem to have been considered as the mere suggestions of counsel, for which the parties on whose behalf they were filed should not be held responsible.

In Boileau v. Rutlin, supra, it seems that the privity of the party complainant appeared. Still the bill was held inadmissible as an admission of the facts stated in it.

In Marianski v. Cairns, 1 Macq. 212, the defendant offered in evidence a pleading (answer) of plaintiff in a suit brought against him by his wife for alimony, as an admission of his poverty. Its admissibility was sustained by the house of lords on the ground that it was signed by the plaintiff. As to this Lord TRURO said: "The document in question stands on a footing quite different from that of pleadings in general, for it is signed by the party himself; and I recollect to have asked (though I do not remember that I have received an answer) whether it was upon oath or not. Assuming, however, that it was not upon oath, still it was a representation made by the individual himself, under his hand, as to the state of his own circumstances. By that document he described himself as living upon 8s. a week. And, one of the points in this case being whether Marianski had the means to make the advances which he claimed to be due to him, the document was tendered to show his position and resources at a period shortly antecedent to that at which the advances were alleged to have been made by him. Now, it certainly appears to me that this document is not open to the objection which would apply to pleadings in ordinary; and I am of opinion that being a statement of his own circumstances, made by the individual, and signed by him, the fact of its having been made in the course of another suit ought not to render it inadmissible as evidence in this suit."

In McDermott v. Mitchell, 47 Cal. 249, the joint answer of Root and Mitchell in the action of Brock v. Mitchell and Root, verified by Root, but not by Mitchell, was offered in evidence. It was held admissible as to Root, but not as to Mitchell. "As to the latter," the court said, "it was the mere work of the attorney, and not admissible as evidence against the client in another action."

In the cases above cited from Massachusetts, the pleadings were admitted on the ground that they were the statements of an agent (the attorney for the party) while employed and acting within the scope of his authority. 2 Allen, 215.

In this case it appears that the petition admitted was not signed by the petitioner, Frank S. Duff. His name was written at the end of the paper by his attorney. So far as appears, the authority of the attorney was to file a petition appropriate to the procurement of an order of court for letters of administration. This authority would not extend beyond the insertion of such allegations which the law required such application should contain. As is clear from the section of the statute above cited, a description of the property of the decedent's estate was not required, but only the value and character of such property. The character of the property would sufficiently appear by a statement in the petition that it was realty or personalty. The attorney was only authorized to file a petition stating the character and value of the property. In going beyond this, he was not acting within the scope of his authority, and therefore the statements in the petition describing the property were not on that ground admissible.

Evidence in relation to the preparation and filing of this paper was put in at a subsequent stage of the trial. The evidence shows that Frank Duff and his brother, James, called to see the attorney who drew it (Mr. Buck) about the date of its filing. James Duff said to him that he claimed that a portion of the property held by Robert Duff belonged to the estate of his father, and desired to have some one appointed administrator, and a suit brought for the purpose of testing his right. After some conversation Buck proposed to James Duff to file a petition, and asked him who should become the administrator. It seems not to have occurred to James that he could not very well be such because he was not a resident of the state. Buck suggested Frank as a proper person, to which Frank reluctantly assented. Frank had nothing to say about the business. Buck then asked about the property, and James said that it was the property of Robert Duff, and distinctly stated in Frank's presence that he made no claim to the portion of it that belonged to Frank Duff. Buck then asked where he could get a description of the property, to which James replied that he did not know unless from the records. Instead of sending to the recorder's office, Buck sent to the assessor's office, and told the person sent to copy the property assessed to Robert Duff. It turned out that some of Frank's property was assessed to Robert, and this portion of Frank's property so assessed was put by description in the petition. There is no evidence that Frank knew of this until a subsequent period, when a second petition for letters of administration was drawn up.

If the second petition, which omitted all the property of Frank S. Duff and that claimed by Robert P. Duff, was filed as a substitute for the first, was not the first petition inadmissible, within the rule declared in Mecham v. McKay, 37 Cal. 154, and followed in Ponce v. McElvy, 51 Cal. 223? As it does not appear that the second petition took the place of the first, the question does not arise here, and we do not determine it. It does not appear that any letters were granted or obtained on this petition.

As the petition was not signed by Frank Duff personally, and it does not appear that the facts were inserted with his knowledge or under his direction and with his sanction, we are of opinion, on the authorities above cited, that the court erred in admitting it as evidence. It is well settled that, an error against the appellant being shown, injury to him is presumed, and that it devolves upon the respondent to show that no injury has in fact been done. Ponce v. McElvy, 51 Cal. 223. On an examination of the record we are not satisfied that no injury was done to the defendants by admitting this paper in evidence.

The statements as to R. P. Duff's property in the petition offered are entirely irrelevant as to any issue proffered by Frank Duff, and are not admissible against Robert P. Duff. There is no such joinder of interest between Frank and Robert Duff as will make any admissions of Frank binding on Robert Duff. If not admissible against the former, they are not against the latter. The statements are not admissible as declarations of a co-conspirator, as they do not appear to be in furtherance of any common design, or made in the execution of such design. They were in no sense any part of the res gesta.

The judgment roll in the case of William R. Duff v. James T. Ryan and James R. Duff was offered in evidence by plaintiffs. It was objected to by defendants as irrelevant. This objection was overruled, and defendants excepted. The action of Duff v. Ryan was brought to recover a claim for $11,017.77, assigned by Richard Duff to the plaintiff in that action. Plaintiff recovered judgment on the thirty-first of August, 1885, for $11,572.39. It does not appear that anything was ever paid on the judgment to William R. Duff. We cannot see how this evidence was relevant to any issue in the case. If William R. had collected anything on it, it might be relevant as evidence that he had means, and was able to purchase the property in question here, but the judgment roll alone was irrelevant, and should have been ruled out. Such evidence might have misled the jury, and for that reason should not have been admitted. While we might not reverse the judgment on account of the admission of this document, on a subsequent trial it should not be admitted without further evidence which would show its relevancy.

We cannot see on what ground the paper marked "copy of R. P. Duff's statement" was admissible. Conceding that it was sufficiently proved that it was a copy of an original paper signed by R. P. Duff, still the admissions, if any, contained in it (and it was offered to prove those admissions) were made for the purpose of submitting to arbitration some matters of difference between the heirs of Richard Duff and R. P. Duff, and were doubtless made for the purpose of dispensing with proofs of the facts admitted. An admission for that purpose cannot be offered in this action, any more than an admission in one action, made for the purpose of dispensing with proof otherwise required, can be offered in another action which is not allowed. The court acts on such admission on the trial of the action, to use the language of Mr. Greenleaf, "not as truth in the abstract, but as a formula for the solution of the particular problem before it,—namely, the case in judgment,—without injury to the general administration of justice." 4 Greenl. Ev. § 206.

It is urged that section 338, subd. 4, Code Civil Proc., does not apply to an action like this, which, though founded in fraud, is but an action to recover real property. In support of this point, attention is called to the fact that the heading to the chapter of which the above section is a part, is in these words: "The time of commencing actions other than for the recovery of real property," and that the first section (335) in the chapter is as follows: "The periods prescribed for the commencement of actions other than for the recovery of real property are as follows." And it is further said that this is really an action to recover real property; referring to Oakland v. Carpentier, 13 Cal. 552, where it was said of a like provision in section 17 of the then statute: "We think that this provision has no relation to an equitable proceeding to set aside a fraudulent deed of real estate, when the effect of it is to restore the possession of the premises to the defrauded party. In such a case, the action is substantially an action for the recovery of real estate. Indeed, it is literally."

Granting that this action is of the character above stated, the result would be that there is not now, and never has been, any statute of limitations in this state in regard to actions for relief on the ground of fraud in relation to real property, and we would then be compelled to fall back on the rules of equity as a part of the common law governing actions for relief on the ground of fraud in the sale and purchase of real property. These rules are substantially the same as those which have been adopted and enforced in regard to the subdivision and section above mentioned. See Boyd v. Blankman, 29 Cal. 46, 47; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 917, and cases cited in note 3.

It may be remarked that the section and subdivision of the statute under consideration has in many cases been applied to actions for relief on the ground of fraud in purchases of real property. See Boyd v. Blankman, supra; Moore v. Moore, 56 Cal. 90; People v. Blankenship, 52 Cal. 619. In the case last cited this section and subdivision were held applicable to an action brought by the state to cancel a patent alleged to have been procured by fraud. But, in the view above taken, it is immaterial whether the section and subdivision apply or not.

The complaint states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Its allegations are substantially as follows: That in 1863 W. R. Duff was the owner of the property involved herein; that in August, 1863, he executed to Richard Duff a letter of attorney, by which he authorized Richard, inter alia, to sell and convey for the constituent the property referred to; that, immediately after the execution of this letter, William R. Duff departed from this state, and never returned to it; that subsequently, during a period extending from the fifth day of July, 1866, to the third day of April, 1872, Richard Duff, assuming to act for his principal under the letter, by deeds purporting to be executed under it, conveyed to defendant, Robert P. Duff, certain of the property aforesaid; that prior to the seventh of July, 1867, Richard, acting under the letter of attorney, by deeds purporting to be executed under it, conveyed to the defendant Frank S. Duff certain portions of the property aforesaid; that between the first day of November, 1867, and the first of January, 1880, Robert P. Duff conveyed to Frank certain of the parcels of the land in controversy; that between the sixth day of July, 1867, and the commencement of the action, Frank conveyed to Robert certain parcels of the land in suit; that the deeds above mentioned, executed by Richard to Robert and Frank, were "without any consideration of any kind given or agreed to be given to William R. Duff, or any person for the use and benefit of William," and that the deeds executed by Robert to Frank, and by Frank to Robert, were without any valuable consideration, and neither of them were purchasers for value; and that Robert and Frank, when these last-mentioned lands were conveyed to them, respectively, had full knowledge of all the matters hereinbefore alleged; and that the conveyances executed by Richard as attorney were made with the intent and purpose of defrauding William, and that they had been accepted by Robert and Frank acting in collusion with the attorney, Richard, with the intent to defraud William; that, during a period of seven years preceding the commencement of this action, defendants had received the rents and profits of the land, to the amount of $1,000 per annum; that William R. Duff died intestate, leaving the plaintiffs surviving him, Julia K. Duff, his widow, and Agnes, a minor, only child of the said Julia and William; that William devised his property to his wife, Julia; and Agnes, born after her father's death, is entitled to share because not mentioned in the will. The complaint further alleges the proper appointment of William L. Duff as guardian ad litem of Agnes; that Julia Duff had no knowledge or information of the aforementioned conveyances, and the acts stated in relation to them, and their fraudulent character, until an intimation was made to her in a letter received by her from Mrs. Louisa Wilson, sister of the defendants, on or about the twentieth of April, 1879, in consequence of which she was led to make inquiry concerning the property owned by William R. Duff in the county of Humboldt; that she has made discovery of the aforementioned acts of Richard and the defendants since April, 1879.

We are of opinion that the complaint sets forth a case of concealed fraud. It is averred that William was ignorant of the conveyances during his whole life. Let it be observed that there is no allegation that the deeds were recorded. So, conceding, as contended, that William was bound to look at the records of the county of Humboldt, it does not appear that they would have given him any information.

But a relation of trust and confidence existed here between Richard Duff and William. The former was the attorney of the latter, and under such circumstances it is the duty of the attorney to keep his constituent informed of all sales and conveyances that he has made of the property to which his agency extends. "An agent must use ordinary diligence to keep his principal informed of his acts in the course of his agency." Civil Code, § 2020. This has always been the rule governing the relation of principal and agent. It does not appear that anything had occurred to put William on inquiry.

It must also be observed that William was absent from the state while the transactions above referred to occurred, having left the state immediately after the execution of the letter of attorney, and remained absent during the remainder of his life. Under these circumstances, we think the averment that William was ignorant of the conveyances, and had no knowledge or information that the conveyances had been executed by his attorney, is sufficient. See Buckner v. Calcote, 28 Miss. 597, and cases there cited. His wife and child were also absent, and we do not see why the same rule does not apply to them, though the agency terminated on the death of Richard. William lived about five months after Richard's death, but we do not see that his failure to come to California during this period, and look after his property, when he might have ascertained what had been done, puts him in fault. The averments show reasonable and proper diligence on the part of plaintiff Julia K. Duff. The other plaintiff was an infant of tender years, and no negligence, under the circumstances appearing in the complaint, can be attributed to her.

But it may be urged that the grantees in the deeds executed by Richard Duff under the letter of attorney could act upon the presumption that Richard had kept William informed of all his acts, and of his conveyances to the defendants. On this point we are of opinion that, conceding the fraud and collusion attributed to the defendants by the allegations of the complaint, (which must be conceded on this demurrer,) they must stand on the fact as it is, that no such information was given to the principal by his agent and attorney. We think the complaint sufficient.

It is further urged that this is an action in equity, and a court of equity has no jurisdiction, because it appears that the remedy at law, to recover possession by ejectment, is complete and adequate, for the reason that the conveyances to the defendants under the letter of attorney, as they were made without consideration, were utterly void, and they constitute no defense to an action of ejectment; and we are referred, to sustain this contention, to Dupont v. Wertheman, 10 Cal. 354, and Mott v. Smith, 16 Cal. 533. In the case of Dupont v. Wertheman, where there was a recovery in ejectment, the above rule was declared. But the complaint sets forth a case of fraud, and of fraud according to the principles laid down in People v. Houghtaling, 7 Cal. 348, of which a court of equity had jurisdiction. In that case an action in equity was sustained for a specific fund of money declared to be a trust fund, though the action for money had and received could have been maintained for the money, and the recovery would have been the same in the latter action as in the former. We do not think we would be justified in holding that a court of equity would have no jurisdiction.

The jurisdiction in equity in matters of fraud is very broad; and, although it has been held in various of the states that the jurisdiction in equity will not be exercised when the remedy at law is certain, complete, and adequate, still the jurisdiction is not denied. Upon the facts alleged in the complaint, showing that there has been a great lapse of time since the conveyances assailed herein were executed, from which it might well be inferred that the statute of limitations would be invoked as a defense, we must hold the contention not maintainable.

For the errors above pointed out the case must go back for a new trial. As the issues of fact will have to be tried again, we refrain from saying anything on the point that they were not sustained by the evidence. But we think it proper to remark that the first finding is not as definite as it should be. It states that "upon August 4, 1863, William R. Duff was the owner of the legal title of the lands," etc. It should be found that he was the owner of the lands; and as facts are averred in the answer from which it would seem that the purchase of most, if not all, of the land in suit was made, and the purchase money paid by others, who caused the conveyance of the legal title to be made to William R. Duff, by which a resulting trust in favor of the parties paying the money was created, we think there should be a finding on the issue so made. The mere finding that William R. Duff did not acquire the legal title in trust for other persons is not sufficient.

The ninth finding is not sufficient. It states that William R. Duff, in his life-time, had no actual knowledge or information of any deeds, etc. The finding should be that he had no knowledge or information of any kind on the subject, if the evidence establishes the fact that he had no knowledge or information of any circumstances to put him on inquiry as to the deeds, etc. As the finding now stands, there is an implication that circumstances were known to William R. which should have stimulated him to inquiry.

The thirteenth finding is a finding of evidence, not of the fact that the property mentioned in it was held in trust as stated in it. The finding should be that the property referred to in the letter was held in trust in the manner and proportions mentioned in the letter.

If the court finds that the cause of action is not barred by the statute of limitations, it should so find, and not merely facts from which it may be inferred. This court is not authorized to infer facts from facts found. That is the province of the trial court. On the facts found this court determines questions of law arising on them, not facts by inference from facts found. We intend to say that, in addition to the facts found on the issue joined in regard to the defense of the statute of limitations, the court below should have found whether the cause of action was barred by the statute or not.

The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial. So ordered.

We concur: MYRICK, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; MCKINSTRY, J.; MCKEE, J.

Under Pen. Code Cal. § 1246, requiring the clerk with whom the notice of appeal is filed, within 10 days thereafter, or within 10 days after the settlement of the bill of exceptions, to transmit to the clerk of the appellate court a copy of the record, an appeal will be dismissed on a showing by certificate of the clerk below that four years have elapsed since the taking of the appeal; that defendant has never requested the clerk to make up a transcript; that the bill of exceptions has never been filed, though settled; and that no transcript has been sent to the supreme court.

In bank. Appeal from supreme court, Stanislaus county.

Defendant was adjudged guilty of libel, sentenced, and took an appeal from the judgment and order denying a new trial. Respondent moved, on certificate of the clerk of court below, for a dismissal, showing that more than four years had elapsed since appeal taken; that defendant had never requested the clerk to send up a transcript of the judgment and proceedings; that the bill of exceptions had never been filed by defendant, though settled, and no transcript had been sent to the supreme court by the clerk of the superior court.

Section 1246, Pen. LOVELAND v. GARNER and others. (No. 11,374.)

1. CORPORATIONS—MINING COMPANIES—REPORTS—LIABILITY OF DIRECTORS—ACTS CAL. 1880, PAGE 134.

The California statute (Acts 1880, p. 134) regulating the conduct of mining business, and requiring the directors of corporations organized for that purpose, under a joint and several penalty of $1,000, recoverable by any stockholder, to post in a conspicuous place in the office of the company, on the first Monday of each month, a duly-verified and itemized account or balance-sheet for the preceding month, is penal in its character; and, as it does not specifically declare that the penalty may be recovered for each failure to comply with its requirements, there can be but one recovery for all such failures prior to the commencement of suit.

2. QUI TAM AND PENAL ACTIONS—PLEADING—STATUTORY DUTIES.

The joining in one action of several matters of fact which show as many failures to perform a duty enjoined by law, and claiming the legal right, as a conclusion of law, to recover a penalty for each, when the law itself allows the recovery of only one penalty for one and all of such violations, is not a joining of several distinct causes of action.

3. APPEAL—WAIVER—PLEADING—AMENDMENT AFTER DEMURRER SUSTAINED.

Where a demurrer to a complaint has been sustained, if the plaintiff files an amended complaint, in which he unites and pleads anew in one count all the causes of action which he had pleaded in his first complaint in separate counts, he waives his right, on appeal from an order sustaining a demurrer to the amended complaint, to object to the ruling on the demurrer to the original complaint.

Commissioners' decision.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county.

Hargrave & Gray, for appellant. Byron Waters and Harris & Allen, for respondents.

FOOTE, C. The plaintiff brought his action to recover from the defendants $7,000, as liquidated demands, for their seven distinct failures to comply with the provisions of a certain act of the California legislature in reference to the carrying on and conducting the business of mining. The act referred to is to be found in St. 1880, p. 134.

The complaint first filed in the action contained seven distinct counts upon as many alleged causes of action, each claiming the right to recover of the defendants a penalty of $1,000 for their separate failures, on the first Mondays of seven different months, "to have the reports and accounts current made and posted," as in the first section of the act provided. The defendants demurred to that complaint, on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and because the causes of action as set out were improperly united with each other. The demurrer was sustained.

The plaintiff then filed an amended complaint, in which was charged in one count seven distinct failures on the part of the defendants, on the first Mondays of as many different months, "to have the reports and accounts current made and posted," as required by the statute heretofore mentioned; and demand was made for the recovery of a penalty of $1,000 for each failure on the part of the defendants to comply with their alleged obligations under that statute. That pleading also was demurred to, on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and that several causes of action were improperly united, and the court sustained the demurrer.

The plaintiff declining to amend his pleading, judgment for costs was rendered for the defendants, and from that this appeal was taken.

The ruling sustaining the first demurrer cannot now be attacked, for the reason that afterwards the plaintiff filed an amended complaint, in which he united and pleaded anew in one count all the causes of action which he had in his first complaint pleaded in separate counts, and thus waived his right to object to such action of the court. Hagely v. Hagely, 9 Pac. Rep. 305.

The further contention of the defendants is that, upon a fair construction of the statute upon which the action was predicated, it will be found to contain no warrant for a recovery of more than one penalty of $1,000, even if they should have neglected for any number of months to comply with its requirements, and that the amended complaint is demurrable because it states, joined together, several instances of their violation of that statute, and demands judgment for $1,000 for each violation.

So much of that act as is necessary to be considered for the purposes of this controversy reads as follows:

"Section 1. It shall be the duty of the directors, on the first Monday of each and every month, to cause to be made an itemized account or balance-sheet for the previous month. * * * Such account or balance-sheet shall be verified under oath by the president and secretary, and posted in some conspicuous place in the office of the company. * * *

"Sec. 3. In case of the failure of the directors to have the reports and accounts current made and posted as in the first section of this act provided they shall be liable, either severally or jointly, to an action by any stockholder, in any court of competent jurisdiction, complaining thereof, and, on proof of such refusal or failure, such complaining stockholder shall recover judgment for one thousand dollars liquidated damages, with costs of suit."

It will be perceived that this act is, in its nature, penal, and does not specifically declare that for each failure to comply with its requirements a penalty may be recovered. Nor does it declare that each refusal or neglect of that kind shall render the directors liable for a penalty. It would therefore seem that, under its provisions, the stockholder or stockholders might, at their election, either proceed against the directors for a single delinquency, or might forbear to do so until more than one dereliction of duty on the part of their trustees (so to speak) had occurred; but in neither event could more than one penalty be recovered.

But, while this is the reasonable and unstrained view to be taken of the law relative to the extent of the liability of the directors, it does not follow that the amended complaint did not contain a sufficient statement of facts to constitute a cause of action, or that the demurrer should have been sustained on the alleged ground that several causes of action were in that pleading improperly joined. The joining of several matters of fact together which show as many failures to perform a duty enjoined by law, and claiming the legal right (which is but a conclusion of law) to recover a penalty for each, when the law itself only allows the recovery of one penalty for one and all of such violations, is not a joining of several distinct causes of action.

The plaintiff is entitled to recover if he has alleged, and can prove, the defendants to have been guilty of failure, on the first Monday of any one month, "to have the reports and accounts current made and posted as in the first section of this act provided," or if they have so failed on the first Monday of any other or all other months; and hence the statement of seven violations of the statute of the same kind, although he may join them together in his complaint, and claim to recover a penalty for each, is, under the statute, a statement of but one cause of action. In other words, as the statute in terms provides for but a single penalty of $1,000, no other or greater sum can be recovered, although violations of the statute may have been frequent. But it does not follow from this that the plaintiff may not join together in one count several of such alleged violations, and prove any one of them in his power, as they constitute separately or together but one cause of action.

We are therefore of opinion that the judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded; the defendants to be allowed, if so advised, to answer the amended complaint.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; SEARLS, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and cause remanded, with leave to defendants to answer the amended complaint.

HANCOCK v. HUBBELL. (No. 11,501.)

1. DAMAGES—BREACH OF CONTRACT—PLEADING—EVIDENCE.

In an action for a breach of contract by defendant, to give plaintiff a certain time in which to take up tax certificates, by reason of which breach a third person has obtained tax deeds of the land, and caused the same to be recorded, and has brought an action against plaintiff to quiet the title to said land, in the absence of an allegation in the complaint that plaintiff has lost possession of it, it is incompetent to introduce proof tending to show the value of the rents and profits of such land, as a foundation for a judgment against the defendant for the loss of its possession.

2. SAME—PROXIMATE CAUSE—SPECIAL DAMAGE.

The action to quiet title was not a proximate or necessary result of the breach, and, no special damages being pleaded, evidence of expenses and attorney's fees in that cause is inadmissible.

3. TRUSTS—EVIDENCE TO ESTABLISH.

A trust to purchase lands at tax sale, and restore them to their owner, is not established by an agreement, just before the time of redemption expired, to extend the period of redemption a month beyond the statutory limit.

4. PLEADING—AMENDMENT DURING TRIAL NECESSITATING CONTINUANCE.

After a trial has been in progress several days, and the plaintiff had been fully advised early in the proceedings that the defendant considered the complaint defective, it is not an abuse of the court's discretion to refuse the plaintiff an amendment which, if granted, would have necessitated a continuance.

5. NONSUIT—PLAINTIFF ENTITLED TO NOMINAL DAMAGES.

Where, in an action to recover damages for breach of contract, no damages are proven, but a breach is established, the plaintiff is entitled to a judgment for nominal damages and costs, and it is error to order a nonsuit.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Plaintiff alleges that, February 21, 1880, he was the owner and in the possession of certain real estate; that, about the time it was to be sold for delinquent taxes, plaintiff agreed to let it be sold therefor, and that defendant should buy it in, and hold the title in trust for plaintiff; that it was accordingly sold February 24, 1880, to defendant; that on February 21, 1880, defendant agreed to give plaintiff till March 24, 1880, to redeem; that March 23, 1880, plaintiff delivered the amount due, but defendant refused to accept the tender, and had in fact assigned the certificate to John Anderson, in violation of his contract; that Anderson obtained the tax deeds, which were recorded; that the title of record still stands in Anderson, who has brought suit to quiet title; and that the value of the land is $50,000; and prays for damages in the sum of $50,000. The instrument on which the trust was supported is as follows:

"LOS ANGELES, February 21, 1880.

"It is understood and agreed that Henry Hancock may redeem the land assessed to Sylvester Bryant, [estate of,] and that assessed to John Hancock, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, in San Bernardino county, purchased at the last tax sale, on or before March 24, 1880, by paying the amount paid out, and 20 per cent. thereon; but the said time shall not extend beyond said date, to-wit, March 24, 1880, time being the essence of this agreement.

On the third day of the trial plaintiff asked leave to amend his complaint so as to set forth special damages, money paid out for counsel fees, and costs in suit to quiet title. The defendants objected, on the ground that, if they are allowed to amend, it necessitates a continuance. Motion denied.

L. Quint and Barclay & Wilson, for appellant. Chapman & Hendrick, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This is an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit and an order refusing a new trial. We have carefully examined the record and all the authorities cited by counsel. The complaint alleged that the plaintiff was in possession of certain lands involved in this controversy, but did not aver that he had ever lost possession thereof, therefore it was not competent to introduce proof tending to show the value of the rents and profits of such land, as a foundation for a judgment against the defendant for the loss of its possession.

No special damages were pleaded; hence the evidence offered of expenses, attorney fees, etc., which were not the proximate result of the violation of the contract, or which, in the ordinary course of things, would not have been likely to result therefrom, was properly excluded.

The trust alleged was not proved by competent and legal evidence, as the written agreement, which was the only legal proof of its existence offered, did not tend to establish it.

The court did not abuse the discretion vested in it by law in refusing the plaintiff's application to amend his complaint. The trial had been in progress for several days, the plaintiff was fully advised early in the course of the proceedings that the defendant considered the complaint defective, and the latter made that fact evident by repeated objections to the introduction of evidence tending to prove damages claimed to have been suffered by the former. It is plain that a continuance would have been the result had leave been granted to amend, which result would not have been caused by any fault of the defendant. Graham v. Stewart, 9 Pac. Rep. 555.

But the plaintiff claims that it was his right to have the jury pass upon the question whether or not, upon the evidence before them of a breach of contract, he was entitled to a verdict for nominal damages. We think the evidence did show a violation by the defendant of his contract with the plaintiff to permit the latter to redeem certain lands sold at tax sale; the former having possession of the certificates of such sale at the time the contract was entered into, such redemption to take place within a certain specified time. Although the record does not show that any proof was offered, which was admissible under the pleadings, that any actual damages were suffered by the plaintiff from the breach of the contract on the part of the defendant, yet, as the contract was proved to have been violated, the former was entitled to have the jury determine, upon a proper charge of the law by the court, whether or not they would render a verdict for nominal damages in his favor. And, if they had returned a verdict for the plaintiff for nominal damages, a judgment therefor would have been proper. Browner v. Davis, 15 Cal. 9-11; Sedg. Dam. (7th Ed.) 71, 72, note B, and cases cited. The judgment of nonsuit was therefore wrong, and the court should have granted a new trial upon the plaintiff's motion.

The judgment carried with it the right of the defendant by legal process to enforce payment from the plaintiff, or satisfaction by sale of his property, of the sum of $232.90, recovered by the former against the latter for costs. To that extent the plaintiff's rights were prejudiced; but it is apparent from the record that the plaintiff, upon a new trial, would not be entitled to anything more than a judgment for nominal damages, which, while it would relieve him of the payment of costs to the defendant, would not give him the right to enforce the payment of his own costs from the latter.

For these reasons we are of the opinion that the order denying a new trial should be reversed, unless the defendant will remit the sum of $232.90, which he has recovered for his costs, etc., against the plaintiff; but, upon that being done by the defendant, the order should be affirmed.

The appeal from the judgment, not having been taken within the statutory period of time, cannot be considered.

WE CONCUR: SEARLS, C.; BELCHER, C. C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the appeal from the judgment is dismissed. Order reversed, unless defendant, within 30 days, remits the sum of $232.90, which being done, the order should stand affirmed. Said remittance to be filed with the clerk of this court.

BRALY v. HENRY. (No. 11,521.)

PROMISSORY NOTES—PROOF OF PAROL CONTEMPORANEOUS AGREEMENT—CONSIDERATION.

In an action on a promissory note, by the payee, or by one taking it with full knowledge of the facts, the maker may, by way of defense, prove a parol contemporaneous agreement that, though the face of the note showed a sum certain, the note having been given for the price of a stack of hay, if the value of such hay at a fixed price per ton did not amount to the face of the note, a rebate and credit was to be made in the maker's favor of the difference between the actual value of the hay and the face of the note, and that, under such agreement, a less sum is due than that sued for; following former decision, 11 Pac. Rep. 385.¹

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county.

On rehearing. Action on promissory note. See 11 Pac. Rep. 385.

Grady & Merriam and E. E. Calhoun, for appellant. Nourse & Church, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This is an action upon a joint and several promissory note, made by defendant and one W. E. Henry, on the twenty-sixth day of October, 1883, for $1,364, and interest at 12 per cent. per annum, payable four months after date, to T. E. Hughes or order, and averred to have been indorsed to plaintiff before maturity, and upon which there is claimed to be due the sum of $321.15, and interest thereon at 12 per cent. per annum from November 24, 1884. Plaintiff had a verdict and judgment as prayed for in his complaint; from which judgment, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. The cause was decided by department 1 of this court, in an opinion reversing the judgment and order appealed from. 11 Pac. Rep. 385. On petition of respondent, a reargument was ordered in bank, and the cause again comes up for consideration. The facts essential to an understanding of the question involved are set out in the former opinion, and need not be reproduced here.

Upon a review of the record, in the light of the scrutiny invoked by the proceedings had in the cause subsequent to the decision referred to, we see no just cause to doubt the soundness of the views expressed in the opinion, or for changing the conclusion reached therein. It is true that, as a general rule, parol evidence is not admissible to control, contradict, or vary a written instrument. It is equally true that there are certain legal presumptions indulged in favor of negotiable paper, with a view to facilitate its use and negotiation in commercial transactions, among which are: (1) That, until the contrary appears, every negotiable bill or note is presumed to be founded upon sufficient legal consideration; (2) that the holder and possessor of a bill or note is the true owner; (3) that paper, properly indorsed, was so indorsed before due; (4) that the holder of a bill or note took it in the usual course of business, before maturity, for value; (5) that the maker of the note is the primary debtor, and that the acceptor of a bill of exchange is primarily liable thereon.

These and other presumptions, indulged by the process of artificial reasoning known as conclusions of law, and formulated for the advantage of commercial interests and intercourse, are not conclusive, but are liable to be rebutted by parol evidence that the facts are different from what the law in their absence presumes. The burden of proof in such cases is upon the party who wishes to rebut the presumption. It is not received to contradict or vary the instrument, but to repel the presumptions of law which, in the absence of such proof, arise in its favor.

As between the original parties to a promissory note, or as to one taking it with notice of the facts or after maturity, a consideration is as essential to its validity as in case of other contracts. The maker may, as to such parties, defeat the note in toto, by showing there was no consideration whatever, or, by showing that there was only a partial consideration, may pro tanto defeat a recovery. Story, Prom. N. § 187.

In making proof of the want of consideration in such cases, the maker of the instrument, in effect, says that he made the instrument, but that the presumed legal effect does not follow, because it lacked the consideration essential to uphold all contracts, whether verbal or in writing. It no more changes the contract than does proof of payment or any other defense, which admits its execution and avoids its legal effect. A want of consideration must not be confounded with mere inadequacy of consideration. The latter cannot be set up to defeat a note. To illustrate: A. sells to B. 10 horses, at $100 each, and takes his note. B. cannot, in an action on the note by the payee, in the absence of fraud, show the horses to have been worth less than the agreed price, and thus abridge the recovery, as it would only establish an inadequacy of consideration, but he may show that none of the horses were delivered, and thus defeat the recovery; or he may show that five only of ten horses were delivered, and defeat a recovery pro tanto.

Apply the doctrine to the present case. Defendant, according to the testimony offered, purchased a given number of tons of hay, at a given price per ton, and gave his note for the amount. The quantity when weighed proved to be less by a number of tons, which multiplied by the price per ton, equaled $321.15. If the proffered evidence stopped here, defendant, as against the plaintiff, if the latter took with notice, would have been entitled to a proportionate reduction upon the sum called for by the note; and we are unable to see how defendant's rights are abridged by the fact that the parties, not knowing the quantity of hay, agreed that, if it fell short of the estimated or supposed quantity, a corresponding credit should be given on the note.

We are of opinion the judgment of reversal heretofore entered should stand as the judgment in the case.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, and in the opinion of department 1, (11 Pac. Rep. 385), the judgment and order are reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

PEOPLE v. MORE. (No. 20,267.)

CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—DISMISSAL BY COURT OF ITS OWN MOTION—PEN. CODE CAL. § 1385.

The court, in directing, of its own motion, the dismissal of a criminal prosecution, as it is authorized to do under Pen. Code Cal. § 1385, performs the office of the attorney general of England, and the state attorneys in many of the United States, in entering a not. pros.; and there is no appeal from such dismissal under the California constitution, giving the supreme court appellate jurisdiction in all criminal cases.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county.

J. J. Boyce and W. T. Williams, for the People. McNulta & Oglesby, Geo. Flournoy, and R. B. Canfield, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is an appeal taken in the name of the people from an order made by the superior court of the county of Santa Barbara, of its own motion, dismissing a criminal action in which respondent herein was defendant. The order was made under the power granted in section 1385 of the Penal Code, which is as follows:

"Sec. 1385. The court may, either of its own motion, or upon the application of the district attorney, and in furtherance of justice, order an action or indictment to be dismissed. The reasons of the dismissal must be set forth in an order entered upon the minutes."

The respondent moves to dismiss the appeal, upon the ground that the order is one from which no statutory right of appeal is given to the people. It is certainly not one of the enumerated cases in which a right of appeal is given by section 1238 of the Code, and there is no other statutory provision giving such right.

It is contended, however, by appellant that, as the constitution gives this court appellate jurisdiction of questions of law arising "in all criminal cases prosecuted, by indictment or information, in a court of record," therefore there is jurisdiction here, although no statutory machinery for the appeal has been provided, as held in People v. Jordan, 65 Cal. 644; S. C. 4 Pac. Rep. 683. But the order in question is, in its nature and character, one from which the people cannot appeal. The power under which the order was made is substantially the same as that held by the attorney general in England, and by the prosecuting officer in many of the American states, to enter a nolle prosequi. The court, for the purposes of the order of dismissal, takes charge of the prosecution, and acts for the people. It holds the power to dismiss, as the attorney general in England holds the power to enter a nolle prosequi, by virtue of the office and the law; and it is exercised upon official responsibility. The court, having acted for the people, and under express power granted by them to so act in their criminal prosecutions, there is no appeal on their part from such action. Of course, if a defendant should appeal from such an order, as he well might if it were made after the impaneling of a jury, a different case would be presented. Com. v. Tuck, 20 Pick. 365.

Appeal dismissed.

71 Cal. 550HALL v. SUPERIOR COURT, EL DORADO CO. (No. 11,013.)(Supreme Court of California. January 18, 1887.)1. APPEAL—FROM JUSTICE'S COURT—FILING AND SERVICE OF NOTICE AND UNDERTAKING—CODE CIVIL PROC. CAL. §§ 974, 978.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. §§ 974, 978, it is not necessary that the notice and undertaking on appeal from a justice's court to the superior court should be filed before service thereof.

2. CERTIORARI—WRONGFUL DISMISSAL OF APPEAL.

If an appeal from a justice's court is erroneously dismissed by the superior court, the error may be remedied, and the cause reinstated by certiorari.

FOOTE, C. On the nineteenth day of November, 1885, this court ordered the issuance in this cause of an alternative writ of certiorari to the superior court of El Dorado county. 8 Pac. Rep. 6, 509. Upon the return of the certified transcript of the proceedings had by that court in the case of Went v. Hall, it appears that the appeal pending therein from a justice's court was dismissed upon motion, because the former court was of opinion that it did not have jurisdiction to hear and determine the said cause upon its merits. It further appears that the opinion was based upon the view entertained by the court that, as prerequisites to the validity of such appeal, it was necessary that the notice thereof should have been filed in the justice's court prior to the service of a copy of the same upon the adverse party, and that the undertaking should have been filed simultaneously with said notice, notwithstanding that all of those jurisdictional acts had been performed within 30 days of the date of the rendition of the original judgment.

This construction of sections 974 and 978, Code Civil Proc., was clearly erroneous, as this court held in Coker v. Superior Court, 58 Cal. 177. The superior court of El Dorado county had jurisdiction to hear and determine the case before it upon its merits, and the arbitrary dismissal of it upon motion was an improper divestiture of its rightful jurisdiction. Where such is the case, the writ of certiorari is a proper proceeding to annul the order dismissing the appeal. Levy v. Superior Court, 66 Cal. 292; S. C. 5 Pac. Rep. 353. The order of dismissal should be annulled, and the cause reinstated, heard, and determined upon its merits by the superior court of El Dorado county.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; SEARLS, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order of dismissal is annulled, and the cause ordered reinstated, to be heard and determined upon its merits.

HEINLEN v. HEILBRON and others. (No. 11,410.)

1. NEW TRIAL—NOTICE OF MOTION—FORM OF—CODE CIVIL PROC. CAL. §§ 657, 659.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 657, providing that "the former verdict or other decision may be vacated, and a new trial granted, on the application of the party aggrieved, for any of the following causes," etc., and section 659, requiring service upon the adverse party of notice of intention to move for a new trial, designating the grounds upon which the motion will be made, the notice need not specify that the mover will ask that the former verdict or other decision be vacated.

2. ACTION—MISJOINDER OF PARTIES—DEFENDANTS IN TORT.

At the trial of an action ex delicto, a nonsuit having been granted as to certain defendants, for want of evidence to sustain the allegations as against them, and the complaint having been amended by striking their names from it, the other defendants are not entitled to a nonsuit on the ground of misjoinder of parties defendant.

3. APPEAL—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—SPECIFICATION OF ERROR IN.

Upon appeal from the judgment is an action to recover damages from defendant for diverting the waters of a water-course from plaintiff's land, error committed by the court in finding plaintiff to be the owner of certain lands, including lands not described in the complaint, and awarding damages upon that basis, may be availed of, although the error is not specified in the bill of exceptions, as it appears on the face of the record independently of the bill of exceptions.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Appeal from superior court, Tulare county.

Action to recover damages for diversion of water. Plaintiff had judgment against certain defendants, who appealed.

Brown & Daggett and D. S. Terry, for appellant. Atwell & Bradley and G. A. Heinlen, for respondents.

SEARLS, C. This is an action to recover damages for the diversion of water from Cole slough or King's river, and for a perpetual injunction restraining the defendants from diverting the waters thereof. The cause was tried by the court, a jury having been waived, findings in writing filed, upon which judgment in favor of plaintiff was rendered for $100 damages, and awarding a perpetual injunction against defendants, restraining them from maintaining any dam or dams in Cole slough, or the channel thereof, or from in any manner interfering with the waters thereof, or obstructing or diverting the same from their natural channel, etc. From this judgment, and from an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal.

It is objected on the part of the respondent that the notice of motion for a new trial (a copy of which is inserted in the bill of exceptions, and thereby made a part of the record) is insufficient, in that while it notified respondent that defendants would "make and submit to said court above named a motion for a new trial of said cause," and designated the grounds of said motion, yet did not specify that they would ask that the former verdict or other decision be vacated, etc. The statute (Code Civil Proc. § 657) provides that "the former verdict or other decision may be vacated and a new trial granted, on the application of the party aggrieved, for any of the following causes," etc. The section quoted does not make provision for a notice of the motion, but section 659 requires that "the party intending to move for a new trial must, within ten days after the verdict of the jury, or after notice of the decision, * * * file with the clerk, and serve upon the adverse party, a notice of his intention, designating the grounds upon which the motion will be made," etc.

In Bauder v. Tyrrel, 59 Cal. 99, it was said: "The section regarding the notice of motion for a new trial does not require that the notice shall, in terms, contain a notice of motion that the decision should be vacated. The order granting a new trial does of itself vacate the decision. That must be its necessary effect, for how can there be a new trial if the former decision stands?"

In Kimple v. Conway, 10 Pac. Rep. 189, a notice of motion for "a rehearing or new trial" was construed to be a notice of motion for a new trial, and that the words "rehearing" and "new trial" were used as synonymous.

The language used in the notice indicated clearly the intention of the moving party. Such notice was not defective in any of the specific requirements of section 659, and was therefore sufficient.

The complaint charges all the defendants jointly with having wrongfully built dams, head-gates, etc., in Cole slough, and a water ditch or canal therefrom, and thereby diverting a large portion of the waters thereof from plaintiff. There were two answers filed in the cause,—one by the defendants James and Burrell, and another by the defendants composing the firm of Poly, Heilbron & Co., in each of which answers said defendants pleaded a misjoinder of parties defendant. At the trial a motion for nonsuit was made on the part of defendants James and Burrell, who had answered separately, which motion the court at first overruled, but subsequently granted, upon the ground that there was no sufficient evidence against them to make a case either for damages or for an injunction. Thereupon, upon motion of the plaintiff, leave was granted by the court to amend the complaint by striking therefrom the names of said James and Burrell as defendants.

Defendants Heilbron and others, of the firm of Poly, Heilbron & Co., who had answered separately, also moved for a nonsuit, upon the ground that it appeared from the evidence that there was a misjoinder of parties defendant, in that the acts as proved showed separate and distinct wrongs and injuries committed by defendants James and Burrell from those proven against these defendants, and that no collusion or joint injuries by all the defendants was proven, etc. The court denied the motion, and its action is assigned as error.

Misjoinder of parties defendant. In actions ex contractu, if too many parties were made co-defendants, under the common-law rule, advantage could be taken of the misjoinder, (1) if the defect appeared on the face of the record by demurrer; (2) by motion for nonsuit at the trial; (3) by motion in arrest of judgment; or (4) by writ of error. Mansell v. Burredge, 7 Term R. 352; 1 Chit. Pl. 50, and cases cited.

In actions ex delicto no advantage could generally be taken by the defendant of a misjoinder of parties defendant, and the only effect of a misjoinder was that the parties who should not have been included in the action were entitled to a verdict at the trial. Archb. Pl. 72. To this general rule there was, however, the exception that where the tort could not, in point of law, be joint, as in the case of slander and some others, the misjoinder was ground for demurrer, or, after verdict, for motion in arrest of judgment, or writ of error. But in these exceptional cases the objection was aided by the plaintiff's taking a verdict against one only, or, if several damages were assessed against each, by entering a nolle prosequi as to one after verdict and before judgment. 1 Chit. Pl. 16, (Amer. Ed. 97,) and cases cited.

If several persons jointly commit a tort, the plaintiff, in general, has his election to sue all or some of the parties jointly, or one of them severally, for the reason that a tort is in its nature a separate act of each individual. It is consequently held that in actions in form ex delicto, as trespass, trover, or case for malfeasance, against one only for a tort committed by several, he cannot plead the non-joinder of the others in abatement or bar of the action, or give it in evidence under the general issue; for the plea in abatement can only be adopted in those cases where the parties must be joined, and not where the plaintiff may join them or not at his option. The rule as to the misjoinder and non-joinder of parties plaintiff, in actions ex delicto, was quite different from that governing the matter of defendants. We need not define it here, and only refer to it for the purpose of saying that the case of Gillam v. Sigman, 29 Cal. 639, relied upon by appellants, was one in which there was an alleged misjoinder of plaintiffs. Our Code has so far modified the common-law rules on the subject that all objections to the misjoinder or non-joinder of parties, either plaintiff or defendant, must be taken by demurrer or answer, and, if not so taken, they are waived. In the present case the defendants set up in their answer the matter of which they complained. Had the proofs shown the defendants guilty severally of distinct wrongful acts, and had the court held them jointly or severally liable therefor, the question involved in Keyes v. Little York, etc., Co., 53 Cal. 734, and Hillman v. Newington, 57 Cal. 56, would arise.

But the action of the court below in granting a nonsuit as to the defendants James and Burrell, whom the testimony failed to show as joint tortfeasors with the other defendants, eliminated this question from the case, and, as there was testimony sufficient to hold the other defendants, there was no error in refusing the motion for nonsuit as to them. In other words, the nonsuit as to James and Burrell was granted because the latter were not shown to have been guilty of the wrongful acts charged in the complaint, and a failure of proof against a defendant charged jointly with others does not support a plea in abatement, based upon the theory that defendants are several and not joint trespassers.

It is next objected that the findings do not support the judgment; and, among other objections thereto, is one that the court finds the plaintiff to be the owner of, say, 2,000 acres of land, not described in his complaint, and awards damages to plaintiff for diverting water therefrom. Turning to the complaint, and comparing it with the findings, we discover: (1) That plaintiff describes the land of which he is seized and possessed by legal subdivisions, aggregating some 10,000 acres, a portion only of which the court finds him to own. (2) The court finds the plaintiff to be the owner of sections 5, 21, W. $\frac{1}{2}$ of section 9, W. $\frac{1}{2}$ of W. $\frac{1}{2}$ of section 16, E. $\frac{1}{2}$ and S.W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 28, in township 19 S., range 20 E., aggregating over 2,000 acres, not described in the complaint, or claimed by the plaintiff. The court further found that defendants had obstructed Cole slough so as to turn away and divert the waters thereof from the lands of plaintiff, and that, by reason of the wrongful acts of the defendants in diverting the water, plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of \$100, for which sum judgment was rendered, etc.

A party who seeks to recover damages to land of which he avers himself seized and possessed, and who only succeeds in establishing ownership to a part thereof, may have his damages for injury to such part; but we know of no rule by which he can show ownership of land, and recover damages for an injury thereto, which is not described in his complaint or claimed by him. The findings as to such lands were without the issues, and the defendants were not sued for injury to them. The plaintiff can only recover upon the cause of action set out in his complaint, and not upon some other which the proofs may develop. Mondran v. Goux, 51 Cal. 151; Heinlen v. Fresno Canal, etc., Co., 8 Pac. Rep. 513.

It was said in Morenhout v. Barron, 42 Cal. 605: "A finding is useless and idle unless the facts found are within the issues, and a judgment based upon such facts cannot be sustained." It is urged by respondent that appellants cannot avail themselves of the supposed error, for the reason that they failed to specify the same as error in their bill of exceptions. Where a motion is made for a new trial on the ground that the findings are not sustained by the evidence, the statement must specify the particulars in which the evidence is insufficient. Code Civil Proc. § 659; Bate v. Miller, 63 Cal. 233.

So, too, when the notice designates, as the grounds of the motion, errors of law occurring at the trial and excepted to by the moving party, they must be specified in the statement, and, if no such specifications are made, the statement is to be disregarded. The error complained of is one which appears upon the face of the judgment roll, and, if we disregard the bill of exceptions, it remains equally patent. The appeal is from the judgment as well as from the order denying a new trial, and the error complained of is one which might have been inquired into had no motion for a new trial been made. It appears of record, and requires no statement or bill of exceptions to make it apparent.

A decision and judgment in favor of a party upon a cause of action for which he has not sued is a decision against law, and, if not apparent on the record, may be corrected by a motion for a new trial, in which the statement performs the office of making a record of that which was not so before; but where the facts are all of record, an inquiry may be had in this court into the regularity of the proceedings, equally without as with a motion for a new trial, provided, as here, there is an appeal from the final judgment. The case of Putnam v. Lamphier, 36 Cal. 151, is in point. The court said: "The point is made that the judgment is not authorized by the pleadings. This objection may be taken upon the judgment roll alone, whether there is a statement on motion for a new trial or not. It is sometimes included among the grounds of the motion, but without any necessity, as it derives no support from the statement, and its omission, in stating the grounds of the motion, raises no presumption that it is waived." The appellate court will take notice of errors appearing in the judgment roll, even if not named in the specification of errors in the statement. Shepard v. McNeil, 38 Cal. 72; Patterson v. Sharp, 41 Cal. 133; Sharp v. Daigney, 33 Cal. 505.

For the error indicated, we are of opinion the judgment and order of the court below should be reversed, and a new trial ordered.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

LUCO and others v. SUPERIOR COURT, TUOLUMNE CO. (No. 11,597.)

1. ACTION—VENUE—CHANGE OF ACTIONS IN SUPERIOR COURTS OF CALIFORNIA ON APPEAL FROM JUSTICES' COURTS.

Under section 5, art. 6, Const. Cal., providing that "superior courts shall have appellate jurisdiction in such cases arising in justices' and other inferior courts as may be prescribed by law," that part of section 980, Code Civil Proc. Cal., declaring that "the provisions of this Code as to changing the place of trial * * * are applicable to trials on appeal to the superior court," is unconstitutional; and where an action tried in a justice's court of a county is appealed to the superior court thereof, such court has jurisdiction of the action, and will refuse an application to transfer it to the superior court of another county, on the ground that the defendants are residents of such other county.

2. SAME—PERSONAL ACTION—NON-RESIDENT DEFENDANT—WAIVER OF OBJECTION TO JURISDICTION.

Where, in a personal action, the defendants are not residents of the county where the action is brought, and make a motion to dismiss for lack of jurisdiction by reason of that fact, and then voluntarily withdraw the motion, and go to trial on the merits, they waive the question of jurisdiction. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 848.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

H. P. Irving, for petitioners. F. W. Street, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. From the certified copy of the transcript brought here in response to the requirements of the alternative writ of mandate issued from this court to the superior court of Tuolumne county, it appears that on the ninth day of February, 1885, one Isaac T. Holland commenced an action in a justice's court of Tuolumne county against Juan M. Luco, I. N. Thorne, and S. F. Ambler,—all of said defendants being non-residents of said county; that on the sixth day of March following, defendants Thorne and Luco (Ambler not having been served with process) filed in the justice's court affidavits and a motion to dismiss the action, on the ground of a want of jurisdiction in the court to try the cause, also separate answers to the complaint; that on twenty-first day of December, 1885, the case was tried in said justice's court, but before the trial commenced Thorne and Luco, by consent, withdrew the motion to dismiss the action. Judgment was then rendered against them, and from that they appealed to the superior court of Tuolumne county, on questions both of law and fact.

After the filing of the papers on appeal in said superior court, the defendants Thorne and Luco moved, upon affidavits, for a change of the place of trial of the cause to the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, upon the ground that their residence then, and at the time of the commencement of the action, was at the latter place. The court overruled their motion. And it is to compel its action to transfer the case for trial as demanded by their motion that the present proceedings were instituted.

The fact that the defendants voluntarily, by consent, withdrew their motion to dismiss the case, and went to trial on the merits in the justice's court, was a waiver of the question of jurisdiction raised on the motion, under section 848, Code Civil Proc., the action being in its nature personal. The action undoubtedly arose in the justice's court of Tuolumne county, and therefore no other superior court save of that county had appellate jurisdiction to hear and determine it; and, as the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco was without jurisdiction so to do, it was proper for the court below to have refused, as it did, to transfer the cause, as requested by the defendants.

This construction of the provisions of section 980, Code Civil Proc., relative to a change of place of trial, and of article 6, § 5, of our state constitution, as bearing upon the constitutionality of that former section as applicable to cases like the one under consideration, is sustained in the case of Gross v. Superior Court, ante, 264, (decided by this court in bank, December 7, 1886.)

For these reasons the writ of mandate should be denied, and the petition therefor dismissed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; SEARLS, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the application for a writ of mandate is denied, and petition dismissed.

PEOPLE v. ROGERS. (No. 20,236.)

*(Supreme Court of California. January 18, 1887.)1. HOMICIDE—MURDER—EVIDENCE—COMMISSION OF OTHER OFFENSE.

On the trial of an information for murder, evidence of the commission of two burglaries by the accused is admissible, notwithstanding the rule that such evidence is objectionable as, in effect, trying the accused for an offense not charged in the information, and as prejudicing the jury against him, when the evidence tends to show that the person who killed the deceased gained entrance to his house by means of a knife and chisel taken in one of the burglaries, and killed him with a pistol taken in the other.

2. SAME—INSTRUCTION.

Evidence tending to show the prisoner guilty of the crime charged is properly admitted, although it also tends to show him guilty of other offenses, when the jury are properly instructed that they are not to convict the defendant because the evidence shows him a man of bad character in having committed the other offenses, and are only to consider the evidence in its connection with the offense for which the prisoner is on trial.

3. SAME—NEW TRIAL—THE JURY—PRESUMPTION AS TO EXERCISE OF JURISDICTION.

The court having properly instructed the jury as to how evidence is to be considered by them, it is a presumption of law that they exercised their jurisdiction correctly.

4. SAME—QUESTION FOR JURY—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The question of the sufficiency of evidence to connect the prisoner charged with murder with burglaries is for the jury, after the court has determined that the evidence is admissible.

5. SAME — REFUSING TO GIVE PROPER INSTRUCTIONS — LAW GIVEN IN OTHER INSTRUCTIONS.

It is not error to refuse instructions asked, when the legal propositions of such instructions are embraced in others given.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county.

H. J. Smith and A. J. Monroe, for appellant. The Attorney General, for the People.

FOOTE, C. The defendant was convicted of the crime of murder in the first degree. From the judgment therein, and an order refusing him a new trial, he has appealed. He contends that the prosecution was allowed, over his objection, to introduce evidence which tended to show that, prior to the night on which he is alleged to have murdered Kimball, the deceased, while burglarizing the latter's house, another burglary had been committed of a saloon belonging to Knight & Pardee, situated some 12 miles distant from the place of Kimball's murder, and that, from the saloon, a pistol, a small nugget of gold, with some other articles, were then and there stolen; that the nugget of gold was found in a box, with a piece of cloth around it, other jewelry being also in the box; that the pistol was found in the woods with a sack, which contained articles of food and a cup, and that, near the spot where the pistol was found, was also discovered a quilt, which the evidence tended to show was the property of the defendant; that evidence was also allowed to be introduced, notwithstanding his objection, to the effect that the house of J. S. Connick had been burglarized the night previous to the killing of Kimball, and articles of food, a small sack, and shirt taken therefrom, and that the defendant had been seen in that neighborhood about the time of the commission of the burglary.

It appeared in evidence, in addition to the matters just stated, that the box containing the jewelry and nugget of gold was found by the witness Peterson near by the spot at which the defendant was arrested, in a certain road; that this box had been on the next morning delivered to one T. M. Brown; that after such delivery he asked the defendant where he got "that jewelry," or "the jewelry that is in the box," to which the defendant answered that he got it from Dan (who Dan was not being shown;) that Mr. Knight identified the pistol as being one taken from the burglarized saloon, and Mr. Pardee identified the nugget of gold which was in the box when delivered to Mr. Brown as having been taken at the same time with the pistol. It was also shown that the person who entered Kimball's dwelling and killed him used, to effect his burglarious entrance, a knife and a chisel, and that said articles, some food, a cup, a shirt, and a sack had been taken from the burglarized house of Connick, and belonged to him; that around the box containing the jewelry and nugget of gold was a piece of cloth similar in color, texture, and general appearance to the shirt of Connick thus taken.

The evidence also strongly tended to make it apparent that Kimball was killed with a pistol, and that, in accomplishing his murder, three shots were fired; that the pistol ball taken from the body of the deceased was the same in size as those carried by the pistol produced in evidence; and that such weapon, when stolen from the saloon, had five chambers thereof loaded, and when found had but two. It therefore became a most material question in the case whether the defendant ever had that pistol in his possession. Therefore the existence of that fact became a relevant subject of inquiry, and, having become a relevant fact, any evidence which tended to prove it became also relevant. Reynold's Steph. Ev. art. 9. p. 15. It is very clear that it was proper to show that the defendant admitted the possession of a nugget of gold, which had been taken at the same time as the pistol. The other facts and circumstances claimed as having been improperly admitted in evidence tended necessarily to explain and throw light upon those above stated, and were therefore relevant, whether in favor of or against the defendant.

But it is claimed for him that the admission of such facts and circumstances, if they proved him to have committed the burglaries of the saloon and Connick's house, was erroneous, because it involved substantially a trial of offenses not charged in the information upon which he was then being tried, and would prejudice the jury against him as a hardened criminal. As a general proposition the point contended for might be well taken. But it must be borne in mind in this case the evidence objected to tended directly to show that the defendant had committed the crime of which he stood charged, and must, therefore, have been relevant and competent; and, if it also tended to induce the belief that he had been the perpetrator of other crimes, he cannot be heard to complain, since his own acts, in multiplying his offenses against the laws of the land, ought not to be permitted to diminish the volume of competent evidence. State v. Adams, 20 Kan. 319; People v. McGilver, 67 Cal. 56; S. C. 7 Pac. Rep. 49.

The jury were well and clearly instructed that the evidence claimed as erroneously admitted could only be considered by them "for the purpose of passing upon the question as to whether the pistol in evidence had been in the possession of the defendant, and used by him to kill said Kimball as charged." And they were, in language full and explicit, forbidden to convict the defendant because the evidence showed him to be a man of bad character, as having committed the burglaries of the saloon and Connick's dwelling. It is a presumption of law that the jury exercised its jurisdiction soundly, after the court had performed its duty, as it did, in instructing them correctly as to the applicability of the evidence before them. State v. Watkins, 9 Conn. 54.

The defendant urges further that the trial court left the question of the sufficiency of the evidence connecting him with the burglaries of Connick's house and the saloon to the jury; that this was a matter of law for the court to determine, and not for the jury. As it seems to us, the duty of the court in that particular was well and correctly performed. It admitted the evidence as being pertinent and relevant, and left the jury to determine its weight, under proper instructions as to the law governing its applicability. The circumstantial evidence in the case, taken in connection with the testimony of the widow of the deceased, satisfy us that the jury were fully warranted in believing, as they did, that the defendant and no other person was the murderer of Kimball.

The legal propositions contained in instructions 2, 5, 6, 8, and 11, asked for by the defendant, and refused, were all of them plainly and sufficiently enunciated in the charge of the court to the jury, and nothing contradictory to or conflicting therewith was otherwise given.

The judgment and order should be affirmed.

HART and others v. FINIGAN. (No. 9,355.)*(Supreme Court of California. January 20, 1887.)PARTNERSHIP—ACCOUNTING—PLEADING—FINDINGS.

In an action for an accounting between partners, based upon the alleged existence of a partnership which is denied by the defendant, the court may, in a trial without a jury, find facts which partly sustain the plaintiff's allegations of partnership, but show such a dissolution before action brought as would defeat a judgment in the plaintiff's behalf.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Mesick & Maxwell and Geo. N. Williams, for appellants. W. H. L. Barnes, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This cause was tried by the court without a jury. A judgment was rendered for the defendant. In the complaint it was alleged by the plaintiffs that they and the defendant, about the fifteenth day of April, A. D. 1872, entered into a joint venture for profit in the purchase of 100 shares of the capital stock of the Consolidated Virginia Mining Company, which venture continued to July 1, 1874, at which time this action was instituted for an accounting, and that the defendant meantime might be restrained from disposing in any way of the stock so claimed as partnership property, and that a receiver be appointed to take charge of the same to abide the final decree of the court, etc. The defendant answered, denying all the material allegations of the complaint. From the judgment and order denying a new trial the plaintiffs appeal.

The points relied on here by them for the reversal of the judgment and order, and obtaining a new trial, are that the trial court failed to find on the material issues made by the pleadings, and that the findings on which the judgment is based, are outside of the issues in the case, and not supported by the evidence.

As it appears to us, the court found certain facts, mainly ultimate, which did not sustain precisely, according to the language employed, the allegations of the complaint, or the defendant's denial of them; yet those facts, as found, made it evident that the court passed upon all the material issues made by the pleadings, and none other; and such findings being based, to some extent, upon contradictory evidence, should be upheld.

Under the facts as found, upon the testimony admissible under the issues as made up, it appears that the conclusions of law of the court are correct. When such is the case, it would seem to subserve no useful purpose to reverse a judgment, because the court below upon the evidence, conflicting as it was, has not found as a matter of fact that the contention of plaintiffs, or its denial by the defendant, are absolutely true in all respects in the language of the pleading.

That tribunal has certainly passed upon and considered the material issues as presented by the pleadings, and its action cannot be called in question if, upon the evidence as adduced, it has not fully agreed with the language of the plaintiffs' forcible allegations, or that of the defendant's emphatic denials. Grant that a partnership existed, as the plaintiffs contend, which the court does not find to be exactly so, as charged, yet the partnership is found by that tribunal to have been dissolved by mutual consent at the end of 30 days from its inception, and long before this suit was brought, the defendant taking the entire interest in the property, as well as all the risks attendant on the venture, and that no profit had resulted to the partnership during its existence, and, as a consequence, no action such as the one brought could be successfully maintained for an accounting or injunction. Where such an action is instituted, based upon the alleged existence of a partnership, which is flatly denied by the defendant in his answer, as in this case, it is not permissible to say that a court must be precluded from finding facts which partly sustain the plaintiffs' allegation of partnership, but show such a dissolution before suit brought as would defeat a judgment in the plaintiffs' behalf.

Parties bringing suit state the facts constituting their cause of action. Defendants deny such facts, which is entirely proper. But a court, in passing upon the issues as made, must find the facts ultimately, or such probative facts as that ultimate facts may be inferred. Where, as in this case, such action is had by the court, and the facts as found show beyond doubt that the conclusions of law arrived at are correct, the judgment should not be reversed because the findings do not positively negative either the plaintiffs' or defendant's allegations in their pleadings in all respects as they are worded, but do so substantially.

It sufficiently appears that the court below did pass on all material issues as made in this cause by the pleadings, and that the facts as found entitle the defendant to the judgment he obtained. As has been before stated, the evidence was in some respects conflicting, and therefore we cannot say that the findings were not thereby supported. The latter support the judgment, and it and the order denying a new trial should be affirmed.

We concur. BELCHER, C. C.; SEARLS, C.

GREEN and another v. STATE. (No. 11,169.)

(Supreme Court of California. January 20, 1887.)

1. WATER AND WATER-COURSES—CANAL—SACRAMENTO AND AMERICAN RIVERS—ACT OF CALIFORNIA MARCH 12, 1885—LIABILITY OF STATE.

The California act of March 12, 1885, (St. Cal. 1885, p. 107,) authorizing suits to be brought against the state for damages caused by the destruction of property from the cutting of a canal by order of the levee commissioners, for the purpose of diverting the waters of the American river into the Sacramento river, by virtue of the California act of April 9, 1862, had merely the effect of submitting the state to the jurisdiction of the courts, and did not create any new ground of liability against the state.

2. SAME—EMINENT DOMAIN—TAKING LAND FOR PUBLIC USE.

Under the language of the California constitution, as it existed prior to the adoption of the new constitution of 1879, if, in pursuance of an act of the legislature, the channel of a river be turned or straightened where it empties into another river, so that the land on the opposite side of the river is destroyed or injured, the damage thus sustained is not a taking of the land for public use; following Green v. Swift, 47 Cal. 536.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county.

A. L. Hart and C. T. Jones, for appellants. E. C. Marshall, Atty. Gen., and John T. Carey, for the State.

SEARLS, C. This cause was decided by Department 1 of this court, in an opinion filed July 14, 1886, affirming the judgment of the court below. 11 Pac. Rep. 602. A rehearing in bank was thereafter ordered, and the case again comes under review.

1. The act of March 12, 1885, authorizing the commencement of this action by plaintiffs against the state, simply empowered them to bring a suit, and to make the defendant a proper party thereto. It did not create for them a cause of action, or waive, on the part of the defendant, any defense which it had to such action. The state submitted itself to the jurisdiction of the court, subject to its right to interpose any defense which, as a sovereign state, it might lawfully urge to the action when instituted. The contention that the act of March 12, 1885, (St. 1885, p. 107,) amounts to a legislative concession of the liability of the state, is not supported by sound reason. Were the state to pass a general law permitting all persons at will to institute suits against it, surely it would not be contended that such an act conceded the existence of a cause of action in favor of all persons bringing suits.

Ordinarily, and in theory, a sovereign state is presumed to be ready and willing to do justice to the citizen, without the necessity of invoking the assistance of the judicial arm; but, in exceptional and intricate cases, the legislative department finds itself inadequate to balancing and adjusting claims, depending upon the solution of abstruse questions of law. In such cases it is eminently proper that the question of legal obligation and the measure of damages be submitted for adjustment to that department of the government whose peculiar province it is to investigate and determine questions of like character. How such submission to the courts can be construed into a recognition of the existence of a cause of action we cannot comprehend.

It may be the legislature could, in a proper case, determine the liability of the state, and then refer the question of the amount of compensation to the courts, if it saw fit so to do. But in the present case it has not pursued that course. The language of the statute does not bear any such construction. We quote: "If it appears, upon the trial of any said actions, that damage has been done to the plaintiff by any act for which the state is legally liable," etc. To hold that this expression of legislative intent is to be construed as admitting a right to recover, is to beg the question, and do violence to the statute. By authorizing the plaintiffs to bring suits against the state, the legislature simply remanded them to the courts for a determination of their rights, and no argument in favor of the liability of the state can be drawn therefrom which may not with equal force be urged in favor of any plaintiff against the defendant whom he is authorized to sue at law.

2. The whole question of the right of plaintiffs to recover was necessarily involved in the determination of Green v. Swift, 47 Cal. 536.

Agreeing, as we do fully, with the views expressed by Justice McKINSTRY in the former decision of this cause, we are of opinion the judgment heretofore rendered, affirming the judgment of the court below, should stand as the judgment of the court herein.

MASSMAN v. SUPERIOR COURT. (No. 11,836.)

(Supreme Court of California. January 21, 1887.)

NEW TRIAL—AFTER NONSUIT—APPEAL FROM JUSTICE'S COURT.

The superior court, after a nonsuit in the trial of an appeal from a justice's court, can grant a new trial.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

An action was brought in a justice's court of San Francisco for $299 damages, for injuries caused by alleged negligence of defendant therein. Appeal taken from judgment to superior court, which latter court, on plaintiff's testimony, granted a judgment of nonsuit. Plaintiff subsequently moved for a new trial (as to all of the steps taken towards which motion defendant objected) on the grounds of "error in law occurring at the trial, and excepted to by plaintiff," and "that the said order directing a judgment of nonsuit was a decision against law." The superior court ordered a new trial, which was had, and judgment rendered in favor of plaintiff for $150. Application now to supreme court for writ of review.

Ladd & Finlayson, for petitioner. No appearance for respondent.

BY THE COURT. Application for a writ of review. The application must be denied. The superior court, in our opinion, had jurisdiction to grant a new trial in the case of a nonsuit on the trial of an appeal to it from a justice's court. Code Civil Proc. § 980.

BAKER v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SHASTA CO. (No. 11,942.)

1. CERTIORARI—PARTIES—SERVICE.

In certiorari brought by the plaintiff in an action in the superior court, the superior court was alone made respondent, and service of the alternative writ was made upon the judge of that court and the defendant. Held, that the service was sufficient, and the proper parties were before the court.

2. PLEADING—TIME—CODE CIVIL PROC. CAL. § 1054.

Extension of time to answer or demur being limited by Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1054, to 30 days, an order granting until the receipt of a remittitur in another case pending on appeal is erroneous.

3. CERTIORARI—WHEN IT LIES.

Certiorari is the appropriate remedy in such case.

4. SAME—MODIFYING ORDER.

Such erroneous order can be modified by the supreme court on certiorari, and it is not necessary to determine whether or not it is totally void.

Department 2. Certiorari.

The copy of alternative writ and petition was served on attorneys of defendant, Banks, in the action mentioned in opinion, and also on the judge of the superior court. The superior court was the only party respondent to the writ.

Frisbie & Wiley, for petitioner. Eugene B. Cushing, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. We think that the service in this proceeding was sufficient, and that the proper parties are before the court, and therefore the motion to quash is denied. The return to the writ of review in this proceeding shows that in the case of L. H. Baker, Petitioner Herein, v. William Banks, Defendant, pending in the court of respondent, an order was made by the court on the twenty-ninth day of December, 1886, extending the time of defendant to answer or demur until 10 days after the receipt of the remittitur in a certain other case of N. J. Pehrson v. John B. Hewitt, then pending on appeal from the court of respondent to this court. The order also contained some directions about a stay of proceedings, but we treat it as being substantially an order extending the time to plead, as above stated.

It is clear that the order, so far as it attempted to extend the time to plead more than 30 days, was an excess of jurisdiction, (Code Civil Proc. 1054;) and it is equally clear that petitioner has no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy other than certiorari.

As this court may modify the order, we do not deem it necessary to determine whether or not it should be considered as a unit, and therefore totally void. It is therefore ordered that the order under review be modified so as to extend the time within which the defendant in said case of Baker v. Banks may plead, 30 days from and after the twenty-ninth day of December, 1886, and no further.

CROGHAN v. SPENCE. (No. 9,611.)

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS—ADVERSE CLAIM.

Action to determine adverse claim to land held barred.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county.

J. J. De Haven, for respondent, Croghan. J. D. H. Chamberlain, for appellant, Spence.

By THE COURT. There was no evidence of an actual adverse possession by defendant of any part of the premises described in the complaint. The finding against the defendant on his plea of the statute of limitations was proper.

To the cross-complaint of the defendant the plaintiff pleaded in bar sections 343 and 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure. For all purposes necessarily involved in the disposition of this case it may be conceded that defendant is entitled to a decree against the plaintiff charging him as trustee of the legal title for defendant's benefit if the defendant would have been entitled to a like decree against Minor, the grantor of plaintiff, had Minor not parted with his title.

The defendant's cause of action against plaintiff, if any he has had, arose, at the latest, August 13, 1877, when the commissioner of the general land-office adjudged (in the language of appellant's brief) that defendant "had the better right to pre-empt the land, and that Minor had acquired his patent by fraud and perjury." That was more than five years before the present action was commenced, and nearly six years before the defendant herein filed his cross-complaint. If the cross-complaint be treated as a bill for relief on the ground of fraud, the facts constituting the alleged fraud were known to the defendant long before the adjudication by the commissioner of the general land-office above mentioned.

Whether, therefore, the four-years limitation of section 343, or the three-years limitation of section 338, of the Code of Civil Procedure applies, the cause of action set forth in the cross-complaint was barred.

Judgment and order affirmed.

PEOPLE v. MYERS and another. (No. 20,189.)

(Supreme Court of California. August 31, 1886.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—TRIAL—EVIDENCE—ROBBERY—FOOT-PRINTS—OTHER SIMILAR FOOT-PRINTS.

On the trial of an information against men for robbery, evidence having been introduced tending to show that a peculiar boot-track had been traced from the scene of the robbery to the house of one of the defendants, it was error to exclude evidence offered by the defense to show that two men, other than the defendants, had been seen on the third day after the robbery within three days' foot-travel of the place of the occurrence, one of whom wore a boot which left precisely similar marks to those traced to the defendant's house.

2. SAME—THE JURY—"TREATED" BY SHERIFF—SHERIFF SEEKING REWARD FOR CONVICTION OF DEFENDANTS.

Where a reward has been offered for the conviction of the parties committing a crime, and the sheriff, in hopes of obtaining it, has paid out considerable money in and about the trial, with no expectation of being repaid except in case of conviction, it is an irregularity for such sheriff, while in charge of the jury, and during the trial, to take them to saloons, and furnish them with liquors at his expense; and such irregularity is not counterbalanced by the fact that the jury was also "treated" by one of their number, and by one of the attorneys for the defendants.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county.

Information for robbery.

Grady & Merriam and P. Reddy, for appellants. The Attorney General, for the People.

MYRICK, J. The defendants were accused by information of the crime of robbery. For two reasons the conviction must be set aside, and a new trial ordered, viz.:

1. The accused were convicted on circumstantial evidence only. The fact of the robbery was clearly proved. As a circumstance tending to show that the defendants were present at the robbery, and were the persons who committed it, the prosecution gave evidence that certain boot-marks, of peculiar characteristics, were found, the day after the robbery, at the place, and were traced from that point along a trail for about eight miles to a gate leading into a corral at the place of residence of defendant Myers. In no other way was a boot of that description traced to the defendants. The defendants offered to prove that on the third day after the robbery, at a place more distant than Myers' residence, but within three days' foot-travel, two men, other than the defendants, of about the same stature and of similar complexion, were seen, and that a boot worn by one of them left marks precisely similar to those found on the trail. This evidence was objected to. We copy from the transcript:

"The Court. If you say your object in introducing this testimony is to identify or show that it was the defendants, or either one of them, that was there at that time, the court will permit the evidence.

"Defendants' Counsel. That we were there with that peculiar track? No, we don't do that. Our purpose is to show that it was not the defendants who robbed the stage.

"The Court. Taking that view of it, the court will certainly sustain the objection."

In other words, if needed in order to more clearly present the ruling, if the evidence offered would tend to show the guilt of the defendants, it was admissible; but if to show their innocence it was inadmissible.

2. The jury was during the trial placed in charge of the sheriff. A reward had been offered for the conviction of the defendants, and the sheriff hoped to obtain the reward. He paid out some considerable money in and about the trial, and had no expectation of being repaid therefor except in case of conviction. During the trial, and while the jury was in his charge, on at least two occasions the sheriff conducted the jurymen to public saloons in the town, and furnished them liquors at his expense. This manifest irregularity is not counterbalanced by the fact that the jurymen on one occasion were "treated" by one of their own number, and on another occasion by one of the attorneys for the defendants.

The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

PEOPLE v. COPSEY. (No. 20,229.)

1. JURY—CHALLENGES—HYPOTHETICAL QUESTIONS BASED ON THE THEORY OF THE PROSECUTION, ADMISSIBLE.

Where, on an information charging defendant with an assault with intent to commit murder, the defendant's counsel, in challenging the jury, has put to them hypothetical questions based on his theory of the case against the objection of the district attorney, the district attorney may, in cross-examining them, ask hypothetical questions based on his theory of the case.

2. WITNESS—IMPEACHMENT OF—RELIGIOUS BELIEF—CONST. CAL. ART. 1, § 4; CODE CIVIL PROC. CAL. § 1879.

A question put by defendant's counsel to a prosecuting witness seeking to impeach him by showing him to be an atheist may well be objected to under Const. Cal. art. 1, § 4, and Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1879.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Appeal from superior court, Lake county.

The information in this action charged the defendant with committing an assault upon the person of one Fred. Sonsberry with a deadly weapon, with intent to commit murder. At the trial the district attorney, after defendant, against his objection, had put hypothetical questions based upon his theory of the case, asked each juror, during his examination on voir dire: "If you saw your brother struggling with a stranger, and your brother was sitting on the ground, and that the stranger was face down in his lap, and your brother had his arm across the neck of the stranger, holding him down so that he could not move, and your brother had a pistol in his right hand, and the stranger had no weapon, and an officer of the law was standing over both in such a position that neither could do the other harm, that you would have the right to go up and shoot him?" Each juror stated he did not think he had the right to shoot under the circumstances. Before the district attorney made his opening speech, defendant objected to and challenged the entire panel on the ground that the district attorney had stated to each juror his theory of the facts of the case, and had obtained an expression of the opinion of each juror on such statement, which challenge the court denied, and the defendant duly excepted.

In cross-examination of the prosecuting witness, the defendant's counsel asked him if he was not an atheist, and an unbeliever in any God, or anything of that sort; counsel stating he expected to prove thereby, and by other witnesses, that such witness was an atheist, and did not believe in any future state. Upon objection by the district attorney that such evidence was immaterial, the court refused to allow the question. Judgment of conviction was rendered, from which defendant appeals.

E. C. Marshall, Atty. Gen., for the People. R. W. Crump, for appellant.

FOOTE, C. The defendant was found guilty, by the verdict of a jury, of an assault with intent to commit murder. From the judgment of conviction, and an order refusing him a new trial, he has appealed.

The first error assigned by the defendant is that the court did not sustain his challenge to each and all of the entire panel of trial jurors, on the ground that they were biased against the defendant. The existence of this bias was alleged to have been shown from the fact that the jurors had each stated, on their voir dire, that if certain hypothetical facts related to them by the district attorney, as his theory of the case, were true, they would not regard the defendant as innocent of the crime charged against him.

It appears that the jury had previously had put to them by the defendant's counsel hypothetical questions based upon his theory of the case, and had been permitted to answer them, over the objection of the district attorney, in a manner favorable to the defendant. The cross-examination, therefore, by the district attorney was, as it seems to us, strictly legitimate, and we perceive nothing in the record which warrants even a suspicion that the jury were in any way prejudiced or biased against the defendant. The different theories of the case hypothetically put to them by each side—that on the part of the defendant first, and on the part of the people last—left the jury perfectly free to determine the guilt or innocence of the prisoner on trial before them, under the fair and clear instructions of the court, from the facts and circumstances adduced in evidence before them.

As to the objection made that the evidence did not warrant the jury in convicting the defendant, because it showed an absence on his part of all intent to commit murder, we have simply to say that the jury, with the evidence before them, have determined the issue submitted to them against him, and upon reviewing that evidence we are not disposed to question the justness of their verdict.

The defendant sought to impeach the witness Sonsberry, by showing him to be a person who entertained no religious belief. To a question put to the witness on the part of the defendant, with that purpose in view, the court sustained an objection, of which the former complains. But his contention is not based upon any meritorious ground, as we think a reference to the constitution of California, art. 1, § 4, and section 1879, Code Civil Proc., abundantly demonstrates.

The judgment and order should be affirmed.

2. NEW TRIAL—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE—VERDICT AGAINST LAW.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

George J. Denis and Chapman & Hendrick, for appellant. J. Brousseau, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This is an action to recover damages in the sum of $5,000 for slanderous words alleged to have been spoken by the defendant of and concerning plaintiff. Defendant had a verdict and judgment, from which judgment, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals.

Objection is made by respondent to the statement on motion for a new trial, in that it fails to contain a sufficient specification of the errors relied upon. In the view we take of the case, this objection is not of practical importance. There was such substantial conflict in the evidence that the verdict cannot be disturbed upon the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict.

The main objection to the verdict is that it is against law, in that it is in disregard of the admissions of the pleadings and the instructions of the court. The answer is a general denial of each and every allegation of the complaint, and no justification is pleaded. The contention of appellant is that the slanderous words are in effect admitted by defendant's testimony,—no justification attempted. There being no dispute as to how the words uttered by defendant were understood by those who heard them, and the court having instructed the jury as to the slanderous character of the language, the verdict is against law.

A verdict in disobedience to the instructions of the court upon a point of law is a verdict "against law." Emerson v. Santa Clara Co., 40 Cal. 545; Bunten v. Orient Mut. Ins. Co., 4 Bosw. 262.

The complaint shows that the plaintiff and defendant were directors of an association engaged in publishing a newspaper in Los Angeles. The association was in possession of a part of Merced Hall as sublessees thereof. Plaintiff, by authority of the board of managers or directors, and with the knowledge of defendant, contracted for and procured the construction of a partition through the hall, at an expense of $75.86, which sum was paid therefor. At a meeting of the directors held thereafter and on the fifth day of January, 1885, the defendant, in speaking of the partition, accused the plaintiff with having pocketed the money, and averred the partition had not cost what plaintiff claimed it had, etc. The complaint contains apt words showing that defendant meant to charge, and was understood by those who heard him to charge, plaintiff with embezzling the funds of the association, etc.

The testimony on behalf of the plaintiff tended to establish substantially, but not very accurately, the charges as laid.

On behalf of defendant there was testimony tending to show that a portion of Merced Hall was occupied by a club, of which plaintiff was an officer; that plaintiff, defendant, and a third person were appointed to put up the partition in question, and, after measurement and estimates, concluded it could be done for $45 to $50, and thereupon defendant told plaintiff to have the job performed at an expense not exceeding that sum; that the partition was made different from the proposed plan for the benefit of the club, and at a greater expense than was necessary; and that the substance of defendant's charge was that plaintiff had taken the money of the newspaper company, and expended it for the benefit, not of that company, but of the club.

The parties are Frenchmen, and the testimony was in the French language, and may have suffered in the translation. At all events, it is lacking in explicitness and certainty; and, while we may think the weight of testimony was with the plaintiff, we cannot say that it was so clearly in his favor as to warrant the conclusion that, in view of such testimony and under the instructions of the court, the verdict is "against law."

The instructions were correct as propositions of law, and applicable to the case as presented.

The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

WALKER v. McCUSKER. (No. 9,720.)

1. MORTGAGE—FORECLOSURE—RIGHT OF PURCHASER TO RENTS AND PROFITS—CODE CIVIL PROC. CAL. § 707.

The purchaser of real property at a sheriff's foreclosure sale, from the time of the sale until a redemption, is entitled to receive from the tenant in possession the rents of the property sold, or the value of the use and occupation thereof, by section 707, Code Civil Proc. Cal. This right on the part of the purchaser is not limited to cases where there has been a redemption, but begins at the time of the purchase, and continues until a redemption is made, or, if there be no redemption, until the time allowed for redemption has expired.

2. SAME—ASSUMPSIT FOR USE AND OCCUPATION.

In an action by the purchaser at a mortgage foreclosure sale against a defendant as tenant in possession to recover the value of the use and occupation of the mortgaged property from the time of sale to the expiration of the period of redemption, where it appears that, at the time of the sale, the defendant was the owner in fee and in possession of the property, and that she had been joined as defendant with the mortgagor in the foreclosure suit, held, that the owner in fee was a tenant in possession, within the meaning of section 707, Code Civil Proc. Cal., and liable to the purchaser in assumpsit for the rents and profits, or the value of the use and occupation of the property, and not as a trespasser.

3. SAME—PARTY PLAINTIFF.

Where a person bids in property at a mortgage foreclosure sale, and receives the certificate of sale and the sheriff's deed in his own name, and thereby becomes the purchaser, he may bring suit in 's own name against the tenant in possession of the property to recover the value of the use and occupation thereof from the time of sale to the expiration of the period of redemption, and without alleging or proving that he bid in the property as trustee for a third person.

BELCHER, C. C. Franklin McCusker executed a mortgage upon certain real property to the Bank of Watsonville. The money being unpaid, the bank foreclosed its mortgage, making the defendant a party to the action, and, under the decree obtained, caused the mortgaged property to be sold. The plaintiff was the purchaser at the sale, and in due time obtained a sheriff's deed. The purchase was, however, not made for himself, but at the request and for the sole use and benefit of the bank. At the time of the sale, defendant was the owner in fee and in possession of the property, and she retained the exclusive possession of it until the sheriff's deed was executed.

This action was commenced to recover from the defendant, as tenant in possession, the value of the use and occupation of the property from the time of the sale until the expiration of the time allowed for redemption. In the court below the plaintiff recovered judgment, and from that judgment the defendant has appealed.

1. In this state the purchaser of real property at a sheriff's sale from the time of the sale until a redemption, and a redemptioner from the time of his redemption until another redemption, is entitled to receive, from the tenant in possession, the rents of the property sold, or the value of the use and occupation thereof. Section 707, Code Civil Proc. This right on the part of the purchaser to receive the rents and profits, or value of the use and occupation of the property sold, is not limited to cases where there has been a redemption. It begins at the time of the purchase, and continues until a redemption is made, or, if there be no redemption, then until the time allowed for redemption has expired. Several cases of this character have been maintained in this court where there had been no redemption of the property. Reynolds v. Lathrop, 7 Cal. 43; McDevitt v. Sullivan, 8 Cal. 592; Harris v. Reynolds, 13 Cal. 514; Hill v. Taylor, 22 Cal. 191; Webster v. Cook, 38 Cal. 423.

2. In Page v. Rogers, 31 Cal. 293, it was held that, during the period which elapses between the sale of land on execution and the expiration of the time for redemption, the statute regards the purchaser as the owner in equity of the land, subject only to the right of redemption, and gives him the rents and profits, or the value of the use and occupation; in short, the entire beneficial interest, except the actual possession.

In Harris v. Reynolds, supra, it is said: "The phrase 'the tenant in possession' is a generic term, intended to designate the class of persons from whom the purchaser was to receive the rents. The language is not that, when a tenant of the debtor is in possession, the tenant shall pay the purchaser, or that the debtor, when in possession, shall not, but the phraseology designed evidently to fix a general right, applying to all cases of tenancy, for none are excluded." And in that case it was held that the judgment debtor was a tenant in possession, and required to pay the rents and profits to the purchaser; the court further saying: "The owner in fee in possession is no less, in legal contemplation, a tenant, than the man who occupies under him. The definition of tenant is: 'One that holds or possesses lands or tenements by any kind of title, either in fee, for life, years, or at will.'"

It has also been held that the mortgagee of the judgment debtor, the trustee and his successor in interest under a trust deed from the judgment debtor, and the administrator of the estate of the judgment debtor, when they were in possession after a sheriff's sale, were tenants in possession, and liable to the purchaser for the rents and profits or value of the use and occupation of the property. Knight v. Truett, 18 Cal. 113; Shores v. Scott River Co., 21 Cal. 135; Walls v. Walker, 37 Cal. 425.

In this case it does not appear when or from whom the defendant obtained the title to the mortgaged property; but, as she was a party to the action of foreclosure, it was conclusively determined by the judgment that she held the title subject to the payment of the mortgage debt. After his purchase the plaintiff was the owner in equity; and thereafter, subject to her right of redemption, she held the title for him. Holding, then, the legal title for plaintiff, and having the exclusive possession, she was, within the meaning of those words, as used in the statute, the "tenant in possession" of the property, and liable to account to plaintiff for the value of its use and occupation.

But it is said there was no contract relation between the parties, and the defendant, if liable at all, was liable as a trespasser, and should have been sued as such, and not in assumpsit. The answer is that the defendant was not a trespasser in any sense. She was rightfully in possession, and could not be treated as a tort-feasor. Her liability is statutory, and the law implies a promise on her part to comply with its requirements. It is true, the action for use and occupation is founded on privity of contract, but it will lie as well upon an implied as upon an express contract. Osgood v. Dewey, 13 Johns. 240; Stockett v. Watkins, 2 Gill & J. 326.

3. It is further argued for the appellant that plaintiff is not the real party in interest, and no facts are stated in the complaint showing him to be the trustee of an express trust, and, therefore, his action cannot be maintained. We think the complaint sufficient, and the action properly brought. A trustee of an express trust is a person with whom, or in whose name, a contract is made for the benefit of another, and he is authorized to sue without joining with him the persons for whose benefit the action is prosecuted. Section 369, Code Civil Proc.

The plaintiff bid in the property, and received the certificate of sale and sheriff's deed in his own name, and thereby became the purchaser. As between him and the bank, he was a trustee of an express trust, but that fact did not concern the defendant. As to her he was the real party in interest, and might sue without alleging or proving his trusteeship. It has been so held in several analogous cases. Corcoran v. Doll, 32 Cal. 90; Walsh v. Soule, 66 Cal. 443; S. C. 6 Pac. Rep. 82; Lewis v. Adams, 11 Pac. Rep. 833; Hoagland v. Trask, 48 N. Y. 686. And see Pom. Rem. §§ 175-178.

It follows that the judgment should be affirmed.

FLOYD and others v. FORBES and others. (No. 9,503.)

CHARITIES AND CHARITABLE USES—DEED—CREATING ONE FUND—SEVERAL TRUSTS—INVESTMENTS.

A deed of trust conveying property in trust for the following purposes: "First, to enter into possession of, have, receive, and recover the property and rents and profits thereof, (except as herein excepted,) and to let and lease, (until sale,) and to sell, convey, and dispose of the same, and to convert the same into money (except as herein excepted) as rapidly as judicious management will permit, and out of the proceeds to make the payments hereinbelow directed;" then designating various payments to be made by the trustees and some expenditures; and, third, to expend the sum of $700,000 for the purpose of purchasing land, and erecting thereon a powerful telescope and observatory, and to turn over the same, when completed, together with any surplus left of the said sum of $700,000, to the regents of the University of California: held, that the proceeds of the trust property constituted one fund, out of which the trustees were to execute several trusts specified in said deed, and that the profits arising from investments of money in their hands were to be treated as a part of such fund, and not as accruing for the benefit of any of said trusts in the execution of which a definite sum is required to be paid or expended, so as to increase the amount of such payment or expenditure.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

John B. Mhoon and McAllister & Bergin, for appellants. Cope & Boyd and Jarboe & Harrison, for respondents.

TEMPLE, J. This action was instituted to obtain the construction of a deed of trust made by James Lick to certain trustees, the plaintiffs herein. The deed was executed September 21, 1875, but the trustees were changed, and those now acting were selected in April, 1876.

James Lick died in October, 1876. After his death the heirs manifested a disposition to contest the validity of the deed. This led to a compromise, the validity of which compromise was tested in a suit brought for that purpose, which was decided in December, 1879. The complaint in this suit was filed in August, 1884. Judgment was entered answering the various questions propounded by the trustees, and from that judgment this appeal is taken by the board of regents of the University of California. All the other beneficiaries of the trust seem to be satisfied with the judgment.

The deed conveys the property in trust for the following purposes: "First, to enter into possession of, have, receive, and recover the property, and rents and profits thereof, (except as herein excepted,) and to let and lease, (until sale,) and to sell, convey, and dispose of the same, and to convert the same into money (except as herein excepted) as rapidly as judicious management will permit, and out of the proceeds to make the payments hereinbelow directed." The deed further proceeds to designate various payments to be made by the trustees and some expenditures. Some of the payments were to be made at once, and in the eighteenth subdivision the trustees are directed, "after discharging the trusts and making the payments hereinbefore mentioned, in the order hereinbefore set forth, (except as herein otherwise directed,) to make over and transfer the residue of the proceeds of the property hereby transferred and conveyed, and intended to be, in equal proportions to the California Academy of Sciences and the Society of California Pioneers."

The third subdivision is the one in which the appellant is specially interested, and reads as follows: "Third. To expend the sum of seven hundred thousand dollars ($700,000) for the purpose of purchasing land, and constructing and putting up on such land, as shall be designated by the party of the first part, a powerful telescope, superior to and more powerful than any telescope ever yet made, with all the machinery appertaining thereto and appropriately connected therewith, or that is necessary or convenient to the most powerful telescope now in use, or suited to one more powerful than any yet constructed, and also a suitable observatory connected therewith. The parties of the second part hereto, and their successors, shall, as soon as said telescope and observatory are constructed, convey the land whereupon the same may be situated, and the telescope and the observatory, and all the machinery and apparatus connected therewith, to the corporation known as the 'Regents of the University of California;' and if, after the construction of said telescope and observatory, there shall remain of $700,000 in gold coin any surplus, the said parties of the second part shall turn over such surplus to said corporation, to be invested by it in bonds of the United States, or of the city and county of San Francisco, or other good and safe interest-bearing bonds, and the income thereof shall be devoted to the maintenance of said telescope, and the observatory connected therewith, and shall be made useful in promoting science; and the said telescope and observatory are to be known as 'The Lick Astronomical Department of the University of California.' "

The portion of the judgment to which the appellant objects is the fourth instruction, which reads as follows: "Fourth. That the proceeds of the trust property constitute one fund, out of which the trustees are to execute the several trusts specified in said deed, and that the profits arising from investments of money in their hands are to be treated as a part of such fund, and not as accruing for the benefit of any of the said trusts, in the execution of which a definite sum is required to be paid or expended, so as to increase the amount of such payment or expenditure."

The appellant denies the correctness of this construction. It asks the court to say that the evident intention of James Lick was that the trustees should proceed with reasonable diligence to sell the property, and, as soon as sold, as much of it as was required should be appropriated to the different specific benefactions; that, where the beneficiary could not at once receive the amount, (as was the case with the appellant,) it would constitute a fund which might have been put at interest for the advantage of the beneficiary; that, for instance, there should have been a fund created, for the purposes of the trust set out in the third subdivision of the deed, of $700,000; that this amount, if not immediately required in performance of such trusts, could have been placed at interest for the benefit of the fund; on the contrary, the property was not sold when it ought to have been, and thereby large amounts have been received as rents and profits; that, under the construction placed upon the deed by the court below, the residuary beneficiaries will receive the increment, some portion of which in justice and equity ought to have gone to the other beneficiaries; that now, in view of this fact, the court should regard that as done which ought to have been done, and, by a just division of such increment, place the parties as near as may be in the position they would have been in had the trustees faithfully and diligently performed their duty.

Some of the donations have to be paid immediately. Such beneficiaries would certainly have better grounds for insisting upon the equitable principle contended for than the appellant. We understand that as to them the trusts have been fully performed. At all events, they make no complaints. We shall consider the matter solely with reference to the rights of the appellant.

A very large amount of property is involved in the trusts, which are quite numerous, and vary greatly in character. The trustees were to pay the debts of the donor then existing, and whatever debts he might require in his support, expenses, and the improvement of his homestead. They were to erect a group of bronze statuary, well worth $100,000, and various monuments. They were to expend, under the direction of certain named persons, $150,000 in the erection and maintaining free baths. They were to found an institute called the Old Ladies' Home at a cost of $100,000. They were to found and endow, at a cost of $540,000, the California School of Mechanical Arts, under the direction of certain named persons. It will be seen that they were directed to expend the sum of $700,000 for the purpose of purchasing land, and constructing and putting up a powerful telescope, superior to and more powerful than any ever yet made, and all the machinery appropriate or convenient to the most powerful telescope now in use, or suited to one more powerful than any yet constructed, and also a suitable observatory. When constructed, all should be conveyed to the regents of the university; and, if there should remain of said $700,000 in gold coin any surplus, it should be turned over to the regents, to be by them invested.

It is evident, in the first place, that the active duties here enjoined upon the trustees could not be performed within any definite period, and certainly the donor must have known that it would require many years to accomplish the difficult task imposed upon them. Yet he directs a precise sum in gold coin to be expended, and, when the work shall have been performed, he directs that the surplus, if any remaining of that sum, be turned over. This, evidently, would not have justified the trustees in expending more than that precise sum, under the claim that there was a fund which was entitled to share an increment. The direction to turn over the surplus remaining of the precise sum in gold coin is not in apt language if the desire was that the surplus remaining from a fund should be turned over. Although he must have known that it would be a long time before all this money could be expended, yet no language is used indicating that it is to be invested so that any increment will accrue until the entire work is done; and then he expressly directs that the surplus, if any, shall be invested so as to produce an income.

It is also a significant circumstance in this connection that, as to the residuaries, the deed directs that, after discharging the trusts and making the payments in the order named, the residue be transferred to the residuaries. If the construction contended for by the appellant were the correct one, there appears no good reason why the residuaries should not receive their residue as soon as the property was sold, and the different funds created. It is evident that the donor intended that the entire property should remain as security for the different trusts in the order named. We therefore think the judgment should be affirmed.

It may be well to remark, however, that this judgment is only a construction of the trust deed. It does not pass upon the question whether, if there has in fact been unnecessary or great delay, in consequence of which the residuaries had received profits which, upon a proper performance of the trust, would have been received by the specific beneficiary, a court of equity cannot make a fair adjustment of the matter. The trustees did not admit delay, and ask for instructions in view of such fact. The appellant in its answer did not charge there had been such delay. Should such a controversy ever arise, the only effect of this judgment would be that the right of the beneficiary complaining to be compensated would be determined in view of the construction here given the deed. Judgment affirmed.

COMSTOCK v. YOLO CO. (No. 11,641.)

WAYS—LEVY OF ROAD TAX—COUNTY BOARD OF SUPERVISORS—MODE OF PROCEDURE—CALIFORNIA COUNTY GOVERNMENT ACT, § 25, CL. 1, SUBDS. 4, 13, 35.

Subdivisions 4, 13, and 35, cl. 1, § 25, California county government act, providing that the county boards of supervisors have jurisdiction to levy taxes upon taxable property of any district for the construction and repair of roads and highways, "provided, that no tax shall be levied upon any district until the proposition to levy the same has been submitted to the qualified electors, and received a majority of all the legal votes cast upon such proposition, and to do and perform all other acts and things required by law not in this act enumerated, or which may be necessary to the full discharge of the duties of the legislative authority of the county government," held to authorize the board of supervisors to adopt any suitable mode of procedure in making the levy of a tax for road purposes; the levying of the tax being one of the duties of the legislative authority of the county government.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Appeal from superior court, Yolo county.

A. L. Hart, for appellant. Frank S. Sprague, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This is an action to recover a sum of money which was paid by plaintiff, under protest, to prevent the sale of his property in satisfaction of an alleged illegal tax. The appeal is by the plaintiff from a judgment in favor of defendant, and rests upon the judgment roll.

The tax in question was levied in pursuance of the supposed authority given by the county government act, which provides: "The boards of supervisors in their respective counties have jurisdiction and power, under such limitations and restrictions as are prescribed by law, to lay out, maintain, control, and manage public roads * * * within the county; to levy taxes upon the taxable property of their respective counties for all county purposes, and also upon the taxable property of any district for the construction and repair of roads and highways and other district purposes, provided, that no tax shall be levied upon any district until the proposition to levy the same has been submitted to the qualified electors of such district, and received a majority of all the legal votes cast upon such proposition; and to do and perform all other acts and things required by law not in this act enumerated, or which may be necessary to the full discharge of the duties of the legislative authority of the county government." County Government Act, § 25, cl. 1, subds. 4, 13, 35; St. & Amend. Codes 1883, p. 304.

On the twenty-eighth day of August, 1884, the board of supervisors of Yolo county, by a resolution duly passed and entered upon its minutes, ordered that a proposition to levy a tax upon the taxable property of road-district No. 1, in that county, for the construction and repair of roads and highways therein, sufficient in amount to raise the sum of $9,000, and to be levied according to the value of the property as shown by the assessment roll of the county for that year, be submitted to the qualified electors of the district at an election to be held for that purpose on the thirteenth day of September, 1884. By the resolution, polling-places were duly fixed, inspectors and judges of the election were appointed, and the clerk of the board was ordered to issue a proclamation, under his hand and the seal of the board, calling an election in accordance therewith, and to cause a copy of such proclamation to be published in the Woodland Daily Democrat, a newspaper published in the county, and to be posted at each place fixed for holding the election, for at least 10 days before the day of said election.

In pursuance of the resolution the clerk of the board issued a proclamation, setting forth all the matters required, in due and proper form, and caused the same to be published and posted as directed. At the time named an election was held, and a majority of all the legal votes cast upon the proposition were in favor of levying the said tax. The returns of the election were duly made to and canvassed by the board of supervisors on the sixth day of October, 1884, and thereupon the board, finding that a majority of all the votes cast were in favor of the tax, proceeded to levy the same. It was ascertained by computation that to raise the sum of $9,000 on the taxable property of the district, as shown by the county assessment roll for that year, would require the rate of taxation to be 87 cents on the $100, and the board then, by its order, duly fixed and determined upon that as the rate. The county auditor then computed the tax at the rate named upon all the taxable property of the district, and entered the same upon the assessment roll of the county; the tax so entered against the plaintiff being $35.30.

It is now contended, on the part of the appellant, that the tax was illegal and void, because—First, there was no provision made by law for the submission to the qualified electors of a road-district of a proposition to levy a special tax for road purposes; and no election for any purpose can be held unless the time and manner of calling and holding it have been authoritatively designated in advance, either by law or by some means which the law has prescribed; and, second, the board of supervisors had no authority to adopt the assessment made for state and county purposes as the basis upon which to levy the tax.

It is not denied that the board of supervisors had full power to levy the tax in question, but the contention is that the power could not be exercised for the want of further legislation prescribing the mode of its exercise.

In the Code of Civil Procedure it is provided that when jurisdiction is conferred on any court or judicial officer, and the course of proceeding is not specially pointed out by the Code or the statute, any suitable mode of proceeding may be adopted. Section 187. Under this provision it has been held that, in a proper case, the probate court may set apart a homestead, though the manner in which it is to be set apart is not provided by statute. Mawson v. Mawson, 50 Cal. 539.

In the county government act, as has been seen, it is provided that the board of supervisors may "do and perform all other acts and things * * * which may be necessary to the full discharge of the duties of the legislative authority of the county government." As the levying of the tax in question was one of the "duties of the legislative authority of the county government," we think this provision sufficient to authorize the board to adopt any suitable mode of procedure in making the levy.

It is not questioned that the mode of procedure adopted was suitable and proper, if authorized, and it follows, therefore, that the judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; SEARLS, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

NICHOLSON v. TARPEY and others. (No. 8,439.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 3, 1886.)

1. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—PAYMENT OF PURCHASE PRICE—DELIVERY OF DEED—INADEQUACY OF CONSIDERATION—DEMURRER.

Where, in an action to reform a deed, and for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of land, the complaint shows on its face that the purchase price was accepted, and a deed delivered, a demurrer on the ground of inadequacy of consideration will not be sustained.

2. EVIDENCE—PRIMARY AND SECONDARY—SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—ORIGINAL CONTRACT—EXECUTION AND CONTENTS OF.

In the trial of an action for specific performance, and to reform a deed, against the devisees and heirs at law of T., a witness in his deposition before the trial testified, without objection, to the contents of the written agreement between the parties. But at the trial defendant objected to it, on the ground that secondary evidence of its contents could not be introduced without proof of the loss or destruction of the original. Thereupon plaintiff showed that the contract was executed in duplicate, one copy of which was delivered to him, and the other retained by T., and that, when the deed was executed, his copy was delivered to T., who destroyed it. The copy retained by T. was not accounted for, nor did it appear that any notice had been given for its production in court. Held, that defendants had a right to have the original contract introduced in evidence, if in existence and capable of being produced; but, as T., had the copy in his possession, and it could have been introduced, thus obviating the necessity for secondary evidence, the objection would not be entertained.

3. SAME—STATEMENTS OF PARTY IN HIS OWN FAVOR—ADMISSIBILITY OF—RES GESTÆ.

In the trial of an action for specific performance of a contract for the sale of land, the statements made by the plaintiff in his own behalf to the assessor, when he gave in the land for taxation, in the absence of the opposite party, and constituting no part of the res gestæ, are not admissible in evidence.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Monterey county.

Action for specific performance of a contract for the sale of land. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants appealed.

Julius Lee, for Nicholson, respondent. D. M. Delmas, for Tarpey and others, appellants.

BY THE COURT. 1. The demurrer to the complaint in this cause was properly overruled. In actions for the specific performance of contracts for the sale of lands, it is necessary to allege and show to the court an adequate consideration for the performance of the contract sought to be enforced, and that the same is fair and reasonable in all its parts, and of such a character as may fairly call for the interposition of a court of equity. Agard v. Valencia, 39 Cal. 292; Bruck v. Tucker, 42 Cal. 346; Fry, Spec. Perf. § 251.

In this cause, however, the complaint shows that Mr. Tarpey, with whom the contract for conveyance was made, accepted the consideration of $1,500 in such contract specified to be paid, and executed a deed of conveyance, which plaintiff herein supposed conveyed the land in question, but which, in fact, by the fraud of said Tarpey, failed to include a portion of the land agreed to be conveyed. By accepting the purchase price, and delivering of a deed, Tarpey waived all claim to inadequacy of consideration, and that question is not involved in the case.

The gravamen of the charge against Tarpey is that he professed to convey the whole premises, and by his fraudulent representations induced the plaintiff herein to believe that he had so conveyed, when in truth he had granted but a portion thereof, and the object of this action is to so reform the deed as to make it conform to the agreement pursuant to which it was executed.

2. There was no error in the ruling of the court admitting the deposition of George C. White. According to the record, the witness White, whose deposition had been taken previous to the trial, testified, without objection, to the contents of the written agreement between Tarpey and plaintiff for the conveyance of the land in question. At the trial defendants for the first time objected to the evidence contained in this deposition, upon the ground that secondary evidence of its contents could not be introduced without proof of the loss or destruction of the original, etc. Thereupon it was shown by the testimony of plaintiff that the contract was executed in duplicate, one copy of which was delivered to plaintiff, and the other retained by Tarpey; that, at the date of the execution to the plaintiff of the deed, his copy of the agreement was delivered to Tarpey, who destroyed it. The copy retained by Tarpey was not accounted for, nor did it appear that any notice had been given for its production in court. Defendants had a right to have the original contract introduced in evidence if in existence, and capable of being produced. The defendant Tarpey had the copy in his possession, and could have produced it, thus obviating the necessity for introducing secondary evidence. Not having produced it, his objection should not be listened to.

3. At the trial, plaintiff, as a witness in his own behalf, testified that, after he moved to the land bought of Tarpey in 1871, he himself gave in the said lands to the assessor of Monterey county for taxation, and was then asked by plaintiff's counsel the following question: "When you gave it in, what did you say to the assessor?" In response to which the witness replied: "I told him I had 400 acres there; that the land was unsurveyed; and that the deed called for 600 acres, giving the bounds of the deed," etc. To the introduction of which evidence counsel for defendants objected in due form, and the ruling of the court admitting such evidence is assigned as error.

The statements of a party in interest in his own behalf, made in the absence of the opposite party, and constituting no part of the res gestæ, are not, in general, admissible as evidence, and we perceive no theory upon which the evidence introduced was admissible. It consisted merely in the oral declarations of the party in his own behalf, and as such cannot be upheld. If it be urged that it was introduced for the purpose of showing that the property was assessed to plaintiff, and the taxes thereon paid by him, the answer is twofold: First. Prior to April 1, 1878, the payment of taxes upon land was not a fact essential to adverse possession. Second. The assessment of property, and payment of taxes thereon, are facts which, when essential to a case, are to be proven as such, and the declarations of a party, made to the assessor at the time he assesses property, do not prove, or tend to prove, the fact of assessment, or any other fact competent to be shown.

Conceding it to have been proper for plaintiff to prove as a fact that this property was assessed to him for the purposes of taxation, it does not follow that his declarations of ownership or possession, made in his own behalf, and which in nowise tended to show that an assessment was in fact made, can be received. Schenk v. Sithoff, 75 Ind. 485, and Whitney v. Houghton, 125 Mass. 451, are in point, and, we think, conclusive of the question.

The testimony thus erroneously admitted was important to the issue of plaintiff's adverse possession made in the case, and, as we cannot see that it failed to influence the decision of the cause, the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and a new trial ordered.

ATTORNEY AND COUNSEL—DISBARMENT—STATE COURT—FALSE AFFIDAVIT BEFORE UNITED STATES LAND DEPARTMENT.

A young and inexperienced attorney made a false affidavit in a proceeding before the general land-office at Washington, to obtain a patent, relying on the assurance of an older lawyer that he could properly make such affidavit, which it was claimed he believed to be technically true when he made it. Held, in a proceeding to disbar in the California court, that the offense, not having been committed within the jurisdiction of that court, was to be considered as a moral offense only, and, under the circumstances, might be attributed to youth and inexperience, and the proceedings should be dismissed, the party instituting them not objecting thereto.

BY THE COURT. This is a proceeding to disbar the respondent for making what is claimed to have been a false affidavit in a proceeding to obtain a patent at Washington. Apparently the affidavit was one which the respondent may have believed to have been literally and technically true, but which was morally false, and was, in effect, an imposition upon the secretary, with whom it was filed. We have before had occasion to condemn the practice which is too common of making affidavits to what the affiant may claim to be the legal effect of facts not stated. They are often simply impositions upon the court. In this case the respondent was at the time young and inexperienced, and relied upon the assurance of an older and more experienced lawyer, that he could properly make the affidavit. It was not really an act as an attorney in our jurisdiction, and could probably only be considered as affecting the moral character of the respondent. The accuser desires to have the proceeding dismissed, saying that he made the accusation under the influence of anger. We do not recognize the right of an accuser to have such a proceeding dismissed; but having examined the evidence, we are inclined, in view of all the circumstances, to attribute the fault, though a grave one, to youth, inexperience, and ignorance. The proceeding is therefore dismissed.

Pen. Code Cal. § 1119, giving the court power to order a view in criminal cases, does not deprive a defendant of any constitutional rights, as it should be construed to contemplate the presence of defendant and his counsel at such view.
3. SAME—ORDERING VIEW OUT OF COUNTY—POINTING OUT PLACE.
A view may be ordered in a county other than that where the trial is had, and a person appointed by the court to show the jury the places named in the order of the court may point out and name such places to them.
4. SAME—CHARGE TO JURY—CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES.
It is proper for the court, upon a trial for murder, to allude to the fact of the relationship of certain of defendant's witnesses to him, as affecting their credibility.
5. SAME—HOMICIDE—MALICE—BURDEN OF PROOF.
If a homicide is shown, the law presumes malice, and the burden of proving circumstances of mitigation, or that justify or excuse it, devolves upon defendant, unless the proof upon the part of the prosecution tends to show that it only amounts to manslaughter, or was justifiable.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Appeal from superior court, San Diego county.

Indictment for murder.

Z. Montgomery, Levi Chase, and W. J. Hunsaker, for appellant. Wallace Leach, J. L. Copeland, and E. W. Hendricks, for the People.

FOOTE, C. The defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction of murder in the second degree, and from an order refusing him a new trial, made in the superior court of San Bernardino county. He had been previously tried upon the charge of murder, and convicted in the superior court of San Diego county of that crime, in the first degree, and on appeal to this court the judgment rendered against him was reversed. 10 Pac. Rep. 169. Thereupon he obtained a change of the place of trial of his cause to the first-named county. He now claims that the superior court of that county did not have jurisdiction to try him, for the reason, as he alleges, that the certified transcript of the record sent from San Diego county, on the change of venue to San Bernardino county, did not contain certain bills of exception taken on the trial of the case in the former county, for purposes of appeal to this court, nor certain charges given to the jury on the former trial by the judge of the court then trying the cause. This position is not tenable. Such papers were not essential to give the superior court of San Bernardino county jurisdiction to try the defendant on the charge alleged against him. They are not, in the contemplation of the statute, a part of the "record" necessary to be transmitted on a change of the place of trial of such a cause de novo. Section 1036, Pen. Code.

This view of the meaning of the statute, viz., that the words, "copy of the record, pleadings, and proceedings," require the transmission, on change of the venue of a cause, only such papers as may be essential to the proper trial of the defendant's case de novo, is strengthened by the presence in the statute of the words "including the undertakings for the appearance of the defendant and witnesses." As the undertakings might, in a certain contingency, be necessary, those words relating to them were evidently added out of abundant caution, so that not only the papers necessary to the proper trial of the defendant should be in the record, but also any papers which might be contingently necessary if forfeitures of the undertakings should be desired. If the words first cited meant to include the papers for which the defendant contends, the addition of the latter words would have been entirely superfluous; and we must therefore conclude that the legislature enacting the statute placed that construction on the language first mentioned, which we feel constrained to do.

We are also of opinion that it was within the jurisdiction of the trial court to make the order for the view by the jury of the place where "the offense is charged to have been committed, or in which any material fact occurred," under section 1119 of the Penal Code. Nor do we perceive any error arising from the taking of that view. Section 1119 of the Penal Code confers the right on any superior court in this state, in the exercise of a sound discretion, to cause a view to be taken, by a jury trying a criminal cause, of any "place in which the offense is charged to have been committed, or in which any other material fact occurred," and this right is there given, whether the place or places to be viewed lie in the county where the cause is then on trial, or in any other county of this state. This right, thus given clearly and without limitation, is not, as we think, in any way in conflict with the provisions of section 6 of article 6 of our state constitution. We have formerly held that the statute contemplates the presence of the defendant and his counsel at such view, in order that he may not be deprived of any of his constitutional rights to be confronted by witnesses against him, and to appear and defend in person and with counsel, and to that opinion we still adhere. People v. Bush, 10 Pac. Rep. 169.

The objection made that Thomas Bundy, the person appointed by the court to show the jury the places named in its order for the "view," pointed out and named such places to the jury, is without merit, for we cannot conceive how he could have shown the jury the two places which they were sent to view in any other way, under the statute. What is said by this court in the case of People v. Green, 53 Cal. 60, does not in any degree militate against the propriety of such a method of procedure.

We perceive no merit in the point that the court erred in not forcing the prosecution to introduce, as its own, three of the defendant's witnesses, Maud and Cora Parsons, his nieces, and Albert Bush, his son.

It is insisted that the eleventh and twelfth instructions asked by the defense, and refused, ought to have been given.

The court in its general charge, upon the same subject as that contained in said instructions, said: "If you find that the defendant committed the homicide, the law presumes it to have been done with malice, and the burden of proving circumstances of mitigation, or that justify or excuse it, devolve upon him, unless the proof on the part of the prosecution tends to show that it only amounted to manslaughter, or that the defendant was justifiable or excusable." That was a clear and explicit enunciation of the law on the point covered by the refused instructions, and the defendant was not prejudiced by their refusal.

It is also assigned for error that the court gave this instruction: "In this case Maud and Cora Parsons, nieces of the defendant, have been examined as witnesses in behalf of the defense. This is their right. It is proper, however, for the jury to bear in mind the relationship between them and the defendant, and the manner in which they may be interested by your verdict, and the very grave interest they must feel in it, and it is proper for the jury to consider whether their position and interest may not affect their credibility or color their testimony." By that instruction the court simply informed the jury of certain facts and circumstances in the case before them, which they would, perhaps, as men of ordinary observation, have been bound to know, and this was within a proper latitude of observation from a court in its charge to a jury. People v. Wong Ah Foo, 10 Pac. Rep. 375, 377; Bish. Crim. Proc. §§ 982-1064.

Upon the whole case, we perceive no prejudicial error, and the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; SEARLS, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

71 Cal. 569

PEOPLE v. GONZALES. (No. 23,233.)

1. HOMICIDE—EVIDENCE—DECLARATIONS OF DEFENDANT'S PARAMOUR.

In a prosecution for murder, where it appeared that the deceased suspected defendant of being his mother's paramour, and that he was killed by defendant in an affray resulting from an attempt by deceased to eject defendant from the mother's house, held that, even if there was evidence tending to show that the mother conspired with defendant to kill her son, yet her declarations regarding the homicide, made subsequent thereto, in the absence of defendant, were not admissible against defendant.

2. SAME—PARAMOUR'S DAUGHTER.

So, also, similar declarations of a sister of deceased, are inadmissible.

3. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS—GUARDING AGAINST POSSIBLE ERROR BY JURY.

Defendant held not entitled to an instruction that, although warned by the son to leave the county, he cannot be said to have voluntarily sought a place of danger in afterwards going to the mother's house, on her invitation, and not thinking there was any danger; there being nothing to suggest to the jury's mind the idea sought by this instruction to be excluded.

4. SAME—SELF-DEFENSE—INSTRUCTION.

An instruction that "a defendant cannot, in any case, justify killing another by a pretense of necessity, unless he was wholly without fault in bringing that necessity on himself," is erroneous.

5. SAME—NECESSITY.

An instruction that "the necessity must be apparent, actual, imminent, absolute, and unavoidable," is contradictory and misleading.

6. SAME—DUTY TO AVOID ENCOUNTER.

A man who expects to be attacked is not always bound to employ all the means in his power to avert the necessity of self-defense.

7. SAME—DANGER—DEFENDANT'S BELIEF.

To render a homicide justifiable on the ground of self-defense, not only must defendant be in apparently imminent danger, but he must believe that he is so.

8. SAME—MEANS OF DEFENSE—DEFENDANT'S BELIEF.

An instruction excluding from the jury the consideration of the question whether or not defendant had apparently, to his comprehension as a reasonable man, the means at hand to avoid killing deceased, without incurring imminent danger of great bodily harm, is erroneous.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Appeal from superior court, Del Norte county.

Indictment for murder. Defendant convicted, and appeals.

R. W. Miller and R. G. Knox, for appellant. The Attorney General, for the People.

FOOTE, C. The defendant was convicted of murder in the first degree. From the judgment therein, and an order denying him a new trial, he has appealed. His first contention is that the court erred in allowing the statements of a Miss Umphlet, and of her little daughter, (made to divers persons after the alleged crime had been committed by the defendant, and when he was not present,) to be given in evidence by those who had heard Miss Umphlet and the daughter make them.

The declarations, as detailed by Dr. Thorworth, at page 40 of the transcript, were: "Miss Umphlet [that is, the deceased's mother] appeared at the door, was there, and some others. I asked them to move the man into the house. The door was closed, and it seemed rather strange that his mother was not by him. I knew nothing of the facts of the matter. I opened the door, and she appeared. I asked if she had any objection to having the injured man brought into the house. She said that she had no particular objection, but that she would not remain there; she would leave. I told her I did not care where she went, so that the boy was brought into the house. She afterwards returned, after an hour or two, and remained there all night."

By Lewis Lockwood, on page 84: "Yes; she [that is, Miss Umphlet] said that first she asked her daughter what she was doing there. She told her she had come to see me or Lew. Miss Umphlet says: 'The professor [meaning the defendant] has shot George, [the deceased,] and I hope Frank Thraine has got his belly full.'"

By Alonzo Winton, at page 95: "In a very short time after I got up there Miss Umphlet came in with her daughter. I told her there was nobody there but Mrs. Storver's little boy and me. She asked where she was, and I told her she was at my house, and was going to stay all night. She turned around, and said, 'All right,' and gave her head a toss, and went out."

By Lillie McVay, at page 97: "Some one asked her if George was dead. She said 'No.' Joe Otto asked her if he soon would be. She said she guessed so. She then told us this story: She said George came to the door. She asked who was there, and George said, 'Me.' She opened the door, and he came in. He jumped for the professor, and she jumped between them. She said that she knew he would not shoot her. She said that she knew if the professor ever got a bead on him he would fetch him 'so quick,' (snapping her fingers.)"

By Chauncey Messenger, at pages 107, 108, and 109: "She [meaning Miss Umphlet] told me about the boys coming there, and disturbing them. They were playing cards. She said that she thought the boys would have done better to have attended to their own business, and cleaned up their own dirty work, than to be meddling with hers. * * * She said that they took the professor out doors, and when they got him out he broke loose, and ran back in the house, and turned around and shot George. * * * She said that she thought it was a good thing that it happened; that it would learn people to keep their nose out of other people's business; and that the professor did right, she thought, because he had been told by the officer not to leave; that he did not have to leave, and that she did not think that they could do anything with him. * * * She did not say she had another pistol. I was talking to her about the way she was talking around the house. I told her she had better go a little slow, and kind of behave herself; that she might be arrested herself. She threatened to put me out of the house, and called me some pretty rough names. I told her she had better behave herself, that she was liable to get into trouble herself. She said that she was not afraid of the sons of bitches; that she was heeled herself."

By Pat Gay, at pages 111, 112: "When I got there Frank Thraine was crying around there, and she called him a bellowing calf, and told him he ought to be locked up in the cooler. She said she knew if the professor ever got a bead on one of them he would catch him. He had been a soldier, or something like that. That was after I went into the house. Somebody said that 'hanging was too good for her,' and she said she knew where another pistol was, and some of them would get it if they didn't watch out."

By Lizzie Higgins, at page 129: "She came in and asked for a bed, and Lillie told her that she could not give her a bed until her mother came. She sat down and took off her things. Joe Otto asked her how the trouble began. She said George and Frank Thraine came there, and they rapped on the door. She asked who was there, and George said it was him. She went and opened the door, and they rushed in. When Frank Thraine started to come in she pushed the door to keep him out. George came in with a pistol in his hand. She got between him and the professor, and told him not to shoot, but he shot a bullet through the floor. Frank Thraine got hold of the professor, and pulled him through the door. While they were out there, professor got a bead on him, and she said he brought him down as quick as that, (snapping her fingers.)"

By James Trimble, at page 141: "I did not hear Miss Umphlet say anything about it. At another time the little girl came into the house, just after the shooting where I was, and says: 'I think they have killed my brother; the professor shot poor George.' Then she said they came pretty near shooting me. She said the bullet went about so far from me, and she held up her hands about that far apart. This happened before I went out of my brother's house." He stated the same, in substance, when recalled, at page 185.

According to the record, the deceased, George Kirkham, was the son of the person called Miss Umphlet. She had, before the killing, been divorced from her husband, and had but lately moved into the dwelling where she resided at the time of the homicide. It seems that certain reports had reached the ears of the son relative to a supposed intimacy between his mother and the defendant; that, indignant, as may be supposed, at that which he believed was the guilty conduct of the pair, the son had determined, in conjunction with a companion, one Frank Thraine, to put a stop to the disgraceful conduct which he believed existed, and that the defendant was warned by one or both of the companions to leave the town where he was then residing, and visiting Miss Umphlet; that he sought advice of an officer, who told him he had a right to stay where he was; that he did stay, and procured a pistol, as he claims, for purposes of self-defense; that the two young men, Kirkham and Thraine, came at night to Miss Umphlet's house, one of them (Kirkham) with a pistol in his hand, and ordered the defendant to leave, which he proceeded to do, aided in his retirement by Thraine, who held him by the hair and conducted him to the gate; that there he got loose, and ran back to the house, where he shot the deceased.

There is evidence in the record tending, in some degree, to show that such a connection existed between the defendant and the deceased's mother, Miss Umphlet, as he (Kirkham) apprehended. There is also evidence tending to show that the defendant armed himself expecting an attack from those parties, and went to the house of Miss Umphlet supposing it might be made on him there. There were also facts and circumstances developed in evidence which tended to prove that Miss Umphlet knew of the defendant's intentions, and did not dissuade him from putting them into execution, but rather encouraged him.

It was perhaps desired by the prosecution to bring out fully before the jury the fact that Miss Umphlet was the paramour of her son's slayer, and that she sympathized with him rather than her son, and approved of the killing of the latter. For this purpose they may have sought to show the acts and declarations of Miss Umphlet after the killing, and when the defendant was not present. A portion, at least, of the several statements of the above-named witnesses, narrating as they did the alleged declarations of Miss Umphlet, certainly tended to exhibit her and the defendant, as regarded their relations, in no enviable light before the jury, and as both being hostile to the deceased, and we cannot say that they may not have proved prejudicial to the defendant. Miss Umphlet was not a witness before the jury, and her alleged declarations, being made after the full accomplishment of the homicide, were not a part of the res gestæ. Even admitting that other evidence in the record tended to demonstrate that she had conspired with the defendant unjustifiably to slay George Kirkham, yet her narrations (made after the crime with which the former was charged, had been fully consummated) were not admissible against him. Prejudicial error was therefore committed in allowing them to go to the jury. People v. English, 52 Cal. 212; People v. Aleck, 61 Cal. 137-139.

The daughter's statement, made after the killing, and without the presence of the defendant, and related by Trimble, was not admissible; it was mere hearsay.

The defendant further complains that two of the instructions which he asked to be given by the court to the jury were refused. They are as follows:

"If the jury find from the testimony that at the time of the killing of deceased the defendant had been assailed by the deceased and one Thrairie, in a violent and threatening manner, and that deceased at the time of the assault held in his hand a deadly weapon, to-wit, a revolver, and if you find that such assault was made with intent to forcibly evict the defendant from the house of Ellen Umphlet, where the killing was done, then I charge you that such assault was unlawful; and, if the circumstances attending it were such as to cause a reasonable man to believe that he was in danger of receiving great bodily injury at the hands of his assailant, then I charge you that he was justifiable in taking the life of his assailant."

"If the jury find from the testimony that defendant had been warned to leave the county of Del Norte, or any place within said county, and that he subsequently made diligent inquiry as to the existence of danger, and from such investigation reasonably believed that he had no occasion to fear assault, and that defendant acted in good faith, upon such reasonable belief, then I charge you that the visiting of the house of Ellen Umphlet, upon her invitation, was not an unlawful act, and that a person acting under such circumstances cannot be said to have voluntarily sought a place of danger."

In the first instruction the jury were not told, as they should have been, that they must be of opinion, from the evidence, that the defendant believed he was in imminent danger of death, or some great bodily harm, then about to be done him at the moment of the killing by his assailants; for it is not enough that the jury may believe one killing his adversary has an apparent and reasonable ground then and there to apprehend great bodily harm or death at the hands of his adversary; they must further be of opinion, from the evidence before them, that the defendant entertained such belief, and acted upon it.

The defendant seems to be of opinion that his second instruction should have been granted, because, as he claims, the prosecution had shown in evidence that the defendant had been warned by the deceased and Thrairie to leave the county, and had not done so, and had gone to Miss Umphlet's house in defiance of such order; and that in consequence of such evidence the jury, without such an instruction as he sought, might have been led into the error of believing that the defendant, in not obeying the order and going to Miss Umphlet's, unlawfully sought the difficulty. There was no charge of the court given upon its own motion, or by request of the prosecution, which instructed the jury that such was the law, and we cannot conceive how any man of ordinary intelligence could be otherwise led to such a belief as a jurymen. The instruction was also quite obscure in its language, enunciated no clear proposition of law, and was calculated to mislead the jury.

The defendant further urges upon our attention, as an improper act committed by the trial court to his prejudice, the granting, over his objection, of instructions propounded by the prosecution, and numbered seventh, eighth, tenth, eleventh, fourteenth, sixteenth, seventeenth, eighteenth, nineteenth.

The tenth instruction does not enunciate a correct proposition of law, where it declares that one "cannot in any case justify killing another by a pretense of necessity, unless he was wholly without fault in bringing that necessity on himself;" for cases may, and frequently do, occur, in which the aggressor, although primarily in fault, has really and in good faith sought to avoid further conflict before the mortal blow was given; and when this is apparent, and he slay his antagonist in the necessary defense of his own life, he is not guilty of any crime.

The seventeenth instruction, in the first sentence thereof, which reads thus: "But the necessity must be apparent, actual, imminent, absolute, and unavoidable,"—is contradictory and misleading. It should have been expressed in the following or like language: "But the necessity must be actually or apparently imminent, absolute, and unavoidable." For it is not necessary that a defendant should show that danger to him of loss of life, or danger of some great bodily harm then about to be done him, actually existed; for actual, real, and imminent danger, to his comprehension as a reasonable man, is sufficient. People v. Anderson, 44 Cal. 65-69.

The eighteenth instruction excludes from the jury the consideration of the proposition whether or not, from the evidence, the defendant had apparently, to his comprehension as a reasonable man, the means at hand to avoid killing the deceased, without incurring imminent danger of losing his own life, or imminent danger of having great bodily harm done to his person.

The nineteenth instruction is clearly wrong. A man who expects to be attacked is not always compelled to employ all the means in his power to avert the necessity of self-defense, before he can exercise the right of self-defense; for one may know that if he travels along a certain highway he will be attacked by another with a deadly weapon, and be compelled in self-defense to kill his assailant, and yet he has the right to travel that highway, and is not compelled to turn out of his way to avoid the expected unlawful attack. In this case the defendant had a right to go to Miss Umphlet's house, if invited there by her, even if he expected there to be attacked, and the fact that he did go there did not, of itself, take away from him the right of self-defense, if unlawfully attacked.

The other instructions assailed as incorrect are neither so accurate or intelligible as they might well have been, but they are not so clearly erroneous, when taken in connection with the rest of the charge, as to demand, on that account alone, the reversal of the judgment and order. Yet, for the reasons heretofore given, they should be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; SEARLS, C.

By THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

SHIPMAN and others v. SUPERIOR COURT, etc. (No. 11,985.)

(Supreme Court of California. January 28, 1887.)

INJUNCTION—REVERSAL OF JUDGMENT ON DEMURRER—AMENDED COMPLAINT—EFFECT OF.

Where a temporary injunction is granted on a complaint subsequently held insufficient on appeal, an amended complaint operates to continue the injunction obtained previously.

Department 1.

Application for a writ of prohibition to restrain proceedings in the court below for an alleged contempt in violating a preliminary injunction issued in the case of Roman Catholic Archbishop v. Shipman. Upon an appeal taken in that case, (11 Pac. Rep. 343,) the decision of the court below, overruling the de-murrer to the complaint, was reversed, and, after filing the remittitur, an order was made and entered by the court below, sustaining the demurrer to the complaint. Plaintiff in that action, by leave of court, then filed an amended complaint, but did not apply for or obtain any order reviving or renewing the injunction, and no other injunction was issued. Subsequently an order of sale was made in the action, and placed in the hands of the sheriff by Mr. Wood, attorney for Alice Dorland. The property was advertised for sale. Application was then made by plaintiff in the case, and granted, that Wood show cause why he should not be punished for contempt in violating the injunction issued at time of commencing suit. Petitioners herein claimed that the reversal of the judgment set aside the temporary injunction, and from the time of the entry of the order in the superior court, the case stood without any restraining order or bond; respondents, that the injunction is still in force, notwithstanding the reversal of the judgment.

J. C. Bates, for petitioners. Wilson & Wilson, for respondents.

BY THE COURT. Application denied, on authority of Barber v. Reynolds, 33 Cal. 497.

PEOPLE v. DEMOUSSET. (No. 20,253.)

1. ABDUCTION—DEFENSE—UNCHASTE CONDUCT OF CHILD—PEN. CODE CAL. § 267.

The gist of the offense of abduction of a female under the age of 18 for the purpose of prostitution, under Pen. Code Cal. § 267, is the taking away of the child against the will of the person having lawful charge of her, and it is no defense that the child has previously been guilty of unchaste conduct, and evidence of such conduct is not admissible.

2. SAME—TAKING BY FORCE—INDUCEMENT.

To constitute the crime of abduction, under Pen. Code Cal. § 267, it is not necessary that the taking should be by force, but it will be sufficient if the child was induced by the defendant to leave the custody of her mother.

3. SAME—EVIDENCE.

In an indictment for abduction under Pen. Code Cal. § 267, where the girl abducted testified that the defendant suggested to her that she should leave home, because he was afraid that her mother would find out the relations existing between the defendant and her, and that she should leave on the false pretense that her step-father was trying, or had tried, to have sexual intercourse with her, and that she left home solely on the suggestion and in consequence of the threats of the defendant, and the girl's mother testified that she consented to the girl going away from home on account of this charge, and that the defendant supported its truth, evidence that the girl had in fact had sexual intercourse is immaterial, as bearing solely on a collateral question, and therefore inadmissible. PATERSON, J., dissenting.

4. CRIMINAL LAW—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—GENERAL CHARGE—PARTICULAR POINT.

Where the court has charged, in general terms, that if the jury find that any witness has willfully sworn falsely upon any material point, the entire testimony of such witness is to be distrusted, it need not instruct the jury that testimony upon a particular point is material, and that, if a certain witness has sworn falsely upon that point, his entire testimony is to be distrusted.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Indictment for abduction under Pen. Code Cal. § 267.

Lucien Shaw and James M. Damron, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

BY THE COURT. The defendant was convicted of the crime of abduction for the purposes of prostitution, and sentenced to serve a term of five years in the state prison, under section 267 of the Penal Code, which reads as follows: "Every person who takes away any female under the age of eighteen years, from her father, mother, guardian, or other person having the legal charge of her person, without their consent, for the purpose of prostitution, is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison not exceeding five years, and a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars."

The court instructed the jury as follows: "If, from the evidence, the jury believe that Augustine Coela was a female child under eighteen years of age, in the legal charge of her mother, and that the defendant took her away, as alleged in the information, for the purpose of prostitution, they should find the defendant guilty as charged."

It is claimed that this instruction is erroneous because it omits the element of the previous chaste character of the female, and because it does not inform the jury that the taking must have been without the consent of the parent. It will be observed that the section says nothing about the chastity of the female. The law is intended to protect the chaste and reclaim the erring; to protect parents and guardians in their custody and care of minor females, without regard to the character of such female for chastity, and the family from sorrow and disgrace. We are not disposed, in the construction of this section, to interpolate any phrase that will detract from its effectiveness in this regard.

In other portions of its charge the court said to the jury: "Before you can convict the defendant, you must be satisfied, to a moral certainty, not only that the defendant took the girl away from her parents without their consent, but also that he took her away for the purpose of prostitution. The word 'prostitution' in the statute does not mean sexual intercourse with some particular man, or with one man only, but it means to offer freely and openly, to an indiscriminate, common intercourse with men." This charge, in connection with the language of the instruction objected to,—“took her away as alleged in the information,”—is a sufficient answer to the second ground of objection.

The court further instructed the jury: "The law does not require that the taking must be by force. If the child was induced by the defendant to go away from the custody and care of her mother, it is a sufficient taking away under the statute." It is said that this instruction is erroneous, in that it leaves out of the case all question of the character of the inducements, and does not even require that they should have been used fraudulently. We think that the instruction, read in connection with the preceding instruction, was correct. The court immediately before had said to the jury: "The gist of this offense is the taking away of the child against the will of the person having lawful charge of her for the purpose of prostitution." It is seldom possible for the court to give the whole law of the case to the jury in one sentence. The charge must be read in its entirety. In this instruction the court simply said to the jury that a physical carrying away is not required to constitute the taking, but that inducements are sufficient.

The girl had given evidence to the effect that the defendant had administered drugs to her in order to cause her to submit to sexual intercourse, some days prior to the time of the alleged abduction. The court was asked by the defendant to instruct the jury that this alleged giving of drugs was material, and that, if she testified falsely upon that point, she was to be distrusted as to her whole testimony. The court refused to give such instruction, on the ground that it was calculated to mislead the jury, and was not supported by the evidence. The court, however, did instruct the jury: "If you find that any witness has willfully sworn falsely upon any material point, then the entire testimony of such witness is to be distrusted." We think this was sufficient. The jury may or may not have considered the conduct of the defendant, on the occasion referred to, as in any way bearing upon the question of guilt or innocence of the crime here charged. The court is not required to instruct the jury as to the materiality of particular circumstances. The ruling of the court on the admissibility of the evidence was a sufficient action on its part. It will be presumed the jury gave it proper consideration. As counsel for defendant states in his brief: "The circumstance did not necessarily prove any element of crime."

The defendant offered to show that the girl, Augustine Coela, had, prior to the alleged abduction, had sexual intercourse with a number of men. The offer was rejected, and an exception was reserved. We are unable to see how such testimony could be material. Want of chastity is no defense, and if the defendant could show that the girl made the first proposal, and went willingly with him, it would be immaterial; for the gist of the offense, as the court told the jury, "is the taking away of the child against the will of the person having lawful charge of her, for the purpose of prostitution."

The defendant further offered to show that the girl had had illicit intercourse, from time to time, with the step-father, but the court excluded it. The girl had testified, in substance, that the defendant suggested to her that she should leave home, because he was afraid, if she stayed there, her mother would find out what they had been doing; and that she should leave on the false pretense that her step-father was trying, or had tried, to have intercourse with her; and that she made all the trouble that arose on account of this charge because she was afraid of the defendant, and without any real foundation for it, but solely on the suggestion and in consequence of the threats of the defendant. The girl's mother testified that she consented to the girl going away from home because of this charge, and that the defendant supported, or acquiesced in, the truth of the charge.

The defendant claims that he never made any such proposition to the girl, but, on the contrary, that the girl voluntarily told him of it, and that he was much shocked to hear it; that her step-father threatened to kill her on account of her statement to her mother that the step-father had attempted to have illicit intercourse with her; and that he (defendant) assisted her to get away, because the step-father might kill her.

During the cross-examination of the girl's mother, counsel for defendant proposed to show that she (the mother) had permitted her daughter to sleep with the step-father, at the store, during seven or eight months in the year 1885, and to follow that up by showing that illicit relations existed between them, and that he wanted, at this point, to show the condition of things that existed. The offer was excluded, and the defendant excepted.

Caspar Shaffer, a witness, called on behalf of defendant, was asked this question: "State to the jury if, during the month of January, 1885, while you were at the shop kept by yourself and Mr. Lorraine, you saw anything of an improper relation existing between the witness Augustine Coela and Mr. Lorraine, her step-father." The question was objected to, the objection sustained, and an exception taken by the defendant.

Defendant offered to show by another witness that Augustine and her step-father had had sexual intercourse with each other during the month of September or October, 1885. The same ruling was made by the court, and an exception taken by the defendant.

We see no error in the exclusion of the testimony offered. The question to which it was addressed was collateral to the issue involved, and the evidence was accordingly immaterial.

The evidence supports the verdict.

The judgment is affirmed.

PATERSON, J. I dissent. Upon the testimony in the case it became a most pertinent inquiry for the jury whether the girl was taken by the defendant to save her from the alleged criminal assaults by her step-father, or for the purpose of prostitution. The girl had said to her mother that she would not remain, and had written to her that she would not return, because she was afraid the father would "bother her again." On the witness stand she said that her former statements in that regard were untrue, and that the story had been concocted by the defendant. On which occasion did she tell the truth? Did the defendant frighten her into the assertion of a false charge? The mother testified that she heard the step-father say he would kill the girl if she told such things about him. Did this threat of the step-father frighten the girl into giving false testimony by denying the truth of the charge she had made? Upon the determination of these inquiries must have depended largely the question of the defendant's motives, as well as the question of the mother's consent, and anything tending to show which statement was correct must be material. The conduct which was imputed to the step-father was most unreasonable, unnatural, and debased, and the story was correspondingly improbable and incredible. Upon its face it carried the badge of falsity. The jury would be slow to believe that the girl ever told the defendant such a story. If, however, the jury knew, as a matter of fact, that the statement was true, and that the mother knew it, much less weight would be given to the testimony of the mother and daughter upon the most important questions in the case, viz., whether the girl went with the consent of the mother, and whether defendant took her for the purpose of indiscriminate prostitution. If the defense of the defendant had been that he took the girl to save her from cruel and inhuman punishment, such as burning or tying up by the thumbs, and similar questions of veracity between himself and the girl had arisen, can it be doubted that the truth of the fact claimed might be proved to show that, however improbable and incredible his statement as to his reasons might appear to be, it is nevertheless true? While lewd conduct is no defense, it may often be an important and material circumstance tending to explain the taking away, as well as to show the credibility of the witness upon some material matter to which she has testified, and to explain the motives of the defendant. I think that the evidence offered to show the relations existing in fact between the step-father and the daughter was most material for these purposes, and should have been admitted.

PEOPLE, etc., ex rel. CLOUGH v. LEVY. (No. 11,771.)

1. APPEAL—TRIAL WITHOUT JURY—CONFLICT OF EVIDENCE.

Where a case has been tried in the superior court without a jury, and there is evidence on the point at issue sufficient to cause a substantial conflict, the supreme court will not reverse the judgment of the lower court, even though it might appear that the finding of such court is contrary to the weight of the testimony.

2. EVIDENCE—INSANITY—INTIMATE ACQUAINTANCE—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Where the sanity of a person is in issue, it is within the discretion of the trial court to determine whether a witness is sufficiently acquainted with the party to enable him to speak, and the supreme court will not interfere with its decision, where there is no abuse of discretion.

3. WITNESS—IMPEACHING—FOUNDATION—CODE CIVIL PROC. CAL. § 2052.

Where no attempt is made to contradict a witness, he may be questioned as to previous statements inconsistent with his testimony, although no foundation has been laid for his impeachment, as required by Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 2052.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.
Quo warranto.

Langhorne & Miller, for appellant. U. L. Ackerman and David McClure, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. This is an action, in the nature of quo warranto, to oust the defendant from the office of judge of the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco, into which it is alleged he has intruded, and to reinstate the relator therein. The relator was elected to said office for the term of six years from and after the first Monday of January, 1883. After his election he duly qualified as such judge, took possession of and held the office until the twenty-eighth day of August, 1885. On the eleventh day of August, 1885, the relator signed and delivered to one McCourtney, his court-room clerk, and instructed him to deliver to the governor, the following paper.

*"To His Excellency, George Stoneman, Governor of California—*DEAR SIR: I herewith tender you my resignation as superior judge of the city and county of San Francisco, state of California. Failing health will no longer permit me to perform the duties thereof.

Respectfully yours,

F. M. CLOUGH, Judge."

McCourtney handed the document to Mrs. Clough, who thereafter delivered the same to T. J. Clunie, by whom it was delivered to Gov. Stoneman on or about the twenty-eighth of August, 1885. Appellant claims that at the time said resignation was signed, and thereafter, until it was delivered to the governor, the relator, Clough, was insane, and that his acts in relation to said resignation are void; and this is the principal ground of contention on this appeal.

The cause was tried before the superior court, sitting without a jury, and the court found as facts "(14) that said relator was, on the said eleventh day of August, 1885, and at the time of making and delivering the said resignation, in a fit and proper condition for the proper transaction and understanding of business, and he was at the said time of sound mind and memory;" "(20) that at the time of signing said resignation said relator well knew the purport and effect of the same, and did voluntarily sign said resignation;" "(22) that said relator was, at the time of the delivery aforesaid, of sound mind, and well able to understand the effect of his said act of delivery."

It is claimed, however, by appellant, that said findings are not supported by the evidence.

Mr. McCourtney, the relator's court-room clerk, of whom it is alleged in the complaint that "the relator reposed great confidence in his truthfulness and friendship," testified as follows: "I did not notice anything wrong with him. He talked the same that day [August 11th] as he did in his court-room. I have observed the conduct of Judge Clough in his court-room during the time that I have been there, and have known him for three or four years. He talked the same that day as he did in his court-room. I did not see any difference. He signed the state demands also, besides the city warrants. I am very familiar with his handwriting and his signature. I can see no difference in the signature on the warrants here shown and the signatures in the court-room. He signed the word 'Judge' at the bottom. I did not ask him to sign it. He put it there of his own volition. He said: 'Now, I have resigned. Forward that to the governor of the state.' He asked if he would get this month's salary, and I said, 'Certainly, you will get that.'"

W. Fitzgerald, who had known the relator for about three years, testified that he saw him the next day after he came down from Stockton, on August 8th. "I remained with him after that about six or seven weeks. I had mostly charge of him. I spent nearly all the time, except when I would run down town during the day-time, with him all those weeks. I should think most of the time, to the best of my opinion, he was sane all the time I was with him. He was sane, and not out of his mind, except when he got excited. His mental condition was good. I could not see any change. * * * He seemed to talk very rationally. I was there when the resignation was signed. He had a conversation after, with McCourtney. He signed it right off. I don't know whether he read it. I should say he was understanding what he was doing."

Dr. Buckley, an expert witness, testified, in answer to hypothetical questions: "I should consider a person who signed a document, after all this reasoning pro and con relative to the subject, was perfectly sane in mind."

This evidence shows that, whatever may be the weight of the evidence against it, there is a substantial conflict as to the sanity of the relator at the time he executed the resignation, and delivered it to McCourtney, on the eleventh day of August, 1885.

The most serious question, it is claimed, in the case is as to the condition of his mind from the eleventh day of August to and including the twenty-eighth, or until the appointment of the respondent to fill the vacancy.

Although it might seem to us that the finding of the court is contrary to the weight of testimony, it is sufficient to say that there was evidence enough to cause a substantial conflict therein. It is true there is no direct evidence as to his sanity during each and every day of the period referred to, but, if the question be material, there is testimony indicating sanity during a portion of the time, and from which the court was justified in finding him to be sane during the whole period. Judge Maguire, an intimate friend and associate of the relator, testified that he visited him on several occasions. He says: "I think it must have been between the fifteenth and twenty-fifth of August that I saw him, but I cannot place closely the first visit I made. I met Judges Lawler and Rearden there. Judge Clough then and there conversed with me and the other judges. He said that he desired to speak about his alleged resignation, and the appointment of Levy. We asked him about it, talked about it, and he made some statements concerning it. * * * He seemed to me to be weak physically, and not very strong mentally, but still so rational as to surprise me, from his former condition and conversation. I should say that he had very greatly improved at that time; improved so far as to seem to be rational, if not disturbed. * * * During that time he seemed to be quite rational, and quite sane, barring the weakness that was incident to sickness of that character. I would regard him to be of sane mind. I would consider that he talked quite rationally upon all other subjects that were discussed at that time, barring the weakness and the nervous excitement at times, which he checked, as I say."

McCourtney testified: "I went there again, for the purpose of getting his warrant signed. It was in the latter part of August or the first part of the next month. He came and greeted me, and shook hands with me. It was about the time that Judge Levy was appointed. I think it was before Judge Levy took his seat. He came in, and shook hands with me, and I told him, I said: 'Well, judge, I have brought you out your demand; I suppose it is the last you will get.' He said: 'Yes, I don't know whether I have any right to sign it or not.' I did not stay over five or six minutes. He acted just as he always did in court."

Mrs. Clough testified: "So, then, August 28th, I telegraphed the governor, and told him that the judge was much better, and he had not resigned. * * * He commenced to recover, I think, about a week or ten days after he came from Stockton, August 7th. He was better that week than he had ever been,—the week that he went up there in September,—and I thought probably he was well enough to get his discharge; but the ride up and down upset him, and after that he commenced being nervous again. * * * Dr. Hayne said he was well enough to go and get his discharge, and he was seemingly very well. I did not see anything out of the way. He talked rationally and intelligently. This was about the middle of September. After that he was not violent."

This testimony, which is all there is bearing on the point in connection with his acts in relation to the demands and warrants for salary, created, in our opinion, a substantial conflict in the evidence. Appellant claims that the resignation was procured through fraud, and upon the respondent's offer to share with the relator or his family a part of the salary of the office, in the event of the respondent's appointment thereto, and therefore that the resignation was void as against public policy. But the court found that no such offer was made, and that there was no fraud in procuring the resignation. Upon this question there was also a conflict of testimony, and the same is true of all the findings about which there is any controversy.

The hypothesis upon which defendant's counsel based his question calling for the opinion of Dr. Buckley was warranted by the evidence, and we cannot say that the facts stated were insufficient to render it competent.

During the cross-examination of Mrs. Clough, she was asked whether she had stated to the attorney general that the judge was much better. To this question counsel for plaintiff objected, on the ground that the proper foundation had not been laid for impeachment, as required by section 2052, Code Civil Proc. The objection was overruled, and plaintiff excepted. Inasmuch as no attempt was made to contradict the witness, there was no error in the ruling.

It is claimed that the witness McCourtney ought not to have been allowed to testify concerning the sanity of relator, because he was not shown to be an "intimate acquaintance," within the meaning of the statute. It is often a difficult question to determine whether the witness is sufficiently acquainted with the party to entitle him to speak. That the witness should be familiar with the temperament and habits of mind of the person whose soundness is in question there is no doubt, but the determination of the competency of the witness is within the discretion of the court below, with the exercise of which, there being no abuse, this court will not interfere. *People v. Ex parte ROBINSON. (No. 20,275.)

1. CONTEMPT—REFUSAL TO OBEY ORDER OF COURT TO PAY ALIMONY—DECLARATION IN COURT—AFFIDAVITS.

The defendant, in an action for divorce at the instance of his wife, was ordered to pay her a sum for costs. The money was not paid, and no affidavit was filed showing non-payment, but the defendant appeared in court to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt. The court, having heard the evidence as to his ability, decided that he was amply able to pay. The defendant thereupon declared that he would not pay; that he "would be locked up,"—meaning that he would go to jail rather than obey the order. Held that, although failure to obey such order would not ordinarily be punishable except upon affidavit, yet, the defendant having refused to pay in the presence of the court, he might be imprisoned without affidavits.

2. APPEAL—REHEARING—HABEAS CORPUS.

In the California supreme court, a petition for rehearing in a habeas corpus case will not be allowed.

In bank. Petition for a writ of habeas corpus.

W. H. H. Hart and Aylett R. Cotton, for petitioner. Sawyer & Burnett, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. The petitioner was adjudged guilty of contempt in the superior court of Del Norte county for refusing to pay certain sums of money which the court had directed him to pay, as costs and attorney's fees, in an action for divorce therein pending between his wife and himself. In the action referred to the plaintiff, wife of petitioner, had been awarded a decree of divorce, the defendant had moved for a new trial, and prepared and served his bill of exceptions. The plaintiff, having no means to present her defense to said motion, applied to the court for an order requiring the defendant to pay the cost of transcribing the short-hand notes, and a sufficient fee to enable her to employ an attorney to attend to the proceedings for a new trial. After hearing the matter upon affidavits, the court directed the defendant to pay the plaintiff or her counsel the sum of $160 within two days after service of the order, or show cause thereafter, to-wit, on the fourth day of November, 1886, why he should not be punished for contempt. The money was not paid. No affidavit showing non-payment was presented, but on said fourth day of November the defendant and his counsel appeared before the court to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt. The court heard the evidence of the parties as to the ability of the defendant to pay, and decided that the defendant had been and then was amply able to pay the said sum. Immediately upon learning the decision of the court the defendant refused to pay the money, saying he "would be locked up;" meaning, of course, that he would go to jail before he would obey the order of the court. Thereupon the court adjudged him guilty of contempt, and ordered that he be confined in the county jail until he complied with the order for the payment of the $160.

Petitioner claims that the court exceeded its jurisdiction in making the order adjudging him guilty of contempt, and that the order is therefore void, and his detention thereunder unlawful. It is contended that the contempt, if any, was committed without the presence of the court, and that the court could not lawfully make any order requiring him to show cause, except upon affidavit being first presented showing his failure to comply with the order for the payment of the money. In support of this proposition petitioner relies upon the case of Batchelder v. Moore, 42 Cal. 412. In that case the contempt alleged was clearly one which was not and could not be committed in the presence of the court. The affidavit upon which the proceedings were based was defective in the most important particular, and it resulted that the court had no authority to proceed. We are not disposed to question the correctness of that decision, and if the petitioner herein had contented himself with answering the question why he had not complied with the order of the court,—whether his reasons were good or bad,—or if he had objected in any way to the proceedings, or if he had voluntarily appeared, and said nothing, we should hold that the court below, in the absence of an affidavit showing failure to comply with the order, had no authority to convict him of contempt. The defendant, however, did not content himself with excuses, good or bad, nor did he object to the proceedings of the court, nor did he keep that silence which would have been circumspect; but he went further, and showed his defiance of the court, and its lawful order, by a declaration plainly indicating that he never intended to obey the order, and that, if imprisonment was the ultimatum, he was ready for it. We think that this direct challenge to the authority of the court was a contemptuous defiance of a lawful order, in the presence of the court, and that he was properly adjudged guilty of contempt therefor. It was a repetition in the presence of the court of the offense for which the court had, without authority, cited him to appear and answer.

It is claimed that, since the issuance of the writ herein, a compliance with the order of the court has become unnecessary, because the proceedings on motion for new trial have lapsed or have been dismissed, and there is no longer any necessity for the payment of the money. If this be true, the court below may discharge the prisoner; but, as the order for payment is still in force, we remand the petitioner.

We concur: MORRISON, C. J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; MCFARLAND, J.

BOYS' & GIRLS' AID SOC. v. REIS, Treas., etc. (No. 9,914.)

1. REFORM SCHOOL—CONSTITUTIONALITY OF PEN. CODE CAL. § 1388.

Pen. Code Cal. § 1388, authorizing courts to suspend final judgment in any conviction against a minor for a misdemeanor or felony, to commit him to the custody of the managers of a non-sectarian charitable institution conducted for the purpose of reclaiming minors, and, in their discretion, to direct payment of the expense of his custody in such institution to be made from the funds of the county where the criminal proceeding is pending, is constitutional; and is not in conflict with Const. Cal. art. 4, § 22, prohibiting the payment of money from the state treasury for the benefit of institutions not under the exclusive control of the state as a state institution; nor with article 9, § 8, prohibiting the appropriation of public money for the support of any school not under the exclusive control of the officers of public schools, such provision having reference to common and public schools, as spoken of in the constitution, such as are organized for the sole purpose of disseminating knowledge, and imparting scholastic instruction; nor with article 11, § 13, prohibiting the delegation of municipal power.

2. SAME—POLICE COURT—JURISDICTION.

A tribunal presided over by a police judge is a "court," within the meaning of the California constitution, and may exercise the jurisdiction granted by Pen. Code Cal. § 1388, authorizing the committal of juvenile criminals to reform schools.

3. SAME—EXPENSE OF CUSTODY—BOARD OF SUPERVISORS.

The discretion imposed upon the court by section 1388 of Pen. Code Cal., to allow payment of the expense of keeping a minor, in an institution for the reformation of minor criminals, from the funds of the county in which the criminal proceeding is pending, must be exercised personally, and, when properly exercised, the board of supervisors is not required to supervise the action of the court before payment may be made from the county treasury.

Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco. Mandamus. Commissioners' decision. In bank.

John L. Love, for appellant. E. F. Swortfiguer and John A. Stanly, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This is an appeal from a judgment ordering a peremptory writ of mandate to issue commanding the defendant, treasurer, etc., forthwith to pay out of the treasury of the city and county of San Francisco certain sums of money. The defendant urges that the statute enacted by the legislature, dated the fifteenth day of March, 1883, adding a new section to the Penal Code, to be known as section 1388, is unconstitutional. The said act is to be found in the Statutes of 1883, p. 377. He also contends that the statute in question does not contemplate that the treasurer of said city and county should have incumbent on him, as a mere ministerial duty, the payment of the demands on the treasury by the direction of the court.

Section 1388 of the Penal Code is as follows: "Final judgment may be suspended on any conviction, charge, or prosecution for misdemeanor or felony, where, in the judgment of the court in which such proceeding is pending, there is a reasonable ground to believe that such minor may be reformed, and that a commitment to prison would work manifest injury in the premises. Such suspension may be for as long a period as the circumstances of the case may seem to warrant, and subject to the following further provisions: During the period of such suspension, or of any extension thereof, the court or judge may, under such limitations as may seem advisable, commit such minor to the custody of the officers or managers of any strictly non-sectarian charitable corporation, conducted for the purpose of reclaiming criminal minors. Such corporation, by its officers or managers, may accept the custody of such minor for a period of two months, (to be further extended by the court or judge should it be deemed advisable;) and should said minor be found incorrigible and incapable of reformation, he may be returned before the court for final judgment for his misdemeanor. Such charitable corporation shall accept custody of said minor, as aforesaid, upon the distinct agreement that it and its officers shall use all reasonable means to effect the reformation of such minor, and provide him with a home and instruction. No application for guardianship of such minor by any person, parent, or friend shall be entertained by any court during the period of such suspension and custody, save upon recommendation of the court before which the criminal proceedings are pending first obtained. Such court may further, in its discretion, direct the payment of the expenses of the maintenance of such minor during such period of two months, not to exceed, in the aggregate, the sum of twenty-five dollars, ($25;) which sum shall include board, clothing, transportation, and all other expenses, to be paid by the county where such criminal proceeding is pending, or direct action to be instituted for the recovery thereof out of the estate of said minor, or from his parents. Such court may also revoke such order of suspension at any time."

In support of his first contention the defendant argues that the act is in contravention of section 22, art. 4; section 8, art. 9; section 13, art. 11; and section 11, art. 1,—of the constitution of this state.

They are as follows, respectively:

Sec. 23, art. 4. "No money shall be drawn from the treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law, and upon warrants duly drawn thereon by the comptroller; and no money shall ever be appropriated or drawn from the state treasury, for the use or benefit of any corporation, association, asylum, hospital, or other institution not under the exclusive management and control of the state as a state institution, nor shall any grant or donation of property ever be made thereto by the state: provided, that, notwithstanding anything contained in this or any other section of this constitution, the legislature shall have power to grant aid to institutions conducted for the support and maintenance of minor orphans, or half orphans, or abandoned children, or aged persons in indigent circumstances, such aid to be granted by a uniform rule, and proportioned to the number of inmates of such respective institutions: provided, further, that the state shall have at any time the right to inquire into the management of such institutions: provided, further, that whenever any county, or city and county, or city, or town, shall provide for the support of minor orphans, or half orphans, or abandoned children, or aged persons in indigent circumstances, such county, city and county, city, or town, shall be entitled to receive the same pro rata appropriations as may be granted to such institutions under church or other control. An accurate statement of the receipts and expenditures of public moneys shall be attached to and published with the laws at every regular session of the legislature."

Sec. 8, art. 9. "No public money shall ever be appropriated for the support of any sectarian or denominational school, or any school not under the exclusive control of the officers of the public schools; nor shall any sectarian or denominational doctrine be taught, or instruction thereon be permitted, directly or indirectly, in any of the common schools of this state."

Sec. 13, art. 11. "The legislature shall not delegate to any special commission, private corporation, company, association, or individual, any power to make, control, appropriate, supervise, or in any way interfere with, any county, city, town, or municipal improvement, money, property, or effects, whether held in trust or otherwise, or to levy taxes or assessments, or perform any municipal functions whatever."

Sec. 11, art. 1. "All laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation."

We do not perceive that the section of the Code under consideration is in conflict with section 22 of article 4 of the constitution. That section has exclusive reference to the legislative power to appropriate or draw money from "the state treasury for the use and benefit of any corporation," etc. Under section 1388 of the Penal Code no money can be, or is in any manner sought to be, taken from the state treasury, and it does not affect the revenue of the state, as such. Nor has the legislature, by that statute, attempted to direct any absolute payment from a county treasury. It has vested in a court, in the exercise of its wise and proper judicial discretion, the right to order payment out of that treasury, to a limited extent, and in strict accordance with the letter of that law, certain sums of money in each given case, where such an order could be legally made according to the terms of the statute. It is not in conflict with section 8 of article 9 of the constitution, for that section has reference to schools, as such, in the ordinary acceptation of the term; that is, common and public schools, as spoken of in the constitution,—such as are organized for the sole purpose of disseminating knowledge, and imparting scholastic instruction.

The Boys' & Girls' Aid Society, as constituted, appears to be a corporation which "is strictly non-sectarian and charitable, conducted for the purpose of reclaiming minors;" and we do not see why the legislature might not as well allow a judge of a proper court to confide to the managers and directors of the corporation the custody of a minor, who has been convicted of an infraction of the penal laws of the state, for a certain specified time, and to order the proper sum necessary to his maintenance while in such custody out of a proper fund provided for the purpose and in the treasury of the proper county, as to order his imprisonment in the county jail, and the costs of his maintenance there to be paid out of said treasury. Both laws would have for their common object the reformation of the criminal, and the prevention of crime, and would be necessarily constitutional, being the exercise of the "police power" essentially existing under the constitution as a legislative attribute; nor do we perceive what "municipal power" is delegated under the act, which is prohibited by section 13 of article 11.

The municipality of the city and county of San Francisco is a political corporation, and its functions are only such as are necessary to fulfill the purpose of its existence. The creation of that municipality for the purpose of engaging in the charitable and praiseworthy labor of reclaiming and reforming criminal minors was not within the contemplation of the legislature which enacted the consolidation act, and other laws which govern and control the city and county of San Francisco as a municipal corporation, for such power is not therein expressly granted, or necessarily implied from such grant, and it cannot otherwise exist. Wallace v. Mayor of San Jose, 29 Cal. 186; City of Oakland v. Carpentier, 13 Cal. 546; Argenti v. City of San Francisco, 16 Cal. 283; Boone, Corp. § 287; In re Lee Tong, 18 Fed. Rep. 259; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 89; Cooley, Const. Lim. 194.

It is not unconstitutional to apply the word "court" to a tribunal presided over by a police judge. It is an inferior court, which the legislature may establish in any incorporated city or town, or city and county. Const. art. 6, § 1. Nor is the order of such court, for the payment out of the city and county treasury of the sum mentioned in the statute, an exercise of the right of "taxation without representation." The statute under which it is to be done contemplates the expenditure of such money, out of a fund to be provided for that purpose. It is alleged in the affidavits filed by the corporation respondent, admitted by the defendant, and found by the trial court, "that said treasurer of said city and county, on said third day of October, 1884, had then, hitherto has had, and still has, ample funds provided by law for the payment of said orders;" meaning the orders made by the police court of said city and county, which the defendant refused to pay. The benefits of the reclamation of minors intended by the statute would be enjoyed by the whole community, and no inequitable burden cast upon any person.

The police judge of any incorporated city or town, or city and county, may be elected by only a part of all the qualified voters thereof, and yet he would be the judge of an inferior court such as the constitution (article 6, § 1) contemplates, and any such court could exercise the jurisdiction granted by section 1388 of the Penal Code, and that would not be a violation of the constitution where it declares: "All laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation." Article 1, § 11, Const.

The statute says: "Such court may further, in its discretion, direct the payment of the expenses of the maintenance of such minor during such period of two months, not to exceed in the aggregate the sum of twenty-five dollars, ($25,) which sum shall include board, clothing, transportation, and all other expenses, to be paid by the county where such criminal proceeding is pending," etc. We know of no other way for such payment to be made than out of the treasury of the county where the "proceeding is pending." The order made herein, in each case, directs the payments to be made "out of the treasury of the city and county of San Francisco," where each and all of the "proceedings were pending." To the judge of the proper court the statute commits the discretion of making the orders for such payments. Where such a discretion is by law conferred upon a specific officer, such officer must exercise that discretion personally, (Boone, Corp. § 310; Richardson v. Heydenfeldt, 46 Cal. 68; City of Stockton v. Creanor, 45 Cal. 646,) and, when properly exercised, the board of supervisors is not required to supervise the action of the court, (Ex parte Reis, 64 Cal. 243, 244.)

The demand in controversy is not one of those that is to be first approved by the board of supervisors, for section 85 of the consolidation act includes only such demands as are mentioned in that act, and are authorized by it. Sections 97, 98, Consolidation Act; Ex parte Reis, supra, 239. The statute under consideration does not attempt to repeal said section 85, nor does it affect the act itself, for the provisions of the consolidation act are left untouched. Its officers exercise the same functions under it after as before the enactment of the statute. It does superadd a duty on the treasurer, that of paying the demand mentioned, under the order of the judge of the police court; but that does not affect any power or duty vested in him by the consolidation act. Ex parte Reis, supra, 240.

The judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; SEARLS, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

APPEAL—UNDERTAKING—TWO APPEALS, AND ONE UNDERTAKING REFERRING TO NEITHER—FILING NEW UNDERTAKING—CODE CIVIL PROC. CAL. § 954.

Where an appeal is taken from two orders, and one undertaking on appeal filed, which refers to neither of them, so that it cannot be determined for which it is intended, the appellant will not be allowed to file a new undertaking, under section 954, Code Civil Proc. Cal., as that act only allows such proceeding when the undertaking is insufficient; but this is no undertaking at all.

Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

E. A. & G. E. Lawrence, for appellant. J. R. Brandon, for respondents.

THORNTON, J. Motion to dismiss appeals. In this case appellant took appeals from two orders, and filed one undertaking on appeal, not distinctly referring to either appeal. The language used in the undertaking filed recites only one appeal, without distinguishing which of the two appeals was referred to. The undertaking so filed is no undertaking at all. It is so ambiguous that it must be regarded as if none had been filed. People v. Center, 61 Cal. 191; Corcoran v. Desmond, 11 Pac. Rep. 816.

An application is made to this court by appellant to be allowed to file the proper undertakings under section 954, Code Civil Proc. The section referred to does not authorize it. It only authorizes a new undertaking when the one filed is insufficient. But in this case there has really been none filed. To allow new ones to be filed would be, in effect, to permit a new appeal to be perfected after the time fixed by law. Hastings v. Halleck, 10 Cal. 31.

Application to file other undertakings denied, and the appeals dismissed.

CRIMINAL LAW—SENTENCE—VACATING ILLEGAL AND IMPOSING LEGAL SENTENCE—PEN. CODE CAL. § 241.

Under section 241, Pen. Code Cal., authorizing the sentence of one convicted of assault to fine or imprisonment for three months, a sentence to fine and imprisonment is illegal; and the court which rendered the sentence has power to call the prisoner before him at the term at which it was rendered, or within a reasonable time, if the court has no terms, to vacate the sentence, and impose a legal one; and six days after the first sentence is a reasonable time.

Department 2. On habeas corpus.

John D. Whaley, for petitioner. J. N. E. Wilson, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. The petitioner was regularly convicted of an assault, and sentenced to fine and imprisonment for three months. The sentence was one which the court was not authorized by law to impose, the statute allowing a sentence of fine or imprisonment not exceeding three months. Pen. Code, § 241. The petitioner applied to this court for a writ of habeas corpus, and, after he was heard, the court which had pronounced the illegal sentence vacated it, and imposed imprisonment for 81 days. The first sentence was pronounced on the twenty-third of October, 1886, the petitioner was heard on the twenty-eighth, and the court imposed the second and legal sentence on the twenty-ninth, of October, 1886. The second judgment was brought to our attention by a supplementary return.

We are of opinion that the first sentence or judgment was illegal, and perhaps void. As it was illegal, the court which rendered the judgment had power, during the term at which the judgment was rendered, to call the prisoner before it, vacate the illegal sentence, and impose one in accordance with law. Ex parte Lange, 18 Wall. 163. See prevailing and dissenting opinions. The petitioner being thus under the control of the superior court, we should have remanded the petitioner to give an opportunity to the court to do what it has done,—have the party brought before it, vacate its illegal sentence, and render a legal one. This being done, it remains only to say that the petitioner was legally held, and he must be remanded to the custody of the sheriff.

It may be urged that the superior court has no terms, and therefore the rule above cited does not apply. Conceding that such court has no terms, then it has power, within a reasonable time, to do what was done here, and the action taken by the court in passing the legal judgment was, in our judgment, within a reasonable time.

Ordered that the prisoner be remanded to the custody of the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco.

(Supreme Court of California. February 4, 1887.)

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—AMENDING CONSTITUTION—"ENTRY" OF AMENDMENT IN JOURNALS—IDENTIFYING REFERENCE—CONST. CAL. ART. 18, § 1.

The provision of Const. Cal. art. 18, § 1, that proposed amendments to the constitution "shall be entered" in the journals of each house, after the requisite vote in favor of them, does not require them to be copied into the journal in full, but is satisfied by an identifying reference. THORNTON, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county.

This case is identical with Oakland Paving Co. v. Hilton, 11 Pac. Rep. 3, except that here the parties stipulated that the street laws of 1864, of 1870, and of 1885 were complied with. See concurring opinion of MCKINSTRY and SHARPSTEIN, JJ., Id. 20. After the above decision was rendered, this application for mandamus was made. The defendant is successor in office of Hilton.

C. T. Johns, for appellant. John H. Boalt, Henry Vrooman, and C. T. H. Palmer, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This case arises from a street assessment in Oakland. The only question submitted is whether the constitutional amendment No. 1, ratified by the electors at the general election in 1884, being an amendment to section 19, art. 11, was proposed by the legislature as required by section 1, art. 18, of the constitution. That section provides that amendments may "be proposed in the senate and assembly, and, if two-thirds of all the members elected to each of the two houses shall vote in favor thereof, such proposed amendment or amendments shall be entered in the journals, with the yeas and nays taken thereon," etc. The objection is that the proposed amendment was not entered in the journal of either house as required by the constitution. It was not copied into the journal, but there was entered an identifying reference, such as is always entered in regard to legislative bills; that is, it was proposed as a senate bill, and was referred to by title and number. The yeas and nays were entered as directed. It is agreed that the amendment thus proposed was submitted to the people, and received a very large majority of the votes cast.

This question is not a new one in this court. In People v. Strother, 67 Cal. 624, S. C. 8 Pac. Rep. 383, it was the only issue of any importance, and it was squarely decided that the amendment had been constitutionally adopted. This was in bank, and there was no apparent dissent. This decision was in October, 1885, and in the following May in the case of Oakland Paving Co. v. Hilton, 11 Pac. Rep. 3, an opinion was rendered by Justice THORNTON, which was concurred in by Mr. Justice McKEE, holding to the contrary. The other members of the court who participated in that decision based their concurrence on other grounds.

It is contended that in this condition of the decisions, the question ought to be considered an open one. We do not accede to this proposition. In the case of People v. Strother the point was squarely presented, was the only one involved, and was plainly and unequivocally decided. We see no reason why it is not entitled to the usual authority of a precedent; nor do we concede that in so deciding there was error. All admit that the constitutional requirement must be strictly performed; but it does not follow from this that the language of the instrument must be understood literally. The same rules of construction must be applied to ascertain what its requirements are as though it were not mandatory and prohibitory. And we think, when an act commanded or authorized may be done in different ways, either of which would be a strict compliance with the terms of the instrument, understood in some common and popular sense, either mode may be pursued, unless some reason is discoverable for holding that one of such modes only will answer. If, for instance, the direction to enter the amendment in the journal is complied with, in some usual and popular sense of the language, either by copying the amendment into the journal, or by placing upon the journal an identifying reference only, either will do unless the context shows a different intention.

Now, the word "enter" primarily means to go in, or to come in, but has many derivative meanings, and is often employed in elliptical expressions, and is quite apt to be so used that the literal or most obvious meaning cannot be attributed to it. We read, for instance, in the laws of congress, that citizens may enter at the land-office a tract of land, and the expression is repeated in different forms many times. We are often told that a certain horse has been entered for a race, or an animal has been entered at a fair. What is really done in each instance is to make a record of certain important facts, for preservation or notice; and such is certainly a very ordinary meaning of the word "enter," when used in this derivative sense; that is, to register the essential facts concerning the thing said to be entered. And we think it may be fully admitted that the most natural and obvious meaning of the word, when employed in this derivative sense, is to copy without greatly affecting the argument.

We find, near the title-page of nearly every book printed, that it has been entered in the office of the librarian of congress. What is really left with the librarian is the title-page of the proposed book, and this constitutes the entry, although, after it is printed, the author is now required to present a copy of the book for the congressional library. We sometimes read that a certain play of Shakespeare was entered at Stationers' Hall. We find that the entry really made was a brief identifying reference, preliminary to obtaining license to print. Such instances of the use of the word, and of the phrase in which it occurs, might be multiplied indefinitely, but these are enough to show that this usage is quite common. Now, if we substitute, in all these and like cases, the word "copy," or the phrase "enter at large," for the word "enter," we are conscious at once that a great change has been made. Indeed, the mere fact that the qualifying words "at large," "at length," "in full," do so often accompany the word "enter," is proof that all feel that it is not a synonym of the word "copy."

The language, however, had been construed under the old constitution, which contained the same words, and under which amendments had been adopted in the mode pursued in this case. The practice of both houses of the legislature had given this construction to similar language. The joint rules have always required, as also do the rules of the house of representatives of congress, that at a certain stage in the passage of a bill it shall be entered on the records of the house. They have always been so entered by identifying reference. The convention itself adopted Cushing's Manual, which employs similar language, which is so used that it must be similarly understood. Many statutes in force at the time the convention was in session employ the language in the same sense. Pol. Code, §§ 254, 656, 4031; Civil Code, § 324. The convention adopted the language under consideration with knowledge of the practical construction which had been given to the same words under the old constitution, and in view of the established usage of the legislature as to entries in the journals. It knew that the practice had always been to consider similar matters entered on the journals when there was made a simple identifying reference. It knew, also, of the common usage to which we have referred; and it is fair to presume that it intended the same meaning. Otherwise it would have used some language which would indicate that a different entry was required from that which was habitually made in the journals. In addition to this we have the authority of both houses, which have declared the proposal duly made, and the amendment duly adopted; of the executive, who submitted it to the people; and whatever force there be in the fact that the people acted upon and ratified it. This is sufficient to uphold the amendment, unless we can see from the context that something else was meant. We perceive no such intent. The evident purpose of the entire provision doubtless was to preserve a record of the vote. As a majority controls the journals, it may have been apprehended that it might be made to appear that the proposal was duly passed although lacking the requisite majority, and so it was required that the yeas and nays be entered. But, however this may be, the principal thing is the record of the yeas and nays, and this purpose is accomplished as perfectly by the entry made as it would be by any other.

As to preserving the identity of the amendment proposed, there is no greater difficulty in this matter than with reference to bills. That is left to be provided for by the legislature.

The parties agree that, in case the amendment was properly adopted, the judgment should be affirmed. It is stipulated that in the proceedings there was full compliance both with the street laws prior to 1880 and with the law of 1885. It is therefore not necessary to decide which law is in force. That question is really stipulated out of the case. Judgment affirmed.

CRIMINAL LAW—SENTENCE—HOUSE OF CORRECTION OR STATE PRISON—ACT CAL. OF APRIL 1, 1878.

A defendant who pleads guilty of burglary, and confesses to prior convictions thereof, cannot be sentenced to the house of correction, under California act of April 1, 1878, providing that no person who may be sentenced to the state prison shall be sentenced to the house of correction, if he has been once before convicted of felony, and that the fact of previous conviction may be found by the court, upon evidence introduced at the time of sentence. TEMPLE, J., dissenting.

In bank. On habeas corpus.

Z. T. Cason, for petitioner. Joseph Kirk, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. On May 22, 1885, the petitioner, after due proceedings had in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, pleaded guilty of burglary, and confessed the charge of two prior convictions of felony—burglary also—to be true. The court thereupon sentenced him to serve the term of four and one-half years in the house of correction.

The act of April 1, 1878, (St. 1877-78, p. 953,) provides:

"Sec. 3. All persons appearing for sentence in the police judge's court, the city criminal court, or the municipal criminal court, of the city and county of San Francisco, who might be sentenced to imprisonment in the county jail, or in the state prison, may, instead thereof, be, by the proper court, sentenced to imprisonment in the house of correction, in said city and county, subject, however, to the provisions of the next section; and no person shall be sentenced to imprisonment in the house of correction except under the provisions of this act.

"Sec. 4. No person shall be sentenced to imprisonment in the house of correction for a shorter or a longer term than that for which he might be sentenced in the county jail, or in the state prison, and in no case whatever for a shorter term than three months, nor for a longer term than three years. No person who might be sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison shall be sentenced to imprisonment in the house of correction, if he is more than twenty-five years of age, if he has once before been convicted of a felony, or twice before convicted of petit larceny, nor unless, in the opinion of the court, imprisonment in the house of correction will be more for his interest than imprisonment in the state prison, and equally for the interest of the public. The fact of a previous conviction may be found by the court upon evidence introduced at the time of sentence." Applicable to superior court, Ex parte Flood, 64 Cal. 251.

Passing over the question as to the effect of an excessive sentence, and the question of the correctness of the decision in Ex parte Bernert, 62 Cal. 524, we think the judgment is void because the prisoner is not within any of the classes of criminals who may, by the terms of the statute, be committed to the house of correction. That institution, as its name indicates, is designed for the reformation of youthful criminals,—those who have not yet become hardened in crime; and, as we construe section 4 of the act, no one can be committed to the house of correction who is over 25 years of age, or "who has been once before convicted of a felony, or twice before convicted of petit larceny, nor unless, in the opinion of the court, imprisonment in the house of correction will be more for his interest than imprisonment in the state prison, and equally for the interest of the public." It was the intention of the legislature to provide a place where young offenders should not be brought into contact or association with veteran criminals.

It being now too late to enter a proper judgment in the court below, (Ex parte Gilmore, ante, 800,) it is ordered that the petitioner be discharged from custody.

HOFFMAN v. REMNANT. (No. 9,835.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 3, 1887.)

1. EJECTMENT—DEFENSE OF PURCHASE FROM PLAINTIFF—"FACTS NECESSARY TO CONSTITUTE.

An answer in ejectment, alleging that defendant had contracted with plaintiff for the purchase of the premises, and that he had made a partial payment, and been let into possession, and that plaintiff still retains the amount paid, but not alleging payment in full, or that the remaining purchase money was not yet due, does not show a defense.

2. SAME—CROSS-COMPLAINT—FAILURE OF TITLE—REFUSAL TO RETURN PAYMENTS.

A cross-complaint in ejectment averred a contract between plaintiff and defendant for the purchase by defendant of the premises sued for, the making of certain payments thereon by defendant, and that he had been let into possession; that, since the beginning of the action, he had discovered for the first time that plaintiff had no title to the premises, but that the title was in another person named; whereupon defendant offered to return the premises, and everything received by him under the contract, to plaintiff, and demanded back the money paid by him, but plaintiff refused to return it. Held, that the matter stated was not the proper subject of a cross-complaint, whether or not it would support some kind of a separate action.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county.

Ejectment. Plaintiff had judgment below.

Chas. B. Younger and J. M. Lesser, for Remnant, appellant. Joseph H. Skirm and Warren Olney, for Hoffman, respondent.

MCFARLAND, J. The appellant, Remnant, who was defendant in the court below, appeals from a judgment rendered against him in an action of ejectment. The grounds upon which he relies for a reversal are that the court erred in sustaining a demurrer to that part of his answer which sets up a "further and separate defense," and also in sustaining a demurrer to a cross-complaint filed by defendant.

1. In the "separate defense" defendant merely averred that plaintiff entered into a contract with defendant to convey to the latter the premises described in the complaint, upon the payment by defendant to plaintiff of the sum of $3,410; that defendant paid $1,750 of this money, and was let into possession of the premises; and "that the plaintiff has not paid or returned to this defendant said last-named sum of money, or any part thereof, but still retains the whole thereof." The complaint in this case is in the ordinary and proper form of a complaint in ejectment. An answer to such a complaint should contain some matter of denial, or averment constituting a defense—either legal or equitable—to the action. It would have been a good answer to have averred that the remaining purchase money was not yet due, or to have stated facts showing that it had been paid, and that defendant was thus entitled to possession under the contract, and to compel the execution of a conveyance; but it is impossible to conceive how the bare fact that plaintiff had not paid back to defendant the $1,750 would constitute any defense whatever. There was no error, therefore, in sustaining the demurrer to this part of the answer.

2. The averments of the cross-complaint are, in brief, that on April 6, 1878, plaintiff represented to defendant that he was the owner in fee of the premises described in the complaint, and could convey them by a good and sufficient deed, free from incumbrances; that defendant was thereby induced to purchase, and did purchase, said premises from plaintiff for $3,410; that defendant paid plaintiff $1,750 as part of the purchase price, and then, on said sixth day of April, 1878, plaintiff and the defendant entered into a written contract, by which defendant promised to pay plaintiff $1,660 on or before the first day of July, 1879, with interest, and plaintiff agreed that, upon the payment of said money, he would execute to defendant a good and sufficient deed of said premises; that upon the making of said contract plaintiff delivered possession of the premises to defendant, who has been in possession ever since; that in October, 1878, he paid plaintiff $49.80, as interest on the unpaid purchase money, and a like sum as such interest in January, 1879; that at the time of the making of said contract said plaintiff was not the owner in fee of said premises, and was not such owner at any time afterwards, and could not have made a good and sufficient deed of the same; that in 1872 one Imus was the owner in fee of said premises, and in that year executed a mortgage thereon to a third party; that he had since died, and that at the time of the execution of the said contract a suit to foreclose said mortgage was pending against the heirs and legal representatives of said Imus; and that defendant did not discover that plaintiff was not the owner of said premises, and did not know of the existence of said mortgage, and the pendency of the proceedings to foreclose the same, until after the commencement of the present action, which was June 10, 1881. The cross-complaint then avers that immediately after this discovery "this defendant did rescind the said contract," and offered to restore to plaintiff everything of value which he had received under it, and tendered it to plaintiff for cancellation, and offered to surrender possession of the premises, and demanded the return of the $1,750, and also the interest paid on the unpaid purchase money; but that plaintiff refused, and still refuses and fails, to return said money, or any part thereof. The prayer is that defendant have judgment against plaintiff for $1,849.60, with interest from January 5, 1879.

It is clear that the demurrer to this cross-complaint was properly sustained. It presents no equitable defense to the action, and certainly no legal one. It is not necessary to inquire whether or not the facts averred would support some kind of an independent action. To allow a defendant, in an ordinary action of ejectment, to set up matters which do not constitute a defense, but are intended merely as the foundation for a money judgment against plaintiff, would be to sanction something unknown to the principles and rules of pleading and practice.

Appellant's counsel argues that the act of bringing the suit by plaintiff was itself a rescission by him of the contract. If that extreme view of the matter could possibly be held correct, it is difficult to see how it would give the cross-complaint any better standing as a pleading to a complaint in ejectment. But if appellant was in possession under the contract, as the argument here assumes, then, upon appellant's failure to perform his part of it, the bringing of the ejectment suit was not in rescission, but in pursuance, of the contract.

We think that there was no error in sustaining the demurrer.

The court made a number of findings entirely outside the issues, but there were sufficient findings to show plaintiff's ownership and right of possession. Judgment affirmed.

In re MAHON, Judge, and another. (No. 20,255.)

1. APPEAL—PROCEEDINGS AFTER REMAND—MODIFYING JUDGMENT.

When, by order of the supreme court of California, the superior court has been directed to enter a judgment, and, upon return of the cause, a judgment has been inadvertently entered which does not accord with the directions of the supreme court, the superior court has power to amend such judgment so as to make it conform to the supreme court's order.

2. SAME—DISCRETION OF JUDGE OF LOWER COURT—CONTEMPT.

When the direction of the supreme court to the superior court to enter a judgment is not specific, but leaves room for the exercise of any discretion in the court below, that court has a judicial power to determine whether an order as entered does or does not conform to the direction of the supreme court. For an error in deciding that a judgment does not accord with the direction of the supreme court, a judge of the superior court cannot be held as for a contempt.

In bank. Application for order to show cause why respondents should not be punished for contempt.

Proceedings to punish E. B. Mahon, superior judge of Martin county, California, and his clerk, for contempt in not entering interest on a judgment in compliance with the order of the supreme court in the case of McCue v. Tunstead, 65 Cal. 507; S. C. 4 Pac. Rep. 510. The order directed the court below "to enter judgment in favor of plaintiff on the findings." Judgment was rendered and caused to be entered for the possession of the property in dispute, or its value, $1,000, together with damages for its detention since the date of said findings, "or interest on said value in the sum of $490, and costs." Upon motion, an order modifying this judgment was made.

Jas. S. McCue, for petitioner. E. B. Mahon, in pro. per., for respondents.

BY THE COURT. On the first appeal in McCue v. Tunstead the order of this court did not lay down, in precise terms, the judgment to be entered in the court below. It, however, determined that the plaintiff was entitled to a judgment, and (read in the light of the opinion) that the horse, the subject of the action, was exempt from execution. In other respects the form or scope of the judgment was left to the court below, with the limitation that it must be a judgment "upon" or one supported by the findings. The superior court was referred to the findings, was called on to ascertain what they were, and judicially to interpret them. This examination and interpretation of the findings, and the determination of the conclusions of law to be declared from them, involved the judicial function, and made the direction of this court something very different from a merely ministerial duty imposed upon an officer.

When, by order of this court, the superior court has been directed to enter a judgment, and, upon return of the cause, a judgment has been inadvertently entered which does not accord with the direction of the supreme court, there can be no doubt that the superior court has power to amend such judgment so as to make it conform to our order. And when the direction is not specific, but leaves room for the exercise of any discretion in the court below, that court has a judicial power to determine whether an order as entered does or does not conform to the direction of this court. For an error in deciding that a judgment does not accord with the direction of this court, the judge cannot and ought not to be held as for contempt.

Moreover, the modification of the judgment of which the plaintiff herein complains was an amendment which, to the extent of the change, made it conform to the order of this court. In McCue v. Tunstead, 65 Cal. 507, S. C. 4 Pac. Rep. 510, it was directed that the court below "enter judgment for the plaintiff upon the findings." This mandate was not obeyed in the first instance, since there was no finding on which could be based that part of the judgment which provided for damages for the detention of the property since the date of the findings, "or interest on said value in the sum of $490," etc. There is a finding that the plaintiff had taken possession of the horse, and retained possession up to the trial, and there is no finding that he had suffered any damage by reason of the detention of the property prior to its recapture.

It is clear, from what has been said, that the clerk of the superior court was not guilty of contempt.

Ordered that the proceedings as for contempt be dismissed.

(Supreme Court of California. February 9, 1887.)

APPEAL—UNDERTAKING—GRANTING TIME TO FILE NEW UNDERTAKING.

Upon appeal to the superior court, where an insufficient undertaking had been filed in time, and, upon motion to dismiss, the court granted appellant leave to file a sufficient undertaking within five days, held, that the superior court had power to make the order authorizing appellant to file a new undertaking in lieu of the insufficient undertaking; following Gray v. Superior Court, 61 Cal. 337.

In bank. Application for writ of prohibition.

J. J. Coffey, for petitioner. W. B. Daingerfield, for respondent.

BY THE COURT. Application for a writ to prohibit said court from further hearing of the action of Nobmann v. Fairbanks, on appeal in said superior court, on the ground that an undertaking on appeal was not filed within the time prescribed by law. It appears that an insufficient undertaking was filed in time, and, after a motion was made to dismiss the appeal on that ground, the court made an order granting appellant leave to file a sufficient undertaking within five days, which appellant did, and the motion to dismiss was denied. Petitioner contends that the court had not the power to make the order, and that the order, and all proceedings under and by virtue of it, are null. On the authority of Gray v. Superior Court, 61 Cal. 337, the application for a writ of prohibition in this case is denied.

The California act of March 12, 1885, authorizing the acceptance of a corporation as sole and sufficient surety in an undertaking on appeal, is a general law, and not an amendment to Code Civil Proc., and therefore not objectionable for not stating that object in its title. It is not void as against the provisions of section 25, art. 4, Const., that the legislature shall pass no special law regulating the practice of courts of justice in cases when a general law can be made applicable, although section 941, Code Civil Proc., provides that such undertaking shall be signed by two sufficient sureties; reversing Cramer v. Tittle, 11 Pac. Rep. 852.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Motion to dismiss an appeal, on the ground of failure to file an undertaking as required by law. An undertaking was filed with one surety, viz., the Pacific Surety Company. The company was incorporated under the laws of California, and executed the undertaking under the act of March 12, 1885. St. Cal. 1885, p. 114. That act authorized the acceptance, as sole and sufficient surety, of any corporation incorporated for the purpose of making bonds and undertakings. The general statute concerning appeals requires that the undertaking on appeal be executed by at least two sureties. Section 941, Code Civil Proc. The constitution, article 4, § 25, prohibits the legislature from passing a special law regulating the practice of courts of justice, and in all cases when a general law can be made applicable.

Robert Ash, John H. Boalt, and Hall & Rodgers, for appellants. J. J. Coffey and W. H. Tompkins, for respondent.

BY THE COURT. We are of opinion that the undertaking in this case is valid. The statute is a general law, and not an amendment to the Code of Civil Procedure in the sense of the provision of the constitution referred to. The statute is constitutional.

Motion to dismiss appeal denied.

ROWLAND v. MADDEN and others. (No. 11,220.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 10, 1887.)

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—ACTION AGAINST—PLEADING—ISSUE—PRESENTATION OF CLAIM.

In a suit against the executors of the plaintiff's deceased wife, to recover from her estate moneys belonging to the community alleged to have been misapplied by her, an allegation in the complaint that a verified claim for the amount was presented to defendants, and rejected by them, is material and must be proved. THORNTON, J., dissents.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

Moses G. Cobb, for appellant. A. N. Drown and W. H. Fifield, for respondent. See S. C. 12 Pac. Rep. 226.

McFARLAND, J. After full argument on rehearing, we see no reason to depart from the conclusion heretofore reached in this case. 12 Pac. Rep. 226. Appellant complains that the judgment heretofore rendered by this court rests too largely upon technical grounds. We are disposed to look through technical difficulties, and mere questions of pleading and practice, to the real legal merits of a case, when we can do so without violating well-settled principles; but the rule that the proofs must correspond to the averments is too grave to be totally disregarded. Appellant's real cause of action, if he has any, lies in the alleged fact that his wife, now deceased, about 13 years before her death got possession of some $3,000 in money, of community property, and secretly used it as her own separate property; appellant believing all the time that she had paid it out on certain debts which she represented the community to be owing, but which had no existence. Now, this action is brought against the defendants as executors of the last will of the deceased wife. The complaint charges an indebtedness of the estate, and that a creditor's claim for the same, duly verified, was presented to defendants in accordance with sections 1493 and 1494 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and was by them rejected; and its prayer is for a money judgment to be paid out of the estate in due course of administration. Clearly, in such a case, there must be proof of the presentation of the claim to the executors.

But if we were permitted to look further into the case we could see nothing to warrant a reversal of the judgment. If we could disregard the pleadings, and treat the action as one in the nature of an action of replevin to recover the money, not as a debt, but as specific community property belonging to the husband,—in which case defendants should not have been sued as executors,—then appellant would fail, because the money, or any specific property or fund to which it can be traced and identified, is not shown to have come into the possession of respondents. If the money may be considered as property subject to a trust, and it cannot be identified either in its original or in any substituted form, then, although appellant might rely upon the personal liability of the trustee, he has no special claim upon her general estate superior to that of other creditors. In that view his position towards the estate is simply that of other contract creditors, and his claim should have been presented to the executors. Lathrop v. Bampton, 31 Cal. 23.

These views of the case make it unnecessary to notice other points which are ably presented by counsel for respondents.

Judgment and order affirmed.

APPEAL.—PROCEEDINGS BELOW AFTER REMAND.

Where a judgment is reversed on the ground that a certain finding is not supported by the evidence, the entire case should not be tried anew, but only the issue erroneously decided. THORNTON, J., dissenting.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county.

H. O. Beatty, Beatty & Denson, and A. L. Hart, for appellant. J. McKenna, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This cause was here in 1882, upon two appeals, one by the plaintiff from part of a judgment in favor of the intervenor, and the other by the intervenor from a part of the judgment in her favor, and from an order denying a new trial, in the superior court of Sacramento county. Upon the plaintiff's appeal, and as to him, the judgment was affirmed. 61 Cal. 396. Upon the appeal of the intervenor it was held that a finding of the court below as to the interest on certain monthly balances in favor of Chandler, from December, 1865, until October, 1878, amounting to $2,710, was not supported by the testimony, and therefore that the finding was erroneous, and the judgment as to the intervenor was reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings, according to the views therein expressed. 61 Cal. 401. The cause was brought up again in 1884, upon an appeal by the plaintiff, and from the record it appeared that certain evidence offered by the plaintiff, and tending to show that the balances in his favor were of a kind which entitled him to interest thereon, was ruled out, and this court said, in speaking of its former decision: "As we understand the judgment in the case, a reversal was ordered because the finding was not sustained by the evidence, and the cause was remanded for further proceedings according to the views expressed in the opinion. Certainly this order of the court left the inquiry as to interest open, as if no trial had been had on it. The plaintiff was at liberty in a new trial, if in his power, to show that the balances were of the kind which bore interest. The offers of the plaintiff which were ruled out were made with this view; that is, to show that the balances were of the character which entitled him to have interest on them. Civil Code, § 1917. The court should have allowed these offers. In our view, the case was open for a new trial, subject to the views expressed by the court," etc.,—and the judgment was reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial, subject to the views expressed by this court. 65 Cal. 498, 11 Pac. Rep. 791.

Upon the cause again coming up in the court below, the sense of the court was taken as to the extent of the new trial granted by this court under the decision last above referred to, and the court held "that a new trial was only granted as to the character of the balances mentioned in the opinion of the court on intervenor's appeal (61 Cal. 401) as to their being interest-bearing, and that the burden of the proof was on the plaintiff." Counsel for plaintiff excepted to said decision, and asked that intervenor introduce her proof in support of her complaint of intervention, which she declined to do, whereupon plaintiff moved for a nonsuit as against the intervenor, upon the ground that she had introduced no evidence, etc. The motion was overruled, and plaintiff excepted. The court then heard testimony in reference to the character of the balances mentioned in the decisions, and excluded testimony relating to other portions of the case. Written findings were filed, covering the whole case, upon which judgment was entered in favor of intervenor, ordering a sale of the mortgaged premises, and that the proceeds, to the extent of $8,435.81 and costs be paid to her, etc. The question presented is this: Was it the duty of the court below to proceed to try the entire case anew, or could it confine the testimony to the issue erroneously decided, and in other respects pass upon the issues in the light of the testimony already before it, or adopt the facts already found upon such testimony?

Under the former decision in this cause we are of opinion it was not incumbent on the court below to try the entire cause anew, and that the judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

By THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. HIBERNIA SAV. & LOAN SOC. and others. (No. 11,689.)*(Supreme Court of California. February 15, 1887.)ESCHEAT—PROCEEDINGS UNDER POL. CODE CAL. § 474—DISCOVERY—ATTORNEY GENERAL.

Pol. Code Cal. § 474, providing that it shall be the duty of the attorney general to institute investigation for the discovery of property which has escheated or should escheat to the state, and for that purpose empowering him to cite any and all persons before certain courts for examination, including the submission of their books and papers for inspection, contemplates an examination conducted before the court, or a referee appointed by it and none other; no right accrues against persons desired to be examined without the issue of a citation; and a judgment ordering certain defendants to permit the attorney general to examine their books and papers, upon a complaint alleging that he has made a demand on them to be allowed to do so, which demand has been refused, and upon findings in accordance with the allegations of the complaint, is erroneous.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

Proceeding by attorney general under the Political Code, § 474, as amended.

Tobin & Tobin, for appellants. W. T. Baggett, E. C. Marshall, E. P. Cole, and James H. Waymire, for respondents.

McKINSTRY, J. It is not necessary to express any opinion as to the validity of section 474 of the Political Code. Its validity has not been attacked by counsel herein, nor has the power of the legislature under the constitution to confer the jurisdiction upon the probate or superior court been questioned. Prior to the amendment of 1880, section 474 of the Political Code read: "It shall be the duty of the attorney general to institute investigation for the discovery of all real and personal property which may have or should escheat to the state, and for that purpose shall have full power and authority to cite any and all persons before any of the probate courts of this state, to answer investigations and render accounts concerning said property, real or personal, and to examine all books and papers of any and all corporations. When any real or personal property shall be discovered, which should escheat to the state, the attorney general must institute suit in the district court of the county where said property shall be situated, for the recovery, to escheat the same to the state. The proceedings in all such actions shall be those provided for in title 8, part 3, Code of Civil Procedure. The attorney general may, for the purposes and objects of this section, employ counsel to act in his place and stead for the discovery and recovery of both personal and real property, and in such proceedings, both in investigation for discovery or proceedings for recovery, such counsel so employed shall have the power and authority of the attorney general. The compensation for services of such counsel shall be determined by the board of examiners, and paid out of the sums so found to be escheated and recovered to the state, and not otherwise: provided, that the state of California shall in no case be responsible for any charges for attorney's fees for suits prosecuted under this act; but the attorney general is hereby authorized to pay to the person or persons discovering the same the costs and charges of prosecuting any suit or suits under this act, a sum not in any case exceeding 10 per cent. of the sums actually received, as provided in this act." The amendment of 1880 simply substitutes the words "any of the superior courts" for "any of the probate courts" in one place, and "superior courts" for "district courts," in another. While the first sentence of the section may not be entirely free from ambiguity, we think the section was clearly intended to provide for a proceeding in court for the discovery of property which had escheated or should escheat, by an examination as witnesses of persons charged to have such property in their possession or under their control, with authority in the court to require them to render accounts, and to submit their books and papers for inspection, under the supervision of the court. If the purpose of the legislature had been to empower the attorney general to examine the books of corporations at his own option and independent of any judicial action, that purpose could have been accomplished by a slight amendment of section 382 of the Civil Code. And if the strictly grammatical structure of the sentence were alone to be regarded, it would seem to be the persons cited who are "to examine" the books and papers. But the section directs the attorney general "to institute investigation for the discovery," by "citing" persons "before any of the probate[superior] courts." The succeeding portions of the section make the meaning still more apparent. The attorney general is authorized to employ "counsel" to act in his place and stead for "the discovery" of property, etc. And the proviso also shows the intent that counselors at law were to be employed to perform services as such,—as in the examination under oath of the persons cited,—and not services merely clerical, or those of accountant.

As originally passed, the section of the Political Code provided, in effect, that, on application of the attorney general, citation should issue out of the probate court. The term "citation" is only employed in the chapters of the Code of Civil Procedure which relate to the settlement of the estates of deceased persons. Citations are required to be directed to the person cited, and must contain the title of the proceedings, a brief statement of the nature of the proceedings, and a direction that the person cited appear at a time and place specified. Code Civil Proc. 1707. They must be served like a summons, and can in certain cases be issued only on the order of the judge. Sections 1708, 1709. Usually citations are issued on petition or written application, and sometimes a party is cited to appear and answer such petition. Section 1384. On the judge's own motion, or the motion of any person interested, supported by affidavits, the citation may require the person cited to appear for "examination," (section 1394;) or to show cause why further security should not be given, (sections 1398, 1403;) or may require one to appear and make discovery under oath as to his possession of any of the assets of the estate of the deceased person, (section 1459.) So a minor may be cited to appear and nominate a guardian, (section 1749;) an executor may be cited to render "an exhibit" showing the amount of money received and paid out by him, etc., (section 1623;) an attachment may be issued after citation has been issued and served on the executor to appear and show cause, (section 1628.)

In some instances the person cited may make an issue as to the matters alleged in the petition or written application for the citation; in some he is required merely to subject himself to examination under oath. Section 474 of the Political Code provides for a citation, to issue on the application of the attorney general, requiring the person cited to answer questions as to property subject to escheat, and to submit accounts, books, and papers, if required by the court. The section does not in terms require that the application of the attorney general shall be by petition or complaint in writing. We are inclined to believe that it should be, and that it should state in general terms the purpose to be investigation for discovery. But we are clear that the person cited cannot avoid examination by merely pleading that he, or it, has no property subject to escheat. The very purpose of the proceeding is the discovery of those things, knowledge of which would render the proceeding unnecessary. It cannot, therefore, have been intended that the state, or attorney general for the state, should be compelled to allege and prove the facts for the ascertainment of which the proceeding is commenced. On return of the citation the defendant is to appear, answer fully to all interrogatories, present accounts, if so ordered, and submit books and papers as evidence, if required by the court.

There is some analogy between the statutory proceeding and the former proceeding by bill in equity for discovery, when there was no prayer for other relief. At common law it was in general necessary, in order to maintain a bill for discovery, that an action should be already commenced in another court, to which it should be auxiliary. There were a few exceptions to this rule, as where the object of the discovery was to ascertain who was the proper party against whom a suit should be brought,—2 Story, Eq. (13th Ed.) § 1483,—and so, perhaps, where the bill was filed to secure evidence on which to go to law against a named person. In Moodaly v. Moreton, 2 Dick. 262, plaintiff filed his bill for a discovery, and for a commission to examine witnesses against the East India Company and their secretary, but prayed no relief. The defendants demurred that plaintiff had not brought an action. The demurrer was overruled on the ground that the facts alleged showed it could not have been known whether the company and secretary or a certain lessee of the company should be sued, until discovery was made. Mendes v. Barnard, 1 Dick. 65, came before the court on demurrer to so much of the plaintiff's bill as prayed a commission, the bill only praying the commission to enable the plaintiff to go to law. It was ordered to stand over for presentation of precedents, which being produced, the demurrer was overruled.

Whether section 474 of the Political Code authorizes the summary proceedings for discovery in cases in which a bill of discovery would not have lain at common law, it is not important to inquire, since the power of the legislature to enact the section has not here been questioned. But it is plain the section contemplates no other judgment, as the result of the investigation for discovery, than an adjudication or declaration that the person cited has, or has not, fully and fairly answered all questions propounded to him; has, if ordered to render any, rendered full, true, and just accounts; and, if so ordered, has submitted all his books and papers, without concealment. The court is armed with power to punish for contempt in case of an attempt to defraud and deceive, and with appropriate power to enforce complete discovery. When the discovery is fair and complete, the respondent or person cited is entitled to costs. If the defendant is contumacious, or appears willfully to have sought to conceal the facts, costs should not be allowed him.

We find nothing in the statute which requires the attorney general to demand that the books and papers of a corporation should be submitted to him before commencing the proceeding. In the case now before us no "citation" was issued. The attorney general filed a "complaint," in which he alleged that the people had been informed and believed that the defendant had in its possession large sums, which "have escheated or should escheat, and which defendants neglect and refuse to turn over to said state;" and further alleged that he had made demand to be permitted to examine the books, etc. The defendant, after moving to strike out and demurring, answered, denying that it had in its possession any sum of money which had escheated or should escheat, or that it had neglected "to turn over" any such; denied that examination of the books was necessary, or that the attorney general had made demand. None of the officers of the defendant were examined in court; nor, so far as appears, were they called for examination; nor were they ordered to render any account or produce any books in court or before any referee to be examined under the direction of the court. The court found "that prior to the institution of this action the attorney general of the state made demand of the defendants the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society, (a corporation,) and the defendants M. D. Sweeney, R. J. Tobin, C. D. O'Sullivan, G. Touchard, Peter Donahue, D. J. Oliver, and D. T. Murphy, as directors of said corporation, that he, the said attorney general, or such counsel as he might appoint, be permitted to examine all the books and papers of said corporation, for the purpose of discovering what property in their possession had escheated or should escheat to the state; (2) that the defendants, each and every one of them, refused, and still refuse, to comply with said demand." And thereupon the superior court entered a judgment, directing and decreeing "that the plaintiff have judgment against the defendants, and each of them; that the attorney general of the state, or such counsel as he may select and appoint, be permitted to examine all the books and papers of the defendant the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society for the purpose of discovering what property is in their possession which has escheated or should escheat to the state of California." Thus the finding of the court was upon an immaterial issue, and the judgment was one which the court had no authority to render in the proceeding.

Judgment and order reversed.

In bank. Appeal from the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco. Jarboe, Harrison & Goodfellow, for appellants. E. C. Marshall, for respondent.

BY THE COURT. This is an appeal from a judgment directing a peremptory mandate to issue, commanding the defendant to permit the attorney general to examine all its books and papers. Plaintiffs contend that a duty is specially enjoined on defendant to allow such examination by section 474 of the Political Code. That section does not authorize the attorney general, or counsel appointed by him, to examine the books and papers of a corporation, except under the order and supervision of the court. People v. Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc., ante, 48. The mandate should have been denied.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, with directions to the court below to dismiss the proceedings.

1. STATE LANDS—PURCHASE—ADVERSE OCCUPATION—POL. CODE CAL. § 3495.

There is an adverse occupation of public land, within the meaning of Pol. Code Cal. § 3495, requiring from one desiring to purchase such land from the state an affidavit of no adverse occupation, if another person has inclosed three-quarters of it, has a cabin and corral on it, and uses it for a sheep pasture.

2. SAME—AFFIDAVIT.

No right accrues to an intended purchaser of state lands if he adopts a form of affidavit which is not true in fact, although the facts of his case would entitle him to purchase if correctly stated in his affidavit.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Mendocino county.

Cal. Rep. 12-15 P.—22

J. W. Harding, F. R. Williams, and J. M. Mannon, for appellant. J. A. Cooper, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. After hearing in bank, we are of the opinion that the conclusion reached on the former decision of this cause by department 1 of this court is correct. 11 Pac. Rep. 871. Respondent contends that Mr. Justice Ross, in delivering the opinion of the court in department 1, was mistaken in stating that the court below found the occupation of the land in contest by appellant to be adverse to respondent; but there was no such mistake. The court below does not expressly apply the word "adverse" to such occupation; but it finds facts which show it to be adverse. The findings are that appellant had about three-fourths of the land inclosed; that he had on it a cabin and corral; and that he used it as a "sheep pasture." It further appears in the pleadings and findings that he filed his affidavit and application to purchase the land on the same day on which the application of the respondent was filed; that he is desirous of purchasing the land; and that he has continuously followed up his claim to purchase it, as against respondent's claim to do the same, to this court. Under such circumstances, there seems to be no doubt that his occupation was "adverse," in the sense in which that word is used in section 3495 of the Political Code. He certainly was not holding under respondent, by lease or license, or upon any terms or conditions, which would make his possession, in the eye of the law, the possession of respondent. The doctrine that the possession of land by one not claiming title himself is presumed to be in subordination to the true title, has no applicability to this case. Each party admits the true title to the land to be in the state, and is simply contending against the other for the statutory right to purchase it.

If the court, in an action like the one at bar, disregards the requirements of the original affidavit, and the want of proof that its statements are true, it makes no difference what it may finally determine as to the ultimate rights of the parties to purchase. A man may have the right to purchase a piece of school-land, although another may be in the adverse occupation of it; but, if that be the fact, he must state it in his affidavit, together with the additional facts that the township has been sectionized three months, and that the adverse occupant has been in the occupation more than sixty days since the plat was filed in the United States land-office. Section 3495, Pol. Code. This is intended to insure the protection given to occupants by section 3497, and to allow them an opportunity to present whatever rights they may have. And it has been held by this court that the statements made in the affidavit must be shown at the trial to be true. McKenzie v. Brandon, 12 Pac. Rep. 428, and cases there cited. In the affidavit made by respondent he stated that there was no occupation of the land adverse to his. But the findings show that there was an occupation adverse to his, viz., the occupation of appellant.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded.

JUDGMENT—FORMER RECOVERY—PENDENCY OF TWO ACTIONS AT SAME TIME.

In an action to recover an installment due on a certain contract, in which defendant pleaded a payment on account, it appeared that the same payment was pleaded and evidence of it given in an earlier action between the same parties, to recover another installment, but the trial of such earlier action was not concluded when the trial of the later action occurred. Held, that the defendant should not be deprived of the benefit of his plea of payment, unless the payment was allowed, as well as pleaded and proved, in the earlier action, and, as whether that was done could not have been known at the time of trial, the judgment of the lower court disallowing the payment should be reversed, and a retrial ordered. THORNTON, J., dissenting, holds that the court should ascertain, by inspection of the judgment roll in the earlier action, whether the payment was allowed in that action, and, if so, affirm the judgment in this, in order to avoid the necessity for a new trial.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county.

S. C. Houghton and Chas. B. Younger, for appellants. Bart Burke and Goldsby & Jeter, for respondents.

PATERSON, J. This action was brought by the plaintiffs to recover of the defendants the value of certain lumber manufactured by them out of trees cut from land of the plaintiffs, during the months of September and October, 1882, and June, 1883, pursuant to the provisions of a certain contract in writing made by and between the respective parties on the eleventh day of April, 1881. In respect to the averments of the complaint, the answer of the defendants only put in issue the quantity of lumber manufactured by them during the months mentioned, and the plaintiffs, upon the trial, were content to rest upon the admissions in that particular. But defendants pleaded in their answer that they had paid to plaintiffs, in advance, on the thirty-first of December, 1881, the sum of $1,225.88 on account of said lumber so cut, and $75.73 in boarding an agent of plaintiffs' at defendants' mill, during the times mentioned in the complaint, and pursuant to the terms of the contract. These allegations of the answer being deemed denied, defendants at the trial proved the payment to plaintiffs, on December 31, 1881, of $1,225.88; and, in rebuttal, plaintiffs, against the objection and exception of defendants, were permitted to introduce in evidence the complaint and answer in a case, brought by the same plaintiffs against the same defendants, under the same contract, for stumpage claimed by plaintiffs to be due thereunder for the month of November, 1882, and to and including the month of May, 1883, and in which action defendants by their said answer pleaded the same payment of $1,225.88; and plaintiffs herein also gave evidence tending to show that on the trial of the last-mentioned action proof was given of the said payment.

In the present case the court below found "(5) that on the thirty-first day of December, 1881, said defendants paid to said plaintiffs, in advance, for and on account of timber to be cut under said contract and taken from said lands of said plaintiffs, the sum of twelve hundred and twenty-five dollars and eighty-eight cents; (6) which said payment was claimed by the said defendants, and allowed by the court, in a certain action numbered 636, wherein said W. W. Waterman and J. B. Waterman were plaintiffs, and said E. B. Morrell and Jacob Spidell were defendants, tried before this court on the twenty-fourth day of September, 1883, upon the same contract, for money due and owing to said plaintiffs from said defendants for lumber manufactured and shipped by defendants from said lands of plaintiffs for and during the period from November 1, 1882, to June 1, 1883."

The points of appellants are—First, that the evidence in relation to the former suit of plaintiffs against defendants was irrelevant and immaterial; and, second, that it was insufficient to justify the sixth finding. The former suit was between the same parties, upon the same contract, and for the value of lumber manufactured by defendants, pursuant to its terms, from November 1, 1882, to June 1, 1883. The payment in question was made under the contract, in advance and on December 31, 1881. If it was deducted from the amount due from defendants to plaintiffs for the lumber manufactured by the former during the period involved in the former suit, surely it ought not to be deducted from the amount due plaintiffs for the lumber manufactured by defendants during the period involved in the present action; for that would be to allow defendants double credit for one payment. Respondents claim that the said payment having been pleaded in bar pro tanto in the former action, and being there in issue, defendants, as well as plaintiffs, are bound by the final result thereof, whatever it was, and therefore the circumstance that there was no evidence in the present case that the payment in question was allowed defendants in the former one is not important, although it is stated in the findings of the court below that it was so allowed. We think, however, that, before the defendants can be estopped in this case from claiming the benefit of their plea of payment, it must appear that they have had the benefit of the payment pleaded in the former suit. This can be shown only by the record itself, and cannot be presumed from the fact that an issue has been made and tried in the former action. It must be shown that such issue has been determined on its merits; that the suit has culminated in a final judgment. The trial of the former suit occurred September 24 to 26, 1883. This action was tried September 26, 1883. The record in the former suit, therefore, could not operate as a bar to a recovery in this case. There was no final adjudication at the time this cause was tried.

Upon the testimony given in this case, in connection with the record of the former action, showing that the payments alleged in both were identical, and that the defendants were seeking a double benefit therefor on different installments due under the same contract, the court below would have been authorized to withhold its decision in this case until the merits of the plea of payment in the former action had been finally adjudicated. This was not done, however, but the case went to judgment, and an appeal therefrom has been taken to this court. We see no way of securing the rights of all parties except by a retrial in the court below.

The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause is remanded for a new trial, with instructions to proceed in accordance with the views herein expressed.

We concur: TEMPLE, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; McFARLAND, J.; MCKINSTRY, J.

THORNTON, J., (dissenting.) I dissent. I am of opinion that the fact was substantially found on the issue of the payment pleaded. The finding is that there was no payment. When a cause between the same parties has been tried in which the same payment was pleaded, and the issue tried, the trial commencing on the twenty-fourth of September, 1883, and continuing until the twenty-sixth, and the trial of a cause between the same parties, commencing on the twenty-sixth of September, 1883, in which the same payment is also pleaded and the issues tried, and the court finds that the payment was allowed in the action first tried, it is equivalent to a finding that no payment has been made in the action on trial. See findings set forth in the opinion of the court. It is said that there is no evidence which sustained the finding that there is no payment or that it was allowed in the cause first tried, because it does not appear by findings filed that the payment was allowed in such action. But there was sufficient evidence before the court to show that the payment should not be allowed in this cause, and in my opinion the court so finds. The record shows that the two actions were on the same contract, and that the same payment was pleaded in both, and that there was evidence of the payment in the other case. It is conceded that, if allowed in both cases, it would be allowed twice. This was evidence enough to justify a finding of the payment in the action first tried, and to authorize a finding against it in this action; which finding in my opinion was made. We have a right to presume that the findings have been long since filed in the cause first tried; and this court has the power under the constitution to send an order to the clerk of the trial court to have the judgment roll certified to this court, and to inspect it; and, if it appears that the payment was allowed in that cause, to affirm the judgment in this. This obviates the necessity of sending this cause back for a new trial, which trial must be a mere form, causing unnecessary expense to the parties.

ROBINSON v. SPAULDING GOLD & SILVER MIN. CO. (No. 9,351.)

CORPORATION—STOCK TAKEN FOR UNPAID ASSESSMENTS—EXECUTION.

Under Civil Code Cal. § 344, providing that, if stock of a corporation is bought in by the corporation, upon a sale for delinquent assessments, the legal title shall vest in the corporation, but the stock shall be held subject to the control of the stockholders, such stock is not subject to an execution against the corporation.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Geo. D. Shadburne, for appellant. Henry H. Reid, for respondent.

MORRISON, C. J. The defendant, a mining corporation in the state of California, had a judgment entered against it in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco for the sum of $619.25, on the second day of April, 1883. On the thirteenth day of same month an execution was issued on said judgment, and on the first day of the following month the sheriff of said city and county levied on 99,280 shares of the capital stock of the mining company to satisfy the same, and on said last day all the right, title, and interest of said company in and to said shares was sold under said execution to satisfy the same, and a certificate of sale was issued by the sheriff to the plaintiff therefor, whereupon the plaintiff demanded of defendant a certificate for such stock, and defendant refused to issue stock to the purchaser thereof at such sale; wherefore plaintiff prayed for a decree of the court directing the defendant to issue to him said 99,280 shares of its capital stock, in satisfaction of such execution. On the trial in the court below it was found, as a conclusion of law, that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree as prayed for, and costs of suit.

The question is, did the Spaulding Mining Company become the owner of said stock on the purchase thereof for non-payment of an assessment, and did it become the owner in such a sense as to make it its duty, on the sale thereof on execution, to deliver to the purchaser thereof new stock in place of that sold? We think it did not, and that it was not the owner of said stock so as to subject it to sale on an execution against the company. Section 344 of the Civil Code provides that "all purchases of its own stock made by any corporation (for delinquent assessments) vest the legal title to the same in the corporation; and the stock so purchased is held subject to the control of the stockholders, who may make such disposition of the same as they deem fit, in accordance with the by-laws of the corporation or vote of a majority of all the remaining shares. Whenever any portion of the capital stock of a corporation is held by the corporation by purchase, a majority of the remaining shares is a majority of the stock for all purposes of election or voting on any question at a stockholders' meeting." When the stock of the corporation was sold for assessments, and purchased by the company, it thenceforth held it subject to the control of the stockholders, and it was not subject to resale on an execution issued against the corporation in satisfaction of its debts. The corporation had no interest which it could sell and dispose of, and it had no interest which a creditor could dispose of by forced sale. Judgment reversed.

BROWN v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SAN BENITO CO. (No. 11,975.)*(Supreme Court of California. February 10, 1887.)CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL FROM JUSTICE'S COURT—NEW TRIAL—JURISDICTION OF CALIFORNIA SUPERIOR COURTS.

Pen. Code Cal. § 1469, provides that when, on appeal from a justice's court in a criminal case, "a new trial is granted, it must be had in the superior court." There cannot, therefore, be a trial in the superior court on issues of fact raised by the plea of "not guilty" before there has been such a trial in the justice's court. As, for instance, where, after the overruling of defendant's demurrer, he has pleaded "not guilty," and the court afterwards has set aside its order and sustained the demurrer, and the people having appealed, and defendant, in the superior court, having confessed error in sustaining the demurrer, the superior court is without jurisdiction to order defendant to plead, and, on his refusal, to proceed to try the cause as on a plea of "not guilty." The cause should be remanded, and ample machinery for such procedure is provided by Pen. Code Cal. tit. 9.

Department 2.

McCroskey & Hudner and M. T. Dooling, for petitioner. James F. Breen, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. Application for writ of prohibition. The petitioner was brought before the court of a justice of the peace upon a complaint charging a misdemeanor, of which the court had full jurisdiction. He demurred to the complaint, and the court overruled his demurrer, whereupon he made and had entered a plea of not guilty. Afterwards the court, of its own motion, set aside its order overruling the demurrer, and entered an order sustaining it. The people then appealed to the superior court, and the petitioner there confessed that the justice erred in sustaining the demurrer, and asked that the cause be remanded to the justice's court to be there tried upon the said plea of "not guilty" already therein made and entered. The superior court refused to remand the cause, and made an order reversing the action of the justice's court in sustaining the demurrer, and ordering petitioner to plead in the superior court. Petitioner refused to plead, upon the ground that the superior court had no jurisdiction to receive the plea or to try the cause. The court thereupon ordered a plea of "not guilty" to be entered for petitioner, and set the cause for trial; and this proceeding is brought to prohibit said superior court from proceeding to try the petitioner.

In cases like the one under review the justice's court is the court of original jurisdiction. The superior court is the appellate court. The relation between them is very similar to that existing in other cases between the superior courts and the supreme court. There is one marked difference, which is that, when on appeal from a justice's court a new trial is granted, the new trial must be had in the superior court. Pen. Code, § 1469. But a new trial in a criminal case is a re-examination of the issue, "before another jury after a verdict has been given." Pen. Code, § 1179. Clearly, therefore, there cannot be a trial in the superior court before a jury upon issues of fact raised by the plea of "not guilty" before there has been such a trial in the lower court. To hold otherwise would be to convert the superior court into a court of original jurisdiction in such cases, and to deprive the defendant of his right to be first tried in the court to which the law assigns his case, and of his right afterwards to appeal to the proper appellate court.

The objection made by respondent that there is no machinery provided by the Code by which the superior court can transmit its rulings and directions to the lower court, is not well taken. Section 1467, Pen. Code, provides that "the appeal is taken, heard, and determined as provided in title 9, pt. 2, of this Code." Said title 9 contains the full method of procedure on appeals in criminal cases from the superior courts to the supreme court, and among its provisions will be found ample means for the disposition of an appeal of any character taken to the superior court from the court of a justice of the peace. In the case at bar the respondent should have remanded the action to the court below, with instructions to overrule the demurrer, but it has no jurisdiction to itself try the case as it proposes to do.

The parties have assumed that a demurrer to a complaint in a criminal case in a justice's court is a proper pleading. As the Code does not provide for a demurrer in such a case, it may be a question whether or not a court should entertain it at all. That question, however, would not affect the result in this present proceeding.

Let a writ of prohibition issue as prayed for.

DOLAND v. MOONEY and others. (No. 11,191.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 17, 1887.)

TAXES—SALE—MORTGAGE—DEED AND CERTIFICATE.

Under Const. Cal. art. 13, § 4, a mortgage upon land is assessable and taxable as an interest in the premises on which it is secured, and the taxes are a lien upon the land and the security; and a deed and certificate reciting that a mortgage on the premises (describing them) had been assessed to the owner, "and that said property" was sold for the taxes, is a sufficient recital of the sale of the land, and not merely a recital of the sale of the mortgage.

Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county.

Action in ejectment by F. F. Doland, appellant, against John E. Mooney and L. W. Newmann, respondents.

D. E. Alexander and Jay R. Brown, for appellant. C. L. White and Lincoln White, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. C. This action was brought to determine the ownership and right to the possession of a parcel of land in the city of Sacramento. The plaintiff claimed title to the demanded premises under a sale for delinquent state and county taxes, and at the trial introduced in evidence his tax deed and certificate of sale, and then rested his case. The defendant moved for a nonsuit, upon the ground that it appeared from the plaintiff's evidence that the tax collector sold only a mortgage upon the real property, and not the property itself. The court granted the motion, and the plaintiff appealed from the judgment.

The recitals of the deed are that "Robert Anderson was assessed for taxation for state and county taxes for the year 1883 upon his interest in the real property hereinafter described; that there was so assessed to said Robert Anderson a mortgage upon the following described property, to-wit, [describing the premises in question;] that the tax collector of said county gave due and legal notice, * * * and did expose for public sale, at the time mentioned in said notice, the property so as aforesaid assessed and described; that at said sale Eli Mayo was the bidder who offered to take the least quantity of said property, and the smallest portion of interest therein, * * * to-wit, all of the above-described property; that the same was thereupon, by the said tax collector, struck off and sold to said Eli Mayo."

The certificate of sale recites "that Robert Anderson was assessed for taxation for state and county taxes, for the year 1883, with the following described property, to-wit: Mortgage on north forty-two feet," etc., (describing property.) It then recites all the other matters required by section 3776 of the Political Code, and, among others, "that said property was sold subject to redemption, and that unless the same is redeemed, according to law, within one year from the date hereof, the said purchaser or his assigns will, at the expiration of one year from date hereof, be entitled to receive a deed for the same."

It is claimed for respondents that these recitals show that the mortgage was assessed and sold, and not the land on which the mortgage was placed, and that plaintiff's only remedy, if he has any, is to foreclose his mortgage. We do not think so. The constitution provides that "a mortgage, deed of trust, contract, or other obligation by which a debt is secured, shall, for the purpose of assessment and taxation, be deemed and treated as an interest in the property affected thereby, * * * and the value of such security shall be assessed and taxed to the owner thereof. * * * The taxes so levied shall be a lien on the property and security." Section 4, art. 13; section 3627, Pol. Code.

Under this provision, the Anderson mortgage was assessable and taxable as an interest in the premises in question, and not otherwise. It was evidently so assessed, and the description, in our opinion, was altogether sufficient. "In listing the land it must be described with particularity sufficient to afford the owner the means of identification, and not to mislead him." Cooley, Tax'n, 282.

The description here, as shown in the certificate and deed, was sufficient, if the owner knew the law,—and he is presumed to have known it,—to fully meet these requirements. It follows that the nonsuit was improperly granted, and the judgment should therefore be reversed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; FOOTE, C.

By THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed.

TOTTEN v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SONOMA CO. (No. 11,186.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 17, 1887.)

APPEAL—FROM JUSTICE'S COURT—NOTICE—WHO MAY SIGN.

A notice of appeal from the judgment of a justice's court may be signed by other attorneys than those who appeared for appellant in the justice's court.

In bank.

The answer in the justice's court was signed: "SAMUEL TOTTEN. By M. W. PLUMLY, Atty. for Deft." The notice of appeal to superior court was signed by "LAUGHLIN & THOMPSON, Attys. for Appt." The point made was that the notice of appeal to superior court was insufficient, being signed by parties who had not appeared for Totten in justice's court on the trial thereof.

Laughlin & Thompson, for petitioner. J. A. Barham, for respondent.

By THE COURT. Application for writ of review. In this case the notice of appeal to the superior court was properly given. If there is an attorney of record in justices' courts, the statute does not require that an attorney should sign the notice of appeal. It may be signed by the party, or any person he may select for that purpose. Code Civil Proc. §§ 842, 974.

The petition is sufficient, and the demurrer thereto is overruled. The order dismissing the appeal is annulled and quashed. Ordered accordingly.

ANDERSON v. GOFF. (No. 9,688.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 19, 1887.)

1. APPEAL—NOTICE—DATE OF RENDITION AND ENTRY OF JUDGMENT.

A judgment was rendered March 29th and entered April 30th. Held, that a notice of appeal therefrom as from a judgment rendered and entered March 29th was sufficient.

2. JUDGMENT—AGAINST NON-RESIDENT—VALIDITY—FORM.

If, in an action against a non-resident having property in the state, an attachment is made at the beginning of the action, a judgment, general in its terms, although void as a personal judgment, is so far valid as to uphold a sale of the attached property.

3. WRIT AND PROCESS—SERVICE BY PUBLICATION—REQUISITES OF AFFIDAVIT.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. §§ 412, 413, providing that service of summons may be made by publication when the defendant resides out of the state, or has departed from the state, or cannot after due diligence be found within the state, or conceals himself, and that fact appears by affidavit, etc., it is not necessary to show an attempt to find a defendant in the state or the return of an officer, that he cannot be found, if the affidavit states that he resides out of the state, and gives his residence.

4. SAME—PROPERTY IN STATE.

The affidavit need not state that defendant has property in the state, or that a writ of attachment has issued, although those facts must exist in order to render the judgment valid, as the statute does not require them.

5. SAME—FORM OF ORDER—DEPOSIT IN POST-OFFICE—"FORTHWITH."

An order of service of summons by publication directed a copy of the summons to be deposited in the post-office, addressed to defendant, as required by the statute, (Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 413,) but omitted the word "forthwith" contained in the statute. The copy, however was mailed on the same day that the order was made. Held, that the omission was an irregularity at most, and did not render the proceedings void.

6. SAME—WHO MAY MAKE THE DEPOSIT.

The plaintiff's attorney is a proper person to deposit the copy of summons and complaint in the post-office, and to make affidavit of that fact.

7. SAME—CODE CIVIL PROC. CAL. §§ 410, 415.

The provisions of Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 410, in relation to service of summons upon a defendant personally, has no application to the deposit of a copy in the post-office, the affidavit of performance of which act is provided for by the third subdivision of section 415.

8. SAME—TIME TO ANSWER—PUBLICATION BEYOND TIME.

The time to answer given to a defendant, on whom service is made by publication, by the order of publication and the statute, will not be extended by the fact that the newspaper publishing the summons continues to publish it beyond the time required.

9. WORDS—"FORTHWITH."

The term "forthwith," when applied to the performance of an act, imports that it shall be performed as soon as by reasonable exertion it can be.

Appeal from superior court, San Benito county.

The motion to dismiss was on the ground that the notice of appeal from the judgment purported to appeal from a judgment rendered and entered March 29, 1884; the record showing entry of judgment April 30, 1884. The notice of appeal was served and filed July 7, 1884.

G. B. Montgomery and Burchard & Scott, for appellant. Briggs & Hawkins, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. The motion to dismiss the appeal herein is met by a certificate of the clerk of the superior court in and for the county of San Benito, in which county the action was brought and passed to judgment, showing that the statement on motion for new trial was properly settled and certified by the judge of the superior court; that the order overruling the motion for a new trial was entered and signed by the judge on May 31, 1884, and that the judgment in said cause was rendered on the twenty-ninth day of March, 1884, and entered on the thirtieth day of April, 1884, before the notice of appeal was filed.

The motion to dismiss the appeal should be denied. The appeal is taken by plaintiff from a judgment in favor of defendant, and from an order denying a new trial. The action is ejectment to recover a lot of land, containing one and one-half acres, situate in what is known as "College Addition" to the town of Hollister, San Benito county, and to recover damages for the withholding such land, and rents and profits. Plaintiff, at the several dates hereinafter mentioned, was and still is a married woman, the wife of J. G. Anderson. On the tenth day of November, 1876, one W. C. Land, being the owner of and in possession of the premises described in the complaint, conveyed the same to plaintiff's husband, and took from the latter his promissory note for $600, the purchase price thereof. On the tenth day of November, 1878, Anderson gave Land a new note for $300, the residue of the purchase price of the land having been previously paid. On the twenty-sixth of April, 1880, according to the findings, Anderson, being insolvent and unable to pay his debts, being indebted to various persons in sums aggregating over $4,000, and, among others, to Land, on account of said note, in the sum of over $300, in contemplation of insolvency, and for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding his said creditors, among whom was said Land, conveyed, without consideration and as a gift, the land in question to his wife, the plaintiff herein. Plaintiff never went into possession of the land, and knew of the insolvency of her husband. The deed was recorded April 28, 1880.

On May 6, 1880, Anderson filed his petition and schedule in insolvency in Alameda county, to which he had removed, and such proceedings were had therein that he was adjudged an insolvent debtor, and afterwards, on the fourth day of August, 1880, was discharged from his debts. He removed soon thereafter to Colorado, where, with plaintiff, he still resides. On February 16, 1881, Land brought suit against Anderson on his note, sued out a writ of attachment, and caused the same to be levied upon the interest of the defendant therein in and to the demanded premises. Service of summons was had upon Anderson by publication, etc.; and, upon his default for want of an answer, judgment was taken in favor of plaintiff, upon which an execution issued, was levied upon the property attached, and, after notice, a sale was had, at which Land became the purchaser, and in due time, there having been no redemption, received a sheriff's deed of the premises. Defendant holds the property by sundry mesne conveyances from Land, and has been in possession under his deed since August, 1882.

We may dismiss from consideration the proceedings of Anderson in insolvency, for the reason that, if the judgment of Land was regularly obtained, the former is concluded thereby for want of a plea of his discharge in that action.

Several objections are made by appellant to the affidavit for publication of summons, among which are: (1) That it fails to state that any writ of attachment was issued or levied, or that the defendant therein had any property in this state; (2) that it failed to show any attempt at service in this state, or any return of an officer that defendant could not be found, etc.

Our Code of Civil Procedure (sections 412, 413) provides that when the person on whom service is to be made resides out of the state, or has departed from the state, or cannot, after due diligence, be found within the state, or conceals himself to avoid the service of summons, etc., and the fact appears by affidavit to the satisfaction of the court or a judge thereof, and it also appears by such affidavit, or by the verified complaint on file, that a cause of action exists against the defendant in respect to whom service is to be made, or that he is a necessary or proper party to the action, an order of service by publication of summons may be made, etc. The affidavit in this case showed that the plaintiff had a cause of action against the defendant therein, and also referred to his complaint containing a like showing and duly verified. He also showed by the affidavit that defendant was a resident of Denver, in the state of Colorado, and was there engaged in business, etc. The affidavit was sufficient to warrant an order of service of the summons by publication.

Where a defendant is shown to be a resident of another state, and his place of residence is known, it is not necessary to show diligence in finding him in the county or state where the action is pending, or to have the return of an officer showing that he cannot be found. Nor was it necessary to show by the affidavit that a writ of attachment had issued, or that the defendant had property in this state. Our statute gives the right to service of summons upon defendants in all cases where they are non-residents of the state, without reference to the fact of their having or not having property here. The effect of a judgment thus obtained is quite another thing.

In Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, it was held by the supreme court of the United States that, although a state having property of a non-resident within her territory may hold and appropriate it to satisfy the claim of her citizen against him, and her tribunals may inquire into his obligation to the extent necessary to control the disposition of that property, yet, in the absence of such seizure, a personal judgment is without validity if it be rendered by a state court in an action upon a money demand against a non-resident, who was served by publication of summons, but upon whom no personal service of process within the state was made, and who did not appear.

The same doctrine was laid down substantially in Belcher v. Chambers, 53 Cal. 636, in which it was held that, although a state having property of a non-resident within her territory may hold and appropriate it to satisfy the claim of her citizen against him, and her tribunals may inquire into his obligation to the extent necessary to control the disposition of that property, yet, in the absence of a seizure of such property, a personal judgment is without validity if it be rendered by a state court in an action upon a money demand against a non-resident who was served with summons by publication only, and who did not appear in the action, and the personal judgment was held void.

The right to institute and prosecute an action against a non-resident, and to serve summons upon him by publication, is by these cases upheld so far as may be necessary to determine his liability, with a view of subjecting his property to the payment of a debt due to a resident, provided, always, that such action must be in aid of an attachment, or some other process designed to reach and establish a lien upon the debtor's property within the local jurisdiction.

Now, in this state, we have one specific mode by which to acquire a lien upon the property of a debtor against whom a cause of action exists arising out of contract. It consists in commencing an action, and praying for judgment as in other cases, and, upon filing a proper affidavit and undertaking, a writ of attachment issues under which the property of the alleged debtor may be seized and held subject to sale for the purpose of satisfying such judgment as may be recovered. The judgment, when rendered, does not differ from that entered in other cases upon a money demand.

"If judgment be recovered by the plaintiff, the sheriff must satisfy the same out of the property attached by him which has not been delivered to the defendant." etc. Code Civil Proc. § 550. By force of section 688 of the same Code "all property and rights of property seized and held under attachment in the action are liable to execution."

Under these provisions it has been held by this court that no order of sale by the court is necessary to authorize the sheriff to sell the attached property, and that the lien of the attachment is not lost by taking a simple money judgment without embodying therein directions for the sale of the attached property. Low v. Henry, 9 Cal. 538.

In Bagley v. Ward, 37 Cal. 121, it was held that "when a judgment is rendered in an attachment suit, and becomes a lien on real property attached, the lien of the attachment is merged in the judgment." And in Porter v. Pico, 55 Cal. 165, it is said: "But the judgment does not operate so as to release or obliterate the attachment lien. The property attached is still, in contemplation of law, in the hands of the officer, subject to the judgment. The attachment lien still exists so as to confer a priority in the lien of the judgment. * * * The property is sold under the final process issued on the judgment."

Had our courts adopted the practice, in cases where attachments are issued, of declaring the lien of the attachment in the judgment, and directing the attached property to be sold in satisfaction of such lien, the orderly connection between the lien and the rights accruing to a purchaser under a sale thereunder would be more readily apparent; but in the light of the interpretation given to the statutes, and to the judgments in such cases, the same result is reached.

In view of this result, we think it must follow that, while a personal judgment against a non-resident debtor who is only served with process by publication is void and of no effect, yet in a case where the debtor has property within the state which is seized under a writ of attachment issued in the cause at the time the suit is brought, a judgment therein which, though general in its terms, has the effect of perpetuating the attachment lien, and of subjecting the attached property to the payment of a debt due from the non-resident, is so far in the nature of a proceeding in rem as to uphold a sale of the attached property, and, considered for that purpose and to that extent, is not void. It is the method, and only method, pursued in our courts for subjecting the property of a non-resident debtor to the payment of demands due from him to our citizens, and the object sought is the essential thing to be considered, and is of more importance than the means by which the end is attained.

The facts that defendant had property in this state, that a writ of attachment issued in the cause was levied thereon, and the property sold in satisfaction of the claim, are all in proof. The existence of these facts are essential to the validity of the proceedings. The requirements of the affidavit for publication of summons are to be measured by our Code, and the facts that defendant has property in this state, and that a writ of attachment has issued, are not among them.

The decisions quoted from the New York courts have no application here, for the reason that the statute of that state is essentially different from our own. There service of summons can only be had against a non-resident of the state who "has property therein," etc. N. Y. Code Proc. § 135. Under such a statute the ownership of property in the state becomes a jurisdictional fact necessary to be stated in the affidavit.

The order of service of summons by publication, after stating the jurisdictional facts, and ordering publication in a designated paper for two months, directed a copy, etc., to be deposited in the post-office, etc., directed to defendant, etc., but failed to include in such direction the word "forthwith," as contained in section 413, Code Civil Proc.: "The court or judge must direct a copy of the summons and complaint to be forthwith deposited in the post-office, directed to the person to be served at his place of residence."

The term "forthwith," when applied to the performance of an act, imports that it shall be performed as soon as by reasonable exertion, confined to that object, it might be, and which must consequently vary according to the circumstances of each particular case. 3 Chit. Pr. 112.

In Roberts v. Brett, 36 Eng. Law & Eq. 358, it was held to mean "within a reasonable time." When a defendant is ordered to plead forthwith, he must plead within 24 hours. Whart. Law Dict. In other matters of practice the word has come to have the same meaning. 2 Edw. 328; Moffat v. Dickson, 3 Colo. 313; Bouv. Law Dict. Like the term "immediately," it is not in law to be necessarily construed as a time immediately succeeding, without an interval, but an effectual and lawful time, allowing all the "adjuncts and accompaniments" necessary to give an act full legal effect to be performed. In Van Wyck v. Hardy, 20 How. Pr. 222, the word "forthwith" was construed as synonymous with "all reasonable dispatch."

The deposit of a copy in the post-office was made on the day the order was signed, and we are of opinion that the omission of the word "forthwith" from the order requiring such deposit was at most an irregularity which did not render the proceedings void, but which might perhaps have been good cause to set aside the proceedings for irregularity on a direct motion for that purpose.

The default was not prematurely taken. The summons was published from February 19, 1881, for two months, which expired April 20th. The defendant then had 30 days in which to answer, which expired May 21, 1881, and the default was not entered until May 27th following. The fact that the newspaper continued to publish the summons until May 7th did not have the effect to extend the time to answer beyond the periods fixed by the order of publication and the statute.

The deposit of a copy of summons and complaint, prepaid, in the post-office by N. C. Briggs, the attorney of plaintiff, and his affidavit of that fact, was sufficient. The provision of section 410, in relation to service of summons upon a defendant personally, has no application to the deposit of a copy in the post-office, the affidavit of performance of which act is provided for by the third subdivision of section 415.

We think the judgment roll in Land v. Anderson was good as against a collateral attack, and was properly admitted in evidence. McCauley v. Fulton, 44 Cal. 355.

The objection made to the manner of levying the attachment is not tenable. The court finds that it was duly levied upon the land in question, and the finding is supported by the return of the officer in which he certifies that he "duly levied upon all the right, title, and interest of the said J. G. Anderson in and to the following real property, to-wit," (describing the land in dispute.) Under the ruling of the court in Porter v. Pico, supra, this was sufficient as against a collateral attack. Like considerations apply to the objection urged to the return on execution.

These views render the other questions raised in the record unimportant. We are of opinion the judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

Appeal from superior court, Alameda county.

Action to recover damages for trespass to land, and for an injunction.

Tilden & Tilden and Colin Campbell, for respondent. Mastick, Belcher & Mastick, for appellant.

FOOTE, C. The plaintiff, Hayward, brought an action to recover damages for trespass committed, as he alleged, by defendants the marshal and board of trustees of the town of Hayward. He complained that they had unlawfully intruded upon his land, and torn down his fences, cut down and dug up his trees, and thrown open his land for use as a public highway of that town. He prayed for damages against them for the acts of trespass committed, and for a perpetual injunction to prevent them and their successors, etc., from the commission of further acts of that nature. The cause was tried by the court without a jury. The plaintiff obtained a judgment for $50 and costs of action, and that the defendants be enjoined as prayed for. From that, and an order denying a new trial, the defendants appealed.

The principal grounds for the reversal of the judgment and order relied on are that the evidence was insufficient to justify the findings; but, conceding it to have been sufficient, that upon such findings the judgment should have been for the defendants.

Upon a careful examination of the whole record, we are convinced that the findings are sustained by sufficient evidence. They are as follows:

"First. That plaintiff and his grantors have been in possession of the land and premises in complaint described, claiming as owners, and exercising acts of ownership over same, for about the period of twenty years; that for about four years prior to the commencement of this suit plaintiff inclosed the premises in dispute (as a portion of the larger tract owned by him for several years prior thereto) with a substantial picket fence; that two rows of trees were planted on said premises,—one by plaintiff's grantor, and one by plaintiff,—one of said rows of trees running near the line of plaintiff's fence; that said land was graded or filled in by plaintiff.

"Second. That in February, 1877, defendants tore down the fence upon said land, and entered thereon for the purpose of opening a street over it; that they did this under an order or resolution of the board of trustees of said town of Hayward, who claim that the paramount owner of the land had dedicated it to public use as a street of said town; that defendants John Manzer, Thomas A. Cunningham, Joseph Pimental, L. Livikin, and J. D. Austin constitute said board of trustees, and that defendant Horn is the marshal of said town, and that they were such officers at the time of the commencement of these proceedings; that, in 1854, Guillermo Castro, claiming to be the owner of and being in possession of the Rancho San Lorenzo, claiming same under a Mexican grant, caused to be made a map of that part of the rancho on which he laid out a town called San Lorenzo, (now the town of Hayward;) that said map was filed in the recorder's office of the county of Alameda; that upon this map a street called Castro street was laid out and differently located from the location of a street called by the same name upon a second and subsequent map of said town; that some few sales were made under said map.

"Fourth. That in 1856 said Castro caused a second and different map to be made, and filed, in the office of the recorder of said Alameda county, of said town of San Lorenzo, (now Hayward,) altering the first plan of said town, and increasing the size of the blocks, and materially changing said town from what it was as delineated on said map of 1854, and upon which said last-named map of 1856, said Castro street is located further to the south-west than upon said map of 1854; that said Castro street, as laid down on said map of 1856 extended north 36 deg. 24 min. west, through said town, and intersected a county road leading from San Leandro to the mission of San Jose, south of a line on the said last-named map marked Pierce street, and south of the land of plaintiff, (in dispute;) that south of the intersection of said Castro street with the county road Castro street was opened and used as a public road, but not to the north of said point; that said Castro street, as delineated on said map, extended several blocks to the north of Pierce street, but was not opened or used as aforesaid; that both said maps were filed in said recorder's office of Alameda county before the United States patent was acquired to said Rancho San Lorenzo; that some sales were made under said map of 1856.

"Fifth. That, in 1856, Castro conveyed to plaintiff a portion of said rancho lying north of Pierce street, and east of the county road, and including said Castro street, as delineated in said map of 1856, and included in such conveyance; that the county road was recognized as a boundary in said conveyance.

"Sixth. That, in 1858 and 1859, Castro mortgaged the remainder of his rancho, including that portion of it on which the town had been laid out; that said mortgages were foreclosed, and the mortgaged premises passed by judicial sales, under decree of foreclosure to F. D. Atherton, who as owner thereof, in 1862, made and filed a new map of the town of Hayward, on which said Castro street, as delineated, is cut off at its intersection with the county road at the point hereinbefore mentioned, and that Castro street as therein delineated does not embrace any part of the land in dispute; that a great many sales of land have been made by reference to said map; that said town of Hayward was incorporated in 1876, and that the board of trustees constituted under said incorporation accepted the alleged dedication under the map made and filed by Guillermo Castro in 1856; that there are various shade and ornamental trees on said land which defendants have threatened and intend to cut down and destroy."

Before a person's land can be declared a public highway, it must be clearly proven that the same has been dedicated as such, and, when it is undertaken by city authorities to remove fences or improvements therefrom as a nuisance, they must affirmatively show such a dedication. Tate v. City of Sacramento, 50 Cal. 242.

When Guillermo Castro, on the thirtieth day of September, 1856, within a year of the time of filing the map of 1856 of the town of San Lorenzo, (now Hayward,) deeded to the plaintiff a portion of Castro street as laid down on said map, and bounded the tract of land which he thus conveyed by the county road on the west, the public had never accepted or used the part of the street, including the land in dispute here, as intended to be dedicated, and the town of Hayward had not then been incorporated. It is therefore evident that the deed above referred to was a complete revocation by Castro of his alleged dedication, so far as it affected the public, howsoever it may have been as to the few persons who had purchased lots according to said map, whose rights in the premises we do not now determine.

By the filing of that map, and having it recorded, Castro merely made an offer of dedication to the public of the streets which were shown by said map, which offer could not become effectual as an irrevocable dedication to the public use until its acceptance by the public. People v. Williams, 64 Cal. 498-502, 2 Pac. Rep. 393; San Francisco v. Canavan, 42 Cal. 542-548; San Francisco v. Calderwood, 31 Cal. 589; Washb. Easem. & Serv. 132; Harding v. Jasper, 14 Cal. 647; Child v. Chappell, 9 N. Y. 257.

Such acceptance is ordinarily made manifest by a use on the part of the public for such a length of time as will be sufficient to evince its acceptance of the dedication as intended to be made. Washb. Easem. & Serv. 139, 140. It does not appear by the record that the public or the defendants, either before or after the deed of revocation made by Castro, ever used Castro street at the place where it was originally designed to impinge upon the plaintiff's land; but it appears that, by preference, the public had always, from its establishment, used the county road instead,—that road having been about the year 1855 laid out as a public thoroughfare (somewhat identical with Castro street) by the proper authorities of Alameda county. Any right the public or the defendants may have had to use the land in dispute as part of Castro street was never availed of; and as the plaintiff, during the period of about 20 years, had, by himself or his grantors, been in the exclusive possession of such part of said street, his right thereto had become paramount to that of the public or the town of Hayward. In other words, the plaintiff, by himself or his grantors, claimed and held possession of the land in controversy for 20 years adverse to the whole world, and neither the public nor the defendants had at any time accepted or used that land as intended to be dedicated by Castro. Hayward's effort, as disclosed by the record, is not to hold possession by means of the statute of limitations of a portion of what in fact had once been a public highway. It is to retain possession of land which, in fact, had never been accepted nor used as the public highway, and had been in his adverse possession for 20 years. Such being the case, the proceedings on the part of the authorities of the town of Hayward to remove a nuisance from a public street was not authorized, since what they claimed to belong to a street had never been dedicated, used, or accepted as such. The effort made to devote Hayward's land to the public use as a street, and the other trespasses committed thereon, in the manner attempted and partially accomplished, were contrary to law, and the judgment and order of trial court should be affirmed.

FISK, JR., v. CENTRAL PAC. R. CO. (No. 11,572.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT—FELLOW-SERVANT—CHILD.

The rule which excuses a master from liability to a servant for an injury caused by the negligence of a fellow-servant, applies to the case of a child who is injured by dangerous machinery, upon which he is negligently set to work by a fellow-servant.

2. SAME—INJURY TO CHILD BY DANGEROUS MACHINERY—AUTHORITY OF BOSS.

Plaintiff, a boy 12 years of age, was employed by the foreman of the defendant's boiler-shops to work in the tool-room, and was instructed to obey the boss of that room. At a time when there was nothing for him to do in the tool-room, the boss sent him to the shop to see if there was anything for him to do there. There he was set to work by the employes on dangerous machinery, and was injured. Held, that the instruction to plaintiff to obey the boss should be construed to refer to employment in the tool-room alone; that the boss was not authorized to send plaintiff to the shop to find work; and that for the consequences of his doing so, or for the careless acts of the other employes in giving plaintiff dangerous work to do, defendant itself was not responsible.

THORNTON, J., dissenting.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county.

Freeman, Johnson & Bates, for appellant. S. C. Denson, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This is an action to recover damages for a personal injury received by plaintiff while in the employ of defendant. A judgment of nonsuit was entered in the court below, from which judgment, and from an order denying a new trial, the plaintiff appeals.

The defendant is a corporation organized under the laws of the state of California.

At the trial there was testimony tending to show that in September, 1883, the plaintiff, who was of the age of about 12 years, applied to Price Davis, assistant foreman in defendant's boiler-shops in Sacramento, for work, and was informed he would have to see Charles Hooper, the foreman. He saw Mr. Hooper accordingly, who gave him work in the tool-room, under David Snape, who was the boss of such room, and whom he was instructed to obey. His principal work was in cleaning the tools, putting them in place, giving them to the men, doing errands, etc. He also seems to have been engaged for nearly a month in heating rivets.

On the first of May, 1884, plaintiff went to the shop, and, there being no work for him in the tool-room, he was told by the boss to go into the shop, and see if there was anything for him to do there. In the shop he was requested by Price Davis, Jr., a young man aged 19, and a son of the assistant foreman, to go into the fire-box of a boiler and wipe a tap, in place of another boy named Downs, who was engaged in the work, and whom young Davis said he wanted to help him at something else. The precise testimony on this point is as follows: "I went into the shop, and met Price Davis, Jr., and he asked me if I was doing anything. I told him, 'No, I was not doing anything,' and he told me that he wanted me to go in and wipe the tap for him. He said he wanted another boy to help him. Before that there was a boy named Downs that was inside of the fire-box, and Downs was going to help him do some work. I asked him if I could not help do the work, and he said, 'No.' He went off, and stayed about five minutes, and came back, and said his father told me to go into the fire-box. * * * He was the son of Price Davis, the assistant foreman," etc.

The tap was being used by one John Soule to drill holes through the fire-box, and to cut threads in them to receive screws, and was propelled by machinery on the outside which gave to it a revolving motion at the rate of 100 revolutions a minute. The office of plaintiff was to receive the tap when it came through, clean it from the particles of iron which adhered to its oiled surface, and pass it outside the boiler to Soule for readjustment. There were two methods for cleaning the tap,—one was to wait until it came entirely through, and was detached from the machine, which was entirely safe, but slow; the other was to wipe it as it came through, and while in motion, which was dangerous. Plaintiff testifies that Soule "told me to wipe off the tap in a hurry, and told me to wipe it off while it was running." While engaged in wiping the tap with a piece of coarse cloth, the instrument caught the cloth, which was around plaintiff's hand, twisted and broke his arm, and injured him severely and permanently. Plaintiff had previously been employed in a boiler-shop at Oakland, and so informed Hooper, the foreman of the shop, when he applied for work. Soule was a workman in the shop, and usually had charge of the tap. Plaintiff says: "When I went up to the tap Soule asked me what I was going to do. I told him I had come to wipe off the tap. He said, 'What are you going to wipe it off with?' I told him with a sack, and he told me to go inside; and he said, 'Wipe it off while it is running.'"

From the nature of the employment, and the instrument described in the testimony, we have no doubt of two propositions: (1) It was dangerous business to wipe the tap while in rapid motion, in the manner pursued by plaintiff. (2) A man of mature years, in full possession of his faculties, and gifted with ordinary ingenuity, could have performed the task while the instrument was in motion without material risk.

The rule is well settled in England and the United States that the maxim respondet superior does not apply so as to make a master responsible for injuries inflicted on one servant by the negligence of another servant, in the same common employment, unless such injuries are traceable to the personal negligence of the master. The law implies a contract on the part of the servant, when he enters into the service, that he will assume the ordinary risks which are incident to the employment, among which is the risk of suffering hurt and injury from the negligence of his fellow-servants. The boy (plaintiff) was directed to go into the fire-box to work by Price Davis, Jr., who seems to have been a hand in the shop, who was a son of the assistant foreman, and who told the plaintiff that his father (the assistant foreman) so directed, but there is no evidence to show that the assistant foreman gave any such order. The order of Soule directing the plaintiff to clean the tool while in motion was improper, but it was the negligence of a fellow-servant engaged in the same general employment. The rule which excuses a master from liability where an injury is caused by the negligence of a fellow-servant is not altered by the fact that the party injured is a child. King v. Boston, etc., R. Corp., 9 Cush. 112; Chicago R. Co. v. Harney, 28 Ind. 28; Ohio R. Co. v. Hammersley, Id. 371; Gartland v. Toledo R. Co., 67 Ill. 498; Brown v. Maxwell, 6 Ill. 592.

We conclude, therefore, that the plaintiff cannot recover for the injuries which he received, either by being placed by a fellow-servant in a dangerous place, or by the negligence of his fellow-servant in directing him in the manner in which he was to perform his work, unless the negligence of his fellow-servants was in some way combined with the negligence of the defendant so as to produce the result. If the negligence of the master combines with the negligence of a fellow-servant, and the two contribute to the injury, the servant injured may recover damages of the master. Crutchfield v. Richmond R. Co., 76 N. C. 320; Booth v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 73 N. Y. 38; Paulmier v. Erie R. Co., 34 N. J. Law, 151; Cayzer v. Taylor, 10 Gray, 274.

Was the defendant guilty of any such negligence as rendered it liable? There is nothing in the testimony to show any negligence in the selection of Soule as an employe, or tending to bring home to the defendant knowledge of his carelessness. We must therefore look to the circumstances under which the plaintiff sought work in the boiler-shop for a basis upon which to determine whether or not defendant, or its servants in authority, were guilty of wrong. The first question manifestly is as to the extent of the authority conferred upon Snape, the boss of the tool-room, and, if it shall be found that he possessed the requisite power to bind the defendant by his direction to plaintiff, then, second, we may inquire into the manner in which his authority was exercised.

Recurring to the testimony, we find (1) that Snape was boss of the tool-room, presumably connected with the boiler-shop, and, as such, had charge of the tool-room; (2) that Hooper was foreman of the boiler-shop, and had authority to employ men therein; (3) that, when plaintiff applied for work, Hooper employed him to labor in the tool-room, took him to Snape, the boss, and told him to obey the latter, which he did; (4) at the end of eight months, and on the first day of May, 1884, there being nothing for plaintiff to do in the tool-room, he was directed by Snape to go into the boiler-shop, and see if he could get any work there, and he went to the shop, where he obtained the employment in the manner and with the result hereinbefore mentioned.

"Where the servant has equal knowledge with the master of the danger incident to the work, he takes the risk upon himself, if he goes on with it." Wood, Mast. & Serv. § 349. This doctrine presupposes that the servant has sufficient discretion to appreciate the dangers incident to the work, and has no application to the case of young and inexperienced children. In such a case it is the duty of the master not only to warn the child, but to instruct him as to the dangers of the employment, and the means of avoiding them. To a mere child, like the plaintiff in this case, dangers which would be patent to the adult of experience are or may be latent. Coombs v. New Bedford C. Co., 102 Mass. 572; Grizzle v. Frost, 3 Fost. & F. 622; Dowling v. Allen, 74 Mo. 16; Railroad Co. v. Fort, 17 Wall. 554; Kline v. Central Pac. R.

These cases proceed upon the theory of the enhanced duty of the employer in cases of the employment of minors, without knowledge of the risks they are to assume. This duty performed, and the minor properly instructed, he stands upon the same plane with other servants in reference to the risks incident to the employment, and those arising from the want of care in his fellow-servants. In the cases cited supra, no question was made as to the authority of the superintendent to bind his principal by ordering the thing done which produced the injury. In all of them the service to be performed was within the scope of the authority conferred. Here the question is, could Snape bind the defendant by the order he gave the plaintiff to seek work outside of his own peculiar department? He was a boss in the tool-room, and, as such, we may fairly assume he was authorized to control and direct the manner in which the work of that room was to be performed, and all other things relating to the orderly and proper conduct of his branch of the business. But it does not appear that he was authorized to employ hands for any purpose.

Charles Hooper was the vice-principal of the defendant in the boiler-shop, with full control and authority, and authorized to employ and discharge help. He employed plaintiff, and directed him to obey David Snape; but he employed him to work in the tool-room, and the instructions given to plaintiff to obey the boss of that room must be construed in view of the employment. We cannot, by any reasonable intendment, hold that the authority of David Snape was enlarged or extended by this direction of Hooper. It simply relegated the plaintiff to the control of Snape, within the purview and subject to the employment which Hooper had given him. The employment to work in the tool-shop was the subject-matter; and the control given to Snape, and the directions to plaintiff to obey him, must be construed with reference to and confined to such subject-matter. Plaintiff was directed to obey Snape, but it was as a laborer in the tool-room that he was so ordered. We know of no rule of construction by which the order given under such circumstances, and for such a purpose, can be held to authorize Snape to employ the plaintiff for an entirely different purpose from that contemplated by Hooper, and thereby to bind the defendant. The roving commission given to the plaintiff by Snape to seek employment in the boiler-shop, unless intended to direct him to the persons in charge of such shop, involved an element of carelessness; but it was not the negligence of the defendant, or of its agent or vice-principal, its alter ego, authorized, or held out as being authorized, to speak for it. We conclude, therefore, that as Snape was not authorized to send plaintiff to the boiler-shop in quest of employment, and that as he was not directed or employed by any one so authorized, the defendant is not responsible for the injuries which he received through the carelessness (if any) of defendant's employes.

It follows that the nonsuit was properly granted, and the judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

Appellant subscribed for stock in a corporation on which he paid nothing in money, but, being assessed on the subscription, gave his note for the amount, and thereupon a certificate of stock was issued to him, to be held by the company until he paid the note. Held, the note was not void, as against public policy, under Const. Cal. art. 12, § 11, providing that no corporation shall issue stock except for money paid or property actually received, and all fictitious increase of stock shall be void; for, if it be conceded that the certificate was improperly issued before actual payment of any money, still that fact does not render the note void. Nor was the note void under California Act April 1, 1876, (St. 1875-76, p. 729,) requiring corporations to publish semi-annual statements of their paid-up capital, and providing that nothing should be counted as capital except money, and especially not notes. Under this act the note could not be included as capital, but was not on that account void. Nor was it void under Pen. Ex parte LEMKUHL. (No. 20,261.)*(Supreme Court of California. February 17, 1887.)HABEAS CORPUS—REVIEW IN CRIMINAL CASE.

One who has been tried for a misdemeanor, and sentenced to imprisonment by a court having jurisdiction of both his person and of the offense, cannot, in a habeas corpus proceeding, have the judgment and sentence reviewed for error. The writ of habeas corpus was not framed to retry issues of fact, or to review the proceedings of a legal trial; that can only be properly done by writ of error on appeal.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

On habeas corpus.

The "ordinance" referred to was one establishing a street market by the city council of Oakland.

Moore & Reed, for petitioner. S. P. Hall, Dist. Atty., and J. M. Poston, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. The petitioner was tried before the police court of the city of Oakland for a misdemeanor, viz., the commission of a nuisance in obstructing Broadway, a street of said city. The judgment was that he pay a fine of two dollars, or be imprisoned until said fine be duly satisfied, at the rate of one day's imprisonment for each dollar of fine. The captain of the police of the city of Oakland has him in custody, by virtue of a writ of commitment issued from the police court of said city under its judgment of conviction as aforesaid. The only defense which the defendant set up (as he says in his petition for the writ) why he should not have been convicted and punished for his alleged offense, was that he was authorized by an ordinance of the city of Oakland to obstruct the street as he did. The complaint upon which the defendant was tried properly charged an offense against the laws of this state, as defined in section 370, Pen. Code, and made punishable as a misdemeanor under section 372, same Code. We do not perceive anything in the complaint or the record of the police court which shows that the defendant had any justification or defense which would bar his prosecution for the offense alleged against him. And the court which tried him had jurisdiction of the offense. St. 1873-74, p. 906. But the defendant contends that, as a fact in the case, he was justified, by reason of a certain ordinance of the city of Oakland, in doing what would otherwise have been a violation of the state law. This ordinance he quotes at length in his petition for the writ of habeas corpus.

Thus it appears that the court who tried the defendant had jurisdiction of his person, and the offense for which he was tried, and that it tried, convicted, and sentenced him, perhaps, under an erroneous view of conflicting laws. What this court is now asked to do is to restore him to liberty on a writ of habeas corpus, because of the error of law committed by the trial court. We do not perceive how, in such a proceeding, this court can review the alleged erroneous action of the court below. "The writ of habeas corpus was not framed to retry issues of fact, or to review the proceedings of a legal trial." Ex parte Bird, 19 Cal. 130. The petitioner's contention involves only a question of mere error, and that cannot be inquired into upon the writ here invoked, but only upon proceedings in error. Ex parte Max, 44 Cal. 579-581; Ex parte Cohn, 55 Cal. 193, and cases cited.

The petition should be dismissed, and the petitioner remanded to the custody of the captain of police of the city of Oakland.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; SEARLS, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, petition dismissed and petitioner remanded.

PEOPLE v. MARKS. (No. 20,262.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 17, 1887.)

1. CRIMINAL PRACTICE—INSTRUCTIONS—FAILURE TO REQUEST.

A party who fails to ask an instruction on a particular subject cannot complain of the omission of the court to give such an instruction of its own motion.

2. SAME—RECORD SHOWING INSTRUCTION GIVEN BY COURT OF ITS OWN MOTION—PRESUMPTION.

The transcript of the record on appeal showing that a certain instruction was given by the lower court of its own motion, and stating that "was all the law so given in the action," held, it cannot be presumed from this that the court did not give any instructions at the instance of the parties.

3. SAME—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—PRESUMPTION AS TO EVIDENCE.

The bill of exceptions stating simply what the evidence of the principal witness for the state and for the defendant tended to show as to the commission of the crime charged, and does not show that there was not any evidence relating to the venue, nor that the evidence stated was all that given, held, there is nothing in the bill to make it appear affirmatively that the venue was not proved.

Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

Chas. B. Darwin, for appellant. The Attorney General, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. The defendant was tried and convicted of the crime of embezzlement. He appeals from the judgment rendered therein, and from an order denying him a new trial. He contends that the charge of the court, given on its own motion to the jury, does not declare to them that, in order to convict him as charged in the indictment, they must believe from the evidence that the crime so alleged against him was committed in the city and county of San Francisco, and that such omission on the part of the court constituted a reversible error. The bill of exceptions presented by the defendant does not show that he, or his counsel for him, requested the court to instruct the jury that, if the venue was not proven, they should acquit. Therefore the omission of that tribunal so to charge of its own motion cannot be taken advantage of by one who failed to exercise the privilege which he had of requesting an instruction or instructions on his behalf to be given to the jury upon the point in question. The charge of the court, which is before us, was given to the jury "of its own motion, and was all the law so given in the action." Transcript, 16. We cannot say, therefore, that the court did not give other instructions for the people or the defendant, in relation to the necessity for the proof of venue as laid in the indictment. The bill of exceptions states simply what the evidence of the principal witness for the people and that of the defendant tended to show as to the commission of an embezzlement of money. It does not show, or pretend to do so, that there was or not any evidence relative to the venue, nor is it anywhere made apparent that the above-stated was all the evidence given on that or any other point in the case. There is nothing whatever to make it appear affirmatively that the venue was not proved. To obtain a reversal of a judgment of conviction, the defendant must show error affirmatively, and all omissions and uncertainties in a bill of exceptions presented by him are to be construed against him. People v. Williams, 45 Cal. 27.

No prejudicial error is apparent from the record, and the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; SEARLS, C.

By THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. MORTON. (No. 20,257.)

1. CRIMINAL PRACTICE—INSTRUCTION—INTENT—DEFENDANT AS WITNESS.

On an indictment for burglary, a charge by the court to the effect that "it was not possible to give any direct proof of the intent of any person in the commission of any act, and that the prosecution could never, unless the defendant himself saw fit to speak, give any direct or positive proof of the intent," etc., held not error, as suggesting that any presumption should be indulged against the defendant because he did not give evidence as a witness in the cause.

2. SAME—APPLICATION TO FACTS.

On the trial of an indictment, a charge as follows: "Now, gentlemen, there is a proposition of law which may or may not be involved in this case, as you determine the facts, but it is eminently proper that I should give it to you, and that is," etc.,—cannot be held misleading, as leaving to the jury as their province to say whether or not the rule of law as given was applicable to the facts of the case in hand.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

John D. Whaley, for appellant. The Attorney General, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. The defendant was convicted of burglary in the second degree. He contends that the judgment therein rendered against him, and the order denying his motion for a new trial, should be reversed.

His first ground therefor is that the evidence was insufficient for his conviction. Upon a careful examination of the record, we are satisfied that the jury were fully warranted in believing and declaring by their verdict the defendant guilty as charged.

It is assigned for error that the court, in a portion of its charge, indulged in a presumption against the defendant for not testifying in his own behalf. The language objected to is as follows: "You all know that the intent is a simple mental operation, and we cannot, unless the defendant himself speaks,—it is not possible to give any direct positive proof of the intent of any person in the commission of any act. You cannot look into the human mind and see what its workings are. The prosecution can never, in any case, unless the defendant himself sees fit to speak, give any direct or positive evidence of the intent. * * *” The defendant did not go upon the stand and testify. We fail to see anything in the words above quoted, taken together with the rest of the charge, which announces to the jury in the remotest degree that any presumption should be indulged against the defendant because he did not give evidence as a witness in the cause. The jury were simply told that intent might be inferred from the facts and circumstances surrounding the transaction, in the absence of any declaration upon that subject which had emanated from the defendant.

As a part of the charge, this language was employed:

“Now, gentlemen, there is a proposition of law which may or may not be involved in this case, as you determine the facts, but it is eminently proper that I should give it to you, and that is that all persons concerned in the commission of a crime,” etc. It is not contended that the portion of the charge which immediately follows this is erroneous, but that the court, in uttering the words quoted, left to the jury, as their province, to say whether or not the rule of law as given was applicable to the facts of the case in hand. To us it seems that the court told the jury that if, in their opinion, the facts referred to in the charge were proven, then they should apply the rule of law as given; and this was not erroneous.

We do not think that the charge is objectionable for the reason assigned by the defendant, viz., that the jury, as he contends, are directed to convict the defendant if they believed from the evidence that he and his confederate, Connors, who had previously pleaded guilty, had confederated to commit larceny in the building 501 Post street, and entered the said building with the intent to commit larceny in any room therein; for the court in that connection further charged that, in addition to entering the building with such felonious intent, one of the conspirators must have entered a room of the building with the intention of committing a larceny therein, and as such room so entered the court in close connection therewith refers to Fortson’s room, the one in which the information charges the burglary was committed, and the only one which, as the proof abundantly shows, was entered with the intent to commit larceny therein.

The information charged that burglary had been committed in entering V. E. Fortson’s room. The court, giving an unstrained interpretation to the whole charge, announced to the jury that they must believe from the evidence that such room was so burglariously entered in order to convict the defendant; and the proof showed that it and no other room was entered with intent to commit larceny by the confederate of the defendant.

The judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; SEARLS, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

LYONS and others v. ROACH, Adm’r, etc. (No. 11,918.)

APPEAL—DISMISSAL—DEATH OF PARTY—SUBSTITUTION.

Where, from the affidavits on a motion to dismiss an appeal for failure to file a transcript, it appears that the plaintiff below, in whose behalf the motion is made, was dead when the judgment appealed from was entered, and the notice of appeal was claimed to have been served and filed, the appellate court will take notice of the death, and will not proceed further with the cause until the personal representatives of such plaintiff have been substituted as parties in the appellate court; and such a substitution in the court below, made long after the judgment and the taking of the appeal to the appellate court, will not be noticed in the latter court.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

This was a proceeding brought by Denis Lyons and others, respondents, against Roach, administrator, etc., appellants, in which judgment of foreclosure was rendered. Motion is now made to dismiss the appeal for failure to file a transcript.

Matt. I. Sullivan, for appellant. J. C. Bates, for respondents.

BY THE COURT. Motion to dismiss appeal on clerk's certificate. When the notice of this motion was served, and the motion brought to a hearing, the plaintiff in the action, (Denis Lyons,) when the judgment appealed from was entered, and the notice of appeal is claimed to have been served and filed, was dead, having departed this life long prior to the times first above mentioned. This appears by affidavits used on the motion, and is a sufficient suggestion of his death in this court. On such suggestion being made, this court has no authority to proceed further in the cause until his personal representatives have been substituted as parties in this court, and, until such substitution has been made, no motion can be made to dismiss the appeal. A substitution of the representatives of the deceased plaintiff in the court below, made long after the judgment, and the taking of the appeal to this court, cannot be noticed here. The parties, under the condition of matters above stated, must be substituted here, before any motion can be made or heard, or any available notice thereof given. The motion must be denied. As we hold that there is no motion before us, it is unnecessary to say that such denial is without prejudice to a motion, when the proper persons have been made parties in this court. Motion denied.

TREDINNICK and others v. RED CLOUD CONSOLIDATED MIN. CO. and another. (Nos. 9,816 and 9,817.)

1. MINER'S LIEN—CLAIM—SUFFICIENCY OF—CODE CIVIL PROC. CAL. § 1187.

In an action to enforce a mechanic's lien for labor done on a mining claim, a claim setting forth the kind and number of days of labor performed, the dates between which it was performed, with the aggregate amount then due, and "that the terms of payment for said labor were cash, as soon as said labor was performed," and describing the mine, which is well known, by name and the district, sufficiently complies with Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1187, prescribing that such claim must contain, among other things, "a statement of the terms, time given, and conditions of the labor contract, and also a description of the property to be charged with the lien sufficient for identification."

2. SAME—POSTPONEMENT OF LIEN—CODE CIVIL PROC. CAL. § 1188.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1188, providing that, in cases in which a claim for a lien for work done is filed against two or more mining claims, the person filing the same must designate the amount due to him on each of said mining claims, and under penalty of having his lien postponed to other liens, does not apply to a case where several mining claims have been consolidated, and are owned and worked as one mine, under a common name.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, Mono county.

Wallace, Greathouse & Blanding, for appellant Wadsworth. Craig & Meredith, T. C. Van Ness, and Louis T. Haggin, for appellant Red Cloud Consolidated Min. Co. P. W. Bennett and P. Reddy, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. C. This is a joint action brought by William Tredinnick and 29 other persons, as plaintiffs, to enforce liens for labor severally performed by them in and upon a mining claim known as the "Red Cloud Mine." The mine was situate in Mono county, and was owned and worked by the defendant the Red Cloud Consolidated Mining Company. Henry Wadsworth was joined as a defendant in the action because he had a judgment lien against the mine which, as alleged by plaintiffs, was subsequent and subordinate to their liens. In the court below judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiffs. The defendants separately moved for a new trial, and, their motion being denied, separately appealed from the judgment and order. The two appeals may be considered together.

The Code provides that, when one seeks to fasten a lien upon another's property, he must file with the county recorder his claim, containing, among other things, "a statement of the terms, time given, and conditions of his contract, and also a description of the property to be charged with the lien, sufficient for identification." Section 1187, Code Civil Proc. It is urged for the appellants that the claims filed by the plaintiffs do not contain the statement and description required by the statute, and are therefore fatally defective and insufficient. The provisions of the Code referred to "are to be liberally construed, with a view to effect its objects and to promote justice," and not strictly, as claimed. Section 4, Code Civil Proc. So construed, were the claims sufficient to create valid liens? We think they were. In each of them was set forth the kind and number of days of labor performed, with the dates between which it was performed, the price agreed to be paid for the labor per day, with the aggregate amount then due, and "that the terms of payment for said labor were cash, as soon as said labor was performed." This was a substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute as to the statement of the terms, time given, and conditions of the contract. Blackman v. Marsicano, 61 Cal. 638; Hills v. Ohlig, 63 Cal. 104.

The property on which the labor was performed was described as "that certain mine commonly called the 'Red Cloud Mine,' situate in the Bodie mining district, Bodie township, in said county, and hereinafter more particularly described." The particular description is by 16 courses and distances, commencing at a point easily ascertainable, and running around the place of beginning, "containing 35.31 acres, and known as the 'Red Cloud Mine.'" The fourth course reads, "Thence, 4th, 67 deg. 45 min. E., 1.51 chains, to N. E. cor. Gibraltar;" when it should have been, "Thence, 4th, S. 67 deg. 45 min. E.," etc. The fifth course reads, "Thence, 5th, S. 22 deg. 15 min. N., 11.07 chains, to N. boundary Top-gallant Royal;" when it should have been, "Thence, 5th, S., 22 deg. 15 min. W.," etc. The twelfth course reads, "Thence, 12th, S., 49 deg. 30 min. E., 1.06 chains, to N. E. cor. Westchester;" when it should have been, "Thence, 12th, S., 49 deg. 30 min E., 1.86 chains," etc.

It is claimed for the appellants that, on account of these errors, it becomes impossible to trace all of the exterior lines of the mine, and for that reason the description is insufficient. On the other hand, it is contended for the respondents that "Gibraltar," "Top-gallant Royal," and "Westchester" are names of adjoining, well-known, and defined mining claims, which are monuments, and must control the courses and distances. As they are used, these names seem to have been intended to represent monuments of some kind, and we cannot know judicially that they do not efficiently serve the purpose claimed for them. But, however this may be, we think the description by name was sufficient for the identification of the property. It appears from the evidence that the mine was well known and commonly spoken of as the "Red Cloud Mine;" and by the word "mine" was not meant "a subterranean cavity or passage, especially a pit or excavation in the earth from which metallic ores or other mineral substances are taken by digging," as that word is defined by Webster, but the whole claim or body of mining ground.

In Hotelling v. Cronise, 2 Cal. 63, which was an action to enforce a mechanic's lien, the notice filed described the property as "the wharf situated on Battery street, between Pacific and Jackson streets, in San Francisco." The court said: "We think the description of the property sufficiently certain. * * * It is sufficient if the claim be set forth with convenient certainty."

In Tibbetts v. Moore, 23 Cal. 212, which was a similar action, the property was described in the notice filed as a quartz-mill, being at or near the town of Scottsville, in Amador county, known as "Moore's New Quartz-mill." There was no evidence that there was any other quartz-mill at the place named, so designated as to render it uncertain which was intended, and it was held that the description was sufficient to identify the property, and uphold the lien.

In Halley v. Amestoy, 44 Cal. 132, the action was ejectment, and the principal question in the case related to the description of the premises found in the deed under which the defendants claimed. There were two descriptions, —one by name, and the other by courses, distances, and monuments. It appeared from the evidence that the property was well known by the name given to it, but the description by courses and distances was so erroneous that the lines could not thereby be traced. It was held that the description by name was sufficient, and that the other description might be disregarded. The same rule has been since embodied in the Code. Civil Code, § 1092.

If the foregoing cases are correct expositions of the law, we fail to see why the description by name was not sufficient to meet all the requirements of the statute in this case.

It is further claimed for the appellants that the proof as to the character and as to the amount of labor performed by plaintiffs is insufficient to support the decree, and also that "it does not appear from the evidence that any of the plaintiffs other than William Dunn, John Tredinnick, and Watkin Morgan had not, at the time of the commencement of the action, been paid in full for all services, if any, rendered." In the answer of the defendant corporation it is admitted that each of the plaintiffs performed labor upon its mine at the times, and in the capacity, and for the agreed rate of wages, alleged in the complaint, and that the sums of money respectively claimed to be due them for such labor were due and unpaid. In the answer of defendant Wadsworth it is alleged that he has no information sufficient to enable him to answer the averments of the complaint, and for that reason he denies that any of the plaintiffs performed labor upon the mine in the capacity alleged, or in any capacity, or that any money was due them and unpaid for such labor. At the commencement of the trial it was admitted by counsel, appearing for both defendants, "that plaintiffs John Tredinnick and William Dunn worked for the Red Cloud Consolidated Mining Company the number of days specified in the complaint;" and later in the trial it was further admitted "that each of the plaintiffs, except William Dunn and John Tredinnick, performed labor for the Red Cloud Consolidated Mining Company, on the property of the Red Cloud Consolidated Mining Company, for the number of days and at the rate of wages mentioned in the complaint, and to the amounts alleged by them respectively, and that they have not been paid for said labor." It was proved that William Dunn worked on the Red Cloud mine at the hoisting works as engineer; that he worked on the hoisting-engine, which lowered and hoisted the men and rock; that the water was raised from the mine by a pump, and that John Tredinnick was "pump-man;" that all the other plaintiffs worked in and upon the Red Cloud mine; that the mine was owned and worked by the Red Cloud Consolidated Mining Company; and, so far as the witness knew, the company had no other property in the mining district. These proofs, with the admissions made, were, in our opinion, quite sufficient to meet the objection above referred to, and justify the judgment which was entered.

The point is made for the appellant Wadsworth that the liens of the plaintiffs are made by the Code subordinate to his lien, and that the court erred in not so treating them.

The Code provides, (section 1188, Code Civil Proc.): "In every case in which one claim is filed against two or more buildings, mining claims, or other improvements owned by the same person, the person filing such claim must, at the same time, designate the amount due to him on each of such buildings, mining claims, or other improvements; otherwise the lien of such claim is postponed to other liens. The lien of such claimant does not extend beyond the amount designated, as against other creditors having liens, by judgment, mortgage, or otherwise, upon either of such buildings or other improvements, or upon the land upon which the same are situated."

It was proved that the entire property known as the "Red Cloud Mine" was made up of what were originally several mining locations, but that these locations or claims had been conveyed to the Red Cloud Consolidated Mining Company, and had been by it consolidated together, and held, worked, and treated as one mine or claim. Under the circumstances shown, we do not think the section invoked applies. It has been common in this state to consolidate two or more mining locations into one claim, and thereafter to treat and work them as one claim. After such a consolidation, the different locations cease to constitute different claims, and become in law, as they are in fact, only parts of one claim. The plaintiffs' labor was performed upon the property as a whole, and they were entitled, as we think, under the proofs, to claim liens upon it as a whole.

We find no error in the record prejudicial to the appellants, and the judgment and orders should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and orders are affirmed.

BUHLERT v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.
(No. 11,646.)

INSOLVENCY—ASSIGNEE IN CONTEMPT FOR DISOBEYING ORDER TO PAY MONEY NOT ASSETS.

Section 67 of "the California insolvent act of 1880," providing that the official undertaking of an assignee in insolvency stands in the place of an undertaking on appeal, does not apply to an appeal taken by such an assignee from a judgment against him, in which it is adjudged that the money ordered to be paid by him forms no part of the assets of his insolvent's estate and the court has jurisdiction in such case to commit the assignee for contempt in disobeying the order.

In bank.

A. D. Splivalo, for petitioner. J. W. Harding, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. Application for a writ of review as to order committing petitioner, Buhlert, for contempt of court. In an action of Sere v. McGovern et al., pending in the court above named, Buhlert was properly made a party as assignee in insolvency of McGovern. The action was for the settlement of the accounts of a partnership between Sere and McGovern. The property of the firm, it seems, had passed into the hands of Buhlert, as assignee as aforesaid, who took possession of it under an order in the insolvency case, and had, by agreement of all parties, including Sere, been sold by the assignee, from which was realized the sum of $1,588. By the final judgment in the action of Sere v. Buhlert, assignee, et al., it was adjudged that plaintiff recover of Buhlert, assignee as aforesaid, the sum of $794, and Buhlert was by the judgment required to pay into court, within 10 days after its rendition, the said sum of money for the use of plaintiff. This order to pay into court the sum mentioned was disobeyed by Buhlert. Thereupon proceedings were taken against him for contempt of court, and he was adjudged guilty of contempt, and punishment was pronounced against him therefor. The application here is to review and annul this order.

The above facts appear by the return to this court. But it is urged that Buhlert has appealed from the judgment above entered in the case of Sere v. Buhlert et al., and has filed an undertaking on appeal in the sum of $300, and that, by a portion of section 67 of the insolvent act, the bond of Buhlert, as assignee, stays all proceedings on the judgment, and no undertaking to stay execution is required, and, in consequence of the foregoing, the court had no jurisdiction to enforce its judgment by a proceeding for contempt. The contention is without anything to support it. Section 67 of the insolvent act has no application to the appeal taken by Buhlert. It applies only to the appeals specified in the section cited, of which the appeal of Buhlert is not one. The court had jurisdiction as to the contempt proceeding, and the application to annul the order of the court committing the applicant for contempt must be denied.

On the argument it was urged that Buhlert's accounts as assignee were still unsettled, and that on such settlement the sum of $1,588 in his hands would be materially reduced. But it should be remembered that Buhlert was the assignee of McGovern; that the money for which Sere obtained the judgment above mentioned was no part of the assets or estate of McGovern, and should not be used to pay the creditors of McGovern, or the costs and expenses attending McGovern's proceedings in insolvency. The money belonged to Sere, and should go to him. This was so adjudged, and we cannot look behind the judgment entered in favor of Sere. If there is any error in the procurement of this judgment, it can be, and will be, considered on appeal from it, should such error appear on the record brought here on such appeal.

The application is denied, and the proceedings dismissed.

We concur: MCFARLAND, J.; TEMPLE, J.; MCKINSTRY, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

PATERSON, J., (concurring.) The authority of the court to command a judgment debtor to pay into court money sufficient to satisfy the judgment, under any circumstances, and to summarily enforce such command by proceedings for contempt, is by no means clear, even where the debtor is an officer of the court, in another proceeding therein pending. The petitioner makes no complaint on this ground, however, and, considering it waived, I concur.

KRUGER and another v. WESTERN FIRE & MARINE INS. CO. OF CALIFORNIA. (No. 11,750.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 22, 1887.)

FIRE INSURANCE — RECEIPT OF PREMIUM BY AGENT WITH KNOWLEDGE OF BREACH OF CONDITION.

Where the agent of a fire insurance company, well knowing that petroleum oil is kept on the premises by the insured, makes out and delivers to him a policy containing a condition that the same shall be void if petroleum oil is kept on the premises, and receives the premium for the policy, his company is estopped from claiming that the policy is void for breach of the condition, and that a waiver by parol cannot affect the written agreement.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

T. C. Van Ness, for appellant. Geo. Lezinsky, for respondents.

FOOTE, C. This was an action to recover upon two policies of insurance. The cause was tried before a jury, who brought in a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs, upon which a judgment was rendered against the defendant for $1,500, costs, etc. From that judgment an appeal is prosecuted.

From the record it appears that, in the year 1881, Grant Lapham, the agent of the defendant in the county of Alameda, where the plaintiffs kept their stock of goods, was at the place of business of the plaintiffs, and examined said stock; and that on the thirty-first day of August, 1881, after such examination, the defendant issued a policy of insurance upon the stock of goods thus examined by its agent. The testimony of one of the plaintiffs with reference to the transaction was as follows: "Yes, sir; I did have a conversation with him, [meaning Lapham.] First, you know, we insured with another man. The agent came round, and insured us. That was right before the fourth of July. He did not bring round the policy; he kept the policy. During the 4th we did not have any policy at all. Right after the 4th he brought it around. I said: 'You just bring it around now. There is no danger now.' That was before. 'The danger is over now,' I says. 'You can keep it now.' He left it in the store; left it there over a week. I told him I would not accept it. Then, during the week, I read over the policy what he left there. It mentioned something about the coal-oil. During that time Mr. Grant Lapham came around, and said he wanted to insure us. I told him about this. He was a friend of mine. I told him about this that was in the policy. 'What is the use of insuring? We cannot get nothing if we burn out. Because it says there—mentions about the coal-oil.' He says: 'Such a small amount as you keep, that won't be any matter. You don't keep any large amount.' I told him, 'All right; go on and insure us.' Then he brought around the policy, so it was all right. We kept it."

It was further proved that upon the expiration of the policy thus issued, in August, 1881, and at the expiration of each year thereafter, down to and including the issuance of the policies in suit, new policies in the same company, upon the same description of goods, were issued by defendant to plaintiffs. No further conversations with any agent of the defendant were proved, nor were any other policies than those in suit introduced on the trial.

It appeared in evidence that there was an indorsement on said policies as follows:

"Not valid until countersigned by the regularly authorized agent at Oakland, Alameda county, Cal. Countersigned, Oakland.

"GRANT LAPHAM."

The record further shows that during all the times that the policies sued on were in force, and at the time of the fire and loss in the complaint alleged, the plaintiffs kept, stored, used, and sold, upon the premises in which the property described in the policies was during such time kept, the products of petroleum, consisting of illuminating oils; that the said oils were kept in a 10-gallon tank, into which they were poured at the top, and from which, when required by customers, they were drawn through a faucet; that the premises were lighted with said oils in lamps, and that the fire alleged in the complaint was directly caused by the fall of one of the said lamps; that the tank in which said oils were kept was the same tank that had been used by the plaintiffs on said premises during all the times they had carried on business on said premises, and that it had, during all of said times, stood directly opposite, within a few feet of the entrance to said premises, and in full view of every one who entered the same; that no other oils were kept by the plaintiffs on said premises, except those kept in said tank, and plaintiffs also used said tank for the purpose of filling the lamps used for lighting said premises.

The policies of insurance contained, among others, this clause: "C. This company shall not be liable for loss occurring while any of the following-named articles are kept, stored, or used in or on the premises herein described, any custom or usage of trade or manufacture to the contrary notwithstanding, namely, petroleum and its products."

It will be seen that the plaintiffs, having kept petroleum and its products on the premises in question, although in small quantity, could not recover on the policies, unless it should appear that the condition of the policy upon that subject had been waived by the company. The acts and language of Lapham, as above stated, are not contradicted, nor is it disputed that he was the regularly constituted agent of the company, resident at Oakland, when the first policy of insurance was issued. The policies sued on were unquestionably but renewals of that policy, and we think that an agent so appointed and authorized as he was, was empowered to waive the condition of the policy, and we are of opinion that the plaintiffs were warranted, from what he said and did, in believing, and did believe, that such condition was waived. Lapham was the general agent of the company at Oakland, and authorized to represent it, make contracts of insurance, and transact its business at that place, according to the practice and course of dealing of such corporations. He was authorized to make and did make the original contract of insurance, and the policies in suit, being but renewals of that, are to be affected by his acts as if they were the original contract. Miner v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 27 Wis. 693, and cases cited.

The agent of the defendant, authorized to act for them, and by whose acts they were bound, knew when he countersigned and delivered the policy that it was absolutely void, unless he had waived the condition of the policy by means of the alleged existence of which the company now seeks to avoid the payment of the loss. That is to say, the agent and the company took the premium, and yet believed the policy was void. And the company now says: "At the time we took your premium your policy was void, although our agent told you it was not, and induced you so to believe, yet you cannot recover of us the loss you claim, and you cannot be heard to state in evidence what our agent said, as that would be to vary the terms of a written contract by parol testimony." This we think the company is estopped from doing. Woodruff v. Imperial Fire Ins. Co., 83 N. Y. 140, and cases cited.

The delivery of the contract, and a breach of its condition, were concurrent acts, if the defendant's theory of the case be correct; and at the moment the contract was entered into it was void, although the party effecting the policy on his goods paid then and there the premium, and was made by the agent to believe that the policy was valid, and the petroleum oil clause waived. The defendant's contention is without force. In the language of a distinguished judge, "we would scarce expect two parties to go through so senseless an act" as is claimed to have been done by the defendant, "if the facts were known to each at the time; but would rather conclude that they had by words or act agreed that the condition should not be considered as binding." Van Schoick v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co., 68 N. Y. 436.

We are of opinion that the evidence objected to was properly allowed to go to the jury; that their verdict was in accordance with the facts in evidence, and the charge of the court, which last was not erroneous; that no prejudicial error is shown by the record; and that the judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; SEARLS, C.

By THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

SPRECKELS v. ORD. (No. 9,703.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 22, 1887.)

APPEAL—NO FINDING ON MATERIAL ISSUE—EJECTMENT—LIMITATIONS.

Where, in an action to recover the possession of real property in which defendant pleads the statute of limitations, judgment is rendered for plaintiff without any passing by the court upon the plea of the statute, and no bill of exceptions is taken embodying evidence tending to show that a finding, if made, must have been against defendant, the judgment must be reversed on defendant's appeal; and an entry on the minutes of a stipulation at the trial by the parties to waive the plea of the statute will not avail to save the judgment, as such an entry constitutes no part of the judgment roll, nor can it be construed as an amendment of the answer striking out the plea.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county.

The deed from Castro to the grantor of the defendant, referred to in the opinion, described the land as follows: "Beginning at the head of the Arroyo de los Borregas, at a blazed oak tree, and running down and along said arroyo to the sea-beach; thence, along the same easterly, to some small trees growing in a small pocket or break in the top of the cliff, one of which is blazed; thence north to a blazed tree and the gulch near by being the first gulch to the east of the Arroyo de los Borregas, running parallel to a blazed oak tree, growing at the head of said gulch; thence westerly, in a direct line, to the place of beginning."

S. W. Holladay, for appellant. Charles B. Younger, for respondent.

McKINSTRY, J. An action to recover the possession of real property. The defendant pleaded the appropriate statute of limitations, contained in certain sections of the Code of Civil Procedure. The appeal is from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, as well as from an order denying a motion for a new trial, and the court below failed to find upon the issue made by the plea of the statute. Thus the court failed to find upon a material issue. In such cases we can affirm the judgment only when the evidence shows that the finding, if one has been made, must have been adverse to the appellant. No bill of exceptions has been brought up showing what evidence was offered in support of the plea of the statute of limitations, or that none was offered, or that at the trial it was agreed the court should find against the defendant upon the plea, or that the plea of the statute was withdrawn. We cannot say, therefore, that, if the court had found on the issue, the finding would have been against the defendant. If at the trial the counsel for the respective parties, by stipulation entered in the minutes, stipulated "both parties waive any claim by adverse possession, or under the statute of limitations," such entry in the minutes constitutes no part of the judgment roll. Code Civil Proc. § 670. Nor can the entry be construed as an amendment of the answer striking out the plea of the statute. Pleadings must be in writing, subscribed by the party or his attorney. Code Civil Proc. § 446. If a complaint is amended, a copy of the amendment must be filed, etc. Code Civil Proc. § 432. And such has always been the practice with respect to amendments of answers.

For failure to find upon a material issue, the judgment must be reversed.

There is no patent ambiguity in the deed from Castro to the grantor of the defendant, since the blazed tree and the head of the Arroyo de los Borregos are both stated to be at the same point; and so of the blazed tree and the head of the gulch mentioned. When the evidence showed, if it did show, that the head of the arroyo and the blazed tree (both mentioned in the deed as the commencement point) were a considerable distance apart, the ambiguity, hitherto latent, was discovered. It was for the jury, or court sitting as a jury, to find as facts where was the head of the arroyo, and where was the blazed tree; and inasmuch as the tree actually blazed by the parties to the deed, or adopted by them as the point of commencement, was a more certain object than the "head" of the arroyo,—a place somewhat indefinite, and perhaps shifting,—it was the duty of the court to determine, as matter of law, that such tree (if clearly identified) was the controlling monument. Evidence tending to identify the tree was admissible. But, as the cause must go back for a new trial, we decline to express any opinion as to the credibility of the only witness whose testimony has been brought here, or as to whether his testimony tended to fix the location of the trees, or was sufficient to identify them.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

APPEAL—STIPULATIONS EXTENDING TIME FOR SURETIES TO JUSTIFY—WAIVER OF DELAY IN FILING TRANSCRIPT.

Stipulations by a respondent extending the time for the sureties upon appellant's undertaking to justify, after an exception to them has been taken, is not a waiver of any objection to any of the proceedings taken to effect the appeal, and an appeal will be dismissed for failure to file a transcript, irrespective of such stipulations.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

Motion to dismiss appeal for failure to file transcript in time.

C. Wittram, for appellant. B. McKinne, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. The failure of the sureties on an undertaking on appeal to justify after an exception to their pecuniary sufficiency has been taken, does not render the appeal ineffectual. Hill v. Finnigan, 54 Cal. 311. It merely operates to avoid the stay of execution of the judgment appealed from. Schacht v. Odell, 52 Cal. 449.

The stipulation of respondent, therefore, extending the time for appellant's sureties to justify, is not a waiver of any objection to any of the proceedings taken to effect the appeal. The notice of appeal was filed and served on October 6, 1886. On the eleventh day of October, 1886, an undertaking on appeal was filed, and on the fourteenth of the same month the respondent served and filed exceptions to the sufficiency of the sureties. Since that time the justification of said sureties has been postponed from time to time, by stipulation of counsel for the respective parties. No transcript has been filed herein, and the clerk of the superior court certifies "that the appellant has not requested the clerk to certify to a correct transcript of the record in said cause, and that no statement or bill of exceptions on appeal has been filed herein by plaintiff." For this failure to file the transcript within the 40 days prescribed by the rule the motion to dismiss must be granted. Appeal dismissed.

CONTEMPT—VIOLATION OF INJUNCTION.

Where, in proceedings for a contempt of court alleged to have been committed by defendant in violating an injunction, the court has dismissed the proceeding, the appellate court will not, in such a proceeding, pass upon the question of whether the court below erred in the construction of the judgment which it held not to have been disobeyed.

Department 2.

A judgment was obtained enjoining defendant in an action, (Heinlen v. Heilbron, 12 Pac. Rep. 673,) the Last-chance Water-ditch Company, from interfering with the flow of water in a certain slough. Petitioners claimed defendant violated the injunction.

Brown & Daggett, for petitioners. Atwell & Bradley, for respondents.

By THE COURT. Application for writ of mandate to review order of above-named court dismissing a proceeding for contempt, and to command the court to punish the party for the alleged contempt. The court, after hearing the proceeding for contempt, dismissed it, in effect holding that the party proceeded against was not guilty. It is clear to us that the court acted within its jurisdiction. It construed the judgment out of an alleged disobedience to which the proceeding for contempt had its origin, and must have held that the judgment was not disobeyed. The court may have erred in its construction of the judgment, but that would be error which this court cannot pass on in this proceeding.

The application for the writ is denied, and the proceeding dismissed. So ordered.

BEACH v. COOPER and others. (No. 9,287.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 22, 1887.)

1. CORPORATION—ACTION BY STOCKHOLDER AGAINST DIRECTORS AND OTHERS FOR FRAUD AND BREACH OF TRUST.

Suit may be brought by a stockholder, on behalf of his corporation, against the directors and others, for frauds, wrongs, and breaches of trust, and for the recovery from them of money of which the corporation has been defrauded, and the corporation be joined as a defendant.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

This action was brought by Carnie W. Beach, respondent, a stockholder of the Alexander Mining Company, on behalf of said corporation, against J. B. Cooper, A. B. Cooper, George A. Ball, John McNeil, Manuel San Pedro, and the Alexander Mining Company, appellants, for an account and recovery of money of which it was alleged to have been defrauded by the defendants. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants appeal.

Fox & Kellogg, for appellants. H. G. Sieberst, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. The plaintiff, a stockholder in the Alexander Mining Company, commenced this action against the individual defendants, who are the directors of the company, making the corporation also a defendant. The suit was brought on behalf of the corporation, alleging numerous frauds committed by the directors, and praying an account and a recovery by the corporation of moneys of which it had been so defrauded. Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff, and this appeal is from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial.

The corporation was formed in 1877, for the purpose of mining, and owned a lode of gold and silver bearing ore in the state of Nevada. It had constructed expensive works upon the mine, mostly upon credit, and was largely indebted, and in the year 1880 found itself financially embarrassed, and the demands against it pressing. Defendants J. B. Cooper, McNeil, and San Pedro owned a large majority of the stock of the corporation. Cooper and San Pedro owned individually several mining claims, located contiguous to or near the mine owned by the corporation. They concluded to sell the mines owned by themselves and the corporation. Accordingly, in June, 1880, Cooper and San Pedro executed a bond for the sale of their individual mining property and two-thirds of the capital stock of the corporation to Baldwin and McLaughlin. The latter sent to New York one Welsh to effect, if possible, a sale of the mines owned by the individuals, and also the property of the corporation. McLaughlin loaned money for the use of the corporation to the amount of $60,000. Defendants Cooper and San Pedro became personally liable for this money. The individual defendants then endeavored to sell the property in New York, and at the same time to borrow, if possible, a large sum of money to meet the urgent demands.

Substantially, it is found that in December, 1880, the defendants caused the corporation to make a promissory note, payable to one L. E. Chittenden, of the city of New York, for the sum of $250,000, with interest at the rate of 9 per cent. per annum, secured by mortgage upon all the property of the corporation; that the defendant Ball, who was vice-president of the corporation, proceeded to New York, and while there, as the agent of J. B. Cooper and San Pedro, entered into a conspiracy with Brown, Chittenden, and Welsh to cause the note and mortgage to be assigned to Brown for the sum of $140,000; that this purpose was accomplished, and the money was paid to J. B. Cooper individually, and was used by him in violation of his trust, and not paid to the corporation until long afterwards; that, as part of the fraudulent scheme, they caused the corporation to execute another note for $65,000 to Brown, on the fifth day of April, 1881, which was antedated as of December 22, 1880, also secured by mortgage upon the property of the corporation; that there was no valuable consideration whatever for this note received by the corporation; that all these acts were in pursuance of, and part and parcel of, a fraudulent conspiracy of the individual defendants with Chittenden, which was intended to have the effect of increasing their own profits and income, to the loss and expense of the corporation. It is found that the corporation paid both notes in full. The findings also show other smaller sums fraudulently expended by the directors. The complaint does not contain any very distinct charge that the individual defendants did gain anything by the supposed frauds, or that the corporation lost anything. It is said, in general terms, after stating the conspiracies and frauds perpetrated by said defendants, as follows: "Having and being by them intended to have the operation and effect of increasing their own private individual gains, profits, and income, to the loss and expense of said corporation," etc.

The answer contains full and specific denials as to all acts of fraud alleged, and particularly denies that the notes and mortgages were not executed by the corporation or in its interests, or for the individual gain of the defendants, or that the corporation suffered loss thereby. Upon this issue there is no finding. True, it appears that the corporation gave its obligations for $315,000 for a loan for a few months of $140,000. This was a very suspicious transaction, and would of itself go a great way towards the proof of fraud. But there was an attempt at the trial to show that the transaction was not really a disadvantage to the corporation; that it was heavily indebted, and the debts were pressing, and that it was necessary to have $140,000 at once to save the property of the corporation; and that the effect of the loan was to save its property from being sacrificed to pay the debts, and that thereafter it was sold for a large sum, the debts all paid, and a surplus left for the stockholders. It is not necessary now to say that such facts were satisfactorily proven; but here is a material issue upon which there is no finding.

In the ninth finding it is found that the individual defendants did not, in 1879, 1880, or 1881, fraudulently or otherwise, abstract or appropriate to themselves any money from the funds of the corporation save and except the sum or sums thereafter specifically set out. The findings after that contain the findings the substance of which we have stated, but no finding of any moneys abstracted by the defendants. There is no finding that the defendants or any of them did receive, might have received, or ought to have received, anything whatever through or in consequence of the frauds charged against them. There is no order for an account to be taken to ascertain such supposed gains. The suit is brought for an account for the frauds, wrongs, and breaches of trust, and for the sums received by the defendants, or such other sums as they received, or might or ought to have received, and all the proceeds and fruits thereof. Under the issues made, we think the findings do not sustain the judgment.

As to the claim that the corporation is not before the court, it is enough to say, for the purposes of the suit, the plaintiff represents the corporation.

This is naturally subject to many limitations and qualifications, but it is the theory of such action that the legal agents of a corporation, refusing or being disqualified to act, the stockholders may assert their rights through an action in behalf of the corporation. We are not called upon to say how far such a proceeding concludes the corporation, but it is plain that the plaintiff and the defendants continue to be the real adverse parties. The notice of appeal was properly served on the attorney for the plaintiff, and such an appeal necessarily brings up also the corporate defendant, and in such a proceeding it would seem that at no stage can that defendant be dismissed from the case without working a discontinuance.

The judgment is reversed, and a new trial ordered, with leave to either party to amend their pleadings, if so advised.

FOOT, Adm'r, etc., v. MURPHY. (No. 9,485.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 23, 1887.)

1. EJECTMENT—TITLE—EVIDENCE—POSSESSION.

Where, in an action of ejectment in which neither party shows any paper title, it is shown that plaintiff's decedent entered upon the land 10 years previously, and fenced it on all sides except where it abutted on his own land, which possession was continued by his administrator till ousted by defendant, a state of facts is shown sufficient to warrant a judgment for plaintiff.

2. SAME—POSSESSION OF THIRD PARTIES.

In an action of ejectment, where neither party claims under a paper title, evidence offered by defendant tending to show that, prior to plaintiff's taking possession, the land had been in the possession of other parties, is immaterial and inadmissible.

THORNTON, J., dissenting.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Appeal from superior court, San Benito county.

Burchard & Cothran and Burchard & Scott, for appellant. Briggs & Hawkins, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This is an action of ejectment, brought by Joseph Foot, as the administrator of Jose Ignacio Roze, deceased, against A. S. Murphy, to recover possession of certain lands of the decedent's estate. The plaintiff obtained judgment for the recovery of the premises, one dollar damages, and the costs of the action. From that, and an order denying him a new trial, the defendant has appealed.

Neither party to the action claimed or showed any paper title to the premises, but the plaintiff relied upon his right of prior possession, from which he claimed to have been unlawfully ousted by the defendant, to sustain his contention. It is contended by the defendant that the findings do not sustain the judgment. They show, substantially, that the plaintiff's decedent entered upon the land and took possession of the same, 10 years prior to the first day of April, 1883; that this possession was continued by the plaintiff, as administrator, until his ouster by defendant; that the land was subjected to the will and dominion of the decedent and said administrator for the purpose to which it was adapted,—that is, the grazing of cattle; that the former inclosed it with a fence on all sides, save that on which he owned other land, which other land was used by them for grazing in conjunction with that in dispute; that they excluded all other persons from using it, and exclusively enjoyed its advantages for grazing purposes by means of the fence and herders, keeping their own cattle upon the land and other cattle away from it, which state of facts was sufficient to warrant the judgment. Sheldoan v. Mull, 7 Pac. Rep. 710, and cases cited.

It is true that the defendant claimed a prior possession, and showed that, at one time, anterior to that of the plaintiff, he had such possession; but the court found that such possession had been abandoned before that of the plaintiff commenced, and we think the evidence justified the finding. The finding of abandonment appears under the heading of "Conclusions of Law," but it is evidently a mere finding of a fact. Perhaps it is unfortunate that it, as well as other findings strictly of facts, appear under that same heading; but that does not constitute them conclusions of law. We are of opinion, also, that the court found upon all the material issues raised by the pleadings.

The defendant also assigns for error the refusal of the court to allow Jamison, a witness, to answer this question: "Do you know why Anderson left?"—claiming that its answer would tend to show defendant's claim of prior possession. But we cannot agree with him. It was not in issue or claimed that Anderson had any title or transferred any to the defendant, and the former could not transfer any right to the latter by a mere abandonment of the premises. The testimony of Domingo Roze, the brother of the deceased, as to conversations between himself, the former, and the defendant, were strictly in rebuttal of the testimony which the defendant had introduced, tending to show that the deceased had admitted the former's prior right, and disclaimed any on his own part. The question put to that witness, "Did your brother ever say he claimed the lands north of the gulch?" was answered by him in the negative, hence no detriment accrued to the defendant. The answer that he gave, viz., "He pointed out his inclosure," was not objectionable. Upon the cross-examination of the same witness this question was asked: "Was not the land in dispute occupied by another person when you say your brother and Murphy had their conversation?" It was objected to, and the objection sustained, and of that, also, the defendant complains, but, as we think, without sufficient grounds. This was an action brought solely on the prior possession of the plaintiff, against the defendant as a mere trespasser, and the latter, therefore, could not justify his wrongful act by showing title in another. Bird v. Lisbros, 9 Cal. 1.

The testimony of Mr. Briggs, and the documentary evidence introduced through him, were admissible as tending to rebut the defendant's evidence, which went to show an acknowledgment of his prior right by the deceased. The defendant also contends that the court should have allowed him to have been heard to testify in denial of the evidence given by Domingo Roze, as to the conversation detailed by the latter, in rebuttal. If it appeared satisfactorily from the record that this evidence had been new matter, we should say that the point was well taken; but it was not new matter, being in rebuttal of the claim which the defendant had during the trial, by evidence before that time, advanced, that the deceased had admitted in a conversation that his right was subordinate to that of the defendant.

No prejudicial error appearing by the record, the judgment and order should be affirmed.

APPEAL—PROBATE CONTEST—HARMLESS ERROR IN INSTRUCTION.

In proceedings to contest a will, brought by a party claiming to have been married to the testator, an instruction by the court on the point of what constitutes legal marriage at the time the relation was alleged to have existed, even if erroneous, is no ground for reversal, where it is shown that the relation between petitioner and deceased was not marriage under any construction of the law upon that subject.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Wells, Van Dyke & Lee and Wicks & Bentley, for appellant. Glassell, Smith & Patton and Bicknell & White, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. Andre Briswalter died April 20, 1885, leaving a will in which the respondents Hellman, Hammel, and Denker were named as executors, who petitioned to have it admitted to probate, and for letters testamentary. The appellant, calling herself Celedonia Guirado de Briswalter, and claiming to be the surviving wife of said Andre Briswalter, deceased, filed written grounds of opposition to the probate of said will. Respondents then filed an answer and petition, in which they denied that appellant was the surviving wife of the deceased, or had any interest in his estate, and objected to her right to make a contest of the probate of said will, and prayed that said contest be dismissed. The other respondents, Louis and Christina Mesmer, two of the beneficiaries under the will, also filed similar objections to the hearing of the contest. The appellant filed an answer averring specifically that she was such wife. The issue thus made was submitted by the court to a jury, who found that the appellant was not the surviving wife of said deceased. Appellant moved to set aside the verdict, and for a new trial of said issue, and, her motion having been denied, she appeals from the order denying the new trial, and also from the judgment and order of the court dismissing said contest, and admitting said will to probate.

The only ground for reversal contended for by appellant which we deem it necessary to particularly notice is the alleged error of the court in instructing the jury what constituted legal marriage at the time when that relation is claimed to have existed between appellant and the deceased. It was admitted by appellant that there never was any ceremony between deceased and herself before any officer or person authorized to solemnize marriages; but she testified that, commencing in the year 1861 and ending in 1864, there were such facts of intimacy and cohabitation and mutual assumption of the marital relation by and between them as constituted in law a marriage. Now, the court instructed the jury (substantially) that prior to January, 1873, there could be no legal marriage in this state without the ceremony and solemnization required by the statutes then in existence; and that although, without direct evidence of such solemnization, it might, under some circumstances, be presumed from the existence of other facts, yet that such presumption would be overcome by the admission or clear proof that the conditions necessary to a legal marriage never were, in fact, complied with. But, whether or not this instruction was erroneous,—and we do not decide that it was erroneous,—the evidence, admissions, and proven facts in this case show clearly that the relation between the appellant and the deceased was not marriage under the most liberal construction of the law upon that subject. If the instruction objected to had not been given at all, the jury would have been bound to find as they did; and if they had found for appellant their verdict should have been set aside as against the evidence. The proof is overwhelmingly to the point that appellant and the deceased never publicly assumed the marriage relation towards each other; that they never lived as husband and wife “in the face of their neighbors;” that she did not take and was not known by his name; and that the relation between them was generally recognized as meretricious. Her own acts show that she did not consider the relation that of marriage; because after she quit living with the deceased, and 10 years before his death, upon a marriage license regularly issued by the county clerk of Los Angeles county, in which she was named “Celedonia Wilburn,” she was solemnly married by a justice of the peace to one Andres Souer, with whom she has lived ever since as his wife. Under these circumstances there is no need of a critical examination of abstract questions about the law of marriage. If we deemed the instruction to the jury erroneous, we would not reverse the judgment; because, under any instructions upon the subject which we could hold to be correct, the verdict should have been for respondents. Green v. Ophir C., S. & G. M. Co., 45 Cal. 527.

With these views of the case, it is unnecessary to note minor points made by counsel, further than to say that we see no material errors in the ruling of the court below.

CASWELL v. HARRIS. (No. 8,591.)

PLEDGE BY OFFICERS OF BANK—ASSIGNMENT FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS—FRAUD.

Where, on the question of an alleged fraudulent pledge made by the president and secretary of a corporation for the benefit of certain creditors, the court below directs the jury that said president and secretary had power to make the pledge, and the jury find the same to be fraudulent, a judgment affirming such verdict will not be disturbed, the question of fraud being for the jury, and their verdict not necessarily contrary to the direction of the court.

Department 2.

This is an action in replevin, brought by B. F. Caswell, appellant, as a pledge-holder of certain personal property, against defendant, who took the said property as sheriff under two writs of attachment. The property belonged to a corporation named the Bear-creek Lumber Company, which turned it over, by way of pledge, to plaintiff, for the benefit of all its creditors except mortgage creditors. This pledge was to replace a prior agreement, assented to by all the creditors, placing the business in the hands of a trustee, who had not accepted. This agreement restrained the creditors from suing. The agreement to accept the pledge was signed by certain of the creditors only. Immediately after this pledge, the mortgage creditors brought suit by attachment, claiming that their security was worthless. They attached this property in that suit. They obtained judgment, and defendant, as sheriff, sold the property. Some of the other creditors also placed a second attachment on the property, and obtained judgment, notwithstanding the agreement, claiming it was void by reason of some of the signers to it being paid in full, in pursuance of a secret understanding to that effect when the agreement was signed. This was proved on the trial of the case of Kauffmann v. Bear-creek Lumber Co. Both Harmon and Kauffmann claimed the pledge was void, because made to defraud the creditors of the company. Judgment was rendered for defendant. Plaintiff moved for a new trial, on the ground that there was no evidence to support the verdict, and also on the ground of erroneous rulings of the court. The motion being denied, this appeal was taken.

S. F. Leib, C. D. Wright, and Moore & Laine, for appellant. L. Archer, D. M. Delman, and J. A. Yoell, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. Conceding that the court below erred in its direction to the jury, in which it affirmed the power of the president and secretary of the Bear-creek Lumber Company, a corporation, to make a pledge of its property in satisfaction of a just claim of the company, still the jury might have based their verdict on the conclusion that such assignment was void as made with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors. On this issue certain circumstances were before the jury for their consideration. The jury were the proper triers of the intent, for the fraudulent intent of such an assignment is always a question of fact, and not of law, and is so expressly declared by statute in this state. Civil Code, § 3442. See section 3449. In this view, the jury might, and no doubt did, find a verdict which was not at all in conflict with any instruction given them. The learned judge of the court below does not appear to have thought that the jury disobeyed any instruction which was given them. The motion for a new trial was denied by him, and we think properly denied. We find no error in the record.

The judgment and order are affirmed. So ordered.

WITNESS—HUSBAND AND WIFE—REVERSAL.

In an action for the recovery of personal property, the admission of the testimony of plaintiff's wife against him, without his consent, is ground for reversal, under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1881.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county.

F. B. Ogden, for appellant. Saml. B. Wiggin, for respondent.

BY THE COURT. This is an action for the recovery of personal property. The wife of the plaintiff was called as a witness for the defendant, and gave testimony against the plaintiff without his consent. Her testimony was material, in fact covered nearly all the matters included in the findings of the court. The ruling admitting the testimony over plaintiff's objection was duly excepted to. We think the evidence in regard to the proceedings in insolvency was incompetent, and the objection on that ground should have been sustained. It is plain that the findings would not support a judgment for plaintiff.

Judgment and order reversed, and a new trial ordered.

PEOPLE v. HUFF. (No. 20,238.)

1. CRIMINAL PRACTICE—APPEAL—RECORD—OMISSIONS IN MINUTES.

Where, on an indictment for murder, the minutes of the court show the following: "Thereupon the defendant and the jurors go in charge of a sworn officer to inspect the premises where the crime was committed, and, subsequently returning into court, were called, and all answered to their names,"—error will not be presumed from the fact that the minutes do not show that the "sworn officer" in charge was the sheriff, or that the place of the crime was shown by a person appointed by the court for that purpose, or that the defendant's counsel and the judge of the court were present, but the error must be affirmatively shown.

2. SAME—SENTENCE—RECOMMENDATION TO MERCY.

Where, on trial of an indictment for murder, the jury render a verdict of murder in the second degree, therein recommending the defendant to the mercy of the court, which passes a judgment of imprisonment for life, the appellate court cannot reverse for that reason.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

L. I. Mowry, W. W. Foote, and T. C. Coogan, for appellant. The Attorney General, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. The defendant was accused of the crime of murder, committed in the city and county of San Francisco. At the trial it was admitted that he committed the homicide charged, by shooting the deceased with a pistol, but it was claimed that the killing was justifiable, or, at most, amounted only to manslaughter. He was, however, convicted of murder in the second degree, and sentenced to imprisonment for life. He moved for a new trial upon all of the statutory grounds, and now prosecutes this appeal from the judgment and order denying his motion. During the progress of the trial, and after several witnesses had been examined for the prosecution, the minutes of the court, as kept by the clerk, show that "thereupon the defendant and the jurors go, in charge of a sworn officer, to inspect the premises where the crime was committed, and, subsequently returning into court, their names were called, and all answered to their names." Nothing else in reference to this matter is found in the transcript, but it is claimed that error should be presumed, because it does not appear that the "sworn officer" in charge of the jury was the sheriff, or that the place where the offense was charged to have been committed was shown to the jury by a person appointed by the court for that purpose, or that the defendant's counsel and the judge of the court were present. The settled rule is that error is not to be presumed, but must affirmatively appear in the record, and all omissions and uncertainties in a bill of exceptions are to be construed against the party presenting it. People v. Williams, 45 Cal. 25. It will be presumed, therefore, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, that the sworn officer who accompanied the jury was the sheriff or his deputy; that the place which the jury were sent out to view was properly shown to them by a person appointed by the court for that purpose; and that, if need be, the counsel and judge were present.

No instructions appear to have been asked on either side, but the court charged the jury at length in reference to murder in both degrees,—manslaughter and justifiable homicide. Counsel for defendant excepted to sundry portions of the charge, and now assigns them as errors. After carefully reading the whole charge, we fail to see how it could have misled the jury. Detached passages are open to criticism, but, as a whole, we think it stated the law of the case fairly and correctly. The jury by their verdict recommended the defendant to the mercy of the court, and yet he was sentenced to undergo imprisonment for life. It may be that his punishment is more severe than it ought to have been under the circumstances disclosed by the evidence, but we cannot reverse the judgment for that reason. That is a matter which can only be considered by the governor in case of an application for commutation of sentence or pardon.

No other grounds for reversal being called to our attention, the judgment and order should be affirmed.

SEARLS, C. I concur.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

In re Disbarment of TYLER. (No. 11,442.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 6, 1887.)

ATTORNEYS—DISBARMENT BY SUPREME COURT—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

Where the supreme court has, by its judgment, disbarred an attorney, a motion for a new trial will not be heard by it.

In bank.

This was a motion for a new trial of the case of In re Tyler, 12 Pac. Rep. 289, which was heard before the supreme court of California, December 3, 1886, when said attorney was disbarred by the judgment of the supreme court.

Pillsbury & Blanding, for complainant. James Crittenden, for respondent, Tyler.

BY THE COURT. The motion for a new trial is not the proper remedy in this cause. Considered as a petition for a rehearing, we see no reason to grant it.

Motion for a new trial and a rehearing denied.

Ex parte CASS. (No. 20,279.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 26, 1887.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—COUNTY ORDINANCE—DEFINING WHARFAGE AS INCLUDING TRANSPORTATION.

An ordinance passed by county supervisors, regulating wharfage charges, defining "wharfage" as including payment for transportation over the wharf, as well as for the privilege of landing on it, and affixing a penalty for violation of the ordinance, is valid.

Department 2. Petition for writ of habeas corpus.

The petition alleged a prosecution, conviction, and sentence (under which petitioner was imprisoned) in the justice's court of San Luis Obispo township, for a violation of an ordinance passed by the supervisors of San Luis Obispo county, October 9, 1885, regulating wharfage charges, making it an offense to charge more than the rates specified, and defining "wharfage" as including payment for transportation across and along the wharf. It set out the evidence upon which the conviction was had, showing that the extra charge made by petitioner, above the rate fixed by the ordinance, was for transporting the merchandise along and across the wharf, a distance of about 900 feet, by a rail and tram-way on cars drawn by a horse; that an appeal was taken from the conviction to the superior court, which affirmed the judgment of the justice's court; that petitioner had also applied to the superior court for a writ of prohibition to prevent the justice's court from proceeding with the trial, which application was denied; "that said justice's court had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter embraced in the complaint against this petitioner; that said complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a crime or public offense; that the said board of supervisors had no power to make, enact, or pass the ordinance hereinbefore set forth; that petitioner has not legally been found guilty of any crime or public offense." The principal ground for claiming a release seemed to be that the ordinance could not legally define "wharfage" as including charges for transportation. It was also claimed that a penalty could not be affixed for violation of the ordinance.

Jas. M. Wilcoxson, for petitioner. Graves, Turner & Graves, for respondent.

BY THE COURT. We can find no reason for the discharge of the petitioner in this case. He is therefore remanded to the custody of the proper officer. So ordered.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—ORDINANCE—VALIDITY—COWS IN CITY—CONST. CAL. ART. 11, § 11; ACT APRIL 25, 1863.

An ordinance prohibiting any person from keeping more than two cows within certain parts of the city of San Francisco is valid, under Const. Cal. art. 11, § 11, providing that "any county, city, town, or township may make and enforce, within its limits, all such local, police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws," and the act of April 25, 1863, authorizing the board of supervisors of San Francisco to regulate or exclude occupations detrimental to good morals, or contrary to order, or dangerous to the public safety.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

On habeas corpus.

Davis Louderback, for petitioner. Geo. D. Shadburne, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. The petitioner, John Linehan, was convicted in the police judge's court of the city and county of San Francisco, upon a complaint charging him with keeping more than two cows within certain limits in said city and county, in violation of order No. 1,587 of the board of supervisors of said city and county, as amended by order No. 1,705. A fine was imposed upon defendant, and, in default of payment thereof, he was adjudged to be imprisoned, etc. He appealed to the superior court, where the judgment was affirmed, and, upon the return of the remittitur, he was committed in default of payment, and, being in custody, sues out this writ.

Section 1 of said order is as follows:

"Section 1. Any person violating any of the provisions of this order shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or imprisonment not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

Section 63, as amended, reads as follows:

"Sec. 63. No person or persons shall keep, or cause to be kept, any swine whatsoever, nor more than two cows, within that portion of the city and county of San Francisco bounded as follows: Commencing at the intersection of Lombard street with the waters of the bay; thence, along Lombard street, to Broderick street; thence southerly, along Broderick street, to Waller street; thence easterly, along Waller street, to Devisadero street; thence southerly, on Devisadero street, to Ridley street; thence easterly, on Ridley street, to Castro street; thence southerly, on Castro street, to Seventeenth street; thence westerly, on Seventeenth street, to Douglass street; thence southerly, on Douglass street, to Twenty-sixth street; thence easterly, on Twenty-sixth street, to Harrison street; thence northerly, along Harrison street, to Channel street; thence, along Channel street, to the waters of the bay; thence following the water front and waters of the bay to the point of commencement."

Under our constitution, "any county, city, town, or township may make and enforce within its limits all such local, police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws." Article 11, § 11. By an act of the legislature of the state of California, entitled "An act to confer further powers upon the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco," approved April 25, 1863, it is provided that the board of supervisors shall have power by regulation or order, among other things, "to authorize and direct the summary abatement of nuisances; to make all regulations which may be necessary or expedient for the preservation of public health, and the prevention of contagious diseases; * * * to prohibit and suppress or exclude from certain limits, or to regulate, all occupations, houses, etc., * * * which are against good morals, contrary to public order and decency, or dangerous to the public safety."

Here, then, we have, as authority for the proceedings of which petitioner complains, (1) the provision of the constitution authorizing the city and county to make and enforce such local, police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws; (2) the statute from which we have quoted, expressly authorizing the board of supervisors to regulate or exclude occupations, etc., detrimental to good morals, or contrary to order, etc., or dangerous to the public safety; and (3) the order or ordinance against keeping more than two cows within certain portions of the city, for the violation of which defendant was convicted.

Subject to constitutional limitations, legislative authority extends to the suppression or regulation of those things which are hurtful to the general good, and, as a general rule, the law-making power will be deemed the exclusive judge of what is or is not hurtful. Ex parte Andrews, 18 Cal. 679. The necessity of legislation to restrict the unlimited herding of swine and cows in thickly populated districts is too apparent to need argument. Keeping swine or cows is, or may be, an occupation, and, within certain limits, may be detrimental to health and dangerous to the public safety. We suppose these animals are kept in large numbers, not for the company, but for the profit they afford; and, when so kept, it is a business—an occupation—equally with any other.

There is no constitutional question involved in this case which has not been in effect and principle passed upon heretofore by this court. Ex parte Heilbron, 65 Cal. 609, 4 Pac. Rep. 648; Ex parte Shrader, 33 Cal. 279; Ex parte Smith, 38 Cal. 702; Ex parte Casinello, 62 Cal. 538; Johnson v. Simonton, 43 Cal. 242; Ex parte Andrews, 18 Cal. 679.

We deem the reasoning in these cases conclusive of the several positions assumed on behalf of the petitioner here, and are of opinion the prayer of the petition should be denied, and the petitioner remanded to the custody of the chief of police.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the petitioner is remanded.

APPEAL—DAMAGES ON DISMISSAL.

On the dismissal of an appeal, damages will not be awarded in the respondent's favor on his ex parte affidavit that he has been informed and believes the appeal to be without merit.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco. Mortgage foreclosure.

A motion to dismiss the appeal was made upon a certificate, in the form required by rule 4 of the court. It was not contended that the certificate was insufficient. The only opposition of appellant was to the imposition of damages. Respondent's (plaintiff's) affidavit was to the effect that the action was brought to foreclose a mortgage; that defendant admitted a balance due, for which judgment was entered; that plaintiff was about to enforce the judgment by proper process, when defendant took an appeal, December 20, 1886, and more than 40 days elapsed since appeal was perfected; that plaintiff was put to the expense of extra counsel fees; "and affiant is informed, and on such information avers, that said appeal is wholly without merit, and taken solely for the purpose of delay." Prayer for damages.

Matthew I. Sullivan, for appellant. John J. Coffey, for respondent.

BY THE COURT. The certificate of the clerk of the superior court is in due form, and the appeal should be dismissed. But the application of respondent for damages on appeal must be denied. We are not authorized to decide an appeal to be frivolous on the ex parte affidavit of respondent that he has been informed and believes it to be without merit. Vaughn v. Werley, 62 Cal. 181. Appeal dismissed.

WILLIAMS v. SOUTHERN PAC. R. CO. (No. 9,272.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 25, 1887.)

NEGLIGENCE—RAILROAD COMPANY—PERSON ON TRACK—STOPPING TRAIN—NONSUIT.

Plaintiff was struck by a train while lying beside a railroad track. The engineer testified that, when approaching the place of the accident, he first saw a bundle of blankets, and kept his eye on it for about half a minute before he saw plaintiff; that he then did his utmost to stop the train as quickly as possible, sounding the whistle, among other things. It was claimed that he should not have sounded the whistle, as, by doing so, he lost time in stopping the train. Held, upon a rehearing, that there was no evidence of negligence on defendant's part to go to the jury.¹

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Monterey county.

On reargument. See 11 Pac. Rep. 849.

S. F. Geil and H. V. Morehouse, for appellant. D. M. Delmas, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. After reargument, we still adhere to the former conclusion in this case. As the motion for nonsuit was not granted, the court will now examine the testimony in the whole case in reviewing the ruling of the court. It does not become important now, therefore, to inquire whether the case was one which ought to have been taken from the jury, on the proposition that, when the evidence is not conflicting, the question as to contributory negligence is a question of law for the court. There was a motion for a new trial, and a statement of the case, and the point was there made that the evidence was insufficient, because it failed to show negligence on the part of the defendant, and did show that the injury was caused by the negligence of the plaintiff. On the whole case, can the judgment be sustained? This really depends upon the inquiry as to whether there was a real conflict in the evidence on the point of negligence.

It is admitted that the plaintiff was grossly negligent, and that such negligence contributed to the accident; but it is claimed that, notwithstanding such gross negligence on the part of plaintiff,—in fact, in consequence of the danger to plaintiff occasioned solely by his own gross negligence,—the defendant owed him a certain duty, which it failed to perform, and that the injury would not have been received if such duty had been performed.

Counsel concedes that the defendant did not owe plaintiff, who was a trespasser upon its roadway, the duty of looking out for him. It had a right to assume that no trespasser would be on its track. If, for instance, the engineer had been reading instead of being on the lookout, and therefore had not seen the plaintiff, and in consequence had run over and crippled him, the defendant would not have been liable, although it were admitted that had the usual lookout been kept up the engineer would have seen plaintiff, and would easily have prevented the accident.

Taking the admitted negligence of the plaintiff as a premise, i. e., as a circumstance, in view of which the defendant is to be judged, did the defendant, even then, fail in some duty which it owed the plaintiff? This will depend upon two propositions: Did the engineer, as a matter of fact, see the plaintiff, helpless or unjudging, in a dangerous position, in time to have stopped the train? And, having so seen him, did he use ordinary diligence to stop the train?

¹As to the liability of railroad companies for injuries sustained by trespassers on their tracks, see Little Rock, M. R. & T. Ry. Co. v. Haynes, (Ark.) 1 S. W. Rep. 774, and note.

The plaintiff was lying beside, not on, the track. There were weeds where he was lying, but not sufficient to prevent his being seen. The plaintiff proved that such an object might have been seen in that position at a distance of 400 or 500 yards by the engineer, if he had been looking for it. After the accident, the plaintiff was picked up about 15 feet from the crossing; and there was a clot of blood on the rail at the crossing. The whistle was sounded 400 or 500 feet from the place of the accident, and the engine was stopped right abreast of where the plaintiff was lying. It appears that the plaintiff, besides having his foot crushed, was injured somewhat on his head and one shoulder. Here the evidence on the part of plaintiff really ended. Plaintiff's own testimony was more favorable to the theory of the defendant. He thought he was sitting on the end of a tie outside the track. There is here no evidence whatever that the engineer saw plaintiff, except the fact that the train was stopped, and no evidence of want of diligence. The engineer, however, testified for defendant that, when he approached the place of the accident, he first saw the bundle of blankets by the road, and kept his eye on it for about a half minute before he saw the plaintiff. That, as soon as he saw that the plaintiff was in a dangerous position, he used every effort, and as quickly as possible, to stop the train. There is no conflict as to what the engineer did, unless it consists in the fact that it is shown that he sounded the whistle; by doing which, it is claimed, he lost time in stopping the train. But we cannot now say that any time was lost by this, or that it was not proper, under the circumstances, both as an alarm to plaintiff, whom the engineer did not know to be absolutely unjudging, and notice to the train hands to assist at the brakes. Then, the engineer was not called upon for the highest possible diligence, but only for ordinary diligence; and even should it appear in judging afterwards that something different might perhaps have been better, it would not make the case against the defendant. We do not think there is here a substantial conflict, if it can be said that there is a conflict at all. The rule is not, as counsel seems to suppose, that any degree of conflict in the evidence, however slight, will avail to support a verdict and judgment on appeal. Where we can plainly see that the conflict is not a substantial one, we do not hesitate to interfere. Indeed, the testimony of the witnesses in the case discloses no conflict at all. The evidence, which it is claimed tends to prove negligence on the part of the engineer, consists simply of inferences, which are uncertain and remote, and required considerable ingenuity on the part of counsel to make apparent. Admitting the general rule to be that the case will not be taken from the jury, where there is any evidence tending to show negligence capable of producing any degree of uncertainty, we think, even tested by that rule, a new trial ought to be granted in this case.

Judgment and order reversed, and a new trial ordered.

PACKARD v. WILSON and others. (No. 9,459.)

COSTS—PERCENTAGE—DEMURRER.

A case litigated on demurrer comes within St. Cal. 1865-66, p. 68, providing that a percentage of 5 per cent., to the extent of $100, may be allowed to the prevailing party for costs in litigated cases.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

This was an action to foreclose a lien on a promissory note. The complaint alleges that on the eleventh day of August, 1883, the defendants John D. Wilson and John Elbert jointly made their certain promissory note, as follows:

"$6,738.96.

SAN FRANCISCO, August 21, 1883.

"On the twenty-first day of October, 1883, without grace, for value received, we jointly and severally promise to pay to A. Packard or order, the sum of six thousand seven hundred and thirty-eight 96-100 dollars, in U. S. gold coin, with interest thereon from date until paid, at the rate of one per cent. per month.

JOHN D. WILSON.

"JOHN ELBERT."

—And did then and there deliver the said promissory note to the said plaintiff; that the said plaintiff is now the lawful owner and holder of the said promissory note; that no part of the said promissory note, or of the interest thereon, has been paid; that there is now due and unpaid to the said plaintiff on said promissory note the sum of $6,738.96, with interest from August 21, 1883, at the rate of 1 per cent. per month; that the said defendants, to secure the payment of the said promissory note, according to the tenor thereof, did, at the same time, assign to the plaintiff all their right, title, and interest in a certain promissory note, then and now in the possession of plaintiff, of the Mono Lake Hydraulic Mining Company, bearing date the thirteenth day of November, 1882, the following being a copy of the same with the several indorsements thereon:

"$45,241.60.

SAN FRANCISCO, November 23, 1882.

"Six months after date, for value received, the Mono Lake Hydraulic Mining Company Corporation promise to pay to D. E. Jones, J. D. Wilson, and John Elbert, the sum of forty-five thousand two hundred and forty-one 60-100 dollars, being eight thousand eight hundred and seventy-one 68-100 dollars to D. E. Jones; eighteen thousand one hundred and eighty-five 26-100 dollars to J. D. Wilson; and eighteen thousand one hundred and eighty-five 26-100 dollars to John Elbert,—with interest thereon at the rate of one per cent. per month from date until paid. Any payments made on this note are to be divided to and among the said Jones, Wilson, and Elbert, in the proportions of their respective amounts as aforesaid.

"MONO LAKE HYDRAULIC MINING COMPANY,

"By CHAS. H. SINCLAIR, Vice-President.

[Corporation Seal.]

"SAN FRANCISCO, February 20, 1883.

"I hereby assign and transfer my interest in the within note to D. E. Jones, as security for the payment of the note or obligation of $9,185.26 this day executed by me to said Jones.

JOHN ELBERT.

"SAN FRANCISCO, March 3, 1883.

"I hereby assign and transfer my interest in the within note to Albert Packard, as security for the payment of the note or obligation of $7,000 this day executed by me to said Packard.

JOHN D. WILSON."

—That no part of the principal or interest of the said last-mentioned note has been paid, nor is the same yet due, the payment of the same previous to its becoming due having been extended by the payees unto the thirteenth day of May, 1884.

The plaintiff prayed judgment against the defendants, jointly and severally, for the sum of $6,738.96, with interest at the rate of 1 per cent. per month from the twenty-first day of August, 1883, and that all the interest of the defendants in the said note of the Mono Lake Hydraulic Mining Company, so assigned to plaintiff, be sold according to law, and the proceeds of such sale applied in payment of the amount due plaintiff, and that plaintiff may have judgment and execution for any deficiency, and that plaintiff may become a purchaser at such sale, and that he be awarded the costs of this action.

The defendants demurred on the grounds that (a) the complaint alleges that defendants made a note, dated August 11, 1883, and recites a note dated August 21, 1883. (b) It does not appear whether the note for $6,738.96, copied in the complaint, is the note sued upon. (c) It does not appear whether the assignment, by way of security, was made on the eleventh or twenty-first day of August, 1883. The demurrer was overruled, and judgment was rendered decreeing sale of the note. And defendants filed the following bill of exceptions:

"Be it remembered that, after judgment ordered in this action, and in due time, the plaintiff duly filed and served a memorandum of costs and disbursements, and that one of the items thereof is as follows: 'Percentage allowed by law on judgment of $7,053.61, $100.' That within five days thereafter the defendants moved to have the plaintiff's said bill of costs taxed, and to strike out therefrom the said item of $100, on the grounds—First, that the action was brought to foreclose a lien, and was not an action wherein percentage is allowed by law; second, that no issue of fact was raised in said action, and the same was not a litigated case. The said motion was made upon the papers on file. That said motion came regularly on for hearing on the twenty-fifth day of January, 1884; and the same, after being heard, submitted, and considered, was by the court denied; to which ruling and decision the defendants then and there duly excepted."

Wm. & Geo. Leviston, for appellant. J. T. Fleming and A. Packard, for respondent.

BY THE COURT. The complaint is sufficient. The case was litigated on demurrer, and the sixth section of the statute of February 9, 1866, (St. 1865-66, p. 68,) applies to it. We think it proper to say that it was conceded on the argument by both parties that the statute above referred to is still in force. We decide the case on this concession, and hold nothing as to whether the statute is in force or not.

Judgment and order affirmed.

To Dr. Ayer: "From your personal examination of her while living, and from your examination of her brain when she died, whether in your opinion this woman, upon the eighteenth of May, 1885, [when the affidavit was made,] could have made this statement of facts and dates as appears in this affidavit, or could have comprehended them, if questioned or if spoken to her or read to her?"

BY THE COURT. We have examined the points presented on behalf of the appellants, and we find no error in the rulings of the court below, nor in the instructions. Ex parte FISKE. (No. 20,287.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—CITY OF SAN FRANCISCO—FIRE ORDINANCE—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Section 40 of an ordinance of the city and county of San Francisco entitled "An ordinance to define the fire limits of the city and county of San Francisco, and making regulations concerning the erection and use of buildings in said city and county," providing that "no wooden building within the fire limits shall be altered, changed, or repaired without permission in writing signed by a majority of the fire wardens, approved by a majority of the committee on fire department and the mayor," is not void, as being in contravention of the fourteenth amendment to the federal constitution.

2. SAME—PUBLICATION OF ORDINANCE.

An ordinance which provides for its publication for five successive days in a daily newspaper is properly published by publication for five successive week-days, although a Sunday intervenes on which there is no issue of the paper.

Department 2. Habeas corpus.Tilden & Tilden, for petitioner. Davis Louderback, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. The petitioner was convicted in the proper court of a violation of section 40 of an ordinance of the city and county of San Francisco entitled "To define the fire limits of the city and county of San Francisco, and making regulations concerning the erection and use of buildings in said city and county." He was sentenced to pay a fine of $250, and, in default of payment, to be imprisoned in the county jail at the rate of one day for each one dollar of the fine. Not having paid the fine, he is in the custody of the chief of police of said city and county. Said section 40 is as follows: "No wooden building within the fire limits shall be altered, changed, or repaired without permission in writing signed by a majority of the fire wardens, approved by a majority of the committee on fire department and the mayor, which permit shall fully express the alterations, changes, or repairs allowed, a copy of which shall be filed by the grantee," etc. Other parts of the ordinance describe the fire limits; and the acts of petitioner for which he was convicted were done within them.

The grounds relied on by petitioner for his discharge which we deem it proper particularly to notice, are that the attempted enactment of said section 40 was beyond the legislative power of the municipal government, or of the state; that said section 40 is unreasonable, oppressive, and not general in its operation; that it is an unwarrantable delegation of power to the officers named therein, that it attempts to grant to said officers absolute power, which may be used arbitrarily to the advantage of favorites, and to the prejudice of others; that it denies to petitioner the equal protection of the law, and deprives him of liberty and property without due process of law, in violation of the fourteenth amendment of the federal constitution; and that for these reasons, expressed in various forms, the said section is invalid and void.

It is, no doubt, difficult to keep always in view the precise line which definitely bounds the proper exercise of what is called the police power of a state, and separates it from an improper infringement upon the constitutional rights of individuals; but it is often not difficult to see whether a particular exercise of that power is on the right or wrong side of that line. And it has become the settled law that a state,—and under our system a municipality of the state,—in order to protect the property of all its citizens from the ravages of fire, may establish fire limits, and regulate or prevent the use of wooden buildings within such limits; and that, although this may disturb the enjoyment of the rights of an individual, he is, in contemplation of law, compensated by sharing the general benefits derived from it. Tied. Lim. Police Power, § 122e, and cases cited. There would therefore be no doubt as to the validity of the section of the ordinance under review if it were not for the provision that certain officers may grant permissions to make repairs. It is clear, however, that a literal compliance with a regulation prohibiting the repairing of a wooden building might work, in some instances, useless hardships. The repair of a leaking roof or broken window would be necessary to the comfort and health of a family, without enhancing the danger which the framers of the ordinance sought to provide against; and repairs of a more extensive character might be made to particular houses, standing in particular localities, without increasing the fire risks. And it is equally clear that no general rule could be established beforehand that would meet the emergencies of individual cases. Therefore the power to give relief in particular instances is conferred on certain officers; and it is not to be presumed that they will exercise it wantonly, or for purposes of profit or oppression. Neither is the granting of permissions in particular instances to be considered as the taking away of any rights from those to whom such permissions are not given. The latter would be in no better position if such permissions were given to none, or if there was no power to give them at all.

It is difficult to determine, in many cases, whether or not there has been an unwarranted delegation of powers by the legislative bodies of municipal governments. But powers similar in character to those conferred upon the officers named in the section of the ordinance under discussion have been so often upheld that their validity seems to be established. Cases in point decided by this court are Ex parte Moynier, 65 Cal. 33, 2 Pac. Rep. 728; Ex parte Casinello, 62 Cal. 538; Ex parte Frazer, 54 Cal. 94,—and in other states, Vanderbilt v. Adams, 7 Cow. 351; In re Nightingale, 11 Pick. 168; Whitten v Mayor of Covington, 43 Ga. 421.

In Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357, the supreme court of the United States held that an ordinance of the city and county of San Francisco providing that no person should carry on the business of a public laundry within certain limits without a certificate of the health officer, and another certificate of the board of fire wardens, was valid, and not in violation of the fourteenth amendment of the federal constitution. The same thing was held by that court in the case of Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 703, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 730. We see no difference, in principle, between those cases and the one at bar.

It is true that, at first glance, a somewhat different doctrine seems to have been stated in Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064. A correct understanding, however, of the extent to which that case goes, can be had only by considering that the proof, which the court looked into, showed that the ordinance there under review was so administered as to exclude the subjects of the emperor of China, and none others, from the business of keeping a laundry. The court, after alluding to our treaty with China, says: "In the present cases we are not obliged to reason from the probable to the actual, and pass upon the validity of the ordinances complained of as tried merely by the opportunities which their terms afford of unequal and unjust discrimination in their administration; for the cases present the ordinances in actual operation, and the facts shown establish an administration directed so exclusively against a particular class of persons as to warrant and require the conclusion that, whatever may have been the intent of the ordinances as adopted, they are applied by the public authorities charged with their administration, and thus representing the state herself, with a mind so unequal and oppressive as to amount to a practical denial by the state of that equal protection of the laws which is secured to the petitioners, as to all other persons, by the broad and benign provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the constitution of the United States. Though the law itself be fair on its face, and impartial in appearance, yet, if it is applied and administered by public authority with an evil eye and an unequal hand, so as practically to make unjust and illegal discriminations between persons in similar circumstances material to their rights, the denial of equal justice is still within the prohibition of the constitution." After alluding to the proof that the petitioners and 200 other Chinamen were refused permission to carry on the business, while such permission was given to a large number of persons not Chinamen, the court says further: "The fact of this discrimination is admitted. No reason for it is shown, and the conclusion cannot be resisted that no reason for it exists except hostility to the race and nationality to which the petitioners belong, and which, in the eye of the law, is not justified. The discrimination is therefore illegal; and the public administration which enforces it is a denial of the equal protection of the laws, and a violation of the fourteenth amendment of the constitution."

It is evident from this language that the decision rested mainly upon the admitted discrimination against a class of persons in the public administration of the ordinance. Indeed, the admitted facts, which the court considered, showed that the intent of the ordinance was to exclude Chinamen from a business which should be open to all other persons, as clearly as if that intent had been boldly written on its face. The decision, therefore, as an authority, goes no further than to hold that, under a state of facts similar in character to the facts of that case, an ordinance similar in character to the one there passed upon would be invalid. But there are no such facts in the case at bar. There is no evidence here that petitioner asked for permission to repair, or that such permission had been given to others. Neither the face of the ordinance, nor its administration, shows any intent to discriminate against a class of persons, or against any person. To hold the ordinance invalid we would have "to reason from the probable to the actual." And there is no more reason to presume that the officers named in the ordinance would unjustly discriminate for or against classes or individuals than there is to presume that a harbor-master would abuse the power to station vessels at a wharf, or a police officer the power to station carriages at theaters, or during public processions. Our opinion, therefore, is that the ordinance in question is not invalid for any of the reasons above noticed.

The objections of petitioner to the sufficiency of the complaint are not tenable,—at least in the proceeding of habeas corpus.

We see no force in the objection that the ordinance was not published according to law. A provision requiring a publication for five successive days in a daily newspaper is complied with by such publication for five successive week-days, although a Sunday intervened on which there was no issue of the paper.

There are no other points in the case necessary to be noticed.

The prayer of the petition is denied, and the petitioner remanded to the custody of the chief of police.

PHILLIPS and another v. GOLDTREE and others. (No. 9,504.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 14, 1887.)

PARTNERSHIP—ACTION—PLEADING—FAILURE TO FILE CERTIFICATE.

Where, in an action by partners doing business under a fictitious name, the complaint is perfect in all other respects, there is no failure to state facts sufficient to show a cause of action merely because it contains no statement that a certificate of partnership has been filed, as provided by Civil Code Cal. §§ 2466, 2468, attaching a legal incapacity to maintain an action upon any contracts made or transactions had in the partnership name to a failure to file such a certificate; and an objection that no such certificate has been filed must therefore be taken by answer; otherwise, under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 434, it is waived. Sweeney v. Stanford, 67 Cal. 635, 8 Pac. Rep. 444, distinguished.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

J. R. Brandon, for respondents. W. J. & E. Graves and J. M. Wilcoxon, for appellants.

McFARLAND, J. The complaint in this case avers that the plaintiffs, L. A. Phillips and A. Phillips, were and are partners doing business under the firm name of Phillips Bros.; that defendants, also partners in business, received from one Souza $729.22 in money to the use of plaintiffs, which they promised to remit to plaintiffs; that plaintiffs demanded said money of defendants; and that defendants refused to deliver the same. The answer denies all the averments of the complaint; and then, again averring the partnerships of plaintiffs and defendants as alleged in the complaint, sets up as a defense that the two firms formed a special copartnership for the purpose of buying, selling, and speculating in beans; that such speculation resulted in a loss of $4,731, all of which defendants paid; that plaintiffs owe defendants for one-half of said loss; and that plaintiffs have not paid defendants any part thereof except said $729.22 sued for in this action, which should be credited on said beans account, and that defendants should have judgment for the balance. The issues thus made were fully litigated, and a large amount of evidence taken, and the court found and gave judgment for plaintiffs; but neither in the pleadings, nor in the evidence, nor in any part of the proceedings in the court below, did the defendants make, or in any way allude to, the point that plaintiffs had not filed the certificate of partnership required by section 2466 of the Civil Code, or had failed to aver such filing. The transcript on appeal shows nothing of such a point, but now, in this court, appellants for the first time make the point in their brief that the judgment should be reversed because there is no averment in the complaint that such certificate of partnership had been filed.

The Code of Civil Procedure, after stating the various grounds upon which a defendant may demur to a complaint, among which is want of legal capacity to sue, and stating also that when any of the matters enumerated as a ground of demurrer does not appear on the face of the complaint, the objection may be taken by answer, provides as follows: "Sec. 434. If no objection be taken either by demurrer or answer, the defendant must be deemed to have waived the same, excepting only the objection to the jurisdiction of the court, and the objection that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action."

As there is no objection here to the jurisdiction of the court, appellants' contention must rest upon the objection that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; and this, in turn, rests upon the proposition that, in a suit by partners doing business under a fictitious name, there can be no sufficient statement of a cause of action without the statement that the certificate of partnership required by the Civil Code had been filed. But this latter proposition cannot be maintained. The only penalty attached by the Code to a failure to file the certificate is the legal incapacity to maintain an action upon "any contracts made or transactions had in their partnership name." Section 2468. There is no disability imposed to make contracts or to have transactions. They may own property, whether it consists of goods, wares, and merchandise, or choses in action. When the property consists of a cause of action, it may be assigned to a person laboring under no incapacity to sue, who may bring and maintain an action thereon. Cheney v. Newberry, 67 Cal. 126, 7 Pac. Rep. 445. But that could not be if the cause of action did not exist before the assignment. The assignment could impart no new virtue to the thing itself, although it would place it in hands which could use it. The cause of action is as complete before as after the assignment,—just as a book is as complete in the hands of a man entirely illiterate as after it has passed to one who can read it. If, therefore, in a suit brought by partners the complaint is perfect in all other respects, there is no failure to "state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action" merely because it contains no statement that a certificate of partnership had been filed. The objection which appellants here for the first time present is an objection to the legal capacity of plaintiffs to sue. But that objection must be taken by demurrer if the grounds for it appear on the face of the complaint, or by answer if they do not; otherwise it is waived. There seems to be no other tenable position to be taken on the question, and this court has substantially so held in District No. 110 v. Feek, 60 Cal. 403, and Mora v. Le Roy, 58 Cal. 8.

Appellants rely mainly on the case of Sweeney v. Stanford, 67 Cal. 635, 8 Pac. Rep. 444. But the point did not arise in that case. There the complaint averred that plaintiffs had filed the certificate of partnership; this averment was denied in the answer; and, upon the issue thus made, plaintiffs having failed to show a substantial compliance with the statute, the court held that the lower court should have granted a nonsuit. Reference is made in the opinion to Byers v. Bourret, 64 Cal. 73, in which case the defendants in their answer averred that plaintiffs had not filed the certificate of partnership, and the court expressly called the averment a plea "in the nature of a plea in abatement." And it has never yet been decided in any case that, without the issue having been made in any way in the lower court, it could be successfully suggested here for the first time that plaintiffs had not filed a certificate of partnership; and, while there may be language used in the opinion rendered in the case of Sweeney v. Stanford, not necessary to its decision, which is somewhat favorable to appellants' views, the case decides nothing more than that, when the issue of the filing of the certificate is made in the court below, it becomes a vital issue to the plaintiffs. There is nothing, therefore, in that case which precludes us from entertaining the views above expressed.

The only other point made by appellants is that the evidence does not justify the findings. This point was not much pressed at the argument, and cannot be maintained.

Judgment and order affirmed.

SHARPSTEIN, J.: I concur.

THORNTON, J., (concurring.) I concur in the judgment on the ground that the failure to file the certificate required by section 2466 of the Civil Code was not set up by the answer. Sweeney v. Stanford, 67 Cal. 635, 8 Pac. Rep. 444. Such a defense must be specially pleaded, where, as in this case, there is no averment in the complaint in relation to the filing of the certificate. This is expressly ruled in the case above cited.

CANNON v. HANDLEY and another. (No. 9,743.)

1. VENDOR AND VENDEE—ESCROW—REVOCATION—TENDER OF PAYMENT—REASONABLE TIME.

Where a contract is entered into for the sale and purchase of land, without stating any date for payment, and a deed is made out and delivered to a third party to be handed to the vendee on payment of the purchase money, and possession is delivered by the vendor, and taken by vendee, and within four days the purchaser offers the purchase money to the party holding the deed, the deed so given is an escrow, and not revocable by the grantors either before or after the offer of payment, and the party holding it is bound to deliver it on payment being made; nor is the purchaser bound to keep the tender good after making the offer, and until bringing action to enforce the contract.

2. SAME—PURCHASER WITH NOTICE—BREACH OF CONTRACT FOR SALE—DECREE.

Under such circumstances a party who has purchased with notice of vendee's claim, and forcibly taken possession from him, will be compelled to surrender possession, and convey the legal title, and to account to vendee for the value of the use and occupation, and plaintiff must pay legal interest from the date of his tender, and pay the purchase money into court for the benefit of the purchaser from his vendor.

3. REPORT AND CASE MADE—TITLE.

A provision in an agreed case upon a question as to the title of land, submitted to the court under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1133, to the effect that the facts therein admitted are to be taken by the court subject to all legal objections to their competency, relevancy, and admissibility, and shall be admitted or excluded, in whole or in part, as the court may determine after hearing objections thereto, is outside of the statute.

4. STATUTE OF FRAUDS—SALE OF LAND—ESCROW.

An oral contract of sale, where a deed is executed in escrow at the same time, is not within the statute of frauds.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county.

Chas. B. Younger and J. M. Lesser, for appellant. Burke & Hall, for respondents.

BY THE COURT. This case comes before this court upon an agreed case under section 1133, Code Civil Proc. The facts agreed on are as follows: On the eighth of May, 1882, John J. Handley, Jr., and Catharine Handley were the owners in fee-simple and in possession of a lot of land situate in the city of Santa Cruz, known as lot five, (5,) in block No. two, (2,) and on that day executed a mortgage on the same, with other property, to the Santa Cruz Bank of Savings & Loan, as security for the payment of the sum of $1,800, maturing on the eighth day of May, 1885, with interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum. The bank aforesaid, on the fifth day of February, 1883, for value received, assigned the note and mortgage to Elbert Austin, who, on the eighth of December, 1883, was the owner of the securities above mentioned. On the ——— day of March, 1883, John J. Handley, Jr., took out a policy of insurance for $300 on one of the buildings on the lot above mentioned against loss or damage by fire, payable to himself in case of loss, and also a policy of insurance for $800 on another of the buildings on said lot, against loss or damage by fire, payable as the other policy. About a fortnight prior to December 8, 1883, John J. Handley, Jr., proposed to plaintiff's wife to sell said lot for $1,100. Mrs. Cannon reported this proposal to plaintiff, who examined the lot, and told his wife that he would purchase said lot of land at that price, and that she could purchase it for him at the price above named. The plaintiff is and has been a laboring man for years, and at home only nights and on holidays.

On the eighth of December, 1883, John J. Handley, Jr., and Catharine Handley entered into an oral agreement with plaintiff's wife for the sale and conveyance of said lot of land; that, in this transaction of purchase, plaintiff's wife was acting for him, (plaintiff,) a fact of which said Handley was ignorant until the drawing of the deed, when she instructed him to make the deed to plaintiff as grantee, for the sum of $1,100, to be paid to said Austin on said mortgage; that Austin, at the same time, agreed to release said lot from the lien of the mortgage on the payment of $1,100 on the indebtedness evidenced by the note and mortgage aforesaid. In pursuance of the above agreement of sale, John J. Handley, Jr., and Catharine Handley, on the eighth of December, 1883, signed, sealed, and duly acknowledged a certain deed in writing, dated on that day, purporting to grant, bargain, sell, and convey such lot of land to plaintiff, the sum of $1,100 being therein stated as the consideration. This deed was drawn for the grantors by defendant Cox, who was then and there paid therefor by them. This deed was then and there left and deposited by the grantors with said Cox, for delivery by Cox to the grantee therein, upon the payment of the said $1,100 to Cox for said Austin; but no definite time was agreed upon or stated when the purchase money should be paid or the deed delivered. It was, however, known and understood by the parties that plaintiff's wife had $303 on deposit in the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society in San Francisco, and that said last-named sum would be collected by the Bank of Santa Cruz County, and applied towards the payment of said sum; that this would take several days; and that plaintiff's wife would deliver her Hibernia Society's pass-book to the Bank of Santa Cruz County on December 10, 1883.

At the same time that this deed was deposited with Cox, said Austin signed, sealed, and acknowledged a release of this lot from the lien of the mortgage, and delivered this release to Cox, to be by him delivered upon the payment to him (Cox) of the said $1,100. At the same time, John J. Handley, Jr., with the consent of the insurance company, indorsed on each of the policies above mentioned, and signed an assignment to plaintiff of all his interest in said policies and all advantage to be derived therefrom, and then and there delivered the policies to A. J. Hines, to be delivered to plaintiff at the time of the delivery of said deed.

On the morning of December 10, 1883, plaintiff's wife delivered to said Bank of Santa Cruz County her pass-book of the society above mentioned, together with an order on the society to collect the sum of $303, and directed that money to be applied towards the payment of said $1,100, and applied to said bank to borrow the balance of said $1,100, but no agreement to loan was made by the bank. On the morning of December 11, 1883, she stated to Cox that she had heard that the father of John J. Handley, Jr., had some claim to said property, and instructed Cox not to forward the order and pass-book for collection until she knew about the title to the lot purchased.

On the eighth of December, 1883, and after the delivery of the deed to said Cox, the grantors in the deed delivered the key of the door to the house on the lot to the plaintiff's wife, and told her to take possession of the premises. The house was then unoccupied. On the evening of the day last named, plaintiff was informed by his wife what had been done in relation to said premises, and he approved of what had been done, and the key was then delivered to plaintiff by his wife. On December 9, 1883, plaintiff unlocked the door of said house, went through it and examined it, and again locked the door, and has ever since had possession of the key. On December 10, 1883, plaintiff's wife, by direction of plaintiff, placed a clock and two chairs in the house, and left them there. On the next day, plaintiff entered the house, and barred all the doors on the inside, except the door to which he had the key, and then locked the door, and retained the key in his possession.

On the tenth of December, 1883, John J. Handley, Jr., and Catharine Handley executed and acknowledged a deed dated on that day, purporting to grant and convey said lot to defendant Thomas Handley, a brother of John J., the consideration therein expressed being $1,100. This deed was drawn by said Cox, and was delivered to defendant Handley on the tenth of December, 1883, by the grantors, and the above sum was paid by said Handley to the grantors. Handley, Jr., then paid this sum to Cox for Austin. Cox then delivered the release above named to said Handley, Jr., who immediately caused the same to be recorded in the office of the county recorder of Santa Cruz county. The deed to Thomas Handley was, on the eleventh of December, 1883, recorded in the office of said county recorder. Defendant Handley, prior to the tenth of December, 1883, and to the making, signing, execution, and delivery of the said deed from the Handleys to defendant Handley, and to the payment of any of the purchase money by him, had notice of the entire transaction between plaintiff and said Handleys, but did not then know that the key to one of the buildings on the lot had been delivered to plaintiff's wife, or that she had, as stated above, put a clock and two chairs in said house. At the time of the execution of the deed above named to defendant Handley, the grantors therein then and there ordered and directed Cox not to deliver the first-mentioned deed to plaintiff, and at the same time requested Cox to deliver that deed to him, which Cox refused to do.

On the eleventh of December, 1883, Cox informed Mrs. Cannon that the Handleys had executed to Thomas Handley a deed purporting to convey the said lot of land, and that he had received the money for Austin as above stated. On the twelfth of same month, plaintiff offered and tendered to Cox the sum of $1,100, and demanded of him that he deliver to plaintiff the deed above mentioned deposited with him, and Cox refused and still refuses to deliver this deed to plaintiff, or any one for him, and still retains it in his possession.

On the night of December 14th, Thomas Handley broke open the door of said house above mentioned, and took forcible possession of the premises, and removed therefrom the clock and two chairs placed there by plaintiff, and ever since has been in possession of said lot of land. On the twelfth of same month, defendant Handley served on plaintiff a written notice that plaintiff deliver and surrender the possession of said lot to him.

The rights of the parties are to be determined on the above state of facts.

It clearly appears that Cannon was a purchaser of the lot in question from the Handleys, John J., Jr., and Catharine, for the agreed price of $1,100. There is no indefiniteness in the contract. No time was fixed for the payment of the money. The money was then to be paid in a reasonable time. The contract was entered into on the eighth of December, 1883, on which day a deed of conveyance of the lot sold was drawn up with the plaintiff's name inserted as grantee, as agreed on, and the Handleys as grantors, and deposited with defendant Cox, to be by him delivered to the plaintiff on the payment to him by plaintiff of $1,100 for one Austin. Austin held a mortgage on the lot, which he was to release from its lien on the payment of the sum aforesaid, who on the day of the date of the deed executed and deposited with Cox a release, duly executed by him, of the lot from the lien above mentioned, to be delivered by Cox on the payment to him (Cox) of the sum above mentioned. It will be further observed that an assignment of the policies of insurance mentioned in the case was drawn up, signed, and delivered to one Hines, to be delivered to plaintiff at the same time that the deed was delivered to him. Further, the possession of the property was delivered by the Handleys to plaintiff, and he actually took possession of the same by direction of the grantors, and kept possession of it by taking possession of a building on it, and retaining possession of the key thereof, which had been handed to him, through the medium of his wife, by the vendors.

Here, then, was a valid contract, certain in all its parts, partly executed and performed by delivery of the property sold, and a deed perfect in every respect executed by the grantors to the vendee, and placed in the hands of defendant Cox, to be delivered by Cox to plaintiff on the payment of the purchase money. That plaintiff took possession, and possession was delivered to him by the grantors in pursuance of the contract, cannot, we think, be doubted. The deed was delivered as an escrow to Cox, and he so held it. He was to hold it, and deliver it to the vendee as soon as he paid the purchase money. The payment of the purchase money was the condition on which the deed was to be delivered by the depository. This makes the deed an escrow, which name is applied to a deed or other instrument delivered to a third person, to be held by him until the performance of a specified condition, and then to be by him delivered to the grantee. 3 Washb. Real Prop. (5th Ed.) 583; Abb. Law Dict. "Escrow."

We cannot concur in the view that Cox was the mere agent of the vendors, and held the paper as such, being bound to deliver the paper to the vendors when demanded of him by them. He was to hold it, and deliver it to the vendee when the money was paid; and the vendee was to make payment to Cox, and not to his vendors; and, further, to make payment to Cox for Austin, and not for his vendors. Cox held the release as an escrow, also to be delivered to Cannon when the purchase money was paid to Cox. The question is so clear that further discussion would darken instead of elucidating it.

The deed being then delivered as an escrow, it is no longer revocable by the vendor, but it will take effect whenever the condition has happened or been complied with on which it is to be delivered. Millett v. Parker, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 608, 616. In this case the court said of a deed delivered as an escrow: "It cannot be revoked by the party who makes it, and he in whose favor it is made is entitled to it whenever the condition is complied with by which it becomes absolute." In Shirley v. Ayres, 14 Ohio, 308, it was held that the depository of an escrow was as much the agent of the grantee as of the grantor. The court said: "He is as much bound to deliver the deed, on performance of the condition, as he is to withhold it until such performance." From this it would clearly follow that the grantor cannot recall the deed after the delivery as an escrow; and, when the condition is complied with by the grantee, he is absolutely entitled to it. The Ohio supreme court in the case of Shirley v. Ayres, above cited, held that, inasmuch as the depository of the escrow was the agent of the grantee as well as grantor, the deed takes effect the moment the condition is performed without any formal delivery into the hands of the grantee. In other words, it may be said, when the condition is performed, the depository becomes the custodian of the grantee, holding the deed for him, and this possession as such custodian is the possession of the grantee. We think this rule is based on sound principles, and should be upheld.

The order by the vendors (the Handleys) to Cox, on the tenth of December, not to deliver the deed to Cannon, had no effect to alter the relation of the parties. The vendors had no right to revoke the deed, or take it from the possession of Cox. The offer by Cannon, on the eleventh of December, to pay the $1,100 to Cox, and his refusal to deliver the deed, was an offer of compliance with the condition on which the deed was to be delivered. The plaintiff then became entitled to it. Cox then had it and, as between them, would still hold it for the plaintiff, on payment of the money. The offer and tender of the money was within a reasonable time. The contract was made on the eighth of December, 1883, and the money was offered and tendered on the twelfth day of the same month. No stress is to be laid on the fact that it was known to and understood by the parties that plaintiff's wife had $303 deposited in the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society, which would be collected by the Bank of Santa Cruz County and applied pro tanto to the payment of the purchase money, any further than it bears on the question of time within which the money was to be paid by plaintiff. Plaintiff was not bound to use this specific fund so deposited with the society. Payment could be made with any other money. All that was required was payment of the $1,100. This sum of money was actually offered and tendered by plaintiff to Cox as above stated. The fact that the wife of plaintiff, on hearing that the father of John Handley, Jr., had some claim to the lot sold, instructed Cox, on the eleventh of December, 1883, not to forward her order and pass-book for collection until she knew about the title to the lot purchased, interposes no obstacle to plaintiff's recovery here, as he actually did offer to pay, and tendered the money in payment, on the 12th of December, within a reasonable time. The tender was made with promptitude.

Nor was it necessary to keep the tender good. Washburn v. Dewey, 17 Vt. 92; McDanel v. Kimbrell, 3 Iowa, 335; White v. Dobson, 17 Grat. 262. The money was to be paid when the deed was delivered. It would be unjust to require the plaintiff to keep the tender good, which is usually done by paying the money into court, when the deed is withheld from him, and when, as in this case, he is by violence deforced from the possession of the lot sold to him. Under proper circumstances he may be required to pay interest on the money.

Thomas Handley, defendant, with full notice of all the facts of the sale and purchase by Cannon, as above stated, on the tenth of December, 1883, bought the land of the vendors of plaintiff, received from them a deed conveying the lot in controversy, and paid $1,100 to Cox for Austin; then received from Cox the release above mentioned, which he caused to be recorded on the eleventh of the same month. On the twelfth of the same month, defendant Handley served on plaintiff a written notice that plaintiff deliver and surrender possession of said lot to him, and in the darkness of the night of the fourteenth of December he broke open the door of the house on the lot, made a forcible entry on the plaintiff's possession, and took possession of the premises, and ever since has been in possession of the land.

The circumstances having greatly changed since the contract was entered into, and Cox having received the money for Austin, and delivered the release to defendant Handley, it may be that the plaintiff was in doubt to whom the money was to be paid, and therefore did not offer to pay to any one since the tender to Cox. As Handley (defendant) is a purchaser with notice, he is bound by all the equities of the plaintiff; and conceding the legal title remained in the vendors until the deed was actually delivered by Cox, and that it passed to the defendant by the deed executed to him, he (defendant Handley) holds it for the plaintiff, and is bound to convey to him. We are of opinion that defendant Handley holds the legal title in trust for the plaintiff, to be conveyed to him as hereinafter directed.

The plaintiff would have a right to be restored to the possession which was taken from him by force by Thomas Handley, and defendant must be directed to surrender possession to the plaintiff. The plaintiff will also be entitled to have an account from Handley, defendant, of the value of the use and occupation while he has been in possession of the land, and plaintiff must pay interest on $1,100, the purchase money, at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, from the twelfth of December, 1883, until paid; or, at plaintiff's option, the interest on the purchase money may be regarded as liquidating the value of the use due by defendant, and no account need then be taken. The plaintiff will pay the purchase money into court for defendant Handley, as he has become the purchaser from the vendors of plaintiff of the lot in suit, and the court will direct it to be paid to defendant above named. There is in the agreed statement of facts a provision in these words:

"It is expressly agreed by the parties hereto that the facts herein admitted are to be taken by the court subject to all legal objections to their competency, relevancy, and admissibility where the nature of the evidence necessary to establish said facts is apparent on the face of said statement, and the same shall be admitted or excluded, in whole or part, as the court may determine, after hearing objections thereto."

This would seem to be a provision outside of the statute. The statute (section 1138, Code Civil Proc.) permits the parties to agree upon a case containing the facts upon which the controversy depends, "and present a submission of the same to any court which would have jurisdiction if an action had been brought. * * * The court must thereupon [i. e., the case agreed] hear and determine the case, and render judgment thereon as if an action were depending." The parties must agree on the facts, and such agreed facts are the facts on which the case is to be determined. It might well be doubted whether the court on an agreed statement, with such a provision in it as the one above quoted, should not refuse to hear the case at all, or, if hearing it, disregard the provision.

But waiving this, we proceed to determine the question. It is said the contract was oral, and should not be enforced. But the deed is a note or memorandum in writing of the contract, and subscribed by the party charged, and this satisfies the statute. Code Civil Proc. § 1973; Civil Code, § 1624, subd. 5. Here it is signed by the party to be charged, and there is mutuality. Worrall v. Munn, 5 N. Y. 229; Rutenberg v. Main, 47 Cal. 213. In Cagger v. Lansing, 57 Barb. 421, the question is decided, and properly decided, that the deed is sufficient evidence to take the case out of the statute of frauds. So held under the statute of New York, which is substantially the same as that in force in this state.

But it is said there was nothing in writing authorizing Cox to hold or deliver the deed. There is nothing in the statute which requires this to be in writing. The statute only requires a note or memorandum in writing as evidence of the contract. Nothing in it has reference to any arrangement for the delivery of the deed in escrow, or its subsequent delivery by the party so holding it to the grantee. The contract is fully proved herein by writing.

It cannot elude observation that the efforts made by the Handley vendors and defendant Handley to deprive the plaintiff of the benefit of his purchase were made with an alacrity which, though astonishing, was not commendable. The contract with plaintiff was made on the eighth of the current month, the delivery in escrow and the delivery of possession to plaintiff were made on the same day, and plaintiff took possession on the 10th, and the tender of payment was made on the 12th. Still the same vendors executed a deed to defendant Handley as purchaser with notice, and therefore a confederate with them in the object intended, on the tenth of the same month, and this last purchaser paid the purchase money, recorded his deed, and took possession by violence on the 14th. This activity was worthy of a better cause, and, if exhibited in behalf of right, would be a vigilance which the law would aid. But activity to defeat a right cannot command action in its favor. The plaintiff is entitled to recover of defendant Handley his costs on appeal.

The judgment must be reversed, and cause remanded, with directions to the court to enter judgment in accordance with this opinion, with the provision inserted in the judgment that if the plaintiff does not pay the purchase money ($1,100) within 20 days after the entry of the judgment in the court below, that plaintiff shall take nothing under the judgment except his costs on appeal. So ordered.

APPEAL—ORDER ADMITTING WILL TO PROBATE—WHAT CONSIDERED.

Where, on appeal from an order admitting a will to probate, it appears that the only written ground of opposition to the probate taken by appellant, as provided by Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1312, was the incompetency of the deceased to make a will, questions relating to the due execution and attestation of the will will not be considered.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Stanton L. Carter and D. S. Terry, for appellant. Aug. Muentert and W. L. Dudley, for respondents.

MCFARLAND, J. This is an appeal from an order of the superior court admitting a will to probate. Counsel for appellant elaborately argues questions relating to the due execution and attestation of the will; but the only written ground of opposition to the probate thereof taken by appellant, as provided by section 1312 of the Code of Civil Procedure, was the incompetency of the decedent to make a will. She divides her alleged grounds into three distinct paragraphs; but they all three together mean only this: that at the time the will was made the deceased was not of sound and disposing mind and memory. The issue thus raised was presented to a jury in the form of the following question: "Was the testator, Joseph Kile, on the fourth day of April, 1883, and at the time of the execution of the will in contest, of sound and disposing mind?" And the jury, after hearing a great deal of evidence, returned an affirmative answer to the question. There was a substantial and very marked conflict in the evidence as to the point of decedent's mental condition at the time the will was made, and we would not be at all warranted in holding that it did not support the verdict. This view disposes of the case; for appellant can be heard only as to those matters which she presents in her written grounds of opposition.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: SHARPSTEIN, J.; MCKINSTRY, J.; PATERSON, J

I dissent: TEMPLE, J.

THORNTON, J. I concur in the judgment. The evidence as to the sound and disposing mind and memory of the testator is conflicting, and the order should not be reversed on that ground. Conceding, but not deciding, that the testimony on the other points argued is properly before us, I am of opinion that as to those points the statute as regards execution of the will has been complied with.

DALY v. CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. (No. 11,698.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 16, 1887.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—CONTRACT—ASSESSMENT.

The act of California of April 4, 1870, in regard to street work in San Francisco, providing that, in case the assessment for the payment of a contract is adjudged invalid through no fault of the contractor, the board of supervisors shall pay the amount due the contractor out of the street department fund of the city, presupposes a valid contract binding on the city and county; and, where it was adjudged by the court that there was no assessment because there was no contract, there was no liability attached to the municipality.

2. SAME—CONTRACTS OF AGENTS—LIABILITY OF CITY.

Those dealing with a city must see to it that its agents have power to act; and the city incurs no liability for work done under a void contract; nor is there any guaranty on its part that the forms of law have been complied with because its officers, without authority, attempt to contract.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco. William M. Pierson and Wm. H. Sears, for appellant. George Flournoy, Jr., and Garber, Thornton & Bishop, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. The real question involved in this case is whether the act of April 4, 1870, in regard to street work in San Francisco, dispenses with the preliminary steps which seem to be required to vest the board of supervisors with jurisdiction or power to order work to be done. These are the same statutory requirements which have always existed, a substantial compliance with which has often been held essential to the validity of the acts of the board. It is contended that all this is changed, because the act of 1870 directed that after the work had been performed, instead of having the assessment delivered to the contractor as formerly, the assistant city and county attorney should proceed to collect the assessments for the contractor, and, in case of failure through no fault of the contractor, the board of supervisors should pay the amount due out of the street department fund. But this presupposes a contract binding on the city and county. Without a contract there cannot be, legally, an assessment at all. The position seems to be this: There really was no contract binding on the city and county, but there was something which purported to be a contract, under which work was done and an assessment made. A suit was brought on this against the lot-owners, in which it was adjudged that there was no assessment because there was no contract. Now it is said the condition has happened which entitled the contractor to be paid out of the street fund; i. e., the assessment has been adjudged invalid. This is very much like claiming the contract has been adjudged invalid; therefore the city and county is liable. This is, of course, not the case of one who really had a good contract, which was erroneously adjudged to be bad in the suits on the assessments, where he could not be heard.

The fact that the lot-owner, when sued on the assessment, is expressly authorized to plead in defense that the board of supervisors had no jurisdiction to order the work to be done very much strengthens the case against appellant. It cannot be supposed that the legislature would authorize a defense on the part of the lot-owner, in a suit upon the assessment, that there was no valid contract, and yet provide that the contract should thereupon become binding upon the city and county; that, in fact, the obligation upon the city and county to pay might depend upon its being declared invalid for lack of power in the officers to make it. Of course, it would be competent for the legislature to so provide, but we see nothing in the act to indicate such an intention. Such construction is contrary to the whole policy of the statute in regard to municipal contracts. The rule here has always been that there must be a valid contract before any liability can attach to the municipality. It can only act in the mode prescribed by law. This principle has been too often declared here to require reiteration. The city and county incurs no liability for work done under a void contract; nor is there any guaranty on the part of the city and county that the forms of law have been complied with because its officers, without authority, attempt to contract. Those dealing with the city must see to it that its agents have power to act.

Holding these views, it becomes unnecessary to consider the other points discussed. Judgment affirmed.

CUMMINGS v. CUMMINGS and others. (No. 11,881.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 16, 1887.)

APPEAL—UNDERTAKING—STAY OF EXECUTION.

Upon taking the appeal, the filing of the undertaking for $300, required by section 941, Code Civil Proc. Cal., had the effect of staying execution of the judgment as to appellant. Motion to stay execution granted.

Department 2. Motion to stay execution pending appeal.

The "undertaking" referred to was one for $300, under section 941, Code Civil Proc.

A. S. Kittredge, for appellants. Thos. H. Laine and Goldsby & Jeter, for respondent.

By THE COURT. In this cause the appellant Ketchum, on taking an appeal, filed the undertaking on appeal required by law. This had the effect of staying the execution of the judgment as to him, in all respects, pending the appeal.

The following order is directed to be entered: On motion of appellant Ketchum, it is hereby ordered that the execution of the judgment herein, as to him, be, and is hereby, in all respects stayed pending the appeal.

DUFFY v. GREENEBAUM. (No. 11,206.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 17, 1887.)

APPEAL—SUPERSEDEAS BOND.

An undertaking stating that its purpose is to stay execution on appeal, and following section 942, Code Civil Proc. Cal., which provides for undertaking for that purpose, will not be construed to include the $300 undertaking on appeal required by sections 940, 941, Code Civil Proc. Cal. McFARLAND, J., dissenting.

In bank. See 12 Pac. Rep. 74. A rehearing had been granted, and this is the bank opinion.

THORNTON, J. Motion to dismiss appeal. The opinion in department 2 is correct, and will stand as the opinion of the court. 12 Pac. Rep. 74. We add, the requisition of an undertaking on appeal (of $500) is clear and distinct, (Code Civil Proc. §§ 940, 941;) and, without this undertaking, it is declared "the appeal is ineffectual for any purpose," (Id. § 940.) The undertaking to stay execution is also prescribed, and its requisites distinctly declared. Code Civil Proc. § 942. It so happens that, by the requirement of the statute, (section last cited,) the provisions of the undertaking on appeal are also, with other terms, to be inserted in the undertaking for a stay of execution. But the former is required for one purpose, and the latter for a different purpose. It cannot be denied that the legislature had the power to enact the statute in the form which it bears. Now, when an undertaking is required to render an appeal effectual for any purpose, how can the contention be sound that since an undertaking prescribed for another purpose, i. e., for a stay, contains in it the same terms and conditions, with others, as are to be inserted in an undertaking on appeal, that, therefore, the stay undertaking is sufficient for both purposes? The statute is one, and its various sections must be construed together, and it would be a singular conclusion that the legislature intended that an undertaking required for a declared purpose should operate to accomplish a different purpose; and that, when it is expressly declared that it shall have no such effect. That would be to deduce of a declared intention a different intention by implication; that the legislature, when it declared one thing, meant another and different one. We cannot declare of a statute making in words an express declaration of its intent a different intent. When an intent is declared, there can be no implication of a different intent. "The express mention of one thing implies the exclusion of another." Broom, Leg. Max. (6th Amer. Ed.) *626.

In this case there is no undertaking on appeal, and the section of the Code (Code Civil Proc. § 954) allowing an undertaking to be filed on the insufficiency of the undertaking filed, has no application, (Biagi v. Hoves, 63 Cal. 384.)

Motion to file an undertaking on appeal denied, and the appeal is dismissed. So ordered.

We concur: TEMPLE, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; PATERSON, J.

McFARLAND, J. I dissent. The undertaking provided for in section 942 has all the conditions of an undertaking on appeal; and when given, in my opinion, renders the undertaking mentioned in section 941 unnecessary.

MONTGOMERY v. LOCKE and another. (No. 9,740.)*(Supreme Court of California. February 19, 1887.)1. STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS—PLEADING.

In an action for flooding plaintiff's lands by a levee constructed by defendant, an answer averring that the levee was built more than 20 years before the commencement of the action, and was constructed and maintained with the consent of plaintiff, does not amount to a plea of a prescriptive right.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Byers & Elliott and W. L. Dudley, for appellants. J. C. Campbell, F. T. Baldwin, and Ansel Smith, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This cause was decided in department 2, in an opinion filed August 30, 1886, 11 Pac. Rep. 874. A reargument in bank was ordered, and it is again brought under review. It is submitted by appellants that the former opinion shows a misapprehension of important facts when it states that levee No. 1 was built by defendants in 1879 or 1880. Levee No. 1 was originally constructed many years prior to 1879, but, having been repeatedly broken by action of water, was, in 1879, practically incapable of restraining the flow of water, until such portions of it as had been destroyed were rebuilt. Such portions were rebuilt by defendants in the winter of 1879-80. We did not deem it important whether they built a new levee or rebuilt an old one so long as their acts resulted in flowing the water back upon plaintiff. Had defendants pleaded a prescriptive right to maintain levee No. 1, the contention of appellants would have force, but no such plea is found in their answer. It is true, the answer avers that "the levee first set out in plaintiff's second count [levee No. 1] was erected more than twenty years before the commencement of the action," and that all the levees upon the lands of defendants were built, and have been maintained, with the knowledge and consent of plaintiff, etc. An adverse possession or prescription, as it is termed, when applied to an easement, may, under our system of practice, be pleaded either by reference to the statute, as provided by section 458 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or by stating at length the facts showing that the user, commenced and continued under a claim of right, was peaceable, without interruption, open, notorious, and exclusive, and maintained with the knowledge of the plaintiff, etc. It was in this view of the case that we deemed the facts in reference to the old levee unimportant.

The complaint contains two causes of action, based upon different theories: (1) A cause of action against the defendants for constructing a levee across a natural stream, whereby the water was turned back upon the land of plaintiff; (2) a cause of action based upon the theory that defendants had prevented the flow from plaintiff's land of the surface water accumulating thereon. There was a conflict of evidence upon both these causes of action. So, too, the plea that plaintiff consented to the construction of the levee, interposed, as we suppose, in view of the maxim that "he who consents to an act is not wronged by it," was met by evidence denying such averment, and the jury having passed upon all these questions of fact, their verdict concludes the defendants.

The evidence was abundant to show that defendant Locke participated with Holman in the repairs to levee No. 1, whereby the damage was caused. A number of witnesses who worked upon the levee testified that they were employed by him to do so, and whether or not he was personally present upon the work more than once was wholly unimportant. We see no error in the admission of testimony in reference to the damages sustained by plaintiff. "The value of fruit-bearing trees is to be estimated with reference to what they are worth on the premises in their growing state and not as taken up and removed from the place." Sedg. Dam. (7th Ed.) 276; Mitchell v. Billingsley, 17 Ala. 391. In the case of forest trees, having no value except as timber, the means by which to determine the damage occasioned by their removal must be quite different from that pursued in determining the value of fruit-trees, which may have no value whatever when removed from the soil, and which, at any rate, are chiefly valuable for that which they produce in a growing state.

The record does not purport to contain all the instructions given by the court. We see no error in the giving or refusal to give instructions calling for a reversal, and are of opinion the judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

By THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

DAGGETT v. VANDERSLICE. (No. 9,541.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 18, 1887.)

NEW TRIAL—ACTION AGAINST BAILEE—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Where an action was brought to recover the value of certain goods left with a defendant for safe-keeping, and the court rendered a judgment in favor of defendant, and afterwards granted the plaintiff a new trial, held, upon the facts of the case, that there was no such abuse of the discretion vested in the trial court as would warrant a reversal of the order.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

This action was brought to recover the value of certain silver ware deposited by the plaintiff with defendant in the year 1872, at his store in San Francisco, for her own personal accommodation, and without any reward to be paid therefor. In 1883 she made a demand for the same, when defendant discovered that all of the ware except one piece had been surreptitiously abstracted and taken from his possession, by some unknown person, without his knowledge or consent, and against his will. The goods had been purchased of defendant, who was a dealer in silver ware and jewelry, and presented to the plaintiff, who requested that they might be placed in show-cases in the store, and in which defendant did place them, and keep them for more than four years. Afterwards they were removed from the show-cases, and placed in the store-room of the defendant, at his own instance, for the purpose of making room in the case for his own goods, and without the consent or knowledge of the plaintiff. The chief question was whether the defendant exercised the care required of him under the circumstances for the preservation of the goods. The court decided in favor of the defendant, and afterwards, on motion of plaintiff, granted a new trial. And from this order defendant appealed.

S. F. Gordon & Young, for Vanderslice, appellant. Byrne & Cross, for Daggett, respondent.

FOOTE, C. This is an appeal from an order granting a new trial. The action was instituted to recover from Vanderslice, the defendant, the value of some silver ware left with him for safe-keeping. Judgment was rendered for the defendant. The plaintiff then moved for a new trial, which was granted, and from the order made therein this appeal is prosecuted. We perceive no such abuse of the discretion vested in the trial court as would warrant a reversal of the order made in the premises, and in our opinion it should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; SEARLS, C.

SAN FRANCISCO SAV. UNION v. MEYERS and others. (No. 11,325.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 18, 1887.)

1. APPEAL—JUDGMENT AGREED TO—INDORSEMENT ON BACK OF JUDGMENT.

A. moved to dismiss an appeal of B. on the ground that the judgment appealed from was entered "upon the mutual consent" of B. and the other parties to the action. In the margin opposite to the copy of the judgment contained in the transcript appear the words: "Indorsed in lead-pencil on the back of the original judgment is the following: 'Agreed to. PILLSBURY & BLANDING. LEWIS SHEARER. WILLIAM T. HERRIN.'" Held, that there is nothing in the indorsement itself, separated from the other portions of the transcript, to indicate that the names written in lead-pencil were the names of attorneys for any of the parties.

2. SAME—TRIAL COURT—AMENDING JUDGMENT PENDING APPEAL.

The trial court cannot deprive an appellate court of jurisdiction of an appeal from its judgment by amending the judgment pending the appeal.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county.

Edward Lynch, for appellant. Wm. T. Herrin and Lewis Shearer, for respondents.

MCKINSTRY, J. The respondent moves to dismiss the appeal of the defendant McDonald on the ground that the judgment appealed from was entered "upon the mutual consent" of the appellant and the other parties to the action. In the margin, opposite to the copy of the judgment contained in the transcript, appear the words: "Indorsed in lead-pencil on the back of the original judgment is the following: 'Agreed to. PILLSBURY & BLANDING. LEWIS SHEARER. WILLIAM T. HERRIN.'" The answer of defendant McDonald is subscribed "WALLACE, GREATHOUSE, AND BLANDING," as his attorneys, for whom, after the entry of the judgment, was substituted Edward Lynch, Esq. The notice of appeal is signed "EDWARD LYNCH, Attorney for Defendant McDonald." There is nothing in the indorsement itself, separated from the other portions of the transcript, to indicate that the names written in lead-pencil were the names of attorneys for any of the parties. It does not appear whether they were signed before or after the judgment was rendered or entered, or, if signed before, that the words "agreed to" were intended to mean anything more than that the draft of the decree or judgment prepared to be presented to the judge was agreed to as properly expressing the judgment ordered by the court.

There is no recital in the judgment showing it was based on the consent of the defendant-appellant. The judgment commences with the recital: "This cause came on regularly to be heard in open court on this seventh day of July, 1885, Wm. Herrin, Esq., appearing for plaintiff, and Lewis Shearer, Esq., appearing as the attorney of defendants Robinson and Meyers, and Pillsbury and Blanding, Esqs., for defendant McDonald. The court having heard all the evidence and proofs produced herein, and duly considered the same, and being fully advised in the premises, and it appearing therefrom to the satisfaction of the court," etc. Important issues were made by the pleadings on the part of defendant McDonald, and the presumption is that the judgment which determines those issues was based upon the evidence bearing on them, and not upon the pencil memorandum made, so far as appears, after the trial was concluded.

A former motion to dismiss the appeal was denied "without prejudice." Even if it be conceded that we would be authorized to grant the renewed motion on the same evidence as that submitted on the hearing of the former motion, we think such evidence does not require of us that the appeal be now dismissed. It is urged, however, that the new motion is based upon evidence of facts not presented nor relied upon when the former motion was made. The only new fact submitted on the hearing of the present motion is that, after the order denying the former motion to dismiss, the court below, on application of plaintiff, amended, or attempted to amend, the judgment appealed from by inserting therein "Pillsbury and Blanding, attorneys for the defendant M. L. McDonald, * * * agreeing thereto." If it be conceded the court below had power to amend the judgment, the amended judgment was substituted for the original, and, from the time of its entry, became the "final judgment" in the superior court. We think it very plain that the superior court cannot deprive this court of jurisdiction of an appeal from a judgment by amending the judgment while the appeal is pending here. It is contended the amended judgment of the superior court is evidence that the original judgment was entered by consent. Aside from the proposition that the superior court had no power to affect the appeal from the judgment by amending it, the amended judgment, whether valid or invalid, was appealable, and, in fact, (if we look at the record of that appeal,) has been appealed from by the defendant McDonald. We ought not now to determine such appeal, and it would be to anticipate its determination to decide the amended judgment to have been a valid and conclusive adjudication that the original judgment was made and entered by consent. Motion denied.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—NOMINATION—RIGHT OF NON-RESIDENT SURVIVING WIFE—SECTIONS 1365, 1369, 1383, CODE CIVIL PROC. CAL.

Section 1369 of the California Code of Civil Procedure, which renders a non-resident surviving wife incompetent to serve as the administratrix of her husband's estate, does not take away the right given her by section 1365 to have letters issued to some competent person, whom she shall have requested to act as administrator, the latter section being in no respect in conflict with section 1383, revoking letters of administration.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

Sawyer & Burnett, for appellant. Wright & Cormac and O. P. Evans, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. John Stevenson died in Scotland some time in the year A. D. 1882, leaving a will which was probated in that country, by the terms of which instrument he devised his entire estate to trustees for the benefit of his widow and niece. P. A. Roach, the public administrator for the city and county of San Francisco, on the thirtieth day of July, A. D. 1883, filed in the superior court of said city and county an authenticated copy of said will, and its probate in Scotland, accompanied by a request in writing from the said widow that he be appointed administrator of the estate of the decedent with the will annexed, and petitioned for the probate of the copy of the will, and the issuance of letters of administration thereunder to him. Robert Stevenson, a brother of the decedent, on the second day of August, A. D. 1883, petitioned that said letters be issued to him. Both petitions were heard together. The court below admitted the copy of the will to probate, granted letters as prayed for to the public administrator, and denied the application of Stevenson, who appealed from the order made by the court in the premises.

To us it is very evident that the public administrator, the nominee of the surviving wife of the decedent, was the proper party to whom letters of administration were rightfully granted. Section 1365, Code Civil Proc., reads as follows: "Administration of the estate of a person dying intestate must be granted to some one or more of the persons hereinafter mentioned, the relatives of the deceased being entitled to administer only when they are entitled to succeed to his personal estate, or some portion thereof, and they are respectively entitled thereto in the following order: (1) The surviving husband or wife, or some competent person whom he or she may request to have appointed. * * *"

It clearly appears that this section contains no restriction whatever on the power of the surviving husband or wife first to administer on the estate of the deceased consort, or, failing in that, to request, and thereby have appointed, some competent person as administrator. Section 1369, Code Civil Proc., renders a non-resident surviving wife incompetent to serve as the administratrix of her husband's estate, but does not take away the right given her by section 1365, supra, to have letters issued to some competent person whom she shall have requested to act as administrator. Estate of Cotter, 54 Cal. 215. Section 1379, Code Civil Proc., accords to persons other than a surviving husband or wife the right of nominating an administrator, but has no reference to such husband or wife, and their rights in that matter, which are fixed and determined by section 1365, supra, (Estate of Cotter, supra;) and that section does not conflict, as the appellant contends, in any respect with section 1383, Code Civil Proc.

It is unnecessary to determine any other question raised by counsel, and the order should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; SEARLS, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order is affirmed.

Pillsbury & Blanding, for appellants. H. F. Crane, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This is an action to determine whether a certain block of land, situate within the corporate limits of the town of San Leandro, in Alameda county, is a public square, dedicated to the use of the town and the inhabitants thereof, or is owned and rightfully occupied by the defendants. In the court below the plaintiff prevailed, and the appeal is by the defendants from the judgment and an order denying a new trial. It appears from the record that in 1854 the widow and children of Jose Joaquin Estudillo were the owners of the Rancho de San Leandro, situate in Alameda county, and embracing about 6,000 acres of land, and were desirous of founding a town or village thereon. As a site for the proposed town or village they selected about 200 acres of the rancho, which included the residence of the owners, and is the present site of the town of San Leandro, and caused it to be surveyed into streets, blocks, and lots. They then caused a map of the survey to be made, on which the streets were represented and named, and the blocks, with the exception hereinafter noted, were numbered and divided into lots. The blocks were 300 feet square, and were designated by numbers from 1 to 66 inclusive, and each full block was divided into 14 lots, designated by the letters of the alphabet, "A" to "N," inclusive. One of the blocks—the one bounded by Davis street, Estudillo street, Ward street, and Martinez street, and which is here in controversy—was marked "Court Square" on the map, and was not numbered or divided into lots. The map was certified as a plat of the town, and was filed by the owners of the land in the office of the recorder of Alameda county on the twenty-seventh day of February, 1855, and has ever since remained and now is a part of the records and files of that office. A duplicate of the map was kept by the proprietors at their place of business in the town, and was by them and their agents exhibited to all purchasers of lots and blocks, and all said lots and blocks were negotiated and sold to purchasers in accordance with the map or plat, and all deeds were made with reference to it. The town was first incorporated and made a body politic and corporate by an act of the legislature approved March 21, 1872, and during the months of June and July of that year the board of trustees caused a new survey and plat of the town to be made. This new plat or map, so far as the 200-acre tract before spoken of is concerned, was an exact duplicate of the map filed in 1855, and was adopted and approved as the plat of the town by a resolution and ordinance passed by the board of trustees on the ninth of December, 1872.

The foregoing facts are alleged in the complaint, and not denied by the answer. It further appears that not less than eight blocks and thirteen lots in other blocks were sold and conveyed by the proprietors between February, 1855, and March, 1857. One of the blocks so sold was on Davis street, opposite to the block in question, and at the time of the sale it was represented to the purchaser that the said block in question was a public square. For eight or nine years after the map was filed, in 1855, "Court Square" remained open and uninclosed. In 1862, '63, or '64 it was inclosed by one of the defendants, in connection with an adjacent block on which he resided, and a small barn was placed upon it. Since that time the inclosure has been kept up, and a part of the ground has been annually cultivated by him.

Upon these facts the court below found, as conclusions of law, "that the town proprietors, in making the map and plat of the town, as stated, and in placing the same as a public record of the county in the office of the county recorder, it operated as a declaration on their part to dedicate the place named 'Court Square' to the purposes of an open, public town square for the use of the inhabitants of the town and the public; that in immediately following up the making and filing of the said map and plat by sales and conveyances by them of lots and blocks in the town to bona fide purchasers, in accordance with such map and plat, such dedication became absolute and irrevocable." These conclusions are assailed by the appellants as not warranted by the facts, and whether they are or not is the principal question presented in the cause.

It is settled law that where one owning land lays off a town or village thereon, and makes a map of the town-site showing it to be divided into streets, alleys, blocks, and lots, and then sells lots with reference to such map, he thereby makes an irrevocable dedication of the space as represented on the map as streets to the use of the public. There are many cases to this effect, but only a few need be cited. Rowan's Ex'rs v. Town of Portland, 8 B. Mon. 232; Briel v. City of Natchez, 48 Miss. 423; Bartlett v. Bangor, 67 Me. 464; Wiggins v. McCleary, 49 N. Y. 346; Kittle v. Pfeiffer, 22 Cal. 489; Stone v. Brooks, 35 Cal. 501. And if there be public squares or places represented on the map the same rule applies to them, and dedication thereof may be established in the same manner. Cincinnati v. White's Lessees, 6 Pet. 431; Trustees of Watertown v. Cowen, 4 Paige, 510; Huber v. Gazley, 18 Ohio, 18; Logansport v. Dunn, 8 Ind. 378; Carter v. City of Portland, 4 Or. 339; Ruch v. Rock Island, 5 Biss. 95; Grogan v. Town of Hayward, 6 Sawy. 498. To make the dedication complete no formal acceptance of it is necessary. In this case no such acceptance could have been had till the town was organized by the legislature in 1872; and until then the former owners held the title of the property dedicated in trust for the public. Grogan v. Town of Hayward, supra; Jersey City v. Morris Canal & Banking Co., 12 N. J. Eq. 547; School-district v. Heath, 56 Cal. 478.

But it is urged that the proprietors never intended to dedicate the premises in question as a public square, and so no dedication was in fact made; that at the time the map was made and filed, San Leandro was striving to become the county seat of the county, and that the proprietors, hoping and expecting the adoption of the town as the county seat, and that they would derive a benefit and advantage therefrom, for the purpose of showing to purchasers of lots that the county buildings were to be located in the town, marked and designated "Court Square" for county purposes, intending it to be used for the erection of a court-house and such other buildings and offices as customarily accompany and are used with the court-house; that the name shows that the block was intended to be used for county buildings and county purposes, and not otherwise, and that it carries on its face notice of the use for which it was designed. In support of this contention it was shown that on the twenty-ninth day of December, 1854, the proprietors executed and delivered to the county of Alameda their deed for four acres of land, "to be located in such part of the town of San Leandro as any persons who shall be authorized to act and decide upon the matter may choose," and the land so chosen was to be "for the exclusive use of said county for the erection of a court-house and such other buildings and inclosures as may be needed for the use of said county." It was further shown that on the twenty-fifth day of August, 1856, and after San Leandro had been made the county seat of the county, the proprietors executed another deed and thereby conveyed to the county "block number nineteen, (19,) in the town of San Leandro, in said county of Alameda, according to the records, plat, or other official plan of said town, con taining two (2) acres, more or less; said block of land having been selected by the board of supervisors of said county as a site for the erection of a courthouse and jail upon, as contemplated by the deed of the said party of the first part to the said party of the second part above referred to."

No other evidence upon this subject was offered by defendants, and the court found "that neither at the time of the making of said survey and plat by the proprietors, to-wit, some time previous to the twenty-ninth day of December, 1854, or at the time said plat was filed as aforesaid, or at any time, did said proprietors intend that said place, named on the plat 'Court Square,' should be used for the erection of county buildings, or be used in any manner for county purposes; but, on the contrary, it was the intention of said owners and proprietors, in laying out said town as aforesaid, that this place, so left by them open and vacant, and by them named 'Court Square,' should forever be and remain an open, public square for the use of the town and the inhabitants thereof and the public." We are unable to see any such significance in the word "court" as is claimed by the appellants, or that this finding should be set aside because not justified by the evidence.

It is further insisted that because after 1871 the town and county assessors included this square in their assessment lists, and it was included in the general tax levy, and the defendants' intestate paid the taxes, and, in obedience to the municipal ordinances, improved the streets bordering on the square, the plaintiff is now estopped from claiming it as against the defendants. The answer is, that when the block was dedicated to the use of the public as a public square it became a part of the public grounds of the town, and could not be legally assessed or taxed for state, county, or municipal purposes; and the erroneous action of officials in the respects named could not impair the rights of the public, or confer rights upon the defendants. The doctrine of estoppel has, therefore, no application.

As to the defense that the action is barred by the statute of limitations, it is sufficient to refer to the cases of Hoadley v. City of San Francisco, 50 Cal. 265, and People v. Pope, 53 Cal. 437, in which it was held by this court that no one can acquire by adverse occupation, as against the public, the right to a street or square dedicated to public uses.

It follows that the judgment and order should be

GAFNEY v. CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. (No. 11,316.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 16, 1887.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—CONTRACTS—STREET WORK.

Under St. Cal. 1869-70, p. 890, relating to street work in San Francisco, allowing a contractor for such work to resort to the city for payment, if the assessment upon lot-owners is declared invalid by the courts, so that the money cannot be collected from them, and if such invalidity appears by the decision of the courts not to have been caused by any fault of the contractor, the judgment of invalidity need not find affirmatively that the invalidity was not caused by any fault of the contractor, nothing appearing therefrom to suggest that it was.

2. ESTOPPEL—MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—JUDGMENT.

If, in the action against the lot-owners upon the assessment, the assessment is found invalid upon grounds affecting the validity of the contract, such finding is not conclusive upon the contractor in his action to enforce the liability of the city.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—CONTRACT—VALIDITY—STREETS.

A contract for macadamizing, made by municipal officers, will not be invalid because the resolution ordering the macadamizing embraced grading also, and no grading could legally be done for want of a petition of property owners.

4. SAME—GRADE OF STREETS.

A statute fixing the grade of a street at points of intersection with other streets fixes the grade of the entire length of the street.

5. SAME—MAP—CONSTRUCTION.

The width of a street is sufficiently shown on an official map by figures printed across the space denoting the street, without the word "feet" added, if the scale of the map shows that feet is intended.

6. SAME—EXTENSIONS OF TIME.

Extensions of time for completing a contract for macadamizing streets in San Francisco, granted after the act of 1872 took effect, under a contract providing for such extensions made prior to that act, are valid.

7. INTEREST—CONTRACTOR'S CLAIM—MUNICIPAL CORPORATION.

A debt due a contractor for street work, for which a city is liable only in case an assessment levied on property owners to pay it is declared by the courts to be invalid, only bears interest, as against the city, from the date of the adjudication of invalidity, although, under the statute, the assessment itself bears interest from the time it becomes due.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.
George Flournoy, Jr., and Garber, Thornton & Bishop, for appellant.
Mich. Mullany, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. Appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial. Prior to 1870 street work in San Francisco had been inaugurated by a resolution and notice of intention, followed by certain notices and advertised proposals, ending in a contract. The superintendent of streets was required to approve the work, when satisfactorily performed, and to issue to the contractor an assessment on the adjoining lots in payment for the work. Here the concern of the city ended. The contractor assumed control of all further proceedings, and the issuance of the assessment discharged the city from all further liability to him. Under this system the lot-owner could set up to defeat the action, not only defects in the proceedings before the contract was let, but defects in the assessment, which assessment could only be made after the superintendent of streets had determined that the contract had been fully performed. Here was an obvious hardship. The contractor could not control the action of the city official, but still he was liable to lose the entire reward of his labor through an oversight of the officer. The proceedings having been held to be in invitum, a strict compliance with the statute was exacted, and very frequently great hardship resulted without fault on the part of the contractor.

In the statute passed April 4, 1870, (St. 1869-70, p. 890,) this system was changed. All the proceedings down to the assessment were left substantially as before. From this point a new system was adopted. The assessment made by the superintendent of streets was delivered to the tax collector, and in lieu of the assessment the superintendent gave the contractor a order for the amount due him, payable only out of the funds collected from the property holders, and in amounts as the same should be collected at the end of each month. An assistant was provided for the city and county attorney, specially upon him to commence these suits within 10 days after the assessments were delivered to him. It was further provided that "when any contract for street work shall have been made by the proper officers of said city and county, and shall be fully and faithfully performed by the contractor thereof, or his assigns, in every respect, and in accordance with the terms of said contract, and afterwards the assessment for the payment of such street work shall be declared to be invalid by the highest courts in the state, and if such invalidity shall appear by the decision of such courts not to have been caused by the frauds, acts, conduct, or omission of said contractor, it shall be the duty of the said board of supervisors of said city and county to order the full amount or amounts of such contract, or whatever amount or amounts shall be due and owing on said contract, to be paid to said contractor or his assigns out of the street department fund, together with all such fees to the said attorney as he, the said attorney, would have been entitled to if the same had been collected after judgment, and the city and county auditor shall audit, and the treasurer shall pay the same; * * * and, upon such payment to such contractor as aforesaid, the said contractor or his assigns shall assign said contract to the city and county of San Francisco."

This action is upon a contract for macadamizing Railroad avenue, entered into in 1871. The work was performed, the assessment made, suits brought upon the assessments, which were finally held invalid by the highest courts of the state, November 1, 1882. The suits were decided in favor of the defendants on the ground: (1) The grade and width of the street had never been officially established; (2) the board of supervisors had no jurisdiction to order the work to be done.

Now, it was necessary for the plaintiff to put in evidence this judgment, and show by it that it had been finally adjudicated that the assessment was invalid, as a condition precedent to his right to recover. It is now contended that it is conclusive as to the grounds upon which it was held to be invalid, not, of course, as res adjudicata in the ordinary sense, but because by his contract he made his right to recover depend upon this judgment. Or, to put the matter in the strongest possible terms, he cannot rely upon this as an adjudication that the assessment was invalid, and at the same time claim a right to recover on the ground that the court erroneously so held. This certainly seems a very plausible argument, but the matter cannot be so easily disposed of. It is necessary to examine into the purpose and scope of the amendatory act before disposing of the question. As already stated, the change effected in the proceedings by the amendment commences after the work has been performed. Up to that time the former law was in force. It was necessary that there should be a valid contract, binding upon the city. Whether there was power to contract, or the power, if it existed, had been exercised as directed by law, were matters which the contractor was bound to ascertain for himself, and to decide correctly at his peril. The data for such conclusion were easily accessible to him. But under the former system his right to recover did not depend altogether upon his faithful performance of a valid contract. He took the assessment as payment, and this was liable to be declared void, through the omission or mistake of the street superintendent, after he had fully performed his labor. As he had no control over the superintendent of streets, who was a municipal officer, this was a great hardship. The invalidity of the contract, if it existed, he could ascertain beforehand; but in regard to the assessment, if invalid, it was in consequence of failure of duty on the part of the officials, which he could neither anticipate nor prevent. Here the new law steps in, and (disregarding for the present the necessity of an adjudication of the invalidity of the assessment before a recovery can be had) declares, in effect, that if there be a valid contract, and the contractor has faithfully performed his work, he shall be paid. The condition is only that the assessment fails through no fault of the contractor.

Having been compelled to decide upon the validity of the contract at his peril, it would be hard measure, after he had faithfully performed his work, if that question could be decided against him without his having an opportunity to be heard. The presumptions are all against a construction which would not allow him his day in court. The language of the act does not necessarily require this construction. It provides that he shall be paid by the city if he fully performs, and afterwards the street assessment shall be declared invalid, "and if such invalidity shall appear by the decision of said courts not to have been in any manner caused by the frauds, acts, conduct, or omissions of said contractor."

The contractor was not and could not have been a party to those suits. The litigation was between the city and the lot-owners. If the construction contended for be correct, both parties to the suit would gain by a decision in favor of the lot-owners establishing the invalidity of the contract. The city, by simply failing to put in proof, could escape liability, and the contractor, who would be the only one to suffer loss, could not prevent it. The statute allows the lot-owner to defend, not only for defects in the assessment, but on the ground that the supervisors had no jurisdiction to order street work done. As to only two matters does the statute seem to require an adjudication before the contractor can have recourse to the city for payment. These are: (1) That the assessment is invalid; (2) the invalidity was in no manner caused by the fault of the contractor.

The essential thing here is, there being a valid contract, and the work having been done, the city fails to collect without fault on the part of the contractor; and we think the judgment conclusive only on those two points.

But it is said there was in fact no valid contract.

First, there was no petition signed by a majority of the owners of property, etc. The contract was for macadamizing, and it is not claimed that such petition was required as a preliminary to such a contract, but such petition was necessary to authorize the work of grading, and here both were embraced in one resolution, and ordered at the same time; and it is claimed that there could be no power to contract for macadamizing unless there was jurisdiction to order the grading. But we do not see why the validity of this contract should depend upon the other. It seems that they may both be let at the same time, and that a contract for macadamizing may be let before the grading is completed. Dyer v. Hudson, 65 Cal. 374, 4 Pac. Rep. 251; Emery v. San Francisco Gas Co., 28 Cal. 375. Of course, in such cases, although the contract for grading may be valid, there is still a contingency as to whether the work will be performed. If the grading be not done, the contract for macadamizing must fail. If the grading fail because the contractor is not legally bound, it will be no worse than a failure for any other reason. After a street is graded, though under a void contract, the power to macadamize would be the same. We think the contract not invalid for that reason.

It is next objected that the grade of Railroad avenue had not been established. But we think the statute referred to has that effect. It enacts that the grades of the streets and avenues mentioned shall be with reference to the base line of city grades, for the intersections named, as follows, etc. We understand this to be the usual mode of designating grades for streets, and that it fixes the grade not only at points specially mentioned, but at all points intermediate, by simply connecting the named points by a straight line. The width was shown by the official map by the number of the feet being printed across the space denoting the streets, without indicating what the numbers stood for. For instance, across the space indicating Railroad avenue was printed the number "100." The word "feet" was not added. The scale of the map, however, would show that the space was 100 feet. These two facts, taken together, sufficiently show what the figures were intended to represent.

Nor do we think there can be any doubt as to the extensions of time within which the work was done. It could not have been intended by the act of 1872 to render the completion of existing contracts impossible. The contract itself provided for extensions, and, as it was known when entered into that its performance would depend to some extent upon the grading, a reasonable exercise of this power was expected.

But it is contended that the statute makes it a condition precedent to the right of the contractor to be paid that it should affirmatively appear in the judgments on the assessments that the assessment was invalid, and that such invalidity was not caused by any fraud, act, conduct, or omission of the contractor. The contractor could not have been made a party to these proceedings. If there was in fact no fault on his part affecting the validity of the assessment, and no charge of any such, there could not possibly be such adjudication. It would rest altogether with the lot-owners,—defendants in the suits on the assessment,—whether they would interpose such defense, and, if the appellant be correct upon this proposition, a failure on the part of the contractor to be guilty of any conduct capable of raising a suspicion of wrong would insure his loss of all claim to compensation if there were a failure from any cause to collect the assessment; for instance, through the fault of the superintendent in making the assessment. Such a construction of the statute cannot be the true one. The only reasonable meaning which can be given to the law is that such fact, to-wit, the invalidity of the assessment without fault on the part of the contractor, does appear when the judgment discloses the grounds upon which the court finds the assessment invalid, and the fault of the contractor does not appear to have contributed to such invalidity. If that be not so, then the condition is an impossible one in the literal sense, and it is sufficient that in the suit brought upon that contract such facts appear.

We do not understand upon what ground the court allowed interest upon plaintiff's claim at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum. This is an action upon the contract, and that contains no warrant for such judgment. Neither does the act contain any provision which would justify such a claim. The assessment to be paid by the lot-owner, at least after it becomes delinquent and suit is brought, is to bear interest. Probably it was intended that the interest when collected should go to the contractor, although we find no express direction in the statute upon the subject. But there is no provision for interest on the contract, and the board is directed simply to allow the amount due on the contract. This could only bear legal interest from the time it became due. Section 1917, Civil Code. It became due from the city only when the adjudication of the invalidity of the assessment became final, which was November 1, 1882. There was no forbearance in favor of the city, or detention of the money by the city, until then. Section 1915, Civil Code.

The judgment must be modified in regard to the matter of interest as herein indicated, and also so that it shall be payable only out of the street department fund, and not from the general fund. In other respects the judgment and order are affirmed.

TOWN OF DIXON v. MAYES and others. (No. 11,633.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 23, 1887.)

1. TAXATION—MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—AGRICULTURAL LAND.

Land situate within the limits of a city, although used solely for agricultural purposes, is subject to municipal taxation; following City of Santa Rosa v. Coulter, 58 Cal. 537.

2. SAME—ACTION TO RECOVER—WHEN TAXES DELINQUENT.

Under the California act of March 13, 1883, which provides for the incorporation and government of municipalities, no time is fixed for payment of municipal taxes, and a tax levied by a town cannot become delinquent until the board of trustees has determined by ordinance the date when the same should be paid. An action to recover a tax, brought under these circumstances, without any such determination, will be dismissed.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment of the superior court of the county of Solano, where the cause was tried by BUCKLES, J., without a jury.

A. Manning and A. L. Hart, for appellant, Town of Dixon. J. McKenna and Geo. A. Lamont, for respondents, Mayes and others.

BELCHER, C. C. The town of Dixon was regularly incorporated, with fixed and defined boundaries, by an act of legislature approved March 30, 1878. St. 1877-78, p. 712. It was afterwards reorganized, with the same boundaries as a municipal corporation of the sixth class, under the provisions of an act of the legislature entitled "An act to provide for the organization, incorporation, and government of municipal corporations," approved March 13, 1883. St. 1883, p. 93.

The defendant Mayes owned certain real property, situate within the corporate limits of the town, and among other pieces a strip of land 400 feet wide and 73 rods long, which was a part of an adjoining farm owned by him. In 1884 all his real and personal property within the corporate limits was assessed for municipal purposes, and a tax of 50 cents on the $100 was levied thereon. He refused to pay the tax, and this action was brought to recover it.

Two points were made by the defendant in the court below, and are made here: First, that the strip of land referred to was used solely for farming purposes, and so was not subject to municipal taxation; and, second, that the board of trustees of the town had never provided by ordinance any system for the assessment, levy, and collection of taxes, as required by the act of March 13, 1883, § 871, and for that reason the levy was not authorized, and the tax was not delinquent, and therefore its collection could not be enforced.

Upon the first point the court found as follows: "That said strip includes at its extreme west end the dwelling-house, corral, barn, orchard, water-tank, and out-buildings of said John S. Mayes, and is part of the farm of said John S. Mayes, consisting of 1,000 acres, and is used entirely in connection therewith, and had been inclosed with a fence and so used for some years prior to the incorporating of said town in 1878, and is now so used; that said land is not benefited by being within said limits of said town; is not laid out in lots or platted; has no streets or alleys, or sidewalks, sewers, gas-mains, or other municipal improvements or appliances and conveniences, and is not needed by said town for any of these purposes." The court further found as a conclusion of law that the strip of land was not subject to taxation for municipal purposes, and that the tax levied against it and the improvements thereon was therefore illegal and void.

In some of the states decisions have been rendered sustaining, and in others holding against, the views of the court below. The same question was presented to this court in City of Santa Rosa v. Coulter, 58 Cal. 537, and it was there held that land situate within the city limits, but used solely for agricultural purposes, was subject to municipal taxation. That case was, in our opinion, rightly determined, and is decisive of this. It should perhaps be added that the case is not referred to in the briefs filed by counsel, and was therefore probably not called to the attention of the court below at the time of the trial.

Upon the second point the court found, in effect, that no ordinance had been passed providing a system for the assessment, levy, and collection of taxes, but that all the taxable property within the town, including that of defendant, was duly assessed by an assessor elected, qualified, and acting for that purpose; that the assessor made a true list of the property, and that the same, properly verified, was submitted to the board of trustees, acting as a board of equalization, and all of the returns of the assessor thereon were by the board examined, considered, and rectified; that the tax was levied by the board of trustees on the sixteenth day of September, 1884, by a resolution duly passed and entered upon its records, and was thereafter properly apportioned upon the assessment roll, but no provision was made for its collection, or as to the time when it would become delinquent; that the tax-list was placed in the hands of the town marshal for collection, and in January following a delinquent list was delivered to the town attorney, and this action commenced.

Upon these facts the court was of the opinion that the tax levied against the defendants' property, other than the strip of land, improvements, and personal property thereon, before referred to, was valid and lawful, and the plaintiff was entitled to a judgment therefor, which was accordingly entered. From that judgment, entered in the court below, the plaintiff appealed, but the defendant did not appeal.

Section 871 of the act of March 13, 1883, provides as follows: "The board of trustees shall have power, and it shall be their duty, to provide by ordinance a system for the assessment, levy, and collection of all city or town taxes, not inconsistent with the provisions of this chapter, which system shall conform, as nearly as the circumstances of the case may permit, to the provisions of the laws of this state in reference to the assessment, levy, and collection of state and county taxes, except as to the times for such assessment, levy, and collection, and except as to the officers by whom such duties are to be performed. All taxes assessed, together with any percentage imposed for delinquency, and the costs of collection, shall constitute liens on the property assessed from and after the first Monday in March in each year; which liens may be enforced by a summary sale of such property, and the execution and delivery of all necessary certificates and deeds therefor, under such regulations as may be prescribed by ordinance, or by actions in any court of competent jurisdiction to foreclose such liens."

Other sections of the statute provide for the levy of a tax, the amount thereof, and by whom it shall be levied; the assessment of property, and the time when and by whom it shall be assessed; the equalization of the assessment; and the manner of collecting the tax, and apportioning the money when collected; but we fail to find any provision as to the time when a tax may be levied, or when it will become delinquent if not paid. Assuming, in the absence of any statutory provision as to the time when a tax may be levied, that the board of trustees may levy it at any time when it suits their convenience and the needs of the town, still it cannot become delinquent until there has been some authoritative determination as to the time when it must be paid. As no time has been fixed by statute or ordinance when the tax involved in this case should be paid, it did not become delinquent, and the action for its recovery was therefore improperly brought.

It follows that the judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; FOOTE, C.

By THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

2. APPEAL—DISCRETIONARY ORDER—NEW TRIAL.

The superior court of California has power to grant a new trial where it is of opinion that the verdict is contrary to the weight of evidence, and the supreme court will not interfere with the discretion of the superior court in so doing, except in extreme cases, or in cases where it is apparent the court below has proceeded upon an erroneous hypothesis.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

Wigginton, Creed & Hawes, for appellant. Crittenden, Thornton and F. H. Merzbach, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This is an action to recover damages laid at $10,000, for injuries sustained by plaintiff by falling through a trap-door in a building of one E. J. Bennett, alleged to have been carelessly and negligently left open by the servants and employes of said defendant. The cause was tried by a jury, and a verdict rendered in favor of plaintiff for $200 upon which judgment was entered. In due time plaintiff moved for a new trial upon the grounds of "(1) insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict; (2) that said verdict is against law and against the evidence." The motion was granted, and defendant appeals from the order of the court thus awarding a new trial.

Among the specifications of error in the statement, is one to the effect that it appears from the evidence that the injuries of plaintiff were very serious, and that the sum paid [found] by the jury, of $200, was unreasonable and grossly inadequate, etc.

In DuBrutz v. Jessup, 54 Cal. 118, it was held that, where a party against whom a verdict was rendered depended upon the circumstance that the verdict was too large or too small, he might rely upon the ground that the verdict was not sustained by the evidence, the specification being that "the said verdict, in respect to the said damages, is not sustained by the evidence, and is contrary to the law and the evidence;" and this was held a sufficient specification.

Reference to the evidence on this point shows that it tended to prove the injuries sustained by the plaintiff to have been very severe, resulting in her long confinement, with a reasonable apprehension that they may permanently disable her. Under such circumstances, the court may well have concluded that the sum awarded her was insignificant in proportion to the injuries received. It is within the province of the superior court to grant a new trial where it is of opinion the verdict is contrary to the weight of evidence. Bauder v. Tyrrel, 59 Cal. 99; Irving v. Cunningham, 58 Cal. 306. And this court will not interfere with its discretion in so doing, except in extreme cases, or except in cases where it is apparent the court below has proceeded upon an erroneous hypothesis.

We are of opinion the order appealed from should be affirmed.

DIMON v. SUPERIOR COURT. (No. 11,986.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 20, 1887.)

REVIEW—APPEAL—FROM JUSTICE'S COURT—STATEMENT OF FACTS.

Upon an application for a writ of review of a judgment of the superior court of California, dismissing an appeal taken on both law and facts from a justice's court, where no statement of the case on appeal had been made and filed as provided by section 975, Code Civil Proc. Cal., the application was denied on the ground that the petition did not set forth sufficient facts.

Department 2.

The petition set forth, in substance, that one B. commenced an action for $123 against petitioner, in a justice's court; that on June 12, 1885, defendant in the said action (petitioner here) served on plaintiff's attorneys, and filed in said justice's court, his answer, denying all the allegations of the complaint. On said last day named judgment was entered against Simon, "but without determining the issues raised by said answer, and as if the same had not been filed." July 3, 1885, Simon appealed to superior court on questions of both law and fact, and filed undertakings for costs and stay of execution. B. subsequently moved the superior court (respondent here) to dismiss the appeal upon the grounds "that the appeal is on both law and fact, and no question of fact was taken in the court below, the defendant having failed either to demur or answer to the summons and complaint duly served on him, and his default was duly entered in said cause, and judgment as prayed for entered against him; and on the further ground that no statement of the case was made and filed in said cause as provided by section 975, Code Civil Proc." September 23, 1885, the motion to dismiss was denied, but subsequently, on January 14, 1887, the order of denial was vacated, and the motion to dismiss granted; the court refusing to entertain the appeal because no statement on appeal had been filed or settled, and the court considering the appeal from questions of law only. Wherefore petitioner prays a writ of review, etc.

J. M. Lesser and H. I. Kowalsky, for petitioner. H. C. Firebaugh, for respondent.

By THE COURT. Application for a writ of review denied. The petition does not set forth sufficient facts.

TYRRELL v. BALDWIN and others. (No. 11,408.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 26, 1887.)

APPEAL—TIME OF TAKING—SERVING AND FILING NOTICE.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal., an appeal from a judgment is taken by filing and serving a notice of appeal; and where the notice was served on the seventh of December, 1885, and filed on the eighth day of December, 1885, the day on which the judgment was entered, held, that the appeal was not premature, the notice not being served and filed before the entry of judgment.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

A. L. Rhodes, for appellant. Wm. Royal, for respondent.

McKINSTRY, J. Motion to dismiss appeal. If the notice of appeal from the judgment was served and filed the day before the judgment was entered, the appeal must be dismissed. Code Civil Proc. §§ 936, 939; McLaughlin v. Doherty, 54 Cal. 519; Thomas v. Anderson, 55 Cal. 43; People v. Center, 66 Cal. 567, 5 Pac. Rep. 263, and 6 Pac. Rep. 481; Kimple v. Conway, 10 Pac. Rep. 189; Schroeder v. Schmidt, 12 Pac. Rep. 302.

At the foot of the decree appealed from, as the same is set forth in the transcript, are the words, "Decree recorded December 8, 1885," and attached to the transcript as amended is the clerk's certificate that "the decree was entered of record on the eighth day of December, A. D. 1885, in judgment book," etc. Section 668 of the Code of Civil Procedure reads: "The clerk must keep with the records of the court a book, to be called the 'Judgment Book,' in which judgments must be entered." And section 939 of the same Code provides that an appeal from a final judgment may be taken within one year "after the entry of the judgment." It has been repeatedly held that an appeal from a judgment may be taken within one year after its entry, although more than a year after the judge has announced or rendered the judgment; also, in the cases cited above, that an appeal taken before such entry is premature, and should be dismissed. An appeal is taken by filing and serving a notice of appeal. In the case now here the notice of appeal was served on the seventh and filed on the eighth of December, 1885, the day on which the judgment was entered. There is nothing in the transcript, as amended on suggestion of diminution, to indicate that the notice of appeal was filed before the judgment was recorded. Moreover, we would not be justified in dividing a day for the purpose of rejecting jurisdiction of the appeal. In the original transcript, written immediately below the acceptance of service of the notice of appeal, are the words and figures, "Duly filed with the clerk of said court, December 7, 1885." This is evidently not a transcript of any indorsement or certificate of the clerk, and it is not covered by the stipulation of appellant's attorney that "the foregoing are correct copies of papers on file," etc.

Motion to dismiss appeal denied.

PALMER v. GALVIN. (No. 9,556.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 25, 1887.)

EJECTMENT—TITLE—TRUST—WHO IS BENEFICIARY.

A person who is not a beneficiary under the act of congress of July, 1870, by which the United States relinquished to the city of San Francisco, Point San Jose Military Reservation, in trust to grant and convey the same to the persons actually in possession or entitled to the possession thereof, cannot raise the question whether a grantee in a deed from the city was a beneficiary, and entitled as such to the conveyance; and in an action of ejectment the deed is conclusive evidence in the grantee's favor, as against one who has no claim to the title of the city.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

M. G. Cobb, for appellant. Thomas C. Huxley, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This is an action of ejectment to recover possession of a 50-vara lot lying at the south-west corner of Beach and Hyde streets, in the city and county of San Francisco. The plaintiff claimed to be the owner of the lot, and to establish his title proved at the trial the following facts:

On the sixth of November, 1850, the president of the United States made an order exempting and reserving from sale, for public purposes, certain lands situate on the peninsula of San Francisco, at point San Jose, or Black Point. On the thirty-first of December, 1851, this order was modified by the president so as to embrace at Point San Jose only the following described tract, viz.: "The promontory of Point San Jose within boundaries of not less than 800 yards from its northern extremity."

On the first of July, 1870, an act of congress was approved, entitled "An act to relinquish the interest of the United States in certain lands to the city and county of San Francisco." By this act a portion of the "Point San Jose Military Reservation" was granted to the city and county for the following uses and purposes: "First, to maintain all streets and alleys as now laid out upon the official map of the city of San Francisco; second, and then in trust to grant and convey the remainder of said lands to the parties severally who are, at the date of the passage of this act, in the actual bona fide possession thereof by themselves or their tenants, and in such parcels as the same are so held and possessed by them, or who, if they have not such possession, were deprived thereof by the United States military authorities when they went into the occupancy of the said military reservation, or were deprived thereof by intruders or trespassers against whom possession may be recovered by legal process."

The plaintiff claimed to be one of the beneficiaries provided for in the act, and thereafter, in pursuance of its provision, a deed of the lot in question, dated December 24, 1870, and duly executed, was made and delivered to him by the city and county. The plaintiff then went into possession of the lot, and remained in possession of it until within five years before the commencement of the action, when the defendant entered.

The defendant by his answer denied all the allegations of the complaint, and pleaded the statute of limitations, but at the trial introduced no testimony bearing upon the issues presented. The court found all the facts, and rendered its judgment in favor of plaintiff. The defendant then moved for a new trial, and now prosecutes this appeal from the judgment and order denying his motion.

Only two points are made by the appellant here. They are: (1) that the lot in question was not a part of the Point San Jose Military Reservation, and so was not granted to the city by the act of congress; and, (2) if it was, the plaintiff was not a beneficiary provided for in the act, and so the deed from the city did not convey to him any title.

As to the first point, it is enough to say that the court found that the lot was within the boundaries, and a part of the military reservation, and that it so remained until the passage of the act of congress of July 1, 1870, whereby it was relinquished and granted to the city. There was direct and positive testimony in support of this finding, and, in the absence of all contradictory evidence, we do not see how this court can take judicial notice that the facts proved were not true.

The second point is met by the decisions of this court. In Le Roy v. Cunningham, 44 Cal. 600, it was held that a person who is not entitled to a conveyance from the city cannot raise the question whether the city of San Francisco made the conveyance of a portion of the "Point San Jose Military Reservation" to the person who was entitled to it under the act of congress of July 1, 1870. In that case, as in this, the defendant was an intruder upon the plaintiff's possession, and the court, at page 609, said: "The defendant having intruded upon the actual possession of the plaintiff, the possession which he thus acquired was mala fide, as between themselves and in the sense of the statute. He was therefore not entitled to a conveyance of the fee, and is not in a position to inquire whether it was rightfully conveyed to the plaintiff. That was a question for the board of supervisors, in which the defendant had no concern, inasmuch as he was not entitled to the conveyance." In Naglee v. Palmer, 50 Cal. 642, it was held that one who was not a beneficiary under the act of congress of July 1, 1870, cannot question the right of the city to convey land, under the provisions of the act, to another. And in McCreery v. Sawyer, 52 Cal. 257, it was decided that if a city holds the title to lands within its limits as a trustee for the parties in possession of the same, and the proper authorities of the city convey the land, one who has no claim to it himself cannot raise the question whether the grantee was a beneficiary, and entitled as such to the conveyance, and that in an action of ejectment by the grantee the deed is conclusive evidence in his favor, as against one who has no claim to the title of the city.

These cases are decisive of the point in controversy, and the judgment and order should therefore be affirmed.

PIERCE v. GERMAN SAV. & LOAN SOC. (No. 9,686.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 25, 1887.)

NUISANCE—ACTION FOR—VENDOR AND VENDEE—LIABILITY OF VENDEE.

One who, with full knowledge of the existence of a nuisance upon real estate for which the owner would be liable, purchases the reversionary interest in such real estate, and receives the rents thereof from the tenant in possession, thereby voluntarily assumes the responsibility of such nuisance, and becomes liable for the damages sustained in consequence thereof subsequent to his purchase.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

Jarboe, Harrison & Goodfellow, for appellant. E. F. Swortfiguer, Geo. A. Wentworth, and Lloyd Baldwin, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This action is brought to recover damages claimed to have been sustained from a nuisance maintained upon the premises of the defendant, adjoining those of the plaintiff. The cause was tried by a jury, and a verdict rendered in favor of the plaintiff for $1,050; for which sum judgment was entered. Defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial.

The facts shown by the evidence are that the plaintiff and the defendant are the owners of contiguous lots of land on Montgomery street, in San Francisco, separated by a party-wall; that the plaintiff has been the owner of his lot of land for upwards of 20 years, and that the defendant has been the owner of the adjacent lot of land since August 3, 1882; that upon the premises of the defendant there has been maintained a steam-bathing establishment for 10 or 12 years, and that, by the manner in which the said bathing establishment has been maintained, the plaintiff has sustained damage. It also appeared that the said steam-bathing establishment was placed there by the former owner of the premises, and, during the period of the alleged nuisance and damage, was maintained by one Justin Gates, who was in possession under a lease from August Alers, the owner of the said premises at the time of making said lease. Gates had been in possession of the premises, and had maintained the steam-bathing establishment, since January 1, 1880. He had taken a new lease from Alers, January 11, 1882, for the term of two years, and had remained in possession under that lease until after the commencement of this action. While Gates was so in possession of the premises under this lease, Alers, on the third of August, 1882, conveyed the premises to the defendant, and after that date Gates attorned to the defendant, and paid it the rent provided for in the lease. In the summer of 1883 the premises were repaired by the defendant, and since then no damage has been sustained.

It would seem that the injury complained of commenced as early as 1881, and in January or February of 1882 plaintiff notified August Alers of the fact that Alers then claimed to have nothing to do with the property, and referred plaintiff to the defendant as the owner. Defendant held a mortgage upon the property, but did not become the owner thereof until August 3, 1882, as before stated. Prior to and at the time of becoming the owner of the property defendant had full notice of the existence of the alleged nuisance.

Section 3483 of the Civil Code provides that "every successive owner of property who neglects to abate a continuing nuisance upon or in the use of such property, created by a former owner, is liable therefor in the same manner as the one who first created it."

Addison, in his work on Torts, states the rule as applicable to the facts of this case thus: "If a nuisance be created on the premises, and a man purchase the premises with the nuisance upon them, though there be a demise for a term at the time of the purchase, so that the purchaser has no opportunity of removing the nuisance, yet, by purchasing the reversion with the existing nuisance, he makes himself liable for the continuance of the nuisance." The doctrine thus enunciated is taken from the opinion of LITLEDALE, J., in Rea v. Peddy, 1 Adol. & E. 827, and the learned judge proceeds to say: "But if, after the reversion is purchased, the nuisance be created by the occupier, the reversioner incurs no liability; yet, in such a case, if there were only a tenancy from year to year, or any short period, and the landlord desired to renew the tenancy after the tenant had erected the nuisance, that would make the landlord liable. He is not to let the land with the nuisance upon it."

This limitation of the liability of the landlord, in cases where he has no right of entry to abate a nuisance created by the tenant after the demise, comports with justice. On the other hand, the landlord who demises premises with a nuisance existing thereon is a consenting party thereto. In the present case, the former owner of the premises created the nuisance, and demised the same, with such nuisance upon them, to Dr. Gates. Thereafter defendant, with full knowledge of the nuisance and of the tenancy, purchased the reversion, and received the rent from the tenant, who attorned to it, and during this state of things plaintiff sustained the damage for which he had verdict and judgment. He who, with full knowledge of the existence of a nuisance upon real estate for which the owner would be liable, purchases the reversionary interest in such real estate, and receives the rents thereof from the tenant in possession, thereby voluntarily assumes the responsibility of such nuisance, and becomes liable for the damages sustained in consequence thereof subsequent to his purchase.

The instructions of the court below were in consonance with this theory, and the judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

SNYDER v. TUNITAS PETROLEUM CO. (No. 9,655.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 26, 1887.)

1. PLEADING—SURPLUSAGE—CORPORATION—VERDICT.

In an action against a corporation for a sum of money which said company had promised to pay to plaintiff in consideration of his transferring certain shares of the company's stock, owned by him, to a third person, at the company's request, an averment in the complaint that said stock was delivered to said third person "for the purpose of paying him for work and labor done for and on behalf of the defendant corporation" is surplusage, and a finding of the trial court as to the precise nature of the indebtedness from defendant to said third person is immaterial.

2. TRIAL—BY COURT—FINDINGS.

In such a case, the finding of the trial court need not state what was the value of the stock when delivered, or that the corporation, or any of its officers, had authority to employ said third person, or by whom he was employed, or what was the value of the labor performed by him.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

Robert Ash, for appellant. Thornton & Merzbach, for respondent.

MCKINSTRY, J. The questions presented on this appeal arise out of an examination of the findings in connection with the second cause of action set forth in the complaint, and the answer thereto. The complaint avers "that heretofore, to-wit, on or about October 1, 1882, this plaintiff delivered unto one H. H. Bodwell one thousand (1,000) shares of the capital stock of the Tunitas Petroleum Company, then and there belonging to this plaintiff, at the special instance and request and for the sole benefit of the defendant; that the said stock of the defendant corporation was given by this plaintiff to the said Bodwell by way and for the purpose of paying him, the said Bodwell, for work and labor done for and on behalf of the defendant corporation; that the defendant then and there promised to pay this plaintiff one thousand (1,000) dollars for the said stock then and there delivered in its behalf to the said Bodwell." The answer to the averments is: "Defendant denies that it is indebted to said plaintiff in any sum of money whatever for any stock of said company; denies that said plaintiff delivered to H. H. Bodwell 1,000 shares of the capital stock of the Tunitas Petroleum Company belonging to him, or any part thereof, or any stock whatever; and denies that the alleged stock, or any stock whatever, was given by plaintiff to said Bodwell for the purpose of paying him for work and labor; denies that the said corporation defendant promised to pay the said plaintiff one thousand dollars for the alleged stock or any stock of said plaintiff, or any part of the sum of one thousand dollars for any such stock."

The findings on these issues are: "(1) That the defendant corporation employed the plaintiff as its superintendent for a long period of time; that on or about the first day of October, 1882, the defendant corporation entered into a contract with the plaintiff by which he was to receive nine months' pay, at one hundred and fifty dollars for each and every month,—that is to say, one thousand three hundred and fifty dollars as payment in full for his services as superintendent of the said defendant corporation; that the said defendant corporation paid nine hundred and nineteen dollars of the said sum of one thousand three hundred and fifty dollars which it had agreed to pay to the said plaintiff, and no more. (2) That on the first day of October, 1882, the defendant corporation was indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $431 for his labor and work performed as superintendent of the defendant, at defendant's special instance and request. (3) That heretofore on the first day of October, 1882, this plaintiff delivered to one H. H. Bodwell 1,000 shares of the capital stock of the defendant corporation; that the said stock was the property of this plaintiff, and was delivered to the said H. H. Bodwell at the special instance and request and for the sole benefit of the defendant; that the said stock was given by the plaintiff to the said Bodwell by way of and for the purpose of paying him, the said Bodwell, for work and labor done for and on behalf of the defendant corporation; that the said defendant corporation received tankage and moneys from the said H. H. Bodwell for the said stock, and then and there promised to pay the sum of $1,000 for the said stock then and there delivered in its behalf to the said Bodwell; that the defendant corporation has not paid the $1,000, or any part thereof, to the plaintiff, or any one in his behalf."

Appellant contends that the third finding does not respond to the issue made by the pleadings, because the finding is that the defendant "received tankage and money," not "work and labor," from Bodwell. But the averment in the complaint that the stock was delivered by plaintiff to Bodwell "for the purpose of paying him for work and labor done for and on behalf of the defendant corporation" might have been omitted. The finding as to the precise nature of the indebtedness (if any) from defendant to Bodwell was immaterial.

Appellant says the finding is insufficient because it is not found "who employed Bodwell," nor what was the value of the stock when delivered, nor that the corporation, or any of its officers, had authority to employ Bodwell, nor the value of the labor, or of the tankage. There was no necessity that these matters should be found. But the court did find that Bodwell worked for and on behalf of the defendant, and that the defendant received "tankage" and moneys from him. Judgment affirmed.

COLBERT and others v. RANKIN and others. (No. 9,550.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE—CONTRIBUTORY—DEFECTIVE MACHINERY.

In an action for damages for the wrongful killing of an employe, where it appeared that the decedent was killed by the falling upon him of a large flat casting, then hoisted up by means of a crane on the premises of the defendant, and there was evidence tending to show that decedent had time to escape from under the casting before it fell upon him, the defendant requested the court to charge that, "if decedent had abundant time to escape after the accident occurred, but failed to do so, not from fright, but because of an error of judgment in supposing that he alone could hold up the casting, he contributed by his error of judgment to the accident, and defendants are not liable." Held, that the request for the instruction was properly refused.

2. SAME—KNOWLEDGE OF SERVANT.

In order that a servant may be declared guilty of contributory negligence in working about machinery that was defective,¹ it must appear that he knew or might have known that, by reason of such defect, his employment about said machinery involved danger to himself.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

Doyle, Barber, Scripture & Galpin, for appellants. J. P. Merix and N. J. Manson, for respondents.

BY THE COURT. An action for damages for the wrongful killing of one L^r R. Colbert. Plaintiffs had judgment in the sum of $500, from which this appeal is prosecuted by the defendants. It is contended that the "bill of exceptions, on motion for new trial and on appeal," which appears in the transcript, should not be considered, and the reason assigned for such contention is that the appeal from the judgment was perfected six days before the bill of exceptions was signed and filed, and that, therefore, the court below did not have jurisdiction of the case, and consequently the bill of exceptions should not be considered by this court. We cannot agree to the view entertained by the respondents as to this matter. The settlement and filing of the bill of exceptions, after judgment and appeal taken, was a matter embraced in the action, and not affected by the judgment appealed from, and therefore the court below had a right to proceed as it did. Section 946, Code Civil Proc.; Reilly v. Reilly, 60 Cal. 626.

The only point made by the appellants for the reversal of the judgment is that certain instructions on the law of the case, asked by them to be given by the court to the jury, were erroneously refused. Those instructions were as follows: "If the decedent had abundant time to escape after the accident occurred, but failed to do so, not from fright, but because of an error of judgment in supposing that he alone could hold up the casting, he contributed by his error of judgment to the accident, and defendants are not liable." "There is no warranty by the employer, implied in the contract of service, that materials furnished should be sound or fit for the purpose. The law imposes on the employer an obligation to use ordinary care only in the selection thereof."

By the bill of exceptions it appears that on the trial of the case "evidence was offered and admitted which tended to show that the decedent in the complaint mentioned was killed by the falling upon him of a large flat casting, from nine to ten feet in diameter, then hoisted up by means of a crane, and on the premises of the defendants, as charged in the complaint; that said crane broke in that part thereof known as the box, which supported the journal or axle of the drum, whereon the chain was wound, whereby said casting was hoisted; that said crane was operated by the fellow-laborers of the decedent, none of whom held any higher, different, or superior position, with regard to said business, than the decedent." The court told the jury that there was no issue presented by the pleadings in regard to any wrongful act or neglect on the part of the fellow-laborers of the decedent, and that the defendants were responsible for such wrongful act or neglect, if any. As to this direction, no error is assigned. There was proof offered tending to show that decedent had time to escape from under the casting before it fell upon him. Under the facts of the case, as thus disclosed, we perceive no error on the part of the trial court in refusing to grant the instructions asked for. It is clear that the piece of machinery about which the decedent was working was unsafe; and in order that he should be declared guilty of contributory negligence, where an injury resulted to him from such defective machinery, it was necessary that it should appear in evidence that he knew, or might have known, that by reason of such defect his employment in and about said machinery involved danger to himself; and this proposition, as one of the conditions which rendered the decedent responsible for his injury, was not included in the instructions. Sanborn v. Madera Flume & Trading Co., 11 Pac. Rep. 710.

Without such needful qualification, they were calculated to mislead the jury; the last one particularly being, at best, but a mere abstract proposition of law. Judgment affirmed.

YOUNG v. POOLE. (No. 9,472.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 25, 1887.)

SALE—DELIVERY AS AGAINST CREDITORS OF VENDOR.

Where negotiations for a sale by an employer to his employe of certain property, including safes, were made in March, but the sale was not consummated until April 1st, upon which day the vendor was sued by a creditor, and, after the sale, the property remained in the same building as before, but the vendee's name appeared on the sign as successor to the vendor, held, that the sale was not followed by immediate delivery, and an actual and continued change of possession, as required by Civil Code Cal. § 3440, and execution obtained by the vendor's creditor could be levied on the safes.¹

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

On September 14, 1881, the defendant, Poole, was United States marshal for the district of California. Upon that day, under an execution duly issued out of the circuit court of the United States for the district of California, on a judgment therein in favor of the Wallamet Falls Canal & Lock Company, and against one Jonathan Kittredge, he levied upon, and there-after sold, as the property of said Kittredge, four iron safes. Richard Young, the plaintiff, brought this action in the nature of trover, in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, to recover the value of said safes; alleging that they were his property and in his possession at the time of the levy. Upon the trial below, before EVANS, J., a jury being waived, the evidence showed that the bill of sale of the property in question from Kittredge to Young, under which Young claims title, was executed April 1, 1881, the day upon which the summons in the said action by the Wallamet Falls, etc., Company, was served upon said Kittredge. After the sale to Young, the property remained in the same building as before; Kittredge and Young reversing their former positions of master and servant, and Young placing his name, "as successor," over the sign of Kittredge, in front of the building. The material facts in regard to the sale appear in the opinion. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals.

E. W. McGraw, for appellant. Lattimer & Morrow, for respondent.

¹See Cook v. Rochford, (Cal.) 12 Pac. Rep. 563, and note.

BY THE COURT. This action is to recover personal property levied upon as the property of Jonathan Kittredge. The plaintiff claims as purchaser from Kittredge. The negotiations for the sale were made in March, but the sale was not consummated until April 1st,—the day on which summons was served on Kittredge. The levy of the execution was in September following. We think the undisputed facts show that the sale was not followed by immediate delivery, and an actual and continued change of possession, such as is required by section 3440, Civil Code.

Judgment and order reversed, and a new trial ordered.

PACIFIC BRIDGE Co. v. JACOBUS and others. (No. 9,851

(Supreme Court of California. March 26, 1887.)

ACTION—DISMISSAL—WANT OF PROSECUTION—SERVICE—DISCRETION.

Where the summons was not issued till nearly a year after the action was begun, and had not been served at the time of a motion to dismiss three years and eight months after its issuance, plaintiff explaining that he forbore to serve the summons for the reason that certain persons represented that defendant would abide the event of a test case, but not showing their authority to make the representations, and defendant denying it, held, that there was no abuse of discretion in granting the motion to dismiss.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county.

The record shows that this was an action to recover a street assessment; that it accrued November 6, 1877; that the action was commenced October 25, 1879; that the summons was issued October 6, 1880; that the summons has not been served; and that the plaintiff did nothing between the date of issuance of the summons till the motion to dismiss was made. The motion to dismiss the action for want of prosecution was made May 29, 1884, based upon an affidavit of defendant that he had been at all times within reach of process; that the plaintiff had been wanting in due diligence, and did not begin the action in good faith. The plaintiff in his affidavits showed that certain persons, representing themselves to be an executive committee of certain property holders, who intended to resist the assessments, represented that it was the desire of all that an action of plaintiff against Kirkham, one of said committee, should be a test case, by the result of which they would all abide, and that, by reason of such representations, plaintiff forbore to serve the summons and prosecute said actions. Defendant, by his counter-affidavits, showed that the agreement among the property holders was simply to combine together to resist the collection of the tax, and pay the expenses of the litigation, both in the Kirkham case, and in any other cases that might arise, pro rata. The action was dismissed.

BY THE COURT. A careful examination of the transcript of the record—including the affidavits used on the motion—satisfies us that the court below did not abuse its discretion in granting the defendants' motion to dismiss the action, but that it was justified by the evidence in making the order appealed from. Order and judgment affirmed.

STEWART v. HINKEL and others, Ex'rs, etc. (No. 9,626.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 26, 1887.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—REFUSAL TO REPORT ACTION TO CLAIMANT—LIMITATIONS.

Section 1496, Code Civil Proc. Cal., providing that, if an administrator or executor refuse or neglect to indorse his allowance or rejection of a claim for 10 days after its presentation, such refusal or neglect may be deemed by the claimant a rejection on the tenth day, does not require the executor or administrator to pass upon the claim within 10 days; and if he refuse to let the claimant know what he has done, the claimant can treat the proceeding as nugatory, and file a new claim, and thus avoid the running of the statute of limitations, which bars an action not brought within three months after the claim is rejected, according to section 1498, Code Civil Proc. Cal.

2. ASSUMPSIT—QUANTUM MERUIT—EVIDENCE.

In an action upon a quantum meruit, a promise to pay a specific sum is admissible as evidence of value.

3. NEW TRIAL—JURY—OBJECTION.

If a juror is absent during a part of a trial, the party who fails to call the court's attention to it cannot complain, the record failing to show that he was ignorant of the juror's absence.

4. SAME—STATEMENT BY JUROR TO JURY.

A juror made affidavit that one of the jury told the rest that defendants were rich, and could afford to pay the claim, and that this statement affected the verdict. Held, that the verdict should not be disturbed, since the statement alleged to have been made was irrelevant.

Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

The plaintiff presented her claim against the decedent to the defendants, his executors, October 5, 1882. October 12, 1882, they rejected the claim, and indorsed their rejection on it. Four months afterwards she asked one of the defendants about it, and he told her to go away; he did not want to have anything to do with her. Then she filed another claim, on the rejection of which she sued. According to an affidavit of an appeal, during the trial one of the jurymen slipped out of the jury-box, and remained absent during a considerable portion of the trial. The affidavit of a juror was produced that one of the jurors told the others, while they were deliberating, that the defendants and the estate of the decedent were rich, and could well afford to pay plaintiff's claim, and that these statements influenced the majority of nine, who found the verdict for the plaintiff.

O'Brien & Morrison, for appellants. J. C. Bates, for respondent.

MCKINSTRY, J. Section 1496 of the Code of Civil Procedure reads: "When a claim, accompanied by the affidavit required in this chapter, is presented to the executor or administrator, he must indorse thereon his allowance or rejection, with the day and date thereof. If he allow the claim, it must be presented to a judge of the superior court for his approval, who must in the same manner indorse upon it his allowance or rejection. If the executor or administrator, or the judge, refuse or neglect to indorse such allowance or rejection, for 10 days after the claim has been presented to him, such refusal or neglect may, at the option of the claimant, be deemed equivalent to a rejection on the tenth day; and, if the presentation be made by a notary, the certificate of such notary, under seal, shall be prima facie evidence of such presentation, and the date thereof. If the claim be presented to the executor or administrator before the expiration of the time limited for the presentation of claims, the same is presented in time, though acted upon by the executor or administrator, and by the judge, after the expiration of such time. If the claim be payable in a particular kind of money or currency, it shall, if allowed, be payable only in such money or currency."

It has never been held that the executor must immediately, on its presentment, indorse a claim "allowed" or "rejected," or that it must be so indorsed within 10 days after it is presented. By the terms of the section, the executor is not limited to any specific period within which he must take formal action, by indorsing his allowance or rejection of a claim. It may be conceded that it is not the duty of the executor to seek out one who has presented a claim, to notify such person that he (the executor) has neglected or refused to act on the claim for 10 days after its presentation, or that he has indorsed it, "rejected." And it may also be conceded that it is the duty of the claimant to inquire of the executor whether the claim he has presented has been acted upon, and how. But, as there is no specific limitation of time within which the executor must allow or reject the claim, there is none within which the claimant is entitled to be informed of the action or non-action of the executor. If he neglects to inquire, within three months after his claim has been actually indorsed "rejected," his suit on the claim may, perhaps, be barred. Nevertheless, as he cannot maintain a suit on his claim until it has been rejected, he has an absolute right to be informed of its rejection by the executor, who alone knows what formal action has been taken with respect to it. If information with respect to the allowance or rejection of the claim is refused by the executor, the claimant may treat the previous presentation of his claim, and secret action, if any, of the executor, as going for naught, and again present the claim.

It is contended by appellants that the three-months limitation begins to run from the date of the rejection indorsed, whether that date precede or follow the expiration of 10 days from the presentation of the claim, and independent of the claimant's knowledge. But this might operate to deprive the claimant of his option to deem the claim rejected on the tenth day, and deprive him, without fault on his part, of three months' time from the tenth day. It is suggested that as, in the present case, the three months from the indorsement of rejection had expired when plaintiff demanded what action had been taken by the executor, it would have done her no good to inform her of the rejection. But she was entitled to be informed of the alleged fact,—to be informed of a fact on which her rights depended. Under the circumstances, we are satisfied the plaintiff was justified in presenting and delivering her claim to the executors in February, 1883, and in relying on the rejection of such, notwithstanding she had presented the same claim during the previous October.

There was a substantial conflict in the evidence as to the value of the plaintiff's services. A promise to pay a specific sum is some evidence of value.

There is nothing in the record to indicate that defendants and their counsel were not fully informed of the temporary absence of one of the jurors during the trial. Berry v. De Witt, 27 Fed. Rep. 723; Parsons v. Huff, 38 Me. 141. The court's attention should have been called to the absence of the juror.

Appellants say that, after the jury retired to find their verdict, "they received testimony in said cause that was not introduced at the trial." Even if it be admitted that the verdict of three-fourths of the jurors may be impeached by the affidavits of one or more of the jurors not agreeing to such verdict, no case has been called to our attention in which the statement as fact by a jurymen, of a matter entirely irrelevant to the controversy, has been treated as ground for setting aside a verdict. The statement of the jurymen that the defendants' testate was a rich man would not have been admitted as evidence at the trial, and cannot be supposed to have influenced the verdict.

Specific portions of the general charge of the court were not excepted to. Judgment and order affirmed.

I concur: PATERSON, J.

TEMPLE, J., (concurring.) I concur in the judgment and in the opinion. But I do not wish to be understood as holding that when a creditor has presented his claim, and it has been rejected, he may again present his claim for the same demand, and thus avoid the bar or prolong the time within which he may commence suit. Nor do I think the administrator bound to notify the creditor of his action in regard to a claim. But in this case, inasmuch as the executors not only failed to inform the creditor of their action, but refused to do so, we may regard the case as though they had not acted at all, and the presentation of the claim the second time could work no injury. Secret action, which the creditor has no means of knowing, is equivalent to no action at all.

LAWLOR v. LINFORTH and others. (No. 9,627.)

JURY—COMPETENCY—ACTUAL BIAS.

In the trial of an action for treble rent and restitution of premises, after the jury was complete, a juror asked what kind of an action it was, and, being informed, declared himself hostile to all landlords, whereupon the court dismissed him. Held a proper exercise of discretion, since the juror evinced actual bias.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appal from superior court, San Francisco.

Edward Linforth, for appellants. Tyler & Tyler, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This was an action for treble rent for one month of certain premises, and for restitution thereof. The plaintiff had judgment against one of the defendants as prayed for, and for costs, but against the other defendant for restitution of the premises only. From that, and an order denying a new trial, the defendants have appealed. Their first contention is that the court erroneously dismissed from the panel a juror, who had been previously accepted as competent by all parties to the controversy, after the jury was complete, and the trial ready to proceed. It appears from the record that the juror, after being accepted, inquired what kind of an action was pending in which he was to engage, was informed what its nature was, and then declared himself hostile to all landlords. He was challenged for cause, but the precise cause was not stated. It is plain, however, that it was manifest to court and counsel that the juror was incompetent because of his declared bias against all landlords, one of whom was plaintiff in the action then about to be tried. It was the duty of the court, in the exercise of a sound legal discretion, to dismiss the juror from the panel, and its action in so doing was not erroneous. Grady v. Early, 18 Cal. 111. It is also alleged that the jury found contrary to the evidence; that there was no proof whatever which tended to show that either of the defendants had leased the premises, was the tenant of the plaintiff, or bound for the rent sued for. All those matters were submitted to the jury, and, as the evidence was conflicting, we do not feel disposed to disturb their verdict, or the judgment rendered thereon. It and the order should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; SEARLS, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

2 Cal. Unrep. 750

In re Estate of SANDERSON. (No. 9,653.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 29, 1887.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—ACCOUNTS—PRACTICE.

A probate court has the power, in the settlement of an executor's account, to allow or disallow any items in the account, even though there is no contest; and, where it is brought to the knowledge of the court that the executor has failed to charge himself with money or property belonging to the estate, it is the duty of the court to examine the matter of its own motion.

2. SAME—AUTHORITY OF EXECUTOR—SALE OF CURRENCY.

An executor has no authority, without an order of the probate court, to sell currency belonging to the estate for coin, and it rests in the discretion of the court to approve or disapprove the sale.

3. SAME—NEGLIGENCE—LIABILITY.

If an executor delays to take steps for the collection of a debt until after the same is outlawed, and the delay is not in consequence of any mistake of law, or of advice given by his attorney, he will be liable to the estate for the loss occasioned by his negligence.

4. SAME—JOINT EXECUTORS—SEVERAL LIABILITY.

Each executor of an estate is responsible severally for his own acts, and for money or property which has come to his own hands.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

This is an appeal by L. A. Sanderson, one of the executors of Robert A. Sanderson, from an order made upon the settlement of his accounts, requiring him to charge himself with $500 currency at its face value, which he had sold for gold coin, the court refusing to approve the sale, and to charge himself with the amount of a note and mortgage of one Braly, which he failed to collect. The note became outlawed, not having been sued on, and thereafter, the maker having died, his executor refused to pay anything. The executor sought to discharge himself for his neglect because his attorney did not advise him to foreclose the mortgage, but the evidence shows that his attorney, who had been employed for other and for specific purposes, advised him to present the claim against Braly's estate, which the executor undertook to do, and failed to attend to.

T. Z. Blakeman, for appellant. Cope & Boyd, for respondents.

TEMPLE, J. This is an appeal by the executor from an order settling an account rendered by him to the probate court. We do not think it necessary to consider the question as to whether the issues made at the contest were sufficient. The court had the power to examine, to allow or disallow, any items in the account, even though there were no contest; and, if it were brought to the knowledge of the court that the executor had failed to charge himself with money or property belonging to the estate, it would be the duty of the judge to examine the matter of his own motion. Such being the case, it must follow that the decree could not be held invalid for the lack of a proper contest or finding. If the contestant were appealing, his right to have the action of the court reviewed might depend upon a proper contest being inaugurated. That matter is not now before us, however.

The first point is in regard to the sale of currency for gold coin. It was sold without obtaining an order of court, and the sale was not approved. This was within the discretion of the court. The executor was properly charged with the Braly note. Had the executor followed the advice of a competent attorney as to a matter of law, the case would be different. Here it is a plain question of negligence. It was the duty of the executor to execute his trust himself, and he cannot rid himself of responsibility by employing an attorney to do that which he ought to have done himself. The delay was not in consequence of any mistake of law, or of advice given by the attorney. It is a simple failure on the part of the executor to do his duty. Nor is the liability joint with his co-executor. The note was in his individual possession, and the neglect was his. Each executor is responsible severally for his own acts, and for moneys or property which come to his hands. He may also, it is true, under some circumstances, be held for the default of his co-executor. But that is because each is required to protect the estate, and prevent, if possible, injury from the misconduct of the other. But this is not a joint liability. When injury has resulted from the joint act of both, of course a different rule will prevail.

The order must be affirmed.

PEOPLE v. SAN FRANCISCO SAVINGS UNION. (No. 9,466.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 28, 1887.)

BANKS AND BANKING—SURPLUS PROFITS—DIVIDENDS—SAVINGS BANKS.

Interest accrued, but not payable, and interest accrued, but not paid, though secured by safe mortgages, and drawing interest, are not "surplus profits," and therefore cannot enter into the dividends which savings banks are authorized to make out of their "surplus profits," by California act April 11, 1862, since profits must consist of earnings actually received.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

G. A. Johnston, Atty. Gen., for appellant. Jarboe, Harrison & Goodfellow, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This cause was submitted to the court below upon an agreed statement. Defendant had judgment, from which plaintiff appeals. The defendant is a banking corporation, existing under and by virtue of the laws of this state, and was incorporated as such on the eighteenth day of June, 1862, under and in accordance with the provisions of an act of the legislature entitled "An act to provide for the formation of corporations for the accumulation and investment of funds and savings," approved April 11, 1862, (St. 1862, p. 199.) The act provides for the formation of corporations "for the purpose of aggregating the funds and savings of the members thereof and others, and preserving and safely investing the same for their common benefit." Corporations thereunder are authorized to loan and invest their funds, receive deposits of money, loan and invest the same, collect the same, with interest, "repay such deposits without interest, or with so much of the earnings and interest as the by-laws of the corporation may provide." They may make by-laws prescribing the conditions upon which deposits shall be received, and the time and manner of dividing the profits. Section 10 of the same act provides that "it shall not be lawful for the corporation or the directors to make any dividends, except from surplus profits arising from the business of the corporation; and the directors shall, at such times and in such manner as the by-laws shall prescribe, declare and pay dividends of so much of the profits of the company, and of the interest arising from the capital stock and deposits, as may be appropriated for that purpose by the provisions of the by-laws."

It is provided and declared by the by-laws of the defendant that "at the expiration of every six months, ending thirtieth June and thirty-first December each year, the board of directors shall ascertain the net profits of the corporation, and shall determine the amount to be appropriated for a general dividend." During the six months commencing June 30, 1883, the surplus profits arising from the business of the corporation, including the interest arising from its capital stock and deposits, amounted to the sum of $280,092. In this amount of surplus profits, and as a part thereof, is included—First, the sum of $5,825 for interest which has accrued for the months of November and December, in the year 1883, upon the coupons of bonds of the United States held by the defendant, but which, by the terms of said coupons, is not payable until February 1, 1884; second, the sum of $23,917 for interest that has matured since thirtieth of June, 1883, but which has not been collected, upon a portion of the loans made by the defendant upon real-estate security. The value of the real estate held by the defendant as security for the said loans, and for each thereof, is more than double the amount of the respective loans and the matured interest thereon.

By the conditions of each of said loans, it is provided that, in case the interest thereon is not paid as it matures, it shall be added to the principal sum, and be secured by the real estate which is given as security for said principal sum, and thereafter bear interest at the same rate as said principal sum. The defendant being about to declare a dividend from the profits arising from its business during the six months ending December 31, 1883, expressed its intention to include in the amount which it should appropriate for that purpose its surplus profits aforesaid, amounting to the sum of $280,092, including therein the aforesaid sum of $5,825, for interest which had accrued upon the aforesaid coupons of bonds of the United States, but which would not be payable until February 1, 1884, and also the aforesaid sum of $23,917, for interest which had matured since the thirteenth day of June, 1883, (but which had not been collected,) upon the loans made as aforesaid, and secured as aforesaid. The "bank commissioners" objected to the action of the bank in including these sums, and this action is the result.

The question in difference and point of controversy upon which the decision and judgment of the court is sought, is the following: "Is the defendant authorized by law to appropriate and pay, as a dividend to its stockholders and depositors on the profits arising from its business, any portion of the interest upon its loans or investments that may have matured or accrued, but which have not been actually collected and received in money?" What are the surplus profits arising from the business of the corporation? The word "profits" signifies an excess of the value of returns over the value of advances. The excess of receipts over expenditures; that is, net earnings. Connolly v. Davidson, 15 Minn. 519, (Gil. 428.) The receipts of a business deducting current expenses; it is equivalent to net receipts. Eyster v. Centennial Board of Finance, 94 U. S. 500. In commerce it means the advance in the price of the goods sold beyond the cost of purchase. In distinction from the wages of labor, it is well understood to imply the net return to the capital or stock employed, after deducting all the expenses, including not only the wages of those employed by the capitalist, but the wages of the capitalist himself for superintending the employment of his capital stock. Adam Smith, Wealth of Nations, book 1, c. 6; Mill, Pol. Econ. c. 15. The "rents and profits" of an estate; the "income" or "net income" of it,—are all equivalent expressions. Andrews v. Boyd, 5 Me. 202; Earl v. Rowe, 35 Me. 420. Profits are divided by writers on political economy into gross and net, the former being the entire difference between the value of advances and the value of returns, and the latter so much of this difference as arises exclusively from the capital employed.

In People v. Board Sup'rs Niagara Co., 4 Hill, 20, BRONSON, J., said: "It is undoubtedly true that 'profits' and 'income' are sometimes used as synonymous terms; but, strictly speaking, 'income' means that which comes in or is received from any business or investment of capital, without reference to the outgoing expenditures; while 'profits' generally means the gain which is made upon any business or investment, when both receipts and payments are taken into the account. 'Income,' when applied to the affairs of individuals, expresses the same idea that 'revenue' does when applied to the affairs of a state or nation."

In St. John v. Erie R. Co., 10 Blatchf. 271, it was said: "Net earnings are properly the gross receipts, less the expense of operating the road, or other business of the corporation. Interest on debts is paid out of what thus remains; that is, out of the net earnings. Many other liabilities are paid out of the net earnings. When all liabilities are paid either out of the gross receipts or out of the net earnings, the remainder is the profit of the shareholders."

Under these definitions, it is not easy to comprehend how profits, or surplus profits, can consist of earnings never yet received. The term imports an excess of receipts over expenditures, and without receipts there cannot properly be said to be profits. Money earned as interest, however well secured, or certain to be eventually paid, cannot in fact be distributed as dividends to stockholders, and does not constitute surplus profits within the meaning of the statute. To hold the contrary would, we think, tend to open the door to a practice under which the assets of corporations would be liable to distribution as dividends upon no surer basis than the judgment of their directors as to the value of their bills receivable. Such is not and should not be the policy of the law.

The capital, and all the assets except surplus profits, are to be retained intact, and form a fund to which creditors of the corporation have a prior right over stockholders. If some portion of this fund may be distributed in lieu of interest earned, but not collected, then cases may arise in which all of it may be so distributed,—a practice which we deem subversive of the essential principles upon which corporations of this character are organized, and under which practically the rights of creditors might be greatly impaired. The fact that defendant has security for the interest due does not make the unpaid interest a profit. Until paid in, it is not money in hand. Contingencies may arise to prevent its being realized. It is time to distribute this interest when it is actually received by the bank.

It follows that the judgment of the court below nonsuiting plaintiff should be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to enter judgment in favor of plaintiff as provided in the agreed statement contained in the record.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed, and cause remanded, with directions to enter judgment in favor of plaintiff as provided in the agreed statement contained in the record.

PEOPLE v. KALKMAN. (No. 20,240.)

1. CRIMINAL PRACTICE—INVESTIGATING ATTEMPT TO BRIBE JURY—DISTRICT ATTORNEY.

During a criminal prosecution the district attorney, hearing of an attempt to bribe the jury, called one of the jurors, and interrogated him in reference thereto. His testimony failed to show the attempted bribery. Then the attorney, at the request of the court, informed the court what he had heard; whereupon the court dismissed the jury from the court-room, and investigated the charge. The testimony showed only an attempt by a newspaper reporter, who was at the time intoxicated. Defendant's counsel demanded that the testimony be repeated before the jury. The court refused, but gave the jury full instructions not to consider the circumstance, and to dismiss it from their minds. Held, that it being the duty of the district attorney to bring the matter to the attention of the court, no error was committed, though he might have chosen a better time.

2. EVIDENCE—RES GESTÆ—CRIMINAL PRACTICE.

In a prosecution for robbery, testimony of defendant and two witnesses as to conversations between him and them, as he met them on the night of the robbery on his way from his shop to the place where the crime was committed, held properly excluded, as being no part of the res gestæ.

3. APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR—WITNESS—EXAMINATION.

A witness, who had known defendant four years before at a previous place of residence, was asked, "Did you know defendant's general reputation for honesty and integrity in that community?" An objection to the question was sustained. The witness had previously testified, "I never heard about his reputation for honesty. I know about his honesty. Never heard anything wrong about it." Other witnesses testified to defendant's good character. No opposing testimony was offered. Heid, no prejudicial error was committed in excluding the question, since the witness had already answered it, and other witnesses testified to the same thing.

4. SAME.

Neither was it error to refuse to allow the deposition of the prosecuting witness, taken at the preliminary hearing, to be read to the jury for the purpose of contradicting his testimony; the deposition failing to show any material contradiction.

5. CRIMINAL PRACTICE—INSTRUCTIONS—CHARACTER.

It was not error for the court to add to the following instruction, given at the request of the defendant, "Proof of such good character may be sufficient to justify an acquittal, although without it no acquittal would have been had," the clause, "unless, in spite of such good character, the evidence yet convinces you beyond a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt."

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Bicknell & White, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Geo. A. Johnston, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. The defendant was convicted of an assault with intent to commit robbery. The appeal is from the final judgment entered therein, and from an order denying a new trial. It appeared at the trial that the prosecuting attorney had received information, from which he supposed an attempt had been made to bribe one or more of the jurors, and, upon the close of his testimony for the prosecution, he called A. J. Towner, one of the jurors impeached in the case, and interrogated him in relation thereto. The testimony of the juror failed to show the attempted bribery. Thereupon the prosecuting officer, at the request of the court, stated that he was informed that morning by one Hathaway that he, Hathaway, was offered $100 to hang the jury. Hathaway was a juror in attendance upon the court, but not a juror in this particular case.

Both counsel for the people and the defendant thereupon asked for a full investigation of the matter, and the court, after discharging the jury and instructing them to leave court, heard further testimony tending to show that whatever offers of bribery had been made came from an intoxicated reporter, who was quite unconscious of any attempted wrong. After a portion of the testimony had been taken, counsel for defendant contended they were entitled to have the jury present to hear the testimony. The court held, in substance, that the jury was not entitled to hear the testimony on this point, and that he would give them proper instructions on the subject.

It is sufficient to say that no exception seems to have been taken on behalf of defendant to the action of the court in sending the jury out during the investigation of this question. Waiving this technicality, however, and we are of opinion no error was committed. The investigation was as to a matter entirely dehors the trial, and the jurors had practically heard nothing pertaining to it except the statement of the prosecuting attorney.

The jury was instructed by the court, very fully and most explicitly, that they must divest their minds of any and all statements, and those admitted in evidence, whether from counsel or witnesses, and that they were "not to consider at all the matter that was investigated, growing out of the placing of one of the jurors on the witness-stand. The court instructs you, you are to dismiss that matter entirely from your minds in considering this case. You will not consider it at all as bearing upon the case in any shape or form whatever." The district attorney was not only justified in bringing the matter to the attention of the court, but it was his duty to do so. The manner of the exercise of that duty may not have been the best that could have been selected; but we see in it nothing calling for condemnation or a reversal of the judgment.

Defendant offered himself as a witness, and, among other things, for the purpose of proving an alibi, testified as to the hour at which he left the shop in which he was working, the distance therefrom to the scene of the alleged assault, the persons whom he met, what was done by him and such persons, his estimate of the time consumed, etc. The court refused to permit him to detail the particular conversations he had with persons whom he met, holding his declaration inadmissible, but permitted him to show what was done, time consumed, etc. Similar rulings were made on like offers to prove what was said by other witnesses who met and conversed with the defendant, and these rulings are assigned as errors. These declarations formed no part of the res gestæ, and, under the rule that declarations of a party in his own favor are not admissible, were properly excluded.

It is further urged that "the court erred in refusing to permit defendant to prove that his general reputation for truth, honesty, and integrity was good in the place of his former residence." The testimony shows that defendant had formerly lived at Sioux City and Le Mars, in the state of Iowa; that he came to California about one year previous to the trial, and had since lived in Los Angeles. The witness Charles Yager had left Iowa four years prior to the trial, and was asked the following question: "Question. Before you left—before the time you left—did you know his [defendant's] general reputation for honesty and integrity in that community?" The question was objected to as irrelevant and immaterial, and the objection sustained, to which ruling counsel for defendant excepted. By reference to the record, we find that prior to this ruling Yager had in fact testified as follows: "I knew him [defendant] four years, working in the east. I sent for him to come out. I never heard anything about his reputation for integrity. I know about his honesty. Never heard anything wrong about it." Albert La Rue testified to knowing defendant four years in Iowa, and that he had a good reputation there. B. Monahan testified similarly, and Jacob Bloomer testified to a knowledge of him for 12 or 13 years in Iowa, and that his reputation was good both there and here. Several other witnesses testified to his good reputation in Los Angeles. There was no conflicting testimony offered. If it be conceded that it was competent for the witness to testify as to the general reputation of defendant at the time he knew him in Iowa, although it was four years anterior to the trial, yet, in view of the fact that he had previously testified substantially to the same effect, and that this testimony was not stricken out, and in view of the number of witnesses who testified without contradiction to the same fact, we do not deem the error as one from which defendant has suffered in his rights.

The fifth error assigned is that the court did not allow the deposition of the prosecuting witness, taken at the preliminary examination, to be read in evidence to contradict the witness. The witness was asked at the trial if he had testified at the preliminary examination "that Kalkman had struck him behind," to which he answered, "No, sir. The first blow, I testified, I got in the face; I turned around, and he came behind me and struck me in the face. At the preliminary examination I testified that some one came behind and struck me. He did not strike me in the back." We need not discuss the question made by appellant, for the reason that the portions of the deposition sought to be introduced failed to show any material contradiction of the testimony of the witness as given at the trial.

There was no error in the addition made by the court to the instruction of defendant. The jury had been fully instructed upon the question of reasonable doubt, and had been very properly informed that testimony as to good character was entitled to consideration in the case. The language of the instruction was as follows: "Proof of such good character may be sufficient to justify an acquittal, although without it no acquittal would have been had,"—to which the court added, "unless, in spite of such good character, the evidence yet convinces you beyond a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt."

In People v. Samsels, 66 Cal. 99, 4 Pac. Rep. 1061, the court below instructed the jury as follows: "If you should believe the defendant guilty, you must so find, notwithstanding his good character," and this court held the instruction proper.

We are of opinion the order and judgment appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; BELCHER, C. C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed.

72 Cal. 217

HEINE v. TREADWELL. (Nos. 9,693, 9,694.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 2, 1887.)

1. CONTRACTS—CONSTRUCTION—DEPENDENT AND INDEPENDENT COVENANTS.

In an agreement that a lessee may, at any time before the expiration of his term, purchase the land for $3,250, and that lessees shall have a prior right of purchase at a greater sum, and shall have notice in order to avail himself of the right, the execution of the conveyance, and the payment of the purchase money, are mutual and independent covenants. Neither party can put the other in default without a tender of performance, and the lessee must tender the money before he becomes entitled to a conveyance.

2. SAME—TENDER—PLEADING.

An allegation "that defendant has been and is still ready and willing to perform each and all the covenants and conditions of his agreement on his part to be performed, and to pay plaintiff and H. the full sum to be paid upon the performance on their part of the covenants and conditions by them so to be kept and performed," is not an averment of a tender.

3. SAME—REPUDIATION.

An averment by the lessee that the lessors repudiated the agreement to sell after the expiration of the term does not excuse a failure to tender performance before the expiration of the term.

4. JUDGMENT—MOTION TO SET ASIDE—NEW TRIAL.

After a motion for a new trial on the ground of surprise has been denied because it is made too late, a motion to set aside the judgment on the same ground, according to section 473, Code Civil Proc. Cal., must explain the delay, or the motion must be denied.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Appeals from superior court, Lake county.

The lease referred to in the opinion provided, in regard to the sale of the land, as follows: "And it is hereby further covenanted and agreed that the party of the second part shall have the right, at any time before the expiration of said term, to purchase the said land and premises of and from the parties of the first part, for the sum of three thousand two hundred and fifty dollars ($3,250) in gold coin of the United States, by giving to the parties of the first part, or the survivor of them, their heirs or assigns, ten days' notice of his election so to purchase the same. And the parties of the first part covenant and agree that, upon the giving of the notice and payment of the purchase price aforesaid, they, or the survivor of them, their heirs or assigns, shall and will convey to the party of the second part, his heirs and assigns, by a good and sufficient deed of grant, bargain, and sale, all and singular the said land and premises, together with all the tenements, hereditaments, and appurtenances thereunto belonging, or in any wise appertaining, in fee-simple, free of all incumbrances: provided, however, and it is hereby expressly agreed, that if, at any time before the party of the second part shall have given notice of his election to purchase as aforesaid, any person, able and willing so to do, shall offer, in good faith, to purchase said land and premises for a greater sum than three thousand two hundred and fifty dollars, ($3,250.) then the parties of the first part shall give notice in writing of such offer to the party of the second part, his heirs or assigns, and said party of the second part shall have the privilege, for the period of ten days after service of such notice, of purchasing the same at the price named in such offer, in preference to the person offering the same; but if the party of the second part shall fail or neglect, for the period of ten days after service of such notice, to give written notice to the parties of the second part, or one of them, their heirs or assigns, of his election to purchase said premises at such advanced price, then the parties of the first part shall have the right to sell and convey the same to the person making such offer at the price named therein, but for cash only, anything in this agreement to the contrary notwithstanding."

Geo. P. Harding, for appellant. Welles Whitmore, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This is an action of ejectment to recover a tract of land situated in Lake county. Plaintiff had judgment, from which, and from an order dismissing and denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals, which appeal is No. 9,693. Subsequently defendant moved the court to set aside and vacate the judgment, upon the ground of "mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect," as provided by section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The motion was denied, and appeal No. 9,694 is taken from the order denying such motion. For convenience sake, we shall consider the two appeals in the same opinion; stating separately, however, the views deemed applicable to each case.

Turning to appeal No. 9,693, and we find that the answer of the defendant, among other things, avers that he leased the demanded premises from plaintiff and his wife, who were the owners as joint tenants, for one year from October 15, 1882; that by the terms of said lease he was to have the privilege of purchasing at any time during the term for $3,250, upon giving 10 days' previous notice of his election so to purchase; that on the first day of October, 1883, he elected to purchase the premises under the terms of said agreement, and gave written notice thereof to plaintiff and wife; that they never tendered him a deed, and repudiated their agreement to convey, etc.

Defendant contends that the judgment should be reversed for want of any finding as to the matters set up in the answer by way of equitable defense. The findings on this branch of the case are as follows: "(5) That on the fifteenth day of October, 1882, the defendant went into possession of said premises as tenant, by virtue of the lease set forth in the answer, and continued in possession as such tenant until October 15, 1883, when said lease expired; and that within thirty days thereafter plaintiff made a demand upon said defendant for the possession of said premises in writing. (6) That the said defendant did not comply with the terms of the agreement mentioned in the answer in regard to the purchase of said land, or any part thereof."

These findings cover the material allegations of the answer. They cannot be true, and the defendant at the same time be entitled to recover upon the defense set out in his answer. The findings in favor of plaintiff were supported by the evidence. Defendant did not introduce any evidence whatever, and the affirmative allegations of the answer, which are to be deemed and taken as denied, were entirely unsupported by proofs. This view is taken upon the theory that the bill of exceptions is properly before us.

If, however, the court was correct in holding that the bill of exceptions was not served and filed in time, then there is no evidence in the record, and we cannot review the facts as found. Indeed, in our view of the case, the answer does not set out such an equitable defense as called for findings at all. According to the lease, which is set out in the answer, the payment of the purchase price, and a conveyance by the lessors, were mutual and independent covenants, and neither could put the other in default without tendering a performance on his own part, unless the other party waived such performance. The allegation of the answer is "that ever since said first day of October, 1883, defendant has been, and still is, ready and willing to perform each and all of the covenants and conditions of said agreement on his part to be kept and performed, and to pay to said plaintiff and said Theresa Heine the full sum thereby agreed to be paid, upon the performance, on their part, of the covenants and conditions by them so to be kept and performed." This is not an averment that he tendered the purchase money.

In Englander v. Rogers, 41 Cal. 420, a similar allegation, under similar circumstances, was held insufficient. The court said: "This is not an averment that he tendered the purchase money. To constitute a valid tender in such a case, the party must have the money at hand, immediately under his control, and must then and there not only be ready and willing, but produce and offer to pay it to the other party, on the performance by him of the requisite condition." Citing Bakeman v. Pooler, 15 Wend. 637; Dunham v. Jackson, 6 Wend. 22; and Strong v. Blake, 46 Barb. 227.

Defendant, it is true, avers that on or about the first of November, 1883, the lessors repudiated the agreement to sell, and have ever since neglected and refused to perform any of said covenants and conditions. By reference to the lease, it will be seen that the agreement of the lessors was to convey "at any time before the expiration of the term." The term expired on the fifteenth day of October, 1883, and a refusal to convey after that time could not excuse defendant from making a tender previously due. The motion for a new trial was dismissed upon the theory that the bill of exceptions and affidavit were not filed and served in time. The notice of intention to move for a new trial, and the evidence of its service and filing, constitute no part of the judgment roll, and are not set forth in the bill of exceptions. We cannot, therefore, take notice of the time when the notice was served and filed.

As to the bill of exceptions, even if it should be conceded that it was filed in time, nothing therein contained would have authorized the court to grant a new trial. It is not necessary to say, therefore, whether the bill of exceptions was filed in time, or whether, if not, the objection that it was not so filed was waived by failure to raise the question at the settlement of the bill. As to the affidavit, however, showing accident and surprise, on account of which a new trial is asked, different considerations arise. The respondent was not called upon, and had no opportunity to object that it was not in time, until the motion was brought to a hearing; and as he then objected, and moved to strike out upon the ground that the affidavit came too late, he certainly waived no right in relation thereto. It follows that the judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

The appeal in No. 9,694 is from a special order made after final judgment, denying defendant's motion to vacate and relieve him, the said defendant, from the judgment, on the ground of excusable neglect. The judgment was rendered April 16, 1884. On the twenty-third day of April, 1884, defendant gave notice of a motion for a new trial, which motion was denied May 27, 1884. On the twenty-ninth day of May following, defendant served and filed notice of motion, under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to vacate said judgment on the ground of excusable neglect. The motion was heard and denied June 7, 1884, and this appeal is from the order of denial. The motion was heard upon the judgment roll in the case, and upon the affidavits of defendant and Woods Crawford, his attorney in the case, and the counter-affidavit of Josiah Johns on behalf of plaintiff.

In McKinley v. Tuttle, 34 Cal. 235, it was held that where a defendant appeared at the trial, the proper remedy for excusable negligence or surprise, whereby he was prevented from presenting his defense, was by motion for a new trial, and not by motion for relief from the judgment under section 68 of the practice act. That section corresponds with section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Our attention is not called to any case in which a judgment has been set aside under section 473 of the Code, after the hearing of a motion for a new trial, for a cause or causes which could have been urged with equal force on such motion. The same affidavit of defendant to show excusable neglect relied upon here was presented on the motion for a new trial. True, the bill of exceptions and affidavit were disregarded on that motion, because not filed and served in time. We may concede that it would afford good cause in support of this motion, if a sufficient excuse for not serving and filing them in time was presented. The time for serving and filing these papers expired on the third day of May, 1884. According to the affidavit of Woods Crawford, the attorney of the defendant, he received these papers at Lakeport on the second day of May, and "that on the sixth day of May, 1884, and as soon as affiant could do so, affiant served and filed said affidavit and bill of exceptions." No reason is attempted to be given why the papers could not be served on the second or third of the month, instead of waiting until the sixth. To make a case of excusable neglect, the reasons for the delay should be set forth, in order that the court may pass upon their sufficiency. Assuming, then, without determining the fact, that defendant had a valid excuse for not being present at the trial, and the case stands thus: He moved for a new trial on affidavits and a bill of exceptions, in the former of which he set out his excuse for not appearing at the trial, but, without any cause, so far as appears, for the delay, he failed to serve and file these papers in time, and in consequence thereof they were disregarded on the motion. This was not such excusable neglect as will warrant the granting of a motion to set aside the judgment under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The order appealed from in No. 9,694 should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from in No. 9,693 are affirmed, and in No. 9,694 the order appealed from is affirmed.

RICHARDS, Ex'r, v. DONNER. (No. 9,579.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 30, 1887.)

DEED—INADEQUATE CONSIDERATION—CANCELLATION.

P., while a visitor in the house of D.'s mother, received a severe paralytic stroke, and, while suffering from it, deeded his property to D. on the representation of W., an intimate friend of D.'s family, that the deed would be the same as a will, and more convenient. After his recovery, P. requested a reconveyance, tendering a sum to cover expenses, and D. refused. There was no valuable consideration. P. brought an action to cancel the deed. Held, that P. was entitled to the property on the principle that the court will, on proper application by the injured party, or his legal representatives, set aside the conveyance of a person suffering from mental weakness, when the consideration was inadequate.¹ SHARPSTEIN, J., dissents.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county. See 11 Pac. Rep. 770.

S. O. Houghton, J. T. Campbell, and Rutledge & McConnell, for appellant.
J. E. Richards, S. F. Lieb, and Moore, Laine & Johnson, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. This action was originally brought by A. W. Peck in his life-time (for whom his executor, Richards, has been substituted) for the purpose of canceling a deed of gift made by said Peck to the defendant, M. E. Donner, while he was in such an enfeebled mental condition, and so circumstanced in his surroundings, as that he did not understand or appreciate the nature, effects, and consequences of the execution and delivery of that deed. A judgment was rendered for the plaintiff, and from that, and an order denying her a new trial, the defendant has appealed.

Several points are presented by appellant for consideration; but, in the view we take of the case as hereinafter set forth, it is unnecessary to pass upon them.

The court found, in substance, as grounds for rendering judgment for the plaintiff, that A. W. Peck, while a visitor at the house of the defendant's mother, where the defendant resided, on the twelfth day of April, 1882, received a severe paralytic stroke, which greatly weakened his physical and mental faculties; that while in such condition, on the twentieth day of April, Respecting inadequacy of consideration as a ground for rescission, see McKinney v. Crady, (Ky.) 1 S. W. Rep. 404.

1882, still sojourning in the house of defendant's mother, he proposed to make a will of the property in controversy to the defendant, towards whose family for many years he had entertained intimate and familiar friendship; that on the next day, by the advice of John Walker, a neighbor and friend of that family, and the acting executor of the defendant's father, he was induced to consent that a deed, rather than a will, should be prepared, Walker having assured him it would be more advantageous, and less trouble and expense, so to transfer the property to Mary E. Donner; that he had no other advice on the subject, and that Walker did not explain to him the difference between a will and a deed in their effects and consequences as to him, A. W. Peck; that on that day, and following immediately such advice, and without such explanation, a deed of grant, bargain, and sale, upon consideration of love and affection, was prepared and presented to him, which he there and then signed and acknowledged, and that it was the deed under consideration in the cause,—he believing, at the time he signed the deed, that he was in imminent danger of death, having informed the party witnessing the same that "he might not be living on the following day;" that, after the signing and acknowledging of said deed, it was at his request taken in charge by the notary taking the acknowledgment thereof; that he afterwards, on the third day of May, 1882, procured his old friend Beach to correct the description therein of the property conveyed, and gave it to the mother of the defendant for the latter; that there was no consideration moving him, in the execution of the deed, save love and affection; that at all those several times he stated that he was to have the control of the property conveyed, and its usufruct as long as he lived, and that he was assured that such should be the case by said defendant; that he not only relied on her statement as true, but believed that such advantages, uses, and right of property were assured to him by the deed he had executed and delivered, and had he been made to understand that such was not the case he would not have made such deed; that during all those times of his illness, up to the sixth day of July, 1882, he remained in the family and at the house of defendant's mother, and the greater part of that time was under treatment by a physician called by said mother, which said physician had drafted said deed, and as a notary taken the acknowledgment thereof; that no other solicitations or representations were made to him about the relative characteristics and legal force of a will or deed by any one except said John Walker, nor any fraud or misrepresentation practiced by any one, except so far as he was deceived with the belief that he had by the terms of that deed reserved to himself during his life the use and occupation of the premises conveyed, which was brought about by the silence of the defendant, and that of her mother and others present; that on the ninth day of August, 1882, Peck demanded of the defendant in writing that she reconvey his property to him, and that a proper deed for such purpose was tendered for her execution, as also the money necessary for her attention to and proper acknowledgment thereof; that such demand and tender was made before suit brought, and the demand entirely refused; that at no time after the signing of said deed did Peck ratify or affirm it; that from the time he received the paralytic shock on the twelfth day of April, before the signing of the deed, until his death, he continued in feeble health, and greatly impaired in mind and body; that Peck died on the tenth day of September, 1882, in Santa Clara county; that he left a will, which was duly admitted to probate, of which John E. Richards, who has since his death been substituted for him as plaintiff, was constituted executor, and that he has duly qualified and acted as such.

As a conclusion of law from these facts it was found that the plaintiff was entitled to reconveyance of the property described in the complaint and the deed in controversy, and to recover his costs.

These findings, which are fully established by the evidence, clearly show that A. W. Peck, while in a condition of great mental weakness, made a deed of gift of his entire property, without understanding the nature, effect, or consequences of his act. It is claimed that the donor was not entitled to relief from a court of equity, admitting the facts found to be true, because he failed to show undue influence on the part of the donee, and because the mistake of the donor, as to the character of his act, was the offspring of his own weakness, with which the donee had nothing to do. The learned judge of the court below evidently based his conclusion upon the doctrine enunciated and applied by this court in the case of Moore v. Moore, 56 Cal. 89. The court there refers to the case of Allore v. Jewell, 94 U. S. 506, and quotes approvingly from the opinion of Mr. Justice FIELD. That was an action brought to set aside a conveyance made by a person advanced in years, of great weakness of mind, though not amounting to absolute disqualification, for an inadequate consideration, and without independent advice. There was no showing or claim of undue influence on the part of the grantee. The court there said: "It may be stated as settled law that whenever there is great weakness of mind in a person executing a conveyance of land, arising from age, sickness, or other cause, though not amounting to absolute disqualification, and the consideration given for the property is grossly inadequate, a court of equity will, upon proper and seasonable application of the injured party or his representatives or heirs, interfere and set the conveyance aside." See, also, Haydock v. Haydock, 38 Amer. Rep. 385.

It seems that the current of authority, English and American, is unvarying in its adherence to the same beneficial remedies in favor of the weak and ignorant, as against the wiles of the crafty and the greed of the avaricious, and, although judges have differed in the reasons given for the application of the rule, and the phases under which it has been applied are numerous and diverse, yet the conclusion reached is quite uniformly the same whether the donee act in good or bad faith.

The appeal from the judgment herein was dismissed January 26, 1887. We think, however, if the question can be considered on this appeal from the order, that the findings support the judgment, and that the failure to find on the question of undue influence or sanity—if such failure occurred—becomes immaterial, the court having found facts from which the same conclusion of law must be drawn, whether there was or was not undue influence on the part of the donee. As stated before, the evidence is sufficient to support the findings in all respects, and goes further, we think, and shows very clearly that in making the deed the donor believed he was making a testamentary disposition of the property. There was at least a substantial conflict.

The motion for nonsuit was properly denied. The right of plaintiff to recover did not depend on the question of the donor's sanity or soundness, nor upon the question of the donee's good faith or undue influence.

The order is affirmed.

I concur: MCFARLAND, J.

TEMPLE, J., (concurring.) Understanding that it is found, in effect, that imposition was practiced upon Peck, through which he was induced to execute the deed, in this: that he was permitted to so execute it under the belief that he was reserving and securing to himself during his life the control and revenues of the property, I concur in the judgment.

APPLEGARTH v. DEAN. (No. 9,969.)

(Supreme Court of California. January 29, 1886.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—WHEN CAUSE ACCRUES—EXCESSIVE JUDGMENT—REVERSAL.

In an action to recover money paid on a judgment in excess of the sum declared actually due upon the same, as subsequently modified by the court conformably to a judgment of the supreme court on appeal, the cause of action accrues, not at the time of the payment of the money, but at the time of the judgment of the supreme court.

2. PLEADING—CERTAINTY.

The complaint alleged that defendant, D., in suit against plaintiff to foreclose a mortgage, had recovered judgment, had had the premises sold, had obtained a judgment for deficiency, and had had the judgment docketed; that defendant, D., was purchaser at such sale, and plaintiff redeemed the property by payment to the sheriff of the price for which it was sold, together with 2 per cent. a month, and paid defendant, D., the amount of the judgment docketed; that plaintiff in this case appealed from said judgment, which the supreme court modified, and subsequently the lower court modified its judgment; that plaintiff duly demanded the excess paid, together with interest and percentage. Held, that the complaint was not ambiguous, unintelligible, and uncertain, since it was easy of comprehension and free from reasonable doubt and showed what it intended as the facts constituting the cause of action.

3. SAME—DUPLICITY.

The excess paid the sheriff to redeem and the sum paid defendant on the deficiency judgment are not separate causes of action, and the fact that plaintiff unites them in his complaint does not make him chargeable with uniting separate causes of action.

Appeal from a judgment of the superior court, Merced county.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

J. K. Law, for appellant. W. S. Goodfellow and E. Jackman, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. Action to recover $504.75 paid upon a judgment in excess of the sum declared actually due upon the same as subsequently modified by the court. A demurrer was filed to the complaint in the action, and overruled. Defendant declining to answer over, judgment passed for the plaintiff, and the former appeals.

It is admitted by the pleadings herein that upon the thirty-first day of December, 1881, the defendant in the present action obtained, (in another suit brought for the foreclosure of a mortgage against the plaintiff, then defendant,) in the superior court of Merced county, a judgment for $2,317.26, and $253.52 costs and attorney's fees; that on March 6, 1882, the mortgaged property was sold at sheriff's sale for $2,600, for the purpose of satisfying said judgment; that said last-mentioned sum was not sufficient, by $125.53, to satisfy that judgment, and a judgment for the deficiency was docketed; that, at said sheriff's sale, Sidney Dean, the present defendant, then plaintiff, became the purchaser of the mortgaged premises; that thereafter, on the fourth day of September, 1882, the plaintiff in this action, then defendant, for the purpose of redeeming said property from the said Sidney Dean, paid to the sheriff for him, at the county of Merced, the sum of $2,600, with 2 per cent. per month thereon in addition, and paid the said Dean also the amount of the judgment docketed, as aforesaid; that all of said sums of money so paid were on that same day had and received by the said Dean; that on the twenty-third day of December, 1882, an appeal from said judgment was taken by the present plaintiff to this court, and that on the eighteenth day of July, 1884, this court modified the judgment so appealed from; that a remittitur was sent down to the superior court of Merced county, and on the second day of September, 1884, that tribunal, in obedience thereto, modified its former judgment, by substituting for the sum of $2,317.26, as the amount of the principal and interest due and owing thereon, the sum of $1,907.52, and by substituting for the sum of $253.52, the amount of costs and attorney's fees as aforesaid, the sum of $212.55; that before the commencement of this action, viz., on the fourth day of September, 1884, the plaintiff demanded of said Dean the sum of $450.71, as paid in excess of the amount due under the modified judgment, together with interest and percentage upon said sum, as paid by plaintiff as aforesaid, amounting in the aggregate to the sum of $504.75, which payment, so demanded, was by the defendant refused, and which he still refuses to pay.

The demurrer filed by the defendant set up the bar of the statute of limitations, under subdivision 1, § 339, Code Civil Proc., and that the complaint was ambiguous, unintelligible, and uncertain, in this: As to when the moneys therein alleged to have been paid to the sheriff of Merced county for defendant were so paid; as to when the same were received by defendant, and as to how and for what purpose they were so paid and received; as to what amount or portion of the moneys sued for is claimed to have been paid, in excess of the judgment as modified, by a sale of the premises, on March 6, 1882; what portion thereof was paid by a redemption of said premises from said sale, on September 4, 1882, and what portion thereof was paid to defendant for the deficiency of the judgment, docketed after said sale, on September 4, 1882; as to what portion of said sum of $504.75 sued for it is claimed was paid for interest, what portion for costs and penalties, or what portion for money paid in excess of judgment as modified. And "that several causes of action are united in said complaint, and not separately stated, in this: That a cause of action for money paid by the sheriff of Merced county to defendant on March 6, 1882, from the proceeds of the sales of plaintiff's lands, and a cause of action for money paid by plaintiff to the said sheriff on September 4, 1882, for a redemption of said land from said sale for defendant's use and benefit, and a cause of action for money paid by plaintiff to defendant on September 4, 1882, for deficiency of judgment docketed, are all united in said complaint, and none of them are separately stated."

The action was not barred by the statute of limitations. The modification of the judgment by the appellate tribunal, by which it was ascertained and judicially declared that Applegarth had paid more money than he justly owed, when he redeemed the mortgaged premises and paid the amount of the docketed judgment, gave him, as against Dean, who was the judgment creditor and purchaser at the sheriff's sale, a new cause of action, which did not accrue until the eighteenth day of July, 1884. Reynolds v. Harris, 14 Cal. 668-680; Bank of the United States v. Bank of Washington, 6 Pet. 19.

The docketed judgment was paid, but it is not alleged that it was paid in order to redeem the property. It was, until reversed upon appeal, conclusive evidence of indebtedness; execution might have been issued to enforce its payment; and hence, to prevent further costs, etc., it was the right of the defendant therein to pay it. Rawn v. Reynolds, 18 Cal. 276-291.

The complaint was not ambiguous, uncertain, or unintelligible; it was sufficient to make "easy of comprehension, and free from reasonable doubt," what it intended to announce as the facts constituting the cause of action. Salmon v. Wilson, 41 Cal. 595. It is clear that no money was sought to be recovered in this action, except such as came to the hands of the defendant himself by virtue of the redemption of the mortgaged premises, and the payment of the docketed judgment, on the fourth day of September, 1882. Separate causes of action are not, therefore, united in the complaint.

It is perfectly plain that by that pleading the defendant was sufficiently informed, although not with the utmost perspicuity, that the plaintiff demanded of him a certain sum of money, viz., the sum of $504.75; that this sum was made up by an amount of money which he had received from the plaintiff in excess of what was due on a certain judgment, afterwards modified by this court, and the interest and percentage on the same. The amount of the excess was declared to be $450.71, which, with such interest and percentage added, amounted to the sum of $504.75.

We perceive no prejudicial error in the records, and the judgment should be affirmed.

BELCHER, C. C., and SEARLS, C., concurred.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

DORE v. DOUGHERTY. (No. 9,683.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 21, 1887.)

1. JUDGMENT—JUSTICE OF THE PEACE—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

Whether an alias summons was regularly issued or not is not a jurisdictional question, and a judgment of a justice of the peace, rendered on such summons, will be held sufficient, at least as against a collateral attack.

2. EXECUTION—LEVY ON JUDGMENT—SUFFICIENCY.

In California a levy on a judgment of an execution issued by a justice of the peace, by delivering to the judgment debtor a copy of the writ, with notice in writing that the levy was upon all the right, title, and interest of plaintiff in a certain judgment, (describing it,) and upon all moneys, goods, credits, effects, debts due or owing, or in his possession, or under his control, and requesting him not to pay or transfer the same except to the officer making the levy, is a sufficient levy on the debt itself, and not on the mere judgment, which is not subject to execution under Code Civil Proc. § 542, subd. 5, providing that the debt itself, and not the mere evidence thereof, shall be liable to execution.

3. APPEAL—MOTION TO DISMISS.

Wheresome of the defendants are not interested in an appeal, a motion to dismiss, on the ground that it does not appear that the statement was served on all the adverse parties, will be denied.

Department 7. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

J. M. Nongues and Chas. E. Nongues, for appellant. J. C. Bates, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. August 3, 1880, George Dougherty, one of the defendants, recovered judgment against the present plaintiff for $2,186, and costs. On the same day Dougherty assigned the judgment to his son, John Dougherty. September 3d, Dore appealed to the supreme court from the judgment. The judgment was affirmed here February 16, 1883. 63 Cal. 170. September 4, 1880, while the appeal was pending, defendant Miller caused a levy to be made on the judgment by virtue of an execution from the justice's court of San Francisco, upon a judgment against George Dougherty in favor of Miller. The attempted levy was by the sheriff, who delivered to and left with Maurice Dore a copy of the writ, with a notice in writing that such property, to-wit, "all the right, title, and interest in and to a certain judgment obtained in the superior court, department 5, of the city and county of San Francisco, in which George Dougherty is plaintiff, and Maurice Dore defendant, judgment having been rendered on the ninth day of August, 1880, against said Maurice Dore for the sum of $2,186, and costs." Also notifying Dore that he levied upon all moneys, goods, credits, effects, debts due or owing, or in his possession, or under his control; and requesting him not to pay or transfer the same to any one save said officer. September 27, 1880, the sheriff proceeded to sell all the right, title, and interest of George Dougherty in the judgment to the defendant Miller for the sum of $20, which was credited upon the execution and judgment in favor of Miller against said Dougherty. This action was brought by Dore under section 386, Code Civil Proc., to have the court determine who was entitled to receive the money; the amount of the judgment and costs, $2,850, being deposited in court. The court awarded the money to John Dougherty, the assignee of George Dougherty, and Miller appeals from the judgment, or a portion of it.

The superior court refused to allow Miller to introduce proof for the purpose of showing that the assignment to John Dougherty was fraudulent, on the ground that Miller had acquired no title to the judgment against Dore, and had no such standing as would enable him to attack the assignment. This position is sought to be maintained on the ground, first, the judgment rendered in justice's court is void; but in this we do not agree with respondent's counsel. The summons was sufficient, at least as against a collateral attack, under the rule laid down in Keybers v. McComber, 67 Cal. 395, 7 Pac. Rep. 838. Whether the alias summons was regularly issued or not is not a jurisdictional question.

In the next place, it is claimed that the judgment was not subject to levy and sale under execution. We think this point well taken. It was expressly so held in McBride v. Fallon, 65 Cal. 301, 4 Pac. Rep. 17. Much may be said on both sides of this question, and it has been differently decided in different states. As it has been decided in the above case, we see no reason for reopening the discussion. It is claimed that the case of McBride v. Fallon only holds that the sale could not be made as it was attempted in that case, and that the mode of levy there was different from the mode pursued here. But that ruling is expressly placed upon the ground that the judgment is but the evidence of a debt, and the statute has made no provision for attaching or levying upon evidences of debt; but that it is the debt itself, and not the evidence of it, which may be levied upon by the writ of attachment, or on execution in like manner as upon writs of attachment. And to confirm this view the court alludes to the case of Davis v. Mitchell, 34 Cal. 81, where it was held that a promissory note was the subject of levy and sale, when the sheriff could get possession of it, and could deliver it to the purchaser, and say they could not assent to the doctrine of that case. Of course it is not denied that a judgment is property, or that it can be the subject of assignment. The ruling is based entirely upon the statute. And it seems to us that it necessarily follows that the debt was by the proceeding duly levied upon. Service of the writ and notice constituted what is usually called the process of garnishment.

It is claimed that the garnishment is not sufficiently pleaded by defendant Miller. It is true, Miller claims to have bought the judgment; but in showing his title to the judgment he adopts by express reference the allegations in the complaint which show the garnishment, and adds the other facts which show the debt itself was duly levied upon. This put Miller in the attitude of a creditor, and gave him the right to attack the assignment for fraud, and the ruling denying him that right was error. The other defendants were not interested in this appeal, and the motion to dismiss, on the ground that it does not appear that the statement was served on all the adverse parties, must be denied.

Judgment reversed, so far as the same affects defendant Miller, and a new trial ordered as to the claim of said defendant.

MANLEY v. CUNNINGHAM. (No. 9,785.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 21, 1887)

1. PUBLIC LANDS—OF STATE—"SUITABLE FOR CULTIVATION."

Lands several miles from the ocean, and not readily accessible by reason of the absence of roads, the surface of which is rolling and uneven, but not steep, the soil of which is rich, and the greater portion of which is covered with brush and red-wood timber, which must be removed before the land can be cultivated, and which will then be more valuable than as timber land, is "suitable for cultivation," as that term is used in Const. Cal. art. 17, § 3, providing how land suitable for cultivation may be disposed of by the state.

2. SAME—APPLICATIONS FOR—ACTUAL SETTLERS.

Section 3 of article 17 of the California constitution of 1879, which provides that "lands belonging to the state which are suitable for cultivation shall be granted only to actual settlers," applies to applications for state lands, pending at the time when the constitution was adopted, and requires such an applicant for lands suitable for cultivation to be an actual settler; following Dillon v. Saloude, 68 Cal. 267, 9 Pac. Rep. 162.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county.

Garber, Thornton & Bishop, for appellant. J. M. Lesser and J. H. Logan, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court of Santa Cruz county in favor of the defendant. The case arises out of a contested claim to purchase certain state lands, referred to that court, as the successor of the district court, for determination, upon the application of the plaintiff, under section 3414 of the Political Code. The case was tried by the court below without the intervention of a jury, and the facts fully appear from the findings, which are not excepted to; the appeal being simply from the judgment. The lands in controversy are contiguous subdivisions of section 1, township 9 S., range 4 W., Mount Diablo base and meridian, aggregating 320 acres, and being lands granted to the state in lieu of N. $\frac{1}{2}$ of section 36, township 9, N. range 18 W., San Bernardino meridian, lost to the state by a prior grant. These lands were duly surveyed, accepted, and listed, and were certified to the state by the honorable secretary of the interior on August 30, 1869. The plaintiff's application to purchase said lands was filed in the office of the surveyor general of the state August 14, 1878, and was in due form, and was accompanied by an affidavit setting forth all the facts required by the statute then in force. The application contained, among other things, a clause whereby the plaintiff expressly agreed to pay for the land \$1.25 in gold or silver coin, in the manner and at the time prescribed by statute, and that, in case of non-payment of the first installment within the statutory period, the lands should "revert" to the state without suit. The legal fee was duly paid by the plaintiff on the filing of the said application. The court finds, also, that the facts stated by the plaintiff in his application and affidavit, as to his qualifications to purchase, are all true, and that there is no other valid claim to the land, except it be that of the defendant. The defendant's application and affidavit were filed December 31, 1872, setting forth that he was a citizen of the United States, a resident of the state, and over 21 years; that he desired to purchase the land "under the provisions of an act of the legislature of said state entitled 'An act to provide for the management and sale of land belonging to the state,' approved March 28, 1868, and the various acts amendatory thereof, and supplementary thereto;" that there was no adverse occupancy of the land, and that he agreed to pay for the same in the manner provided by law, etc. The defendant also paid the legal fee to the surveyor general, and his application was received and filed, and afterwards approved, by said surveyor general. Thereafter, on February 25, 1876, after the determination in his favor of a contest with one Crowley, hereinafter mentioned, a certificate of purchase was issued to defendant by the register of the state land-office, December 4, 1875, and the defendant was the holder of said certificate when the plaintiff's application was filed, as before stated. After the plaintiff's application was filed, he demanded of the surveyor general that the contest between himself and the defendant be referred to the courts for adjudication. Thereupon, on said day, the surveyor general and ex officio register of the state land-office made and entered in the record books of his office an order referring said contest to the superior court of Santa Cruz county for trial, and a certified copy of said order was filed in the clerk's office of said superior court on September 8, 1881. The plaintiff filed his complaint in this action in said court on October 24, 1881.

The complaint sets out the above recited facts; alleges that the land is not suitable for cultivation; that the defendant's application and certificate of purchase are without authority and void, and prays the court so to adjudge; and also to adjudge that the defendant is not entitled to purchase the said land, but that the plaintiff is; that his application be approved; and that, upon his making payment, a certificate be issued to him. The answer denies all the allegations of the complaint, and sets out a separate defense to the effect that, on September 10, 1868, one Crowley had filed in the office of the state locating agent an application to purchase the land in controversy; that the land was afterwards, in 1870, duly listed, certified, and conveyed to the state; that on December 31, 1872, the defendant filed his application to purchase, as above stated; that a contest thereupon arose between himself and the said Crowley before the register of the state land-office, which, upon his demand, was referred to the district court in and for Santa Cruz county for determination; that thereafter, upon a complaint filed by him in said district court, such proceedings were had that the said contest was decided in his favor, and, on August 1, 1874, a judgment was duly entered, whereby it was ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said defendant, Cunningham, was entitled to purchase the said lands, and his application should be approved, and the surveyor general approve the same, and issue to him a certificate of purchase; and that, on February 25, 1875, the state sold him the said land, and the surveyor general, as ex officio register, issued to him a certificate of purchase. The defendant also filed a cross-complaint setting out the facts as to his own application, etc., and that of the plaintiff, and the reference of the contest between them, and praying a determination of said contest in his favor. There is also a supplemental answer alleging the issuance of a patent to the defendant, pursuant to his certificate of purchase, on April 7, 1882. The defendant appealed from the decision of the district court in said cause of Cunningham v. Crowley, and on the appeal the judgment was affirmed. The opinion of this court is reported in 51 Cal. 128.

The following is the finding of the court below as to character of the land: "That said lands are situated in the Santa Cruz mountains, about six miles from the coast, difficult of access, for the reason that there are not any roads leading thereto. The surface is rolling and uneven, but not steep. Soil of a rich nature. A greater portion of the surface is covered with brush and red-wood timber, which must be removed before the land can be plowed. This would involve very considerable outlay. There are spaces and openings, aggregating somewhat less than one-half, ready to be plowed. The land now has a distinct value for its timber, but, when the timber shall have been removed, will be more valuable for agricultural purposes. For these reasons, and none other, the court finds that at the time of filing plaintiff's application said lands were and still are suitable for cultivation; that there never has been any actual settlement by plaintiff, or any person; and neither plaintiff, nor any person, ever was an actual settler or resident on said lands, or any part thereof."

Article 17, § 3, of the constitution, reads as follows: "Lands belonging to this state, which are suitable for cultivation, shall be granted only to actual settlers, and in quantities not exceeding three hundred and twenty acres to each settler, under such conditions as shall be prescribed by law."

In support of his proposition that the lands are not fit for cultivation, appellant claims "(1) that, as appears from the findings, the lands are in reality timber lands in the Santa Cruz mountains, without any roads leading thereto, and therefore 'difficult of access;' and that the conclusion of the court that, because the soil is of a rich nature, the lands are 'suitable for cultivation,' although it is declared that the greater part of it cannot be plowed until the timber is removed, is wholly unwarranted; (2) that the terms 'suitable for cultivation,' logically and etymologically, mean presently or immediately fit for tillage, without other preparation than appertains to the ordinary operations of husbandry, and cannot apply to timber lands incapable of cultivation until the timber is removed."

We are unable to agree with appellant in his interpretation of the phrase "suitable for cultivation," as used in section 3, or his conclusion as to the effect of the seventh finding of the court. On the contrary, we think that the elements and conditions stated in the finding bring the land in controversy within the classes intended by the framers of the constitution to be reserved for actual settlers. It was intended by this section to provide that the public lands should be held and disposed of, so far as possible, to those who will live upon and cultivate them; that they should be used to encourage the immigration of industrious people who will utilize and improve the lands, and, by building up homes and engaging in husbandry, add permanently to the wealth and prosperity of the state.

The phrase, "lands belonging to this state suitable for cultivation," includes all lands ready for occupation, and which by ordinary farming processes are fit for agricultural purposes. The language of the section is used in the sense that it has always been employed in reference to the public domain. Some of the richest agricultural lands of the country have been acquired under the pre-emption laws, and yet they were covered with timber, brush, or prairie sod, which rendered them incapable of immediate cultivation.

In a recent letter to commissioner McFarland, the secretary of the interior says: "All timber lands are unfit for cultivation in their natural condition, but, if they may be redeemed and made susceptible of cultivation by ordinary farming process, they are not, in my opinion, within the purposes of this act, which was intended to embrace within its provisions timbered tracts only, in broken, rugged, or mountainous districts, with soil unfit for ordinary agricultural purposes when cleared of timber." 10 Copp, Land-owner, 73; Hughes v. Tipton, 11 Copp, Land-owner, 8.

It is said that this construction of the section will include swamp and overflowed lands which are rich in soil, and that it will require actual settlement thereon before purchase. But no lands can be included that are unfit for actual occupancy. It was not intended that the purchaser should live upon the water, or make his home in a swamp. It would be singular, indeed, if the state should require such lands to be reclaimed, so as to make them fit for residence for the actual settler, before it could entertain an application by the purchaser. Such a condition would, of course, place a complete embargo on all sales of those lands, and the state would thereby defeat the very purposes of the grant by which it took them.

Now, if we are correct as to the object, meaning, and intent of the section referred to, the reasons or facts given by the court for its ultimate finding that the lands are suitable for cultivation must be good and sufficient. The soil is of a rich nature. The surface is not steep. Nearly one-half is now ready for the plow. When the timber is removed, the land will be more valuable for agricultural purposes. The lands are within six miles of the ocean, and in the Santa Cruz mountains. They are difficult of access—not impossible—only because there are no roads, and the disadvantages arising from the fact that there is some brush on the place are more than offset by the red-wood timber from which can be secured material for fencing, building, and fuel.

The second point made by appellant, viz., that this section cannot be given a retrospective operation, has been fully considered in former decisions of this court. We have stated the facts of this case, and deem it unnecessary to review the decisions. Johnson v. Squires, 55 Cal. 103; Urton v. Wilson, 65 Cal. 13, 2 Pac. Rep. 411; Dillon v. Saloude, 68 Cal. 267, 9 Pac. Rep. 162. The plaintiff has not paid any part of the purchase price; therefore Laugenour v. Shanklin, 57 Cal. 76, and Bludworth v. Lake, 33 Cal. 262, do not apply.

It is said that the finding as to settlement is outside of the issues; that plaintiff did not allege he was an actual settler, and defendant should have alleged that plaintiff was not an actual settler, if he desired to rely on the fact. It must be remembered, however, that the plaintiff alleged and proceeded upon the theory that the land was not suitable for cultivation. If he had succeeded in proving this allegation, the question of settlement would have been immaterial. It devolved upon the plaintiff to allege and prove, either that the land was not suitable for cultivation, or that, being suitable for cultivation, he was an actual settler or resident. The plaintiff cannot recover because of the insufficiency of the allegations, or proof of the defendant.

In this case the court below did not award to defendant the right to purchase, and the defendant is not here complaining of the judgment. Judgment affirmed.

PAULSON v. NUNAN. (No. 9,585.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 23, 1887.)

1. APPEAL—EVIDENCE—HARMLESS ERROR.

In an action of claim and delivery for two horses which plaintiff claimed as exempt from execution because used in his business of peddling, evidence of an entry in a city directory of plaintiff's business as compiler of hand-books was admitted. Held, that the admission of this evidence, if error, was harmless, since plaintiff admitted that a portion of his time was occupied as compiler of books, and the entry did not negative the fact that a portion of his time was occupied in peddling.

2. REPLEVIN—EXECUTION—LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Where the issue in an action of claim and delivery against a sheriff is whether the seizure was lawful when made, it is immaterial whether after that, and before the suit was brought, the judgment was barred by the statute of limitations. It is therefore not error to refuse plaintiff leave to amend by pleading the statute.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

Wm. & Geo. Leviston, for appellant. Clitus Barbour and Carl T. Graef, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This is an action of claim and delivery by Paulson against Nunan, as sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco, for two horses, or their value, alleged to be exempt property under subdivision 6, § 690, Code Civil Proc., and wrongfully taken by the sheriff under writs of attachment. Judgment was rendered for the defendant, a new trial was moved for by the plaintiff and refused, and from the order made therein and from the judgment this appeal is prosecuted. The plaintiff alleges, as an error committed by the court, that it admitted in evidence, over his objection, an entry in a certain directory, as follows: "Paulson, Luther L. Publisher of hand-books and county directories. Office, 517 Clay; dwl., 914 Clay." Conceding without deciding, that such evidence was incompetent to prove Paulson's employment, nevertheless he testified that a portion of his time at least was employed in getting up and publishing directories or hand-books, so that the admission of the entry in question before the court could not and did not prejudice him in any appreciable degree, as the entry in the book did not negative the fact that a portion of his time was occupied in the business of a huckster or peddler. The great preponderance of the evidence was, we think, to the effect that the horses were not used habitually by the plaintiff, as he claimed, as a huckster or peddler in earning his living, and for such conflict as did exist there should not be a reversal of the judgment or order.

The question before the court, under the original pleadings was, did not the sheriff rightfully seize the property under attachment at the time he took it? The plaintiff asked leave of the court, which was refused, to file a supplemental complaint, setting up that the judgment obtained in the action in which the attachments were issued was barred by the statute of limitations, not at the time of the taking by the sheriff, but at the time of the proposed filing of the amended pleading many years after the taking, and after the sheriff had gone out of office. This refusal was a proper one. The sheriff's justification depended upon his lawful taking of the property at the time of its seizure; and whether after that time, and before this suit was brought, the statute of limitations had barred the judgments, was no concern of his.

There is no merit whatever in this appeal, and the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; SEARLS, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

WOOD v. BRUSH. (No. 9,515.)

(Supreme Court of California, April 20, 1887.)

1. PLEADING—ANSWER—STRIKING OUT—PRACTICE.

Where, pending a decision of a motion by plaintiff to strike out defendant's answer, and for judgment as demanded in the complaint, defendant obtains an order on plaintiff to show cause why he should not be permitted to file a supplemental answer, but fails to appear at the time set for hearing such order, the answer may, if insufficient, be properly stricken out, and judgment entered for plaintiff.

2. NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS—ASSIGNMENT AFTER MATURITY—COUNTER-CLAIM.

Where an action is brought on a note assigned to plaintiff after maturity, defendant cannot set up a counter-claim or defense that has arisen since the commencement of the suit, as he is only entitled to set up such defense as he could have set up against the assignor before the transfer of the note.

3. SET-OFF AND COUNTER-CLAIM—PARTNERSHIP—ACCOUNTING.

Where a counter-claim set up is due, if at all, as a partnership account against sundry persons beside plaintiff, and until an accounting, would not be the subject of an action at law, it is not a counter-claim "existing in favor of a defendant, and against a plaintiff, between whom a several judgment might be had in the action," within the purview of Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 438, and is not valid.

4. SAME—SEPARATE CONTRACTS.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 438, sub. 2, in an action upon a contract, another cause of action arising upon a separate contract can only be set up as a counter-claim when it existed at the commencement of the action.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

C. H. Moore, for defendant and appellant. W. S. Goodfellow, for plaintiff and respondent.

SEARLS, C. This is an action upon a promissory note for $875 and interest, made by defendant, payable to the order of W. W. Potter, and indorsed by the latter to the plaintiff. The sworn complaint contained a copy of the note, and is in the usual form. The answer is as follows: "Now comes the defendant above-named, and, answering the plaintiff's complaint herein, avers that, as consideration for the promissory note declared on in plaintiff's complaint herein, he received the sum of six hundred and nine and seventy-nine one hundredths ($609.79) dollars, and no more; wherefore he prays judgment, and for costs." Plaintiff moved to strike out the answer, and for judgment as prayed for in the complaint. Pending this motion, defendant obtained an order on plaintiff to show cause why defendant should not be permitted to file a supplemental answer. At the hearing of the motion and order to show cause, defendant failed to appear, and an order was entered granting the motion for judgment, and denying the application to file a supplemental answer. Thereupon judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff as prayed for in his complaint, from which judgment defendant appeals.

The original answer contained no defense to the action, and was properly stricken out. There is no statement or bill of exceptions in the record. The supplemental answer, although presented to the clerk for filing, and marked as filed, did not become a pleading in the cause, so as to constitute a part of the judgment roll, until defendant's motion, permitting it to be filed as such pleading, was granted; and as leave was refused by the court it never became a pleading, and is not entitled to consideration as a portion of the judgment roll. Waiving all objections, however, to the record, and to its lack of authentication, and the leave to file a supplemental answer was properly refused, for the reasons: First. That defendant, after procuring an order on plaintiff to show cause, and having it set for hearing, failed to appear at such hearing, and the court might well have concluded he had abandoned the application to file a supplemental answer. Second. The complaint shows that the promissory note upon which the action is brought was indorsed to plaintiff after maturity. This entitled defendant to set up as against it any defense which he could have interposed against the assignor, and which existed at the time of, or before, notice of the assignment. The institution of the action was notice of the assignment of the note, and yet defendant seeks to set up, as against plaintiff, a defense or counter-claim which, according to his sworn statement, "has arisen since the commencement of this action, and since the former answer of defendant was filed." This he cannot be permitted to do. Third. The counter-claim set out in the supplemental pleading is clearly due, if at all, as a partnership account against sundry persons besides plaintiff, and, until an accounting is had and a balance struck, is not the subject-matter for an action at law. It is not, therefore, a counter-claim "existing in favor of a defendant, and against a plaintiff, between whom a several judgment might be had in the action," within the purview of section 438 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Fourth. In an action upon a contract, another cause of action arising upon a separate contract can only be set up as a counter-claim when it existed at the commencement of the action. HEARST v. DENNISON. (No. 9,647.)

1. APPEAL—SETTLEMENT OF STATEMENT—FRAUD.

When a trial judge, after examination, refuses to settle a statement of the case on motion for a new trial, on the ground that it is incorrect and fraudulent, on appeal, when there is nothing to show that the statement was not a fraud, the order of the trial judge, even if it is an appealable order, will not be reviewed by the California supreme court.

2. SAME—RECORD.

On appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial, where there is no statement, there can be no review in the supreme court of California.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

J. Quint, for defendant and appellant. Edward Lynch, for plaintiff and respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is an action for unlawful detainer of land after non-payment of rent. Plaintiff had judgment in the court below; and defendant appeals (1) from the judgment; (2) from an order of the judge of the lower court refusing to settle a proposed statement on motion for new trial; and (3) from an order denying a motion for new trial.

1. The judgment roll shows no error, and the appeal from the judgment has no merits.

2. The transcript contains a bill of exceptions, which shows that, after appellant had served and filed a notice of motion for a new trial, he served and presented to the judge, within the proper time, a document which commenced with the words, "Defendant's draft of his proposed statement on motion for a new trial." To this document, and to its settlement by the judge, respondent objected, and moved that the judge refuse to settle the same upon the ground that it was not "a draft of nor a statement of the case in the above-entitled action." The bill of exceptions shows that appellant's attorney admitted that said proposed statement "was incorrect and erroneous," but does not show that appellant was "in any way prevented from making a fair or substantially truthful statement of the case." After a full hearing of the matter, the court made an order refusing to settle the statement, "on the grounds that said proposed statement on motion for a new trial is not a statement of the case, or of any case herein, and is grossly incorrect; and that no draft of the statement of the case, or of any case herein, or a copy of said draft, has been made or prepared or served herein at any time." From this order defendant appeals.

If this document, named "draft of his proposed statement," is a mere pretense and fraud; if it is so grossly untrue, or so foreign to the real history of the case, as to come within no reasonable meaning of "a statement of the case," as used in the Code,—then the judge of the court below was right in disregarding it. It is the duty of a judge to "settle" a statement, not to make one. And there is nothing in the record to show that the proposed draft was not a sheer fraud. There is nothing before us upon which we can review the order. Indeed, it is doubtful if an appeal lies at all from such an order. If a judge refuses to settle a bona fide statement, he may be compelled to settle it upon mandamus, or by the proceeding provided in section 652, Code Civil Proc. In such a proceeding the reporter's notes or other evidence of the real facts of the case can be brought before this court. But, whether or not an appeal would lie, there is nothing in the record in the case at bar from which we can determine that the court erred in making the order appealed from.

3. There being no statement, there is nothing to review on the appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial.

Judgment and order affirmed.

NEW TRIAL—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—DISCRETION.

A motion for a new trial, made on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the decision and judgment, is addressed to the sound discretion of the court, and an order on such a motion granting a new trial will not be reversed unless there has been a manifest abuse of that discretion.

BELCHER, C. C. This is an appeal by the defendant from an order granting the plaintiff a new trial. The motion was made and granted upon the ground that the evidence did not justify the decision and judgment. It is settled law in this state that a motion for new trial, made upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict, or other decision, is addressed to the sound legal discretion of the court, and an order granting a new trial on such ground will not be reversed unless it appear that there has been a manifest abuse of that discretion. Phelps v. Union C. M. Co., 39 Cal. 407; Pierce v. Schaden, 55 Cal. 406; Bronner v. Wetzlar, Id. 419. SULLIVAN v. ROYER. (No. 9,651.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 25, 1887.)

1. NUISANCE—SOOT FROM SMOKE-STACK—ABATEMENT.

It appeared that the issuance of soot from defendant's smoke-stack was a nuisance of a most disagreeable character to plaintiff and his family. It was not shown but what the smoke-stack might have been easily used in such a way that soot would not have issued therefrom. Held, that this was not one of the inconveniences necessarily flowing from a concentration of population, which one impliedly consents to by living in a city, and that it was properly enjoined.

2. SAME—JUSTIFICATION—LICENSE.

The board of supervisors licensed defendant to erect and maintain a steam-engine. Held, that this license did not justify the creation of a nuisance by the issuance of soot from the smoke-stack of such engine.¹

3. SAME—ABATEMENT—EQUITY—PLEADING—INJUNCTION.

The complaint in an action in equity for the abatement of a nuisance asked "that said nuisance be abated." Held that, the action being in equity, an injunction suitable to the facts of the case was the proper mode of granting the relief, although it was not expressly prayed for.

4. EQUITY—DECREE—ADVISORY VERDICT—INSTRUCTION.

The judge charged the jury that damages could be recovered against defendant after the commencement of the action. The plaintiff, however, disclaimed all damages after the filing of the complaint. Held no error, since, the case being one in equity, the verdict was advisory.

5. TRIAL—ARGUMENTS OF COUNSEL.

In a trial before a jury, counsel should not be permitted to read law books, or to make an argument on the law of the case, or to state what he claimed to be law, to the jury; and it is not error for the court to refuse to permit it.

Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

M. A. Wheaton, for appellant. J. M. Allen, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This is an action in equity instituted for the purpose of enjoining and abating certain nuisances, and for the recovery of damages resulting therefrom. The cause was tried before a jury who heard all the evidence given therein. A verdict was by them rendered for $100 damages against the defendant, "and that he be ordered by the court to abate the nuisances complained of by the plaintiff." Thereupon the court made and filed written findings of fact, upon all the material issues raised by the pleadings, and rendered its judgment enjoining the defendant from continuing the nuisances complained of, ordering that the same be abated, and that the plaintiff recover the sum of $100 damages, and costs. A new trial was moved for by the defendant and denied, and from the judgment and order made therein this appeal is prosecuted.

Counsel for the defendant contends most earnestly, upon several grounds, that the judgment and order should be reversed, but none of them appear to us to be tenable.

There was no error in the refusal of the court to allow the defendant's counsel to read law books, or to make an argument on the law of the case, or to state what he claimed to be law to the jury. People v. Anderson, 44 Cal. 70; Proff. Jury, § 253.

As we have seen, this was an action in equity. People v. Moore, 29 Cal. 427; Courtwright v. Bear R. & A. W. & M. Co., 30 Cal. 576, 577. An abatement of a nuisance is accomplished by a court of equity by means of an injunction, proper and suitable to the facts of each case. Wood, Nuis. §§ 777-794.

The complaint alleged, and the court found, that a nuisance existed, and was continuous. The answer denied all the material allegations of the complaint. While it is true that the prayer of the pleading above referred to did not expressly ask for the issuance of an injunction, yet it did ask "that said nuisance be abated." The relief granted was consistent with the case made by the complaint, and embraced within the issues made by the pleadings, and was therefore entirely proper. Section 580, Code Civil Proc.

There is a substantial conflict in the evidence as to whether the plaintiff was, at the time of the institution of the action, employed by the defendant to remove the "pile of hair and flesh" that constituted a part of the nuisance complained of.

The defendant complains that the court instructed the jury that damages could be recovered against him after the commencement of the action. It appears, however, that the plaintiff waived all damages for anything that had occurred after the filing of the complaint; and, the case being one in equity, the verdict of the jury was merely advisory to the court. Sweetser v. Dobbins, 65 Cal. 529, 4 Pac. Rep. 540.

The defendant's counsel makes a very strenuous argument that, in effect, the verdict, judgment, and findings, as he claims, most improperly pronounced the smoke-stack of the defendant to be a nuisance. The language of the decree or judgment upon that subject is as follows: "It is adjudged and decreed that said defendant is perpetually enjoined from allowing soot to issue from the smoke-stack on the premises," etc. The findings show that the issuance of this soot from the smoke-stack above mentioned was a nuisance of a most disagreeable character to the plaintiff and his family. We are not informed from the record but what this smoke-stack might have been used in such a way, both readily and easily, as that soot would not have issued therefrom. But, be that as it may, it is said by this court in the case of Truebner v. California St. R. Co., 66 Cal. 174, 4 Pac. Rep. 1162: "The keeping of a hotel or a restaurant is a lawful and very necessary business; * * * yet it could not be held that a person carrying on such business, or any requiring a large consumption of fuel, could erect his chimney to a height that would discharge the smoke and soot into his neighbor's windows. It is true, as argued by appellant, that persons preferring to live in the city rather than the country must accept many inconveniences,—probably all that flow naturally and necessarily from the concentration of populations; but that doctrine should not be carried too far. The law looks to a medium course to be pursued by each for the mutual benefit of all." Tested by this rule, we do not see why the plaintiff should not be restrained from so using his smoke-stack as that the soot issuing therefrom shall be prevented from being a disturbance, annoyance, and source of positive injury to the defendant and his property.

Nor could the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco grant a license to the defendant which would permit him materially to impair the plaintiff's property rights. They could and did grant the defendant a license to erect and maintain his steam-engine, but they neither could nor did license him thereby to create a nuisance. Tuebner v. California St. R. Co., supra.

Upon the whole case, the record of which, as well as briefs of counsel and authorities there cited, we have carefully examined, we are of opinion that the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; SEARLS, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

BARRY v. FERKILDSEN. (No. 9,664.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 25, 1887.)

1. NEGLIGENCE—CONTRIBUTORY—SIDEWALKS.

Plaintiff was injured by falling into a hole in the sidewalk in front of defendant's premises. The hole was used for defendant's convenience, was covered with a trap-door, but at the time of the accident was open and unguarded. The door of plaintiff's house was a few feet from the hole, but plaintiff never knew of its existence. At the time of the accident she was hurrying to school, and her attention being diverted for a moment, she did not notice the hole, and, after taking a couple of steps, fell in. Held, that the fact that her attention was momentarily distracted did not constitute contributory negligence. She had the right to assume that the sidewalk was safe.

2. SAME—BURDEN OF PROOF—NUISANCE.

The plaintiff offered no evidence to show that defendant opened the trap, or caused it to be opened, or to negative the theory that a stranger might have opened it. Held, that the act being in the nature of a nuisance, on account of the occasion for accident and injury which it continuously presented to innocent persons, the plaintiff was not under the burden of showing affirmatively that there was no intervention of a third party which contributed to the result.

3. SAME—INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR.

In such a case the fact that, a few days before the accident, defendant had a carpenter repair a plank in the wooden cover, would not enable him to shift the liability on the carpenter as an independent contractor.

4. SAME—CITY ORDINANCE—VIOLATION OF.

Under a city ordinance forbidding vaults under a sidewalk unless covered with an iron cover, this excavation and hole, being covered with a wooden cover, violated the ordinance, and were unlawful.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

F. M. Husted, for appellant. J. D. Sullivan and Horace G. Platt, for respondent.

MCFARLAND, J. Plaintiff, a girl about 19 years old, started somewhat in a hurry from her father's house about 9 o'clock in the morning of October 11, 1880, to go to school. Appellant owned the adjoining premises, and in the sidewalk in front of said premises there was a hole covered by a wooden trap—door, which appellant used for his private convenience. This hole was only a few feet from the entrance to the residence of plaintiff's father. On the morning above referred to this hole was opened, and entirely unguarded and unprotected. As plaintiff went out of the house her attention was attracted for a moment by some children playing on the street, and, not noticing the hole, after taking a couple of steps, she fell headlong into it. The hole was quite deep, and plaintiff was very seriously injured by the fall. She had been accustomed to travel over this sidewalk daily on her way to and from school, and never knew before that the hole was there. The premises are on Post street, a populous street of the city of San Francisco. The evidence did not show who had removed the trap-door from the top of the hole. The jury found a verdict in favor of plaintiff for $3,000, and defendant appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial. Appellant makes many of the points which are usually raised in actions for damages of the class to which the case at bar belongs.

In our opinion, there is nothing in the point that respondent was guilty of contributory negligence. A sidewalk of a street in a city not near a crossing may be taken by one passing over it to be a safe and not a dangerous place. In this case the respondent had a right to presume that the sidewalk was in the same condition in which she had always found it; and the fact that her attention was momentarily attracted in another direction—a thing of the most common occurrence to travelers along a street—falls far short of that contributory negligence which in law defeats an action for damages.

Most of the other points made by appellant in various forms, when grouped together, present this proposition or theory: That as respondent failed to show that appellant, or any one of his employes or servants, removed the trap-door from the hole, and did not negative the theory that a stranger might have removed it, therefore there is a want of proof of that negligence which is the gist of an action for personal damages. To this proposition there is a multitude of authorities, more or less applicable; and they are widely divergent. We think, however, that through the numerous cases upon the subject may be seen a distinction which is determinative of the case at bar. When a person pursues a business or does an act perfectly lawful in itself, and not in its nature so hazardous or so conducive to injury as to be of the character of a nuisance, then he can be held liable for injuries to others arising therefrom only when he has been guilty of negligence in his manner of carrying on the business or doing the act. But when the act is unlawful, or is in its character so hazardous as to be in the nature of a nuisance on account of the occasion for accident and injury which it continuously presents to innocent persons, then the party is liable, although the agency of a stranger may have contributed to some extent to the final catastrophe. At least, in such a case the injured party ought not to be compelled to show affirmatively that there was no intervention of a third person which contributed to the result.

Whether or not appellant had any lawful authority to maintain the excavation and trap-door at all is a somewhat doubtful question; but the weight of authority seems to be to the point that he had not. There is no evidence in the case of any custom, nor does it appear whether or not appellant had the fee to any part of the street. Judge Dillon, in his work on Municipal Corporations, states what seems to be a fair summing up of the authorities on the subject. At section 699, speaking of the right to make "openings in sidewalks," he says: "If the fee of the street is in the municipality in trust for the public uses, as it frequently is, it extends to the whole street, including the sidewalk; and the adjoining lot-owner would, it seems clear, have no right, as against the public, or the municipality charged with the control of the streets, to appropriate them to this use. * * * If the fee of the street is in the adjoining owner, as it frequently is, the question as to the rightfulness of such a use of the sidewalk may not be so plain; and yet even in this case the public right must be paramount to individual interests, and the rights of the public are not limited to a mere right of way, but extend, as we have shown, to all beneficial uses as the public good or convenience may from time to time require. * * * The correct view would seem to be that all rights of this character must come from legislative declaration, or municipal license, express or implied, from general usage." Appellant showed no right from legislative declaration, municipal license, or general usage.

But if there be any principle upon which there could be based a right of appellant to maintain the excavation and trap, in the absence of any municipal action upon the subject, that right would disappear before an ordinance of the city which was introduced in evidence by respondent. The ordinance was passed in July, 1880, and was a re-enactment of a similar ordinance passed in May, 1866. The first part of section 6 of said ordinance is as follows: "No person shall construct, or cause or suffer to be constructed, under the sidewalk adjoining any premises belonging to him, or in his possession, or under his control, any area or vault except in conformity with the following specifications." Then follows a large number of specifications which provide with particularity how such vaults and their coverings shall be constructed; no one of which does appellant show a compliance with. They provide for the use of stone, brick, and iron, and against the use of wood. In the latter part of the section it is provided as follows: "No aperture through the sidewalk into a vault shall exceed a superficial area of twenty-four square feet. Every such aperture shall be covered with an iron cover, and shall be securely closed when not in actual use." It affirmatively appears that the covering or trap-door of the vault of appellant was wooden, and that a few days before the accident he had employed a man to repair it with wooden planks. It appears, therefore—First, that appellant had no authority of law to maintain the structure; and, second, that its maintenance was in direct violation of law.

Moreover, an excavation in the sidewalk of a populous street of a city, with a movable cover, liable to be removed by any careless or mischievous passer-by, is so dangerous a pitfall as to be, in its character, of the nature of a nuisance; and, when not authorized by law, it would be a hard rule to require an innocent party injured thereby to prove that the injury was not caused in part by the act of a third person. No such rule is applicable to the facts of this case.

It appears that, a few days before the accident, appellant employed a Mr. Krone to make a few repairs to the house situated on appellant's premises, and also to repair one of the planks on the trap-door in the sidewalk,—all to cost six dollars. There is no evidence that any act or negligence of Krone contributed to the accident; but appellant, assuming, we suppose, that Krone's negligence might have so contributed, invokes the principle that the owner of premises is not responsible for the negligence of an independent contractor. But, if such a trivial contract could bring that principle into action in any case, it would not, under the views herein expressed, be a defense in the case at bar.

Appellant's specific objections to the refusal of the court to grant a nonsuit, and to the giving and refusing of certain instructions to the jury, simply raise in various forms the questions above discussed. We think that the nonsuit was properly denied, and that the case was correctly and fairly given to the jury.

There was no error in the instruction that "plaintiff, if entitled to a verdict, is entitled to damages for her pain and suffering, both bodily and mental."

Judgment and order affirmed.

LINDALL v. BODE. (No. 6,676.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 25, 1887.)

NEGLIGENCE—BURDEN OF PROOF—INSTRUCTION.

In an action by an employe to recover damages for an injury caused by the falling upon him of a bag of coffee from a pile near a pile from which he was removing bags, an instruction that "when, in the due exercise of his duties, the employe is injured through any appliances or surroundings of the business, and it does not appear that the employe was in fault, the burden is on the employer to show that he himself was free from fault," is erroneous, as it takes from the jury the consideration of the question as to whether or not the injury was caused by unavoidable accident; and in cases of this class plaintiff is bound to prove, as against the defendant, enough to show a fair presumption of negligence and of resulting injury to himself.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

Pringle & Hayne and E. F. Preston, for appellant. H. Dorsey Gough and L. Quint, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. The plaintiff was employed as a truckman in and about the warehouse of the defendant, Bode, in which, among other goods, were stored bags of coffee heaped up in large piles. While engaged, under the orders of the defendant, in removing on a truck certain bags of coffee from a pile which was of considerable height, one or more of those lying upon another pile near by fell upon the plaintiff, and drove the handle of the truck through one of his hands, lacerating the flesh and shattering some of the bones thereof. To recover damages for the injury thus sustained the plaintiff brought this action, alleging, among other things, that the negligence of the defendant in not causing the bags of coffee to be properly piled had been the proximate cause of the injury. The action was tried before a jury, who returned a verdict against the defendant, and from the judgment thereupon rendered he has appealed.

There are several grounds urged by the latter for the reversal of the judgment, but there is only one of them which we deem material, and that is the granting by the court, over the objection of the defendant, of a certain instruction to the jury on the law of the case. It is as follows: "Where, in the due exercise of his duties, the employe is injured through any appliances or surroundings of the business, and it does not appear that the employe was in fault, the burden is on the employer to show that he himself was free from fault." That instruction takes away from the jury the consideration of the question as to whether or not the injury was caused by unavoidable accident. The jury would, under it, have been justified in finding against the defendant, even if the bags of coffee had been thrown down by an earthquake, if the employe was without fault, unless the defendant had affirmatively shown in rebuttal that he was free from all blame. As well might it be said that if a brick should fall from a wall, and injure the innocent passer-by, that the owner of the building would be responsible in damages on proving that the brick fell from his building without any apparent or ascertainable cause, unless the owner could affirmatively show himself free from blame.

In cases of that class, as it seems to us, the plaintiff is bound to prove, as against the defendant, enough to show a fair presumption of negligence, and of resulting injury to himself. Shear. & R. Neg. (3d Ed.) §§ 12, 13, and cases cited. The cases cited to us by the respondent do not, as we understand them, sustain the proposition for which he contends.

The judgment should therefore be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; SEARLS, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

STEWART v. SPAULDING. (No. 9,684.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 1, 1887.)

1. PLEADING—AMENDMENT—NEW CAUSE OF ACTION.

A. and B., describing themselves as "late partners," brought an action in California against C. alone, on a judgment obtained against C. and three others in Nevada. C.'s demurrer to the complaint for non-joinder of defendants being sustained, the court allowed the filing of an amended complaint, making all the judgment defendants parties, and omitting the words "late partners;" thus bringing the suit by A. and B. individually. Held, that the amendment did not introduce a new cause of action, and its allowance was not error.

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—FOREIGN JUDGMENT—WHEN BARRED.

Although an action on a judgment obtained in another state would be barred by the statute of limitations of that state, an action may be brought thereon in California by plaintiffs, who, ever since the rendition of the judgment, have been residents of California, against defendants, who have been out of that state, except for two or three weeks in each year, until the commencement of the action, as such a case is within the exception of Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 361.¹

3. PARTIES—SUBSTITUTION—ASSIGNEE IN INSOLVENCY.

Where, pending an action in California by several plaintiffs, one of them becomes insolvent, his assignee need not be substituted in his stead as a party to the action.

4. JUDGMENT—EFFECT—VALIDITY.

Where a judgment in Nevada is rendered against A. and the other defendants, and directs that it may be enforced against the joint property of all of the defendants, and against the separate property of A., in an action thereon in California, it cannot be considered void as to A.

5. SAME—SUIT UPON—EVIDENCE—VARIANCE.

Where an action is brought by a partnership in Nevada, and, pending suit, the firm is dissolved, and an individual judgment rendered against the defendants in plaintiffs' favor, in an action in California on such judgment the judgment roll in the Nevada case may be introduced in evidence, and there will be no variance between the evidence and the pleadings.

6. INTEREST—JUDGMENT—AMOUNT STIPULATED IN.

Where a judgment rendered in Nevada provides that a part of the amount shall bear interest at 7 per cent., but is silent as to the balance, and without such restriction the whole amount would have borne 10 per cent., in an action in California on such judgment it is not harmful error to allow interest at 7 per cent. on the whole amount of the judgment.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

Wm. R. Davis and Wm. Lair Hill, for appellant. T. M. Osment, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. Suit was brought by the plaintiffs, describing themselves as late partners, against A. L. Sherman alone, upon a judgment recovered in the state of Nevada against Sherman and three others. This complaint was demurred to on various grounds, one of which was, non-joinder of the other defendants in the Nevada judgment. The demurrer was sustained, and the plaintiff amended, making all the judgment debtors parties, and omitting the designation of plaintiffs as "late partners." In other words, they sued simply as individuals, setting up, however, the same judgment as before. No other defendant was served. Sherman moved to have the amended complaint stricken from the files on the ground that it was not an amendment, but an entirely different cause of action. The court denied the motion, and we think correctly. In one sense it was a different cause of action, but plainly the same judgment was attempted to be set up in each complaint, and the same relief demanded upon the same facts, which were only stated in a different legal aspect.

¹As to the running of the statute of limitations in favor of a non-resident, or one absent from the state, see Wood v. Bissell, (Ind.) 9 N. E. Rep. 425, and note.

As to its effect upon a cause of action accruing in another state, see First Nat. Bank v. Thomas, (Ky.) 3 S. W. Rep. 12, and note.

The action is not barred by the statute of limitations. True, no action can be maintained upon the judgment in Nevada; but the plaintiffs have resided in this state ever since the rendition of that judgment; and as they have been citizens of this state, and have held the cause of action from the time it accrued, they come within the exception of section 361, Code Civil Proc. The defendant had been out of the state, except for two or three weeks in each year, until the commencement of the action.

After the commencement of this suit, one of the plaintiffs went into insolvency, and an assignee was appointed. It is claimed that the assignee should have been substituted. This objection is answered by section 385, Code Civil Proc. Section 18 of the insolvency law (St. 1880, p. 87) does not conflict with this provision.

The judgment roll in the Nevada judgment shows that the complaint in that action described the plaintiffs as partners. The findings and judgment are merely in favor of plaintiff individually. It is claimed that this was a partnership judgment, its character in that respect being determined by the pleadings; that the judgment pleaded in this case is an individual judgment, and therefore it was not admissible because of the variance. It appears that during the pendency of the suit in Nevada the partnership was dissolved. This is probably why the individual judgment was entered. But, whether that judgment was regular or not, it was not void for that reason, and there is no variance. If there were a variance, however, in that respect, it is difficult to see how the defendant has suffered injury by it. That judgment was against all the defendants, and directs that it may be enforced against the joint property of all the defendants, and against the separate property of Sherman. This judgment was not void as to Sherman. Tay v. Hawley, 39 Cal. 94.

We do not think there was harmful error in the computation of interest on the judgment. The judgment directed that a portion of the amount recovered should bear interest at the rate of 7 per cent. The judgment is silent as to whether the balance of the judgment shall bear interest. If the judgment had been entirely silent as to interest, still interest by the law of Nevada would have accrued upon the whole amount. Here was a special provision in the judgment that a portion should bear a specified interest. The remainder would bear the interest under the statute. The interest, as actually computed, is less than the statute rate.

Judgment and order affirmed.

PHELAN v. DUNNE. (No. 9,532.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 21, 1887.)

PARTIES—MUNICIPAL ASSESSMENTS—ACTION FOR—DECEASED OWNER—EXECUTORS.

Under act of April 1, 1872, of California, providing that actions to enforce street assessments shall be brought against the owners, or parties in possession claiming to be the owners, of the lots fronting on the street improved, such an action may be brought against a devisee of the fee of such a lot to enforce an assessment made after his testator's death for work contracted for before his death, without joining his executors as parties, although his estate has not been finally settled, where it is shown there is sufficient personalty to pay all debts and claims, without resorting to the land.

Department 1.

Action to enforce a street assessment in San Francisco, brought against a devisee of a lot, without making the executors parties, pending the settlement of testator's estate.

Wm. Matthews, for defendant and appellant. J. C. Bates, for plaintiff and respondent.

PATERSON, J. The executors of the last will and testament of James Dunne, deceased, are not necessary parties in this action. It is true, the resolution of intention to improve the street in front of the property described in the complaint was passed by the board of supervisors, and the contract for the work let to plaintiff prior to the death of said James Dunne, but the assessment was not made until after his death, and it is admitted in the answer that defendant is the owner of the property; the same having been devised to him by his father, said James Dunne. A. J. and E. T. Donnelly were named in the will as executors, and duly qualified as such, and ever since have been and are now in the possession of the lands affected by the street-assessment lien.

It is claimed by appellant that the administration of the estate of James Dunne, deceased, being still open, and no decree of distribution having been made, the executors should be made parties defendant, and the amount due by virtue of the assessment lien collected of them in due course of administration. There is nothing to show, however, that the debts have not all been paid, the family allowances provided for, or that there is not an abundant amount of personal property out of which all debts and expenses of administration can be paid, if there be any such debts or expenses remaining. It was said by Mr. Justice TEMPLE, in Brenham v. Story, 39 Cal. 188, that "upon the death of the ancestor the heir becomes vested at once with the full property, subject to the liens we have mentioned;" i. e., debts, expenses of administration, and family allowance.

In support of his proposition that the executors are necessary parties defendant, appellant cites Hancock v. Bowman, 49 Cal. 413, and People v. Doe, 48 Cal. 561. The decisions in those cases were based upon the provisions of section 13 of the act of April 4, 1870, which required the action to be brought "against the owners and all persons having an interest therein." St. 1869-70, p. 898. But by an act approved April 1, 1872, and apparently to avoid the necessity of making all parties having an interest in the property defendants in the action, it was provided (section 13) that the action might be brought against the owner of the land; and section 17 of the act provides that "the person owning the fee, or the person in the possession of lands, lots, or portions of lots or buildings under the claim of ownership, or exercising acts of ownership over the same for himself, or as the administrator or guardian of the owner or the person in whom on the day the action commenced appears the legal title to the lands by deeds recorded in the recorder's office in the city and county of San Francisco, shall be regarded, treated, and deemed to be the owner (for the purpose of this law) according to the meaning and intent of that word as used in this act."

It may be that, under these provisions, persons other than the heirs and devisees are proper parties to the action, and that their rights cannot be foreclosed unless they are made defendants; but as to that we express no opinion. It is sufficient to say that the defendant is the owner in fee; that he is the only necessary party; and that plaintiff is entitled, under this act, to a decree of foreclosure, whatever may be the rights of other parties interested who are not joined as defendants. Parker v. Bernal, 66 Cal. 113, 4 Pac. Rep. 1090.

Judgment affirmed.

PHELAN and others v. POYORENO and others. (No. 11,373.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 25, 1887.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS—MEXICAN GRANT—VALIDITY—PATENT.

Where, before the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, whereby the public domain of California was ceded to the United States, a perfect conveyance was made of land by the Mexican government, it cannot be defeated by the subsequent action of the board of commissioners organized under the act of congress of March 3, 1851, for the purpose of determining the validity of claims to land in California, or by the subsequent patent from the United States.

2. SAME—CHAIN OF TITLE.

A record containing the petition, with a diseno, an order of reference, an informe by the proper officer, a decree of concession, a titulo, the approval of the departmental assembly, the order for survey and juridical possession, with the report of the proper officer that such survey was made and possession given, presents every link essential to a chain of title under the Mexican law.

3. SAME—NAME OF GRANTEE.

In the petition for the land the petitioner, Juan Crispin Perez, is twice called "Juan Perez," but in the decree of the governor, in the titulo or patent, and subsequent proceedings, he is called "Juan Crispin Perez," with such reference to the petition and preceding document that there can be no doubt as to his identity. Held that, as the identity of the petitioner sufficiently appears, the variance is immaterial.

4. SAME—DESCRIPTION.

A grant in which the property is described as "the lands known as 'Paso de Bartolo Viejo'" is sufficient, if the land is known and can be identified by the name given.

THORNTON, J., dissenting.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Gardiner & Stephenson, for appellants. Bicknell & White, for respondents.

SEARLS, C. This is an action to quiet title to a tract of land, parcel of the Rancho Paso de Bartolo Viejo, in the county of Los Angeles. Plaintiffs had judgment, from which, and from an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal.

Defendants claim (1) title to an undivided one-tenth part of the premises; and (2) an easement or right of way over the land for a water ditch, designated as the Banta ditch, and the right to conduct water through the same for irrigation and other purposes.

The plaintiffs claim the land in controversy through sundry mesne conveyances, from Pio Pico and Juan Perez, to whom it was granted by patent, on the fifth day of August, 1881, by the government of the United States. The recitals in the patent show that the claim of the patentees is "founded on a Mexican grant to Juan Crispin Perez, made on the twelfth day of June, A. D. 1835, by Jose Figueroa, then governor of Upper California, and approved by the departmental assembly the twenty-ninth day of August, A. D. 1839." The patent was issued upon petition to the board of land commissioners, made after the death of Juan Crispin Perez. Defendants' predecessor, one of the heirs of the said Perez, did not join in said petition, was not before said board, and did not submit herself to its jurisdiction, but relies upon the Mexican grant as giving a complete, indefeasible, definitive title in fee to the Mexican grantee, who was her father. In other words, the contention of defendants is that Juan Crispin Perez, their predecessor, had a perfect title in fee, derived from the Mexican government, to the property in controversy, and that as his heir, Maria Antonio Romero, under whom they claim, was owner of one-tenth thereof.

For the purpose of sustaining this contention on their part, defendants, after the plaintiffs had introduced the patent hereinbefore referred to in evidence, and deduced title thereunder in themselves, offered in evidence the Mexican expediente, showing a grant from Gov. Figueroa, approval of departmental assembly, also the juridical possession of Juan Crispin Perez; to each of which plaintiffs objected on the following grounds: "That the expediente purported to show the proceedings anterior to said patent which conveyed the legal title; that such offer is incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial; and that said patent is conclusive in this case." To the offer in evidence of a certified copy of the evidence of juridical possession of said ranchito by Perez, the further objection was made that there is no allegation in the answer setting up a trust in the plaintiffs. The objections were sustained by the court, and the proffered evidence excluded. Like rulings were made upon the offers of defendants to show title in themselves to one-tenth of the ranchito under Juan Crispin Perez, and these rulings are severally assigned as error.

The proposition of appellants is that the land in question was originally the property of and subject to disposition of the Mexican government; that prior to the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, whereby the public domain of California was ceded to the United States, the land in question was conveyed to, and the title vested in, Juan Crispin Perez, under whom they claim title; and that, a perfect title having thus vested in their grantor, it was not defeated by the subsequent action of the board of commissioners, organized under the act of congress of March 3, 1851, for the purpose of determining the validity of claims to land in California, or by the subsequent patent from the United States to plaintiffs' grantors.

Upon the main proposition, as presented, we are relieved from discussion by the previous rulings of this court.

In Minturn v. Brower, 24 Cal. 644, Justice CUREY, in an able and exhaustive opinion, concurred in by the court, held, in substance: (1) That Mexicans who, previous to the acquisition of California by the United States, had acquired from the governments of either Spain or Mexico, a perfect title to lands in California, and who chose to remain in the acquired territory, were by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo protected in the ownership and enjoyment of their lands the same as though no change of sovereignty had occurred; (2) that persons whose titles to lands were perfect at the time of the acquisition of California by the United States were not compelled to submit them for confirmation to the board of commissioners appointed under the act of congress of March 3, 1851, nor did they forfeit their lands by a failure to present them to such board for confirmation, and that the titles thus vested may be asserted and maintained like other perfect titles in the courts of the country; (3) that holders of titles to lands in the ceded territory, which were perfect at the date of the treaty, could, if they so elected, present them to the commission for confirmation, but were not bound to do so. See, also, De Arguello v. Greer, 26 Cal. 627; Miller v. Dale, 44 Cal. 577; Seale v. Ford, 29 Cal. 107; Steinbach v. Moore, 30 Cal. 507; Stevenson v. Bennett, 35 Cal. 431; Hale v. Akers, 10 Pac. Rep. 385; Teschmacher v. Thompson, 18 Cal. 27; Es-trada v. Murphy, 19 Cal. 248; Beard v. Federy, 3 Wall. 478.

Assuming then, as we do, that, upon both principle and authority, the position of appellants is tenable, it only remains to determine whether the proffered evidence was of such a character as to vest in Juan Crispin Perez the legal title to the Rancho Paso de Bartolo Viejo, by grant from the Mexican government.

Turning to the several documents offered as establishing a grant from the Mexican government, we find a petition indorsed "Expediente concerning the place Paso de Bartolo Viejo, asked for his occupation and benefit by Juan Crispin Perez." The petition is addressed to the superior political chief; is dated pueblo of Los Angeles, September 21, 1833. It then proceeds to say that Juan Perez, of Los Angeles, is the owner of stock, and, having no land, solicits a tract extending from "the pass of Bartolo Viejo to La Canada Verde, and from thence to that of the Puerta that enters into the principal road of San Gabriel, and from thence to the dam of said mission."

He recites that a portion of the land is within the boundaries of the mission, but that that community has conceded it to him, in order that he may ask a grant, except a portion which belongs to the Senores Nieto, etc., and says he will present a map of the land as soon as possible, and is signed by Andreas Pico, "at the request of Juan Perez, who cannot write."

On the margin of the petition is a decree signed by Figueroa, the superior political chief, and Augustin V. Zamorano, secretary, referring the petition to the ayuntamiento of the pueblo of Los Angeles for an examination as to the qualifications of the applicant, the character and location of the land, etc., and requiring also that the expediente be sent to the priest of the mission of San Gabriel for his report. The reports were received in due time, and thereafter the matter was referred to the constitutional alcalde of Los Angeles, for a further and more specific report as to the citizenship of the applicant, his conduct, family, etc., and as to the ownership of the land, etc. Upon the coming in of this and some other reports, favorable to the applicant, a decree was made by the governor, reciting the several steps taken, and declaring Juan Crispin Perez the owner in fee-simple (under the conditions mentioned) of the lands known by the name of Paso de Bartolo Viejo, and describing them as in the petition. Then follows the grant of the same date, (June 12, 1835,) attested by the governor and secretary, by which the land is conveyed to Juan Crispin Perez, subject to the approval of the territorial assembly, on condition that he shall, within one year, build a house thereon, and inhabit it, etc. It also provides that, when the ownership is confirmed to him, he shall petition the respective judge to give him juridical possession, whereby the boundaries shall be marked off and land-marks placed; and further provides that, if the grantee shall violate the conditions of the grant, he shall lose his right to the land, and the same may be denounced by another.

On the twenty-ninth day of August, 1839, the departmental assembly approved the concession, and ordered the expediente to be transmitted to the political chief for his determination. Juridical possession of the land was given to the grantee by order of the governor, by Manuel Dominguez, first justice of the peace and judge first instance of Los Angeles, on the thirtieth day of April, 1842. According to the return made by the justice, a measurement of the land was made, the boundaries marked, land-marks placed, etc. The record presents every link essential in a chain of title under the Mexican law,—the petition, with a diseno, an order of reference, an informe by the proper officer, a decree of concession, a titulo, the approval of the departmental assembly, the order for survey and juridical possession, with the report of the proper officer that such survey was made and possession given.

It is objected by respondents:

1. That the petition is by Juan Perez, (not Juan Crispin Perez.) Referring to the expediente, and we find, as before quoted, that the application is by Juan Crispin Perez, for the "place Paso de Bartolo Viejo." In the petition following, and in some of the subsequent proceedings, he is described as Juan Perez, but in the decree of the governor, the titulo or patent, and subsequent proceedings, he is named as Juan Crispin Perez, with such reference to the petition and former documents that no doubt can be entertained as to his identity. As his middle name is not essential to the validity of the proceedings, and can only be of importance in identifying him, and as that end is reached, we are of opinion the objection is not well taken.

2. It is further objected that the description is defective. In the decree by the governor of June 12, 1835, "Juan Crispin Perez is declared, under the conditions herein mentioned, the owner in fee-simple of the lands known by the name of Paso de Bartolo Viejo, joining on the old road of Santa Gertrudes, a rancho of that name, the river and Mission of San Gabriel, by the hills on the north-east and the hills of Canada Verde," and the same description is carried into the patent, where the tract is described as "the lands known as 'Paso Bartolo Viejo,'" etc. A description of a tract of land by name is sufficient, if it is known and can be identified by such name. U. S. v. Moreno, 1 Wall. 400; People v. Leet, 23 Cal. 162. In Castro v. Gill, 5 Cal. 42, it was said: "The declaration describes the land by a certain name, and this is as good a description as one by metes and bounds, if it can be rendered sufficiently certain by the evidence." A conveyance of land by known designation, without specifying boundaries, is good. U. S. v. Sutherland, 19 How. 363; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 286.

It follows that if we discard from the expediente all that is contained therein of description, except the name, "the lands known as 'Paso Bartolo Viejo,'" or, as it appears in the decree, "the lands known by the name of 'Paso de Bartolo Viejo,' " the grant is yet not void for uncertainty. It was therefore properly admissible in evidence, as against the objection made. Had it been objected to for want of proofs showing that the name of the *ranch*o was so well known that from it the boundaries could be defined, quite a different question would arise; but the objection to the evidence was based upon the ground that the expediente purported to show proceedings anterior to the patent under which plaintiffs held, and was therefore immaterial, etc. Had the objection been made that the expediente was not sufficient without further evidence to establish the fact that from it the extent and boundaries of the land could be determined, non constat but that such evidence would have been furnished.

The other technical objections to the expediente were not made in the court below, and need not be considered. We are of opinion that the refusal of the court to admit the documentary evidence offered by defendants was error.

Upon the points made by appellants, in reference to the findings and rulings of the court upon the questions of the right of way, easement, and license of defendants for a water ditch, we need only say that the evidence was conflicting, and the findings should not be disturbed.

For the error indicated, the judgment and order appealed from should be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

BOTTILLER v. DOMINGUEZ. (No. 11,336.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 26, 1887.)

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

H. K. S. O'Melveney, for appellant. Howard & Roberts and A. L. Rhodes, for respondent.

BY THE COURT. This is an appeal from a judgment on a verdict rendered in the superior court of Los Angeles county, in an action of ejectment. The plaintiff claims title to the lands in controversy as daughter and heir at law of Apolonio Dominguez, deceased, who acquired title to the premises by mesne conveyances from Nemesio Dominguez, one of the grantees of the Mexican grant of "Las Virgenes," situate in Los Angeles county. The grant was not presented to the board of United States land commissioners, and the questions presented are not materially different from those which were passed upon in Phelan v. Poyoreno, ante, 681, and for the reasons given in the opinion filed in that case the judgment and order appealed from in this case are affirmed.

GREEN and others v. CAROTTO and others. (No. 9,570.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 27, 1887.)

1. RIPARIAN RIGHTS—ARTIFICIAL CHANNEL.

The owner of lands upon which there was a lagoon, from which there was no natural outlet, cut a ditch for irrigating purposes. Thereafter he conveyed part of the land upon which the lagoon was situated to the defendants. He conveyed the remainder of his lands to the plaintiffs. The irrigating ditch ran between the different tracts conveyed. By parol permission of their grantor, (the defendants,) the plaintiffs had used the waste waters of the ditch. Held, that the water never having flowed in any natural channel, the plaintiffs never acquired any riparian rights in the flow of water in the ditch.

2. APPEAL—REVIEW ON—QUESTIONS NOT RAISED BELOW.

The supreme court of California will not consider a claim made in argument on appeal which the appellant has not made in his pleadings.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Appeal from superior court, San Benito county.

Swope, the witness referred to in the opinion, was grantor of plaintiffs, and was permitted to testify that he sold plaintiffs only the waste water, over plaintiffs' objection that his testimony was inadmissible, as being parol evidence offered to vary the terms of their deed.

B. McCroskey and T. H. Laine, for appellants. Briggs & Hawkins and S. F. Leib, for respondents.

FOOTE, C. This action was brought by Green and wife for the purpose of perpetually enjoining Carrotto and others from disturbing what the former alleged to be the natural flow of a stream of water, and for damages for such disturbance. The defendants denied all the material allegations in the complaint, and asserted, among other things, that there was no stream flowing in a natural channel to and through plaintiffs' land; and, even granting there had been such a stream, that they were entitled to its waters by a prior appropriation thereof; and that such appropriation had been adverse and continuous for more than 10 years prior to the filing of the complaint in the action; and that the plaintiffs were estopped by standing by, without remonstrance, and permitting the defendants for more than five years to use all the water in dispute, and to expend large sums of money in improving their land for irrigation by means of said waters, and by other acts of estoppel in pais.

From the findings which were made on all the material issues contained in the pleadings, and are supported, by the evidence, (although conflicting,) it appears, inter alia, that there never was in fact any stream of water flowing in a natural channel where the plaintiffs claimed; that originally the water in dispute was contained in a lagoon or lake fed by springs located on the land of the defendants, from which no natural stream or outlet flowed or existed; that, for purposes of drainage and irrigation, a former owner of both the plaintiffs' and defendants' lands had cut a ditch over that part of his then premises now owned by the defendants more than ten years before this action was brought, and that he and the defendants, as his successors, had continuously used all the water which flowed from said lagoon through said ditch, except such as they wasted as their own, and adversely to the whole world, and without any adverse claim set up against them for more than 10 years prior to the bringing of this action; that said ditch ran down the border of the plaintiffs' lands, and that by leave of the defendants and their predecessors in interest, not in writing, the plaintiffs had used the "waste water" of said ditch, but had no further right or claim therein; that the plaintiffs' right to maintain their action, and each cause thereof, as by them stated, was barred by the provisions of sections 318, 319, Code Civil Proc.

To us it seems that the defendants and their predecessors owned the water in dispute as absolutely as if it had been drawn from a well located on their land, and overflowing the same or not at their election, and that the plaintiffs never acquired any riparian right to the water, because it never flowed to or over their land in any natural channel whatsoever; that the only water which came to them was "waste water," which they got through the revocable license of the defendants and their predecessors in interest. Such being the case, it is not material whether the admission of a part of the evidence of the witness Swope was in the nature of parol evidence to vary a written instrument or not, for the reason that, since the evidence showed that no natural stream of water ever flowed to or through the plaintiffs' land, it could make no difference what were the terms of their deed, whether they would have carried the title to the waters of such a stream had it existed, or the contrary. The plaintiffs in argument claim some right in what they term the "artificial channel" of the stream, but they made no such claim in their pleading, and cannot now be heard to do so.

Upon the whole case, it appears to us that the record discloses no prejudicial error, and that the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; SEARLS, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, judgment and order affirmed.

HOPKINS v. WIARD. (No. 11,850.

(Supreme Court of California, April 25, 1887.)

1. MORTGAGE—FORECLOSURE—DECREE—PARCELS.

Where a mortgage is given over adjoining tracts of land, it is within the jurisdiction of the court, in a proper case, to direct the lands to be sold as a whole, and in one parcel.

2. SAME—ESTOPPEL—APPROVAL OF COUNSEL.

Where a decree of foreclosure, which directs the several tracts mortgaged to be sold as a whole, has been submitted to the defendant's counsel before signing, and he has indorsed his approval thereon, the defendant cannot afterwards complain of the sale of the lands in one parcel.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county.

Action to foreclose a mortgage of several adjoining tracts of land in the county of Alameda. The court ordered "that the said lands and premises be sold as a whole, and in one parcel," and the sheriff executed the decree as directed. On motion of the defendant, Laura E. French, the sale was set aside. The plaintiff and the purchaser at the sale appeal.

Jarboe, Harrison & Goodfellow and James Mee, for appellants. C. M. Jennings, for respondents.

SHARPSTEIN, J. This is an appeal from an order setting aside a sale, made by virtue of a judgment and order of sale in an action to foreclose a mortgage executed by the defendant to the plaintiff. There is nothing in the record which tends in any degree to impeach the fairness of the sale; and it appears that the purchaser paid to the sheriff the sum bid for the premises, and that the sheriff paid it to the plaintiff. Respondents' counsel say that the "decree is satisfied of record; its authority is dead; it is not now a lien upon said premises." This is claimed to result from the sale which has been set aside. The plaintiff was entitled to have the incumbered property sold. The court was authorized to direct a sale of it. Code Civil Proc. 726. The judgment contains a direction "that the said lands and premises be sold as a whole, and in one parcel." The premises were so offered for sale and sold as a whole, and in one parcel, although the sheriff was requested by respondents to sell in separate parcels.

The principal contention of the respondents is that "the order inadvertently made by the court in the decree, directing that the premises be sold in one parcel, was erroneous and void, and no act of the sheriff in selling them or otherwise could legalize the same; and, although the sheriff may have followed such (supposed) directions, the same, nevertheless, being illegal, because founded on an illegal decree, will be set aside, and in this case was properly set aside upon motion."

There is nothing in the record to indicate that the court inadvertently decreed "that the premises be sold in one parcel." It does appear that the decree was shown to the defendant's attorney before it was signed by the judge, and that said attorney wrote upon the margin of it, "This decree is satisfactory," and signed the same as the attorney of E. Wiard, defendant. It further appears that the decree was so submitted to defendant's counsel by direction of the judge. If the defendant's attorney did not carefully examine the several clauses of the decree before indorsing on it his satisfaction, the fault was his own, as it appears from his own affidavit that he was given an opportunity to examine it, and was told that the judge desired he should.

The main contention of respondents is that the court exceeded its jurisdiction in ordering that the premises be sold as a whole, and in one parcel. The Code provides that "in such action the court may, by its judgment, direct a sale of the incumbered property," but is silent as to the mode of sale. The provisions of the Code in this respect are not materially different from those of the late practice act. And in Heyman v. Babcock, 30 Cal. 367, the court said: "No express provision is found in the practice act providing the mode of making sale of the mortgaged premises under a decree of foreclosure." In the absence of any provision prescribing the mode, we think the court might, under its power to direct the sale, direct how it should be made. Such appears to have been the opinion of Justice SANDERSON, who, in a concurring opinion in Heyman v. Babcock, supra, said: "If the judgment contains specific directions, they must be followed by the officer." In Babcock v. Perry, 8 Wis. 277, the court reversed an order similar to that now before us. One of the grounds upon which it was contended that the order setting aside the sale was not erroneous was that "the premises were sold together, and not in parcels." In answer to that the court said: "It is to be observed that the sheriff, as well as the party, was bound to pursue the order of the court in making the sale, and that order was that the premises should be sold together." In Langsdale v. Mills, 32 Ind. 380, the court said: "The question is not what the decree ought to have been, but what it is. While it remains in its present form, any sale made under it, not authorized by its terms, cannot stand."

It was within the jurisdiction of the court to direct by its judgment that the property should be sold in one or several parcels, and the officer making the sale was bound to follow the directions contained in the judgment. The judgment was not void, and if erroneous its terms could not be disregarded by the officer charged with the execution of it. But it has not been shown to be even erroneous. Whether it was or not depends upon the facts before the court when the decree was made. Before signing the decree, the court directed that it be submitted to defendant's attorney, and it was so submitted to him, and he indorsed on it that it was satisfactory. The decree was what both parties agreed it should be, and, as was said in Smith v. Randall, 6 Cal. 47: "To set aside the sale on this ground, under the circumstances, would be to allow a party to take advantage of his own deceit or negligence." The sale of the premises in gross was occasioned by the direction in the decree that it should be so sold. And the court had evidence before it that the decree was satisfactory to both the mortgagor and the mortgagee. As was said in Cord v. Southwell, 15 Wis. 211: "There is no error apparent on the face of the judgment. It was not necessary, in order to justify the directions as to the manner of selling the mortgaged premises, that a foundation should be laid in the pleadings. The court might make them upon facts shown at the hearing or by consent of parties."

We fail to discover any sufficient ground for setting aside the sale. In Morice v. Bishop of Durham, 11 Ves. 57, Lord ELDON said: "The only case in which biddings should be reopened was when there was some fraud or misconduct in the purchaser, or fraudulent negligence in another person of which it would be against conscience that the purchaser should take advantage." The rule undoubtedly is to consider every fair sale as final. "Upon an application for a resale, the rights of the purchaser will be taken into account, and will prevail when the sale has been fair and free from fraud, or other circumstances which give an undoubted right to have it set aside." 2 Jones, Mortg. § 1673.

Order appealed from reversed.

We concur: MCFARLAND, J.; PATERSON, J.

THORNTON, J. I concur in the judgment. The portion of the judgment of the court below directing the property mortgaged to be sold as one tract is not void. The court had power to render such judgment. The sheriff made the sale in one tract in conformity with the judgment, which, or the material parts thereof, the writ must have recited. Code Civil Proc. § 684. The court, in setting aside the sale, made no change in the judgment. The motion to set aside the sale was made on the ground that the property was sold as one tract. As the judgment remains unchanged, the process which issues to the sheriff compelling him to sell must follow the judgment, and the sale must be made of the property as one tract, as it was before. The sale must be in conformity with the judgment, under a writ reciting the judgment, or the material parts thereof. Code Civil Proc. § 684. As long as the judgment remains as it is, I am of the opinion the sale must stand, and therefore concur in the reversal of the order.

MOORE v. CAMPBELL. (No. 9,668.)
(Supreme Court of California. April 25, 1887.)

1. EVIDENCE—DOCUMENTARY—RELEVANCY.

In an action for damages for breach of contract, letters written by plaintiff between the time of the alleged breach and the commencement of the action, tending to show that nothing was then claimed by him as due from defendant, are relevant and admissible.

2. APPEAL—REVIEW ON—QUESTION NOT RAISED BELOW.

Where the court holds that the plaintiff's claim has been satisfied, the plaintiff cannot, on appeal from an order denying his motion for a new trial, object that such finding was not within the issues raised by defendant's pleadings, without raising that point in the court below.

3. SAME—WAIVER OF OBJECTION.

Where the case has been tried on the answer without objection to its sufficiency, and the findings and decision are justified by the evidence, a new trial will not be granted on the ground that the judgment decides issues not raised by the answer.

Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

Geo. B. Merrill, for appellant. Clunie & Young, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This is an action to recover damages in the sum of $3,000 for breach of contract. It is alleged in the complaint that in the month of May, 1879, the plaintiff and defendant entered into an agreement by which plaintiff was to render services to defendant, as his agent and business manager, for the period of one year, from and after the ninth day of June, 1879, for the sum of $3,000, and all his personal living expenses to be paid and met by defendant; that on the ninth day of June, 1879, in pursuance of the agreement, plaintiff sailed with defendant for the city of Honolulu, and that, having arrived there, he held himself subject to the orders of defendant, under his said agreement, and demanded of defendant to designate what services he should render, but defendant refused to designate any labor or services to be performed by plaintiff, and on the sixth day of July following informed him that he would not fulfill the contract, and directed him to take the first steamer for San Francisco, with which request he then and there complied; that defendant paid him on account for his services the sum of $800, and that his personal living expenses after the sixth day of July amounted to $800. The answer denies all the material allegations of the complaint, and denies that defendant "is indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $3,000, or in any other sum whatever, upon an agreement, or for anything." It then alleges that defendant took plaintiff to Honolulu as an act of kindness, and there gave him some employment, and "paid him in full for said work after his services were rendered; and that in no other way has plaintiff ever served defendant, and all work or services ever done for defendant by plaintiff have been paid for in full by defendant."

The court found that the agreement was made and broken as set forth in the complaint, and also that defendant paid plaintiff $800 and two passenger tickets from Honolulu to San Francisco, "which said sum of money and tickets the plaintiff received in full satisfaction of all demands against defendant by reason of the breach of said contract by defendant as aforesaid." Judgment was then entered in favor of defendant. The plaintiff moved for a new trial, and the appeal is from the order denying his motion.

Two letters written by the plaintiff were offered in evidence by the defendant, and were objected to as irrelevant and immaterial. The objections, we think, were properly overruled. The letters were written between the time of the alleged breach and the commencement of the action, and tended strongly to show that nothing was then claimed by plaintiff to be due him from defendant, and they were therefore relevant and material to the matter in hand.

It is further objected that the finding that plaintiff's claim was fully paid and satisfied was not within the issue tendered by the defendant's answer. The point does not appear to have been made in the court below, and we think it should not be sustained here.

The answer might have been, and perhaps should have been, amended at the trial, but as the case was tried upon it without objection as to its sufficiency, and the findings and decision were justified by the evidence, the order refusing a new trial should now, we think, be affirmed.

I concur: FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, order affirmed.

HEFFLON v. BOWERS. (No. 12,070.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 27, 1887.)

1. INJUNCTION—VACATING—NOTICE OF MOTION.

In California, when a defendant moves to dissolve an injunction granted on the ex parte application of plaintiff, and offers evidence to overcome plaintiff's prima facie case, especially when he relies upon the fact that since the issuance of the injunction the principal thing complained of has been abated, plaintiff is entitled to notice, and should be permitted to support with evidence the prima facie case, which was all he was required to make in the first place; as the manner of procuring a revocation of such an order is not governed by Code Civil Proc. § 937, providing that ex parte orders may be vacated without notice, but by section 532, prescribing the manner in which an order granting an injunction may be vacated. TEMPLE, J., dissenting.

2. APPEAL—RECORD—CLERK'S CERTIFICATE.

An appeal in California from an order vacating an ex parte injunction to abate a nuisance, on motion of defendant, without notice to plaintiff, will not be dismissed because the clerk's certificate fails to show what papers were used at the hearing, when the application for a revocation of the order states that the motion is made on the petition and affidavit on which the injunction was issued, and upon the appended affidavits on the part of defendant showing that no nuisance exists, and the security is insufficient, and the order of the court granting a dissolution states that upon the hearing defendant read in evidence, in addition to the papers upon which the injunction was issued, the affidavits of parties named.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county.

Deakin & Wadham, for appellant. Luce & Henderson, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. The injunction in this case was granted on the ex parte application of plaintiff, and was based upon the verified complaint and an affidavit. Thereafter the defendant presented several affidavits to the court, showing that the injurious effects complained of by plaintiff were not due, as alleged, to defects in the sewer, and that the break in the sewer which was alleged to be the principal source of the nuisance had been repaired since the issuance of the injunction. Upon these affidavits, and the complaint and affidavit of plaintiff, the court, on motion of defendant, without notice to plaintiff, and without giving him an opportunity to reply, dissolved the injunction. Respondent claims that plaintiff was not entitled to be heard on the motion to dissolve, because the injunction was issued without notice. Section 937, Code Civil Proc., upon which he relies, provides that "an order made out of court, without notice to the adverse party, may be vacated or modified without notice by the judge who made it, or may be vacated or modified on notice, in the manner in which other motions are made." The manner of procuring a revocation of the order granting an injunction, however, is prescribed in section 532, Code Civil Proc., which reads as follows: "If an injunction be granted without notice, the defendant, at any time before the trial, may apply, upon reasonable notice to the judge who granted the injunction, or to the court in which the action is brought, to dissolve or modify the same. The application may be made upon the complaint and the affidavit on which the injunction was granted, or upon affidavit on the part of the defendant, with or without the answer. If the application be made upon affidavits on the part of the defendant, but not otherwise, the plaintiff may oppose the same by affidavits or other evidence, in addition to those on which the injunction was granted."

The contention of respondent that the last clause of this section applies only in cases where the injunction has been granted after notice to the defendant cannot, we think, be maintained. There is no such limitation in the language of the section, and there is no reason for the application of the rule prescribed by section 937, where the facts are like those in the case at bar. So long as the defendant rests his right to have the order vacated or modified upon the same matters which were considered by the court in granting it, there can be no good reason for allowing the plaintiff to be heard; but when the defendant goes further, and offers evidence to overcome the plaintiff's prima facie case, and especially in cases like this, where he relies upon the fact that since the issuance of the injunction the principal thing complained of has been abated, it becomes necessary, by virtue of both the reason and the letter of the rule, that the plaintiff should be permitted to support with additional evidence the prima facie case, which is all he was required to make in the first instance. Falkinburg v. Lucy, 35 Cal. 52; Delger v. Johnson, 44 Cal. 182; Hiller v. Collins, 63 Cal. 235. Any other construction of the two sections quoted above must result in annoying repetitions of the application, upon additional affidavits in support thereof, and a trial thereof, by piece-meal, of most important matters.

The authorities cited by respondent state the general rule applicable to ex parte orders, and speak of it as applicable to orders for the dissolution of injunctions; but each one is a case in which the application for revocation of the order was based upon the showing made by the plaintiff.

In Borland v. Thornton, 12 Cal. 440, it is true the court said, in effect, that the provision especially applicable to injunctions is not inconsistent with or a limitation upon the more general language of section 937, (§ 334, Prac. Act;) but the decision in that case was made upon the ground that the injunction had been improvidently issued, on a complaint barren of all equity to support it. The defendant moved to vacate on the complaint and affidavit of plaintiff, yet the court said that, while it was competent for the judge to vacate or modify the injunction without notice, it was not the better practice, and should never be done, except when, from the urgency of the case, it was necessary to guard against serious loss, which sometimes might be occasioned by the delay incident to serving notice, "and except where the injunction has been improvidently granted upon a complaint disclosing no ground whatever for equitable relief, as in the present case."

The point made by respondent that the appeal should be dismissed because the clerk's certificate, showing what papers were used at the hearing, is not sufficient, in the absence of a certificate of the judge, or a bill of exceptions, is without merit. In his application for a revocation of the order, the defendant, by his attorneys, Messrs. Luce & Henderson, states that "the motion is made on the petition and affidavit on which the injunction was issued, and upon the appended affidavits on the part of the defendant, showing that no nuisance exists, and the security is insufficient. The order of the court granting the motion to dissolve states that, upon the hearing, the defendant read in evidence—in addition to the papers upon which the injunction was issued—the affidavits of T. L. Magee, W. W. Bowers, P. C. Remondino, and T. C. Stockton. It becomes unnecessary to say, therefore, whether the affidavits set forth in the transcript are the same that were used at the hearing. It clearly appears from the written application of defendant, and from the order of the court, that defendant did in fact use affidavits on his own behalf, "showing that no nuisance exists," and the order must have been granted upon the affidavits of the defendant, inasmuch as the papers on which the plaintiff procured the injunction establish a prima facie case for the issuance thereof. The question as to who made the affidavits is not material. They contained matters that were material, and considered by the court, and plaintiff should have been permitted to reply thereto.

The order is reversed.

We concur: MCFARLAND, J.; MCKINSTRY, J.; SHARFSTEIN, J.

TEMPLE, J., (dissenting.) This is an appeal from an order dissolving an injunction. The injunction was granted ex parte, and out of court, and was dissolved by the judge who made the order for the injunction, without notice, on motion of the defendant, and, on such motions, affidavits on the part of the defendant were read. The new affidavits tended to show that the sewer no longer constituted a nuisance, and there was urgent necessity for the immediate dissolution of the injunction to prevent great and irreparable loss to defendant. It was also shown that the security was insufficient.

The transcript contains no certificate of the judge's clerk identifying the affidavits as those which were used on the hearing of the motion to dissolve. The first order granting the injunction recites that it was made on the complaint and an affidavit. The motion to dissolve was based upon these papers, as well as the new affidavits. Unless we are prepared to overrule Nash v. Harris, 57 Cal. 243, and Baker v. Snyder, 58 Cal. 617, we cannot look at these affidavits, and cannot know that the dissolution was not granted for insufficiency of the papers upon which it was originally granted.

But if the affidavits were properly authenticated, I still think the order should be affirmed. It is said that section 937, Code Civil Proc., cannot apply to injunctions, because section 532 is a special provision covering that subject; and that, even if section 937 does include injunction orders, still they are in pari materia, and no new affidavits can be read on such ex parte application, because in section 532 it is provided that, if affidavits are used by the defendant on such application, the plaintiff may read additional affidavits in support of his original showing.

It is not necessary to give the statute this construction. Section 532 merely prescribes the practice when the dissolution is asked on notice, and a contest is inaugurated, and, of course, ex vi termini, cannot apply to a motion which is ex parte. There is no inconsistency in the two modes of procedure, and the effect of dissolving, or refusing to dissolve, with notice or without, are quite different. Where notice is given, the matter is no longer in the discretion of the court, but is final until the trial of the cause.

The only question really is whether section 937 applies to orders for injunctions at all, for, if it does, this court cannot, under pretense of construing the statute, restrict its operation. If an ex parte application may be made to dissolve, and the grounds upon which such application may be made are not limited by the statute, it would follow, as a matter of course, that such application may be based upon any matters which would justify its dissolution. But this is not an open question in this state. In Fremont v. Merced Min. Co., 9 Cal. 18, it was expressly held that a motion to dissolve an injunction, granted ex parte, could be made by the defendant without notice. The court refers to section 334 of the practice act, and which corresponds to section 937 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and held that it justified the action of the court below. The report of that case is not very full, but evidently the application to dissolve was based on affidavits.

The same ruling was made in Borland v. Thornton, 12 Cal. 440. The learned judge in that case justifies the practice only when, from the urgency of the case, it was necessary to guard against serious loss, which sometimes might be occasioned by the delay incident to giving notice. Of course, urgency which would render notice impracticable could only be made to appear by an affirmative showing.

This practice has, I believe, always prevailed in this state, as also in the state of New York, from which we have taken these two sections of the practice act. The court in the last case very properly suggests that the judge should require notice where it is practicable, and the same discretion should be exercised upon making the order for injunction in the first instance. I have never heard this practice called in question until now, and there can be no question whatever that the rule which has heretofore prevailed is much the most beneficial and reasonable. I cannot even imagine a plausible objection to it on the score of expediency. The facts in the case at bar well illustrate its usefulness and necessity. The defendant keeps a hotel, having about 150 boarders, and discharging 3,000 gallons of sewage per day. The alleged nuisance was caused by a leak in the sewer near the residence of plaintiff, and from the fact that the sewer does not extend quite far enough into tide water. From the moving papers themselves, it appears that the sewer could, by a little alteration, be used without creating a nuisance. It appears that the stoppage of the sewer for a very short time would create at the hotel an intolerable nuisance. It was shown on the motion to dissolve that the leak no longer existed, and that the sewer was extended into the sea. Of course, we must suppose that the judge was completely satisfied on these points, and that this claim that the nuisance no longer existed is absolutely true, beyond doubt.

The injunction ought not, in the first instance, to have prohibited the use of the sewer absolutely, but only while such use would create a nuisance. But it did prohibit its use altogether.

An attorney may practice law in every county in the state. How long it would have been required to give notice in this case does not appear. The attorney probably resided at San Diego. This the judge could best determine. Had he been a resident of a distant county, as we may suppose he was, to test the rule, notice could not have been given under several days, even if the time had been shortened by the judge. Under such circumstances, must the court permit the defendant's business and property to be entirely ruined by the delay in the face of the conclusive proof that the dissolution of the injunction could not possibly injure any one? The rule which has heretofore prevailed in this state, and which still obtains in other states, is, no doubt, to some extent, an innovation upon the rule formerly enforced by courts of chancery. But it should be remembered that the use of the writ of injunction as a preventive writ has been greatly extended. Formerly, chancellors were reluctant to grant the writ, except in very few cases. Rules which were sufficient for the purposes of justice under such practice would be plainly inadequate now, when any business may be unjustly interrupted by a false ex parte showing of some adversary.

I think the judge properly exercised his discretion in dissolving the injunction, and that the order ought to be affirmed.

BOON and others v. DE HAVEN. (No. 12,098.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 29, 1887.)

WITNESS—SUBPŒNA—LAND-OFFICE—MANDAMUS.

The supreme court of California will not issue a writ of mandamus to compel a judge of the superior court to issue a subpoena to a witness to appear, and testify before a register and receiver of the United States land-office, as Code Civil Proc. § 1986, subd. 3, regulating the issuing of subpoenas to a witness to appear before a commissioner appointed by a court of a foreign country or another state, does not apply to a United States land-office, located and doing business in California.

In bank.

John T. Carey, for petitioners. H. S. Smith, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is an application for a writ of mandate to compel the respondent to issue a subpoena to certain persons, commanding them to appear and testify before the register and receiver of the United States land-office at Eureka, Humboldt county, California, in a proceeding before said register and receiver involving the right of certain parties to purchase certain public lands of the United States government. And the matter to be determined is whether or not the issuance of such subpoena is an act which the law especially enjoins upon respondent as a duty resulting from his office. The public land system of the government of the United States, in substantially its present form, has been in existence since about the commencement of the present century. Registers and receivers have always been the principal agents of the government for the sale and disposition of its lands. Many millions of acres have passed through their hands. Numerous contests have been heard before them about the right, or rather the privilege, of purchasing, and they have taken the testimony of innumerable witnesses. But the government has never, during all this time, provided any compulsory process by which witnesses might be compelled to attend before such agents. Registers and receivers may administer oaths, and that is about the only one of the usual powers of a court given them. They have no power to issue a subpoena. They cannot bring a witness before them, or keep him there. A person present before them cannot be compelled to testify; or, having given his evidence in chief, he may refuse to be cross-examined. They have no marshal, bailiff, or other officer to keep order or enforce any mandate; nor has the government provided any other means by which those things may be done. No fees are provided for witnesses, and there can be no judgment for costs. Each party pays his own expenses, and procures the attendance of his own witnesses the best he may. (It is true that in certain cases, where the government is itself a party,—as where it endeavors to set aside an entry,—the interior department may provide for the expenses of its own witnesses; but that is upon the theory that each party must get his own witnesses before the land-office by persuasive means.) And this system cannot be deemed to be the result of accident or oversight. Ignorance of the compulsory methods of courts cannot be attributed to the United States government. It has its own courts in which those methods are followed. After all these years of experience, the voluntary system in its land-department must be taken as its well-considered and settled policy. And it seems to have worked reasonably well, and to the satisfaction of the government, for nearly a century. Under these circumstances, the state of California should not be held as intending to take the federal government under its guardianship, and to undertake to do for it what it has steadily declined to do for itself, unless the intention so to do has been declared in language too plain to be misunderstood.

It is contended that there is such language in subdivision 3 of section 1986 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is to be observed, in the first place, that the language of that section is not, in terms, mandatory. It merely provides that, when a subpoena is issued, it must be in a certain form, and by certain officers,—as, for instance, when the witness is required to appear before a commissioner appointed by a court of a foreign country, or of another state, etc.,—it may be issued by a judge or justice. It is, no doubt, true, however, that it is the duty of a judge to issue a subpoena under that section, in a proper case. But subdivision 3 of that section is founded clearly upon the doctrine of comity. A court of England, or of the state of New York, or a federal court in an eastern state, which compels the attendance of witnesses by compulsory process within its own jurisdiction, and would do so here if it could, finds itself powerless in California to enforce the attendance of a witness before a commissioner or other officer in this state. In such a case, California, upon the principle of comity, offers the aid of the processes of its courts to enable the foreign court to do what it would itself do if it had the power. But this principle does not apply to a United States land-office located and doing business in California. This state is not beyond the jurisdiction of the United States government. If it desires to compel the attendance of witnesses before the register and receiver here, it has ample power to do so. But it does not desire to do so. It does not require the attendance of witnesses before such officers anywhere else. The compulsory attendance of witnesses in such cases is against its settled policy. It does not ask this state for any assistance in the matter, and the use of our processes would be a mere gratuitous intrusion,—an attempt to thrust our system on a government that does not want it.

The application is denied.

1. EVIDENCE—PAROL TO EXPLAIN WRITING—USAGE OF TRADE.

In an action to recover the value of marble sold and delivered to defendant to be used in the erection of a building under a contract providing that the marble should be delivered, "finished, and ready for setting," the meaning of these words, as used by marble cutters, may be proved by testimony of competent witnesses.¹

BELCHER, C. This action was brought to recover $836.08, the alleged value of certain marble sold and delivered by plaintiff to defendants under a contract in writing. The defendants answered, and claimed in the court below that the plaintiff did not comply with the contract, and that, by reason of such non-compliance, they were damaged in the sum of $189. They also alleged and proved that, prior to the commencement of the action, they duly tendered to the plaintiff, in satisfaction of his claim, the sum of $720, and, when it was commenced, deposited in court for him the amount so tendered. The case was tried before the court, without a jury, and, findings being waived, judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff for the full amount claimed, with interest thereon, and costs. The defendants moved for a new trial, and, their motion being denied, appealed from the judgment and order.

By the contract, entered into by the parties, the plaintiff agreed "to furnish all the border and base of Belgium black marble required in the contract for the Larkin-street wing of the new city hall, number one hundred and fifty-six, according to the plans and specifications accompanying said contract," and to pay to the defendants "any damages that they may suffer by reason of any failure on his part to deliver to said parties the said border and base at his mill, in the aforesaid city, within thirty days after the date of this agreement, said work to be finished and ready for setting."

It appeared at the trial that some of the marble contracted for was not delivered within thirty days after the date of the contract, and the defendants claimed that, by reason of this failure, they suffered damage in the sum of $50. It also appeared that some of the pieces were not of the exact length required, and the ends were not squared and polished, so that they could be put in place without further labor upon them, and the defendants claimed that they were therefore not "finished and ready for setting," and that, in consequence of this failure, they suffered damage in the sum of $139. It was not definitely shown what damage, if any, was sustained by defendants by reason of the failure to deliver to them all the marble within 30 days, and the plaintiff claimed and offered some testimony to prove that the failure resulted from their fault, and not his. Whether all the pieces of marble, when delivered, were "finished and ready for setting," within the true meaning of those words, as used by marble cutters, was a question upon which testimony was introduced on both sides without objection. For the plaintiff the affirmative of the proposition was proved, and for the defendants the negative, there being a substantial conflict in the evidence.

The words were evidently used in a technical sense, and testimony was admissible as to their meaning; and, as findings were waived, the court must be presumed to have found all the facts in favor of the plaintiff. We cannot, therefore, say that the decision was not justified by the evidence.

It follows that the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; SEARLES, C.

ure of tobacco in the city and county of San Francisco, in the state of California, and intends hiring and transporting hands and laborers from the state of Virginia, to be employed in the different capacities of 'twisters,' 'job hands,' and 'prizers,' to his said place of business, the names of said hands and laborers yet unknown, it is agreed between Witcher Jones, of the first part, and such persons as shall subscribe their names to this agreement, to work in the capacity and manner aforesaid, of the second part, this —— day of ——, 1881, in manner following, to-wit: The said parties of the second part, for the consideration hereinafter mentioned, do hereby covenant and agree to and with the said Jones, by these presents, that they shall and will, during the space of two years, to commence from the first day of January, 1882, diligently and faithfully serve the said Jones, as laborers and employes in his tobacco factory, and there perform and do all the duties and requirements of whichever of the aforesaid three departments of labor they agree to perform, and therein shall, from time to time, and at all times during the said term, observe, fulfill, and keep the lawful and reasonable commands and directions of the said Witcher Jones. In consideration of which service so to be performed by the said parties of the second part, the said Jones covenants and agrees to pay and allow to said parties of the second part the following wages: To the 'twisters,' each the price per 100 pounds for work as paid by the Danville, Va., manufacturers; to the 'prizers' the sum of (9) nine dollars per week each; and to the 'job hands,' each the sum of (7) seven dollars per week. It is also agreed between the parties hereto that the said Jones shall deduct from the wages of each one of the parties of the second part the sum of one dollar ($1) per week, which amount, if the parties of the second part, or any of them, shall fail to perform this contract, and quit the employment of the said Jones before the expiration of said two years, shall be forfeited by the party or parties so doing to the said Jones, and remain in his hands; but if the said parties, or any of them, shall well and truly perform and fulfill this agreement, and remain with the said Jones the entire two years, as aforesaid, to each of those so doing said Jones shall, and hereby covenants and agrees to, refund the said amount deducted, as aforesaid, at the expiration of said two years. Said Jones further agrees to pay the proper and necessary traveling expenses of the said parties of the second part from their present place of abode to San Francisco, California, his place of business, as aforesaid."

The contract was signed and sealed by Galloway and nine other "twisters," by six "prizers," and five "job hands."

The complaint, as amended, contained 17 counts. The first, omitting the formal parts and the parts struck out on motion, is as follows: "That defendant is indebted to plaintiff in the sum of seventy-one ($71) dollars; that said indebtedness is based upon and grows out of a contract entered into between plaintiff and defendant in the town of Danville, Virginia, on the tenth day of December, 1881; that the terms and conditions of said contract are expressed in the contract, a copy of which is hereunto annexed; that, by the terms of said contract, said defendant employed said plaintiff to come from his place of abode, viz., Danville, Va., to the city and county of San Francisco, California, and to there engage in the manufacture of tobacco in the capacity of twister, viz., to twist tobacco; that, by the terms of said contract, said defendant agreed to keep said plaintiff constantly employed in the manufacture of tobacco in the capacity of twister for the period of two (2) years, viz., from the first day of January, 1882, up to and including the first day of January, 1884; that defendant, by said contract, also agreed to furnish this plaintiff with all proper and necessary traveling expenses in coming from his then place of abode, viz., from Danville, Va., to the city and county of San Francisco; that all of said traveling expenses were paid by said defendant, according to said contract, with the exception of fifteen ($15) dollars, which amount said plaintiff was forced to and did expend for necessary traveling expenses in coming from said Danville, Va., to the said city and county of San Francisco, which amount is still due and not paid from said defendant to said plaintiff; that, by the terms of said contract, the defendant agreed to pay said plaintiff the same price per hundred (100) pounds as was then paid by the manufacturers at Danville, Va., to their twistors; that the price then paid by the said manufacturers at Danville, Va., to their twistors was $2 per hundred (100) pounds, which said sum the defendant agreed, as aforesaid, to pay this plaintiff; that pursuant to said contract this plaintiff came from the town of Danville, Va., to the city and county of San Francisco; that on the first day of January, 1882, he entered the tobacco manufacturing establishment of said defendant in the capacity of twister; that he continued to work for said defendant, under said contract, and in said capacity of twister, from the first day of January, 1882, up to and including the fifteenth day of January, 1883, and twisted one hundred (100) pounds of tobacco every working day during said period of time; that on the sixteenth day of January, 1883, the said defendant, without just cause and without fault on the part of this plaintiff, discharged plaintiff from his said employment for a period of 28 working days, up to and including February 12, 1883; that this plaintiff has often, since said last-mentioned date, applied to this defendant for employment under said contract, and in the capacity of twister, but said defendant has refused, and still refuses, to give said plaintiff said employment; that said plaintiff has from the first day of January, 1882, and still is willing to observe, fulfill, and obey all lawful and reasonable commands and directions of said defendant; that said plaintiff always has been and still is willing, and has offered to said defendant, to well and truly perform and fulfill on his part all of the covenants of said contract as herein set forth; that, by the failure of said defendant to observe and keep the said covenants of said contract, plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of $71."

The remaining 16 counts are based upon claims assigned the plaintiff by his fellow-workmen, who came with him from Virginia, and are similar to the first, except as to the work done, and the respective amounts alleged to be due. The complaint concludes in these words: "Wherefore plaintiff prays judgment against said defendant for the sum of $894.70, United States gold coin; also for legal interest on said amount from the twelfth day of February, 1883, and costs of suit."

The case was tried to a jury, and there was a verdict and judgment thereon for the plaintiff for $330.

FOOTE, C. This appeal is from a judgment rendered by the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco. The appellant claims that it should be reversed—First, because, as he alleges, the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; second, for the reason, as he asserts, that the trial court did not have jurisdiction to hear and determine the cause.

Upon an examination of the complaint we are clearly of opinion that it stated a sufficient cause of action.

The precise question involved in the appellant's second contention has been heretofore determined by this court in Bailey v. Sloan, 65 Cal. 388, 4 Pac. Rep. 349, when it was said: "The demand, according to the ad damnum clause of the complaint, exclusive of interest, exceeds $300. The ad damnum clause of the complaint is the test of jurisdiction."

The judgment appealed from should be affirmed.

SHARPSTEIN, J. The order under which the petitioner is now imprisoned is the one which was held to be valid in an opinion filed January 28, 1887, (12 Pac. Rep. 794.) Since then petitioner has paid the sums which he was ordered to pay to the reporter and sheriff, but not that which he was ordered to pay to the attorney named in the order. HART v. KIMBALL and another. (No. 11,787.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 18, 1887.)

1. LACHES—RESCISSION—FRAUD.

A boarding-house keeper falsely represented to a prospective lessee from her of the premises, and purchaser of the furniture, that she had been and was still doing a fine business in the house, and that the furniture, all of which he did not examine, had cost her much more than the prices she asked for it. The purchaser closed the contract, and it was six months after entering into possession before he found out that the representations were false. He then rescinded the contract of purchase, and offered to put her in statu quo, and upon her refusal brought suit. Held, that he was not guilty of laches.

2. EQUITY—RESCISSION—ESTOPPEL—STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

It does not lie in the mouth of K., one party to a trade, when H., the other party, seeking to rescind the contract of exchange, has placed him in statu quo, to say that the trade had to do with a lease of real estate for more than five years, and that the rescission of the contract was required by law to be in writing.

3. NEW TRIAL—NOTICE OF MOTION.

A notice of a motion for a new trial is not objectionable because it specifies that the motion will be made not only upon the minutes of the court, but also upon a bill of exceptions and a statement of the case.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

H. K. S. O'Melveny, for appellants. Wells, Van Duke & Lee, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. Mr. Hart sought by this action to rescind a contract, which included the purchase by him of a lot of furniture and a lease from the defendant Mrs. Kimball of a boarding and lodging house, and to enforce the reconveyance to him of a lot or parcel of land which he had previously conveyed to M. H. Kimball, her husband and co-defendant. He based his claim to the relief prayed for upon the alleged fraudulent acts and representations of Mrs. Kimball, made anterior to the making of the contract, and which alone induced him to enter into it. Judgment was rendered as demanded in the complaint, and from that and an order refusing a new trial this appeal is prosecuted.

The respondent contends that the appeal from the order first mentioned should not be considered, for the reason, as he alleges, that the notice of motion for a new trial specified that such motion would be made, not only upon the minutes of the court, but also upon a bill of exceptions and a statement of the case, and that, therefore, the statement upon which the motion was heard by the trial court should have been disregarded, since the moving party relied upon that method of procedure, and did not file any affidavits or use the minutes of the court. We do not concur in this view of the law, for the respondent had full notice that all the statutory methods of procedure to obtain a new trial would be adopted by the appellants, and when they elected which of such methods they would pursue, such election was their privilege, and did not prejudice in any way the rights of the respondent, the other methods being thereby abandoned.

The specifications wherein it was alleged in what particulars the evidence did not warrant the findings were, we think, sufficient, and a hearing should be accorded both to the appeal from the order and to that from the judgment.

The appellants assert that the complaint did not state a sufficient cause of action, and that their demurrer thereto should have been sustained. The pleading first mentioned sets out at some length certain acts and representations of Mrs. Kimball, which are alleged to have been false and fraudulent, and that the plaintiff relied on them as being true in making the contract, and has suffered damage thereby. To us it seems that what Mrs. Kimball is alleged to have said and done, would have warranted any prudent man in entertaining the belief that the boarding-house was doing a good and profitable business, and that the furniture, piano, and other things bought from her by the plaintiff were of the kind and worth what she claimed. Such being the case, the plaintiff having relied upon them, and been deceived to his damage, would have a right to a rescission of the contract, if he made his offer to rescind in a proper manner, and within a reasonable time after his discovery of the fraud which had been practiced upon him.

It is claimed, in this connection, by the appellants, that, as the lease given was for five years, the only way in which an offer to rescind it would have been valid was to have made an offer of a release in writing to both parties defendant. The husband, M. H. Kimball, had nothing to do with the lease or the contract. He was simply, at his wife's request, a recipient of the legal title to the plaintiff's lot, with full notice of the latter's equities, without any consideration whatever. To offer to rescind so far as he was concerned would have been an idle ceremony. Mrs. Kimball had made to her not only the offer of the plaintiff to rescind the whole contract, and to place her in statu quo, but, according to the complaint, she had been put in possession of all the personal property which she had before that sold to the plaintiff, as well as the boarding and lodging house. In what better position she could have been placed, so far as the plaintiff could act, does not appear.

How can she equitably claim to defeat the plaintiff's right to a rescission of this contract, and to have returned to him his notes and lot when she is in actual possession as her own, with his consent of all that she ever sold him, and when he by his acts in pais is estopped from claiming possession of the boarding and lodging house by virtue of the lease? It would certainly be very unjust to say that the mere failure of the plaintiff to execute a written release to Mrs. Kimball of all his rights under the lease she made him should prevent him from having her return to him his property and obligations, when she has had returned to her all the property which she ever sold the plaintiff, and is in possession, with his consent, of the boarding and lodging house upon the title to which the plaintiff neither makes nor possesses any claim.

Under the circumstances of this case, six months was a reasonable time within which to ascertain the falsity of the defendant's representations, and to offer to rescind the contract. Marston v. Simpson, 54 Cal. 189. The demurrer was therefore properly overruled.

It was right to deny the motion for a nonsuit. There is a conflict in the evidence, and the findings should not be disturbed.

We perceive no prejudicial error in the record, and the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

HALL v. COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES. (No. 11,833.)*

(Supreme Court of California. May 18, 1887.)

CONTRACTS—CONDITION—MUNICIPAL CORPORATION.

An action was brought by an architect against a county to recover for the value of services rendered in making certain plans for a jail building, which plans had been accepted conditionally by the county board of supervisors, provided that a bid should be accepted from some reliable party for the building of the jail. The board of supervisors refused to open any of the bids received, and rejected plaintiff's plans, on the ground that he had been guilty of improper acts in getting his plans provisionally accepted. Held, that it was within the discretion of the board to refuse to open or accept any of the bids based upon plaintiff's plans, and that, the condition upon which plaintiff was entitled to compensation never having happened, he could not recover.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action for the value of certain services alleged to have been rendered by plaintiff in making certain plans for defendant.

*Reversed in banc. See 16 Pac. 313, 74 Cal. 602.

The complaint shows that the board of supervisors of Los Angeles county made an order to the effect that the board would receive plans and specifications for a jail and appurtenant buildings, the board reserving the right to reject any and all plans and specifications. The board adopted the plan of the plaintiff for a county jail, with certain provisos, among which was that the plans should not be considered adopted unless the board accepted a bid from a reliable party to the effect that such party would construct the buildings proposed for a sum not exceeding $50,000. After this order was entered, the defendant submitted certain drawings, and the clerk was directed to give notice to all persons who desired to bid upon a jail building to be erected in accordance with plaintiff's plans and specifications. In this notice the board reserved the right to reject any and all bids. The notice was published, and the plaintiff claims that bids were made by reliable parties within the required figures. Before any plans or specifications were finally adopted, the board made an order rejecting the plaintiff's plans, on the ground that he had been party to certain improper acts in getting his plans conditionally accepted, and refused to open any of the bids received, based upon said plans.

Williams & McKinley, for appellant. Geo. M. Holton and Bicknell & White, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. The demurrer to the complaint was properly sustained. The plaintiff had no claim against the defendant, the county of Los Angeles, according to his own pleading, save and except one based upon the condition that the board of supervisors of that county should accept the bid of some "reliable party" for the building of a jail. They refused, in the exercise of a proper discretion, as the complaint shows, to open or accept any of the bids tendered, on the ground that the plaintiff had been a party to certain improper acts in getting his plans conditionally accepted. Thus the condition upon which alone he had, or could have had, any claim for compensation for his alleged services never happened, not because of any fault of the board of supervisors, but for the reason that they, in the exercise of a rightful discretion, refused to entertain or accept bids which they believed were based upon plans tainted with fraud, with which the plaintiff appeared to them to be in collusion. As guardians of the best interests of their county, they could not have properly acted otherwise, and the judgment should be affirmed.

MOORE v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES. (No. 11,786.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 18, 1887)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—LIABILITY—OVERFLOW OF STREAM.

The city of Los Angeles, California, is not liable for damage to property within its corporate limits caused by the sudden overflow of a river, the bed of which, and the right to sell water from which, belong to the city; there being no provision in its charter requiring it to protect private property from such overflow.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

S. Haley, W. H. H. Russell, and David Lyon, for plaintiff and appellant.
J. W. McKinley, F. P. Kelly, and W. T. Williams, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. The plaintiff sued the city of Los Angeles for damages to his property lying within its corporate limits, alleging that the same was caused by the defendant in failing to use proper care in preventing an overflow of the waters of the Los Angeles river. The bed of the river, and the right to divert its waters and sell them to its citizens, as stated in the complaint, belonged to the city. The pleading was demurred to, the demurrer sustained, and from the judgment then rendered this appeal is prosecuted.

We do not agree with the plaintiff in his contention that the city, incorporated as it is, should be held responsible for the damages he declares his property to have sustained from the overflow of the river, caused by a sudden flood of water. The incorporated city was not responsible as a private corporation from the fact that it owned the bed of the river, and the right to sell the water therefrom to its citizens, and there is nothing contained in its charter which could impose such an obligation upon it as the duty of protecting private property from sudden and unlooked-for floods, which might at any time fill the stream to overflowing.

The judgment should be affirmed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

Fisher Ames and J. M. Kinley, for appellant. George E. Lawrence, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This is an action in ejectment for a lot of ground in the city and county of San Francisco. The court below gave judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendant moved for a new trial, which being denied, he appealed from the order made in the premises.

The only real ground of objection which the defendant makes against the correctness of the action of the trial court is that the findings are not supported by the evidence. We have given a very careful examination to the record, and to briefs of counsel, and the authorities cited, but we have not been able to perceive anything therein which militates against our opinion that, the evidence being conflicting, the findings should be upheld and the order affirmed.

TYLER v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SONOMA CO. (No. 100,000.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 18, 1887.)

COURTS—UNITED STATES SUPREME—ERROR TO—SUPERSEDEAS—ATTORNEY AT LAW.

An order of the supreme court of a state, suspending an attorney from practicing law, is not superseded by a writ of error to the supreme court of the United States, as a writ of error in the United States courts operates as a supersedeas only when the judgment requires the issuance of process for its enforcement.

In bank. Application for writ of mandate.

Geo. W. Tyler, for the application. No appearance for respondent.

THORNTON, J. Application for writ of mandate to the superior court of the county of Sonoma, commanding said court to allow Tyler to practice law in that court. Tyler was, by an order of this court, entered in December, 1886, suspended from practicing law in the courts of the state for two years, and until the payment of a certain sum of money. 12 Pac. Rep. 289. On application to the chief justice of this court, a writ of error to the supreme court of the United States was allowed, citation issued and served, and bond filed. It is argued that the writ of error supersedes the order of suspension, and that Tyler can still practice law until the cause is determined on error, or dismissed by the court in error; and this, by virtue of the act of congress.

There are cases where a writ of error operates as a supersedeas, and cases where it does not. This is plain from sections 1000-1007 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. See latter clauses of sections cited. What is a supersedeas? It is a writ issued to a ministerial officer, commanding him to supersede or desist from proceeding under another writ previously or subsequently issued to him. Abb. Law Dict. word, "Supersedeas;" Burrill, Law Dict. same word. No writ of supersedeas need be issued under the act of congress, for the writ of error operates as such. The service of a copy of the writ of error on the clerk would be sufficient to restrain him from issuing a writ of execution, or a like service on the sheriff would restrain him from executing it, or, perhaps, the court might order a writ of supersedeas in form to be issued. In Virginia the writ of supersedeas is directed to the sheriff. Section 4, Minor, Inst. pt. 1, pp. 854, 855, where the form of the writ is given.

Prof. Minor, in his able work above cited, which we consider high authority, says of the writ of error in the courts of the United States: "It operates as a supersedeas to prevent the successful party in the court below from proceeding to enforce his judgment," etc. 4 Minor, Inst. pt. 1, p. 296. This plainly signifies that when a party has recovered a judgment which he can enforce by the process of the court, that a writ of error, on the proper bond being given, will prevent the execution of such process. The writ is issued for the purpose of preventing the enforcement of the judgment by execution. This is clearly apparent from the mandate of the writ in the forms given in the work above cited. When the judgment is rendered, and no process is required to be issued for its enforcement, no supersedeas is allowed. In fact, there is no necessity for such a writ. There is nothing to stay or supersede; as, where an injunction is allowed by a decree, the supersedeas does not nullify or set aside the injunction. Slaughter-House Cases, 10 Wall. 273-297; Whitney v. Mowry, 3 Fish. Pat. Cas. 175. The injunction granted by the decree stands, and is not suspended or superseded. The order disbarring Tyler needs no process to execute it, and it stands unaffected by the writ of error.

But it is argued that this court has no power to pass on the question whether the writ of error operates as a supersedeas; that the power of this court to act in the case is suspended until, by some act of the supreme court of the United States, the power is restored to it. To sustain this contention the case of Ex parte Dunn, 6 S. C. 307, is cited. In that case process was required to enforce the judgment of the court. The question arose on an application to the court below to enforce its judgment. This was declined on the ground above stated. Here there is no application to enforce the judgment or order of this court, nor is any necessary. The judgment or order stands as it was rendered, and the effect is to suspend the applicant for the writ in this case from the practice of his profession. There is and can be no supersedeas under the act of congress.

Writ denied, and application dismissed.

We concur: SEARLES, C. J.; MCFARLAND, J.; TEMPLE, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

PATERSON, J., (concurring.) I concur on the ground that, in the absence of an express statutory provision applicable to cases of this kind, or an order of the court suspending the operation of the judgment until decision on the writ of error, the judgment of this court operates as an injunction against the exercise by the party disbarred of the right or franchise to practice law.

PEOPLE ex rel. GARRISON and others v. CLARK. (No. 11,690.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 18, 1887.)

ATTORNEY GENERAL—ACTION—PARTIES—STATE.

In California, the attorney general, after having given his consent to the parties interested to use the name of the state, and his name in bringing an action, has no authority to withdraw such consent, to the prejudice of the parties in interest.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, Tulare county.

F. S. Stratton, Wm. M. Pierson, and Latimer & Morrow, for appellants.

E. C. Marshall, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This was an action on behalf of the people of the state of California, upon the relation of the real parties in interest, instituted for the purpose of obtaining a decree to set aside a certain patent dated November 22, 1883, to swamp and overflowed lands lying in the county of Tulare. The attorney general of the state, upon a proper petition presented to him, authorized the relators to use his name, and to bring this suit in the name of the people as plaintiff. An undertaking in due form was afterwards filed in the proper court, conditioned to save the state harmless from all costs. The complaint, signed by the attorneys of the real parties in interest, the relators, was filed according to law on January 19, 1884. The attorney general, however, on the seventh of March, 1884, filed in the court where the action was pending a withdrawal of his authority for the further prosecution of the action in the name of the people, and requested that the action be dismissed. The court below granted his request, against the objection and subject to the exception of the plaintiffs, the relators. From the judgment made in the premises the latter have appealed.

The attorney general, as such, (the state having no direct interest in the event of the suit, and his permission having been given to the real parties in interest seeking relief,) had no right or authority to withdraw his consent, thus previously given, to the use of his name, to the prejudice of the relators. *People v. SALE—CONDITIONAL—BONA FIDE MORTGAGE.

As against a bona fide mortgagee of the purchaser, provisions in a contract of sale that the property is borrowed, and that the title is to remain in the seller until the price is paid, are ineffectual to constitute the transaction an executory contract of sale, where the possession is delivered, and the promise to pay is absolute, and where, under the contract, the seller is bound upon default, on repossessing himself of the property, to resell it, and to account to the purchaser for the proceeds in excess of the contract price and expenses.¹

Appeal from superior court, San Diego county.

Claim and delivery by Palmer & Rey, respondents, against Howard, appellant, for possession of certain personal property consisting of printing materials, or for $2,295.43, the value thereof, in case a delivery cannot be had. Levi Chase, for appellant. W. J. Hunsaker, for respondents.

HAYNE, C. The plaintiff delivered to one St. Clair and wife certain personal property under a writing, of which the following is a copy:

"SAN FRANCISCO, March 26, 1885.

"D. Parker St. Clair and wife, San Diego, Cal., borrowed and received of Palmer & Rey, 405-407 Sansome street, San Francisco, the following articles in good order. If the price set against them is paid, as per memorandum below, the property is then to belong to the said borrower; otherwise it remains the property of Palmer & Rey. Notes and drafts, or renewals of the same, if given, are not to be considered payments until they are paid. In the mean time the borrower is to keep the property in good order, and agrees to pay the price as per memorandum below, keep the property sufficiently insured for the benefit of the said Palmer & Rey, depositing the policy of insurance with them, and may use the property free from any other charge. Said property is not to be removed from lot L, in block thirty-six, (36,) in the city of San Diego, Cal., without the written consent of Palmer & Rey. Should said borrower fail to meet any of the payments at the time specified, or to keep the property satisfactorily insured, or in good order, then Palmer & Rey may take the said articles, and dispose of them to the best advantage, rendering to the said borrower all surplus, if any, after paying the price agreed upon, and the expenses of removal and sale."

Then follows a list of the articles and a specification of the installments of the price, amounting in all to $2,295.45. The St. Clairs paid but one installment of the price, and did not keep the property insured, but mortgaged the same to the defendant for $925, and subsequently left for parts unknown. The question is as to the effect of the agreement quoted.

It is settled in this state that even bona fide purchasers from the person to whom personal property is delivered under an executory contract of sale get no valid claim to property. Kohler v. Hayes, 41 Cal. 455; Hegler v. Eddy, 53 Cal. 598. This is in accordance with the great preponderance of authority elsewhere. Harkness v. Russell, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 51. The reason is that in such cases the title to the property does not pass, and the maxim, nemo plus juris, etc., applies.

But in applying this rule it must be remembered, in general, that the policy of the law is against upholding secret liens and charges to the injury of innocent purchasers or incumbrancers for value, and in particular that mortgages of personal property are permitted only in certain specified cases, and then only upon the observance of certain formalities, designed to insure good faith, and to give notice to the world of the character of the transaction. These provisions as to the mortgages cannot be evaded by any mere shuffling of words. Where it is clear from the whole transaction that for all practical purposes the ownership of property was intended to be transferred, and that the seller only intended to reserve a security for the price, any characterization of the transaction by the parties, or any mere denial of its legal effect, will not be regarded. The question, it is true, is one of intention; but the intention must be collected from the whole transaction, and not from any particular feature of it.

In the present case it seems to us that the intention must be taken to have been to transfer the ownership of the property, reserving a security for the price and nothing more. The possession was delivered. The promise to pay was absolute. Hart v. Barney, 7 Fed. Rep. 553. If Palmer & Rey, on reselling the property, had sued the St. Clairs for the difference between the agreed price and what the property brought on the resale, we see no defense the latter could have made. Moreover, Palmer & Rey were bound to resell the property if they repossessed themselves of it. They could not have kept it as an owner; and not only so, but they were bound to resell for the benefit of the St. Clairs. The provision is that, if they retake, they shall sell "to the best advantage, rendering to said borrower all surplus, if any, after paying the price agreed upon, and the expenses of removal and sale." This is not a feature of an executory contract of sale. It is the chief characteristic of a mortgage, and it is the very sum and substance of proceedings for foreclosure. In a controversy between debtor and creditor as to whether a transaction was a mortgage or a sale, such a stipulation would be conclusive that it was a mortgage. Why should it have a different import in this case?

We think, therefore, that the intention was to vest the substantial ownership in the St. Clairs, and that the sole object of the seller was to secure payment of the price; and this intention appears from the provisions of the contract itself. Such being the case, the statement that the property "remains the property of Palmer & Rey," etc., is inconsistent with the nature of the transaction, as shown by the contract itself, and is a mere disguise for the purpose of evading the requirements of the law as to mortgages of personal property. To sustain the position of respondents would be, in effect, to add to the chapter on mortgages a provision that, in every case where personal property is sold, the seller may take a mortgage thereon for the price; and that, too, without the affidavit and recording which are required in the cases where such mortgages are allowed.

This conclusion is not in contravention of the cases cited by respondent, for in none of them, except, perhaps, a case from an inferior court of New York, (Grant v. Skinner, 21 Barb. 531,) did the provision above referred to exist. On the other hand, it is in accordance with the decision of the supreme court of the United States in Heryford v. Davis, 102 U. S. 235, which was not in reference to any local law. That court maintains to its fullest extent the rule as to conditional sales which prevails in this state. Harkness v. Russell, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 51. But it held that the features above adverted to took the case before it out of the general rule.

For these reasons we advise that the judgment and order be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

TRIPP v. DUANE. (No. 9,490.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 20, 1887.)

1. TRUSTS—COUPLED WITH AN INTEREST—CONVEYANCE BY TRUSTEE.

A transfer of all his interest by one who had advanced money to pay the state's charges for a deed to salt marsh and tide lands, and who, as security for the loan, had taken a conveyance to himself of the land in trust to reconvey upon payment, and with power, upon default, to sell after notice by advertisement, is valid as a conveyance of his equitable interest, although made without such notice, and is not in contravention of Civil Code Cal. § 870, providing that, "where a trust in relation to real property is expressed in the instrument creating the estate, every transfer or other act of the trustee in contravention of the trust is absolutely void."

2. QUIETING TITLE—LIENS—TENDER.

A bill to quiet title to an undivided interest in land will not lie, as against the grantee of one who has advanced money to clear the property, and taken a deed in the nature of a mortgage as a security for the loan, without payment or tender of the proportionate part of the money loaned.

3. TRIAL—BY COURT—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—RULING ON.

It is error for the court, in making up its findings, to consider a deposition which was objected to when offered, and with respect to which objection the court did not decide at the time, but reserved its ruling.

4. SAME.

Where testimony is objected to when offered, the party objecting has a right to have a ruling upon the point; and where the ruling is reserved, and the court, when making up its finding, wrongly considers the testimony, the error is not cured by tendering the objecting party a ruling upon the matter, when the statement on motion for new trial is presented for settlement.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

Geo. W. Tyler and E. D. Wheeler, for Duane, appellant. Philip G. Galpin, for Tripp, respondent.

FOOTE, C. An action to quiet title to thirty-three ninety-sixths of certain land described in the complaint. Some time during the year A. D. 1853, one George W. Ellis filed in the recorder's office of the city and county of San Francisco a pre-emption claim to 160 acres of salt marsh and tide lands, the property of the state of California. In the interval between such time and October 21, A. D. 1875, Ellis executed to various persons bargain and sale deeds of undivided portions of his pre-emption claim, amounting to thirty-three ninety-sixths of the whole thereof, the grantees of such undivided interests conveyed them to the plaintiff prior to the twenty-first day of October, A. D. 1875, by deeds sufficient in form, and such deeds were recorded before said last-mentioned date. The state of California executed to Ellis a deed to the lands described in the complaint on the twenty-fourth day of November, A. D. 1875, they being but a portion of those described in the pre-emption claim heretofore mentioned. The plaintiff claims title to thirty-three ninety-sixths of the land, by reason of the pre-emption claim and the deed from the state of California to Ellis. It appears, however, that, when the deed from the state was ready for delivery, Ellis had no money, and $8,000 had to be paid the state before the deed would be delivered; and Ellis, Duane, and Haymond executed to one Patterson an instrument in writing, which is as follows: "We, George W. Ellis, Creed Haymond, and C. P. Duane, hereby grant, bargain, sell, and convey to Wm. H. Patterson all the estate, title, and interest which we, either and all of us, now have, or may hereafter acquire, of, in, and to the land described, and intended to be described, in a certain so-called pre-emption claim or pre-emption notice on record, whereof is contained in the land records of the city and county of San Francisco, in Liber B of Miscellaneous Deeds, page 665; and also all the lands described in two certain deeds made by the tide-land commissioners to G. W. Ellis, and bearing date November 24, 1875. This conveyance is in trust to secure the payment of $4,000 due to said Patterson from the said Ellis, $2,000 due from the said Haymond to said Patterson, and $2,000 from the said Duane to the said Patterson, and payable in United States gold coin, with interest at the rate of one and one-half per cent. per month, and payable on or before sixty days from the date thereof. The said Patterson to have full possession and control of the said land, and the absolute power of the disposition of the said land for the purposes of the trust. If such payments are not paid at or before sixty days from the date hereof, such disposition is to be made upon one week's notice in any daily paper published in the city and county of San Francisco. Upon the payment of the whole of said sum of $8,000 and interest, the said Patterson is to reconvey said land; or, upon the payment by the said Ellis of the sum of $4,000 and interest, he will reconvey one-half of said property to said Ellis; or, upon the payment of $2,000 and interest by said Haymond he will reconvey to said Haymond one-fourth thereof; or, upon the payment of $2,000 and interest by the said Duane, to reconvey one-fourth of said property to said Duane. Witness our hands and seals this thirtieth day of November, 1875,"—the same being signed and sealed by all of said parties thereto.

The $8,000 was not paid within the 60 days, as agreed by the instrument above set out; and Patterson, without advertising the sale of the land as therein provided, transferred all his interest in it to one Morrissey by deed, and Morrissey to Duane.

At the time of the commencement of the present action, neither the plaintiff nor Ellis had paid Patterson or Duane any of the said $8,000, and the complaint sought to quiet the plaintiff's title to thirty-three ninety-sixths of said land without alleging payment, or making any offer to pay to Patterson, or Duane, his grantee, any portion of the same. After Duane had filed his amended answer, the plaintiff bought of Patterson his right to and interest in the land, and took from him a conveyance therefor, and then applied to the trial court for leave (which was refused, as far as Duane was concerned) to file a supplemental complaint setting up the facts above related. But upon the trial of the cause the plaintiff offered in evidence the deposition of Patterson to prove the facts set up in the supplemental complaint. The defendant, Duane, objected, upon the ground that all the matters thus sought to be proved had occurred after the joinder of issue in the case, and were incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and that no supplemental complaint had been filed touching such matters, so far as concerned the defendant, Duane. The court did not at the time admit the testimony, but reserved its ruling. Before, however, the decision in the cause was made, the court did read and consider that deposition, and in fact based its findings and decree thereon; and decided that defendant, Duane, had no right, title, or interest in the land described in the complaint, and quieted the title of the land to the plaintiff, and as against Duane, as prayed for.

The appellant makes three points for the reversal of the judgment, and the order denying him a new trial: First. He claims that the court erred in quieting the plaintiff's title to the whole of the land described in the complaint. Second. That the court erred in deciding that plaintiff was entitled to prevail in the action, without paying or offering to pay thirty-three ninety-sixths of the purchase money which Patterson advanced to Ellis, Haymond, and Duane to pay to the state of California, and in ruling that Duane had no title or interest in the land. Third. That the court erred in considering and reading evidence not admitted at the trial, and basing its findings and decree thereon.

We do not think that the court quieted the title to the whole of the land, but only to thirty-three ninety-sixths thereof. But it seems to us that the transfer by Patterson to Morrissey was valid, so far as to carry all the beneficial interest which Patterson had in the trust instrument from Ellis, Duane, and Haymond, and, as a consequence, that Duane got the same interest from Morrissey. Patterson thereby made no conveyance in contravention of the trust, within the meaning of section 870, Civil Code. He transferred all his beneficial interests only, and the title was not affected. The advertisement for the sale was not affected. It was just as incumbent on Patterson's grantee to have carried out the trust, and to have advertised as the instrument required, as it was upon Patterson. The grantees under Patterson had a right to be repaid their share of the $8,000, vesting as a lien upon the thirty-three ninety-sixths of the claim, as fully as Patterson had, and therefore it was wrong to divest Duane of the interest he had acquired under Patterson and Morrissey, without, at least, having him reimbursed, and no offer so to do was made in the complaint.

The court had no right to consider the deposition of Patterson, as against Duane, in deciding the cause. Duane never waived his exceptions, and the court, without any notice to him, or ruling upon it after it was taken, so that he might perchance have rebutted Patterson's evidence, founded its decree and findings upon it. The fact that he was tendered an opportunity to have a ruling on the matter, when the statement on motion for a new trial was presented to the court for settlement, gave Duane no opportunity, which was his right to have, to offer rebutting testimony.

The judgment and order should be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; SEARLS, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial, nunc pro tunc, as of March 15, 1887.

CARROLL v. GIRARD FIRE INS. CO. (No. 11,694.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 20, 1887.)

1. INSURANCE—FIRE—CONDITION—WAIVER.

A provision in a fire insurance policy that in case of loss the insured shall forthwith give notice thereof, "and shall also produce" a magistrate's certificate that the loss was without fraud, held to have been waived by the company's joining with the insured in proceedings to determine the loss by arbitration, and setting up the award as a defense.¹

2. SAME—CLAUSE AGAINST WAIVER.

It is no objection to such waiver that another clause in the policy provides that "no condition, stipulation, covenant, or clause hereinbefore contained shall be * * * waived, * * * except by writing indorsed hereon." Such provision may be waived by conduct as well as the others.

3. SAME—ACTION—PLEADING.

The policy provided that "no suit or action against this company for the recovery of any claim by virtue of this policy shall be sustainable * * * until an award shall have been obtained fixing the amount of such claim in the manner hereinabove provided." Held, that a complaint which sets out the policy, but contains no allegation of an award, or of any facts excusing a failure to obtain one, is demurrable as not stating a cause of action.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, Merced county.

T. C. Van Ness, for appellant. Wigginton, Creed & Hawes, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Action upon a policy of insurance. Verdict and judgment for plaintiff. The grounds for reversal urged by counsel for appellant may be reduced to two.

1. The policy requires that in case of loss the assured shall "forthwith" give notice thereof, "and shall also produce" a certificate from a notary or magistrate to the effect that he has examined into the circumstances, and believes that the assured has sustained the loss without fraud on his part. These things were not done. But the evidence shows that, when the claim was brought to the attention of the company, it made no objection on account of the absence of the notice and preliminary proof, but went on and joined in proceedings for determining the amount of the loss by arbitration. These proceedings were required by the policy to be taken to determine the amount of the loss, "after proof thereof has been received in due form." They culminated in an award fixing the loss at a certain sum. The first we hear of an objection on ground of want of notice and preliminary proof is in the answer filed by the company in the action; and by this time the period for giving the notice and making the proof had certainly expired. We think that under these circumstances the formalities mentioned must be considered waived. By joining in the proceedings to fix the amount of the loss, the company manifested its intention to dispense with preliminary formalities. The assured had a right to rely upon this manifestation of intention. And to say that the company all along intended to require the notice and preliminary proof, and to take advantage of their absence after the time for giving them had expired, is to impute to it a want of good faith and fair-dealing which we will not assume.

¹ In Bowlin v. Hekla Fire Ins. Co. (Minn.) 31 N. W. Rep. 859, it was held that a local agent, simply authorized to fix rates of insurance, cannot waive a provision requiring proof of loss; and in Cleaver v. Traders' Ins. Co., (Mich.) 32 N. W. Rep. 660, that a provision in the policy that the agent had no authority to waive, modify, or strike from the policy any of its conditions, or revive the policy in case it becomes void by reason of a violation of its conditions, is a part of the contract, and prevents the company from being stopped to deny its liability, or declare the policy void for violation of its conditions, though the agent has waived them.

The counsel for appellant urges several reasons against this conclusion, viz.:

(a) That those who acted for the company had no authority to waive any condition of the policy. But the company does not repudiate the acts of those who acted for it in this regard. On the contrary, it adopts them, and shelters itself behind the award, which was the result of such acts. It is plain that it cannot do this without accepting all the consequences of the acts.

(b) It is said that the submission to arbitration provides that "this appointment is without reference to any question or matters of difference within the terms and conditions of the insurance, and is not to be taken as any waiver upon the part of said companies of the said conditions in their policies in case they elect to avail themselves of them." If this means the right to object on account of the absence of preliminary steps was to be reserved until after the time for taking them had expired, it certainly is a very crafty document. But we do not think such is its meaning. The proceedings for fixing the loss were, as we have seen, not to be commenced until after the preliminary steps had been taken. And the language of the submission is that the appointment is to be without reference to "any other question within the terms and conditions" etc.; and the proviso is that it "is not to be taken as any waiver of said conditions." We think that, taking all the circumstances into consideration, it is a fair construction to hold that the proviso as to waiver refers to the conditions other than the ones relating to the appointment of the arbitrators, and those superseded or waived thereby. But, however this may be, the language of the proviso relates only to the effect of the "appointment" of the arbitrators, and does not extend to subsequent proceedings. And by going on, and completing the award, and setting it up as a defense, the company waived the preliminary steps under the principle first above laid down.

(c) It is urged that the policy provides that "no condition, stipulation, covenant, or clause hereinbefore contained shall be altered, annulled, or waived, * * * except by writing indorsed hereon, or annexed thereto, by the president or secretary, with their signatures affixed thereto." But this condition is of no more sanctity than any other conditions of the policy. Like any other provision for the benefit of the company, it could be waived; and we think that, so far as the notice and certificate are concerned, it was waived by the submission to arbitration, and the subsequent proceedings. We are of opinion, therefore, that the defense founded upon the want of notice and certificate is of no validity.

2. The defendant set up the award of the arbitrators determining the amount of the loss; and we think that its position in this regard must be sustained. The policy provides that "in case differences shall arise touching any loss or damage, after proof thereof has been received in due form, the matter may, at the written request of either party, be submitted to competent and disinterested appraisers,—one to be appointed by the assured, and one by the company, and these two shall select a third, if necessary,—whose award, by them or any two of them, in writing, shall determine the amount of such loss or damage, but not decide the question of the liability of this company under this policy,” and that “no suit or action against this company for the recovery of any claim by virtue of this policy shall be sustainable in any court of law or chancery until an award shall have been obtained fixing the amount of such claim in manner hereinabove provided.”

A similar provision was held to be valid, and to be a condition precedent to any right of action, in Old Saucelito L. & D. D. Co. v. Commercial U. A. Co., 66 Cal. 253, 5 Pac. Rep. 232, and this case was approved and followed in Adams v. South British Ins. Co., 11 Pac. Rep. 627. It is argued for the respondent that these cases are not in point, for the reason that the policies there considered contained express provisions that the determination of the arbitrators should be “binding on both parties.” But we are unable to assent to this view. The provisions of the policy under consideration seem to us to be substantially the same as those in the cases mentioned, and to be to the effect that the amount of the loss shall be first determined in the manner specified, and that the action must be for the amount as fixed. And it is no more open to the respondent, after submitting to the arbitration, to say that, as a matter of fact, no “differences” existed, than it would be for the appellant, if it had been dissatisfied with the award, to say that no “written” request for arbitration had been made.

The logical result of this view is that the award is a necessary element of the plaintiff's cause of action. In contemplation of law the promise is not to pay such damage as the insured should suffer, but to pay such sum as the arbitrators should fix as the amount of damage sustained. It follows that the action should have been for the amount of the award, and that the award should have been set forth in the complaint. See Morse, Arb. 95. The allegation that “all the conditions of said policy of insurance were duly performed and kept by this plaintiff” is not equivalent to setting forth the award, because, as has been stated, the award is a necessary element of the cause of action, and it is not the action of plaintiff, but of third persons. If a fair award was prevented by the fraudulent conduct of defendant, the complaint should have set forth the acts constituting the fraud. But the complaint, although it set out the policy, thereby disclosing the provisions as to the award, made no mention of any award having been made, or of any reason why not. Hence it did not state a cause of action, and the demurrer should have been sustained. This not having been done, the defendant's objections to any evidence impeaching the award set up in the answer should have been allowed.

It would not help the plaintiff's case to show that, by reason of any irregularity of the arbitrators, such as want of hearing, or the like, the award was void; for, if the defendant could not be charged with participation therein, the result would simply be that the action was prematurely brought.

The document filed by plaintiff, styled “Answer to defendant's cross-complaint,” must be ignored, because the defendant filed no cross-complaint. The attempted pleading was therefore wholly unauthorized; but, even if it could have any effect as an answer to a cross-complaint, it could not obviate the defects in the complaint,—it being thoroughly well settled that, in order to support a judgment, the complaint must state a cause of action.

For these reasons we advise that the judgment and order be reversed, with directions to sustain the demurrer to the complaint, with leave to plaintiff to amend.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, with direction to sustain the demurrer to the complaint, with leave to plaintiff to amend.

72 Cal. 307

RAYNOR v. DREW. (No. 11,837.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 20, 1887.)

1. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF—AGREEMENT NOT TO BE PERFORMED IN A YEAR—LEASE.

A verbal lease of land until such time as the lessor shall pay the lessee a certain sum of money, is neither an agreement that by its terms is not to be performed within a year from the making thereof, nor an agreement for leasing for a longer period than one year, within the meaning of the statute of frauds of California.¹

2. EVIDENCE—EXTRINSIC—WRITTEN INSTRUMENT.

At the time of the execution of a mortgage, the mortgagor gave to the mortgagee a verbal lease of the land, wherein it was stipulated that the rent was to offset the interest on the note. Held that, the lease, being a separate and supplementary matter, was not in contradiction of the provisions of the note that, if the interest was not paid when due, it was to be compounded, and oral evidence of its provisions as to the payment of interest on the note was admissible.

3. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—MORTGAGE—ADVERSE POSSESSION.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 346, which provides that an action to redeem from a mortgage may be brought against the mortgagee in possession, unless he has continuously maintained an adverse possession for five years after a breach of condition, an action to redeem, where the mortgagee is in possession, may be brought at any time, provided there shall not have been an adverse possession for five years.

4. SAME—LANDLORD AND TENANT.

When a mortgagee is in possession of the premises under a verbal lease providing that the rent shall be applied to keep down the interest on the mortgage note, his possession cannot be held to be adverse until the expiration of five years from the last payment of rent, under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 326, providing that when there is no written lease, the possession of the tenant is deemed to be the possession of the landlord, until the expiration of five years from the time of the last payment of rent.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county.

Byron Waters and W. G. Webb, for appellants. Paris & Goodcell and H. M. Willis, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. On May 14, 1875, the plaintiff gave to the defendant an instrument in writing which in form was an absolute deed. It is admitted by the pleading that this instrument was to secure the payment of a promissory note; and therefore it was a mortgage, and, under the present doctrine, did not convey the title, (Taylor v. McLain, 64 Cal. 514, 2 Pac. Rep. 399; Healy v. O'Brien, 66 Cal. 519, 6 Pac. Rep. 386,) and did not give a right of possession, (Civil Code, § 2927.) But at the time the plaintiff gave to the defendant a verbal lease of the premises for one year. The lease is alleged in the complaint to have been "until such time as the plaintiff should pay him said sum." This was neither "an agreement that by its terms is not to be performed within a year from the making thereof," (Dougherty v. Rosenberg, 62 Cal. 32,) nor was it "an agreement for the leasing for a longer period than one year," (Browne, St. Frauds, 32.) Such a lease, therefore, would not be void. The defendant testifies that he "leased the premises for a year, during which the note was to run," and the court found that it was for a year. There was probably a variance, but, under the circumstances, we do not think it misled the defendant to his prejudice, and therefore it was not material.

¹Respecting the application of the statute of frauds to contracts not to be performed within a year, see Treat v. Hiles, (Wis.) 32 N. W. Rep. 517. In Henry v. Wells, 3 S. W. Rep. 637, it was held that while a verbal contract for service, not to be performed within a year, might, in equity, be taken out of the statute by part performance, it could not at law.

As part of the agreement of lease, it was stipulated that the rent was to offset the interest on the note. The defendant objected to oral evidence of this, as contradictory of the provision of the note that, if the interest was not paid when due, it was to be compounded. But the lease, although made at the time, was a separate and supplementary matter, and provided what was to be taken as payment of the interest, and hence was not in contradiction of the note.

There is a dispute about the amount of the rent. The plaintiff swears that it was to offset the interest, which would make it $33 per month. The defendant swears in his answer that it was $15 per month, and in his evidence that it was $20 a month. The only other evidence was the testimony of experts that $33 was too high a rent. The finding was in accordance with plaintiff's evidence, and, under the well-settled rule as to conflict, it must be assumed here that such was the agreement. The defendant entered and remained in possession up to the commencement of the action, which was on December 18, 1884. He paid the taxes and insurance, and made a good many repairs and improvements, but took no steps to get the title, either by foreclosure or otherwise.

The positions of the defendant not involved in the foregoing may be reduced to three:

1. It is contended that he had a five years' adverse possession. But he admits that he accepted a lease, and we do not see how he can be permitted to say that he did not enter under it. Any tenant might say the same thing. Having accepted the lease, and agreed that the rent was to be applied to keep down the interest, and then entered, his possession is conclusively presumed to have been under the lease. Being a tenant, his possession could not, under any circumstances, be held to be adverse until the expiration of five years from the last payment of rent. Code Civil Proc. § 326. Under the contract, the rent was paid by the interest. It was the duty of the defendant to have credited such payments on the back of the note. It must be presumed that he did his duty. At least, he cannot gain any advantage by neglecting it. Therefore it must be held that the rent was credited against the interest as long as defendant remained in possession under the agreement; and, even if we say that there was no renewal of the lease by holding over, the possession could not commence to be adverse until five years from the expiration of the year, which would, at most, give the defendant an adverse possession of only three years and seven months.

2. It is urged that the plaintiff's claim to relief is barred by lapse of time. The argument is that the right of foreclosure is barred; and that, the rights of redemption and foreclosure being reciprocal, if one is barred, the other must be. Such was undoubtedly the rule before the Code. Cunningham v. Hawkins, 24 Cal. 406; Arrington v. Liscom, 34 Cal. 369; Espinosa v. Gregory, 40 Cal. 58. But perhaps it may be doubted whether the reason of the old equity rule applies under a system where no title passes to the mortgagee. If the title and right of possession remain in the mortgagor, and the lien of the mortgage is extinguished by lapse of time, (Civil Code, § 2911,) what is it that the mortgagee has which can be redeemed? The old phraseology has come down to us, and found a place in the statute. But it is manifest that an action to "redeem" under our system is, in effect, merely an action to remove a cloud; and, since a court of equity may require justice to be done as a condition of removing the cloud, why should there be any period of limitation for such an action?

Possibly the law-makers had this in view when they enacted the following section of the Civil Procedure:

"Sec. 346. An act to redeem a mortgage of real property, with or without an account of rents and profits, may be brought by the mortgagor, or those claiming under him, against the mortgagee in possession, or those claiming under him, unless he or they have continuously maintained an adverse possession of the mortgaged premises for five years after breach of some condition of the mortgage."

Whatever view may be taken of this section, one thing is clear, viz., that, if the mortgagee be in possession, the action to "redeem" may be brought at any time, provided there shall not have been an adverse possession of five years.

In the case of Taylor v. McClain, 60 Cal. 651, the above section was not cited to the court, and it escaped attention. But, whether or not this circumstance takes away the authority of the case, the record shows that the mortgagee was not in possession of the mortgaged premises in that case, and therefore the case may be distinguished. It is therefore not necessary to decide whether section 346 changes the old rule, where the mortgagee is not in possession.

3. It is contended that the defendant should have been allowed a greater sum for repairs and improvements. He was allowed $158 for taxes, $202.50 for insurance, and $337.45 for repairs, making $697.95 in all. It does not clearly appear what repairs are included in the $337.45. The defendant, in his character of tenant, was not entitled to any sum for repairs, for the reason that he gave no notice of his intention to make them. Code Civil Proc. § 1942. If in his character of mortgagee he was entitled to do anything which he could not do as tenant, then the general rule would apply, viz., that the mortgagee may make such repairs as are reasonably necessary for the preservation of the property, but not permanent improvements, or things which conduced merely to his comfort or convenience. 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 1016b; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. 1217; Hidden v. Jordan, 28 Cal. 309, and 32 Cal. 401; Murdock v. Clarke, 59 Cal. 695; Moore v. Cable, 1 Johns. Ch. 384. The cases which go beyond this, rest upon grounds of equitable estoppel. Applying this rule, we cannot say that there was error in the action of the court below with reference to the defendant's rights as mortgagee.

Then was there any ground of equitable estoppel? The finding is that "none of said improvements were made with the consent or acquiescence of the plaintiff." The evidence shows that nothing was said on the subject, but that the plaintiff, in passing and repassing the property, must have seen at least some of the work in progress or completed, and that he made no objection. When asked at the trial why he had kept silent, he answered: "Because I did not want him to foreclose till I was ready to take it up." It is essential, however, to any claim of this character on the part of the defendant, that he acted in ignorance of his real position. Boggs v. Merced Min. Co., 14 Cal. 368; Kelly v. Taylor, 23 Cal. 15; Carpentier v. Thirston, 24 Cal. 281; Maine Boys Co. v. Boston Co., 37 Cal. 50. The defendant's state of mind is shown by his own statement. He says: "I went on and made certain improvements on the place. I made up my mind that the place was mine, from the fact that the place wasn't worth the money even if Mr. Raynor agreed to redeem it, or had the money to redeem it. I, of course, knew he could redeem within a short time if he saw fit to, and, the property not being worth that, I was satisfied he wouldn't do it."

The other points do not require special mention. We therefore advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

ESTUDILLO v. MEYERSTEIN and others. (No. 12,035.)*(Supreme Court of California. May 20, 1887.)1. INSOLVENCY—DISCHARGE—FRAUD.

The insolvent act of California, § 49, which provides that "no discharge shall be granted, or, if granted, shall be valid, if the debtor, or any other person on his account, has influenced the action of any creditor at any stage of the proceedings by any pecuniary consideration or obligation," does not require that the pecuniary obligation shall be in writing, or one that can be enforced in the courts, and a mere verbal promise is sufficient.

2. SAME—ANNULING DISCHARGE—PROCEDURE.

The insolvency act of California, § 53, provides that any creditor having a provable debt against the insolvent, who shall see fit to contest the validity of the discharge of the insolvent on the ground that it was fraudulently obtained, may, within two years, apply to the court which granted it, to set aside and annul the same, but does not provide how the application shall be made. Held, that it is not necessary that the remedy be sought by motion in the insolvency proceeding, but an independent action may be maintained to set aside and annul the discharge, under Code Civil Proc. § 187, providing that, when the course of proceeding is not pointed out by the statute, any suitable mode of proceeding may be adopted.

Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county.

BELCHER, C. C. This is an action to set aside and annul the discharge from their debts, granted to the defendants in certain insolvency proceedings under the insolvent act of 1880. It is alleged in the complaint that on the seventeenth day of February, 1885, the defendants were doing business as partners, and the plaintiff had a claim against them which was provable against their estate in insolvency; that on that day a creditors' petition was filed against them, upon which they were, on the sixth of March, 1885, adjudged insolvents; that thereafter they applied for their discharge, and on the twenty-seventh of August, 1885, the court duly made an order discharging them from all their individual and partnership debts, in accordance with the provisions of the insolvent act. It is then alleged, as ground for setting aside and annulling the discharge, that while the proceedings in insolvency were pending, and prior to the granting of the discharge, the defendants, and each of them, promised and agreed to and with two of their creditors, C. Jansen and E. Sommer, that, if they would not oppose the application for discharge, then the defendants, in consideration thereof, would, after the granting of such discharge, pay to the said creditors the full amounts, respectively, due them; that these promises and agreements were made with the intent and for the purpose of influencing the action of Jansen and Sommer, and of inducing them, and each of them, not to oppose, delay, or obstruct the granting of a discharge to the defendants; that Jansen and Sommer, prior and up to the time of the making of said promise and agreement, intended, in good faith and upon what they deemed good and sufficient grounds, to oppose the granting of a discharge to either of the defendants, and that they would have opposed it but for the said promise and agreement; that they relied upon the said promise and agreement, and were thereby influenced and induced not to oppose the discharge of defendants; that the discharge was thus fraudulently obtained; and that plaintiff had no notice or information of the facts constituting the fraud until after the discharge was granted.

The defendants demurred to the complaint upon the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The court overruled the demurrer, and thereupon defendants answered specifically, denying that they made any promise to Jansen or Sommer, or influenced them in any way, or to any extent, not to oppose their discharge. Upon the trial the court found against the defendants, and adjudged that their discharge be set aside and annulled. The appeal is from the judgment and an order denying a new trial.

1. The insolvent act provides (section 49) that "no discharge shall be granted, or, if granted, shall be valid, if the debtor, * * * or any other person on his account or in his behalf, has influenced the action of any creditor at any stage of the proceedings by any pecuniary consideration or obligation." It further provides (section 53) "that any creditor of said debtor, whose debt was proved or provable against the estate in insolvency, who shall see fit to contest the validity of such discharge on the ground that it was fraudulently obtained, and who has discovered the facts constituting the fraud subsequent to the discharge, may, at any time within two years after the date thereof, apply to the court which granted it, to set aside and annul the same."

It is urged for the appellants that the promise to pay Jansen and Sommer was verbal and against the policy of the law and void, and therefore it did not constitute a "pecuniary consideration or obligation;" that the plaintiff should have alleged and shown that something besides a mere verbal promise was actually received by them. Whether the promise was verbal or in writing does not appear from the record; but, in whichever way made, it was equally against the policy of the insolvent law and void. The rule is that even a promissory note or bond given by an insolvent, or any one in his behalf, to prevent opposition to his discharge, is illegal and void, and its collections cannot be enforced. Bell v. Leggett, 7 N. Y. 176; Rice v. Maxwell, 13 Smedes & M. 289; Tuxbury v. Miller, 19 Johns. 311.

A pecuniary obligation is an obligation to pay money, and, in the absence of a statute requiring it to be in writing, may be verbal. The statute controlling this case, as has been seen, does not require that the obligation be in writing, or be one that can be enforced in the courts. It provides simply that, when the action of any creditor has been influenced at any stage of the proceedings by any pecuniary consideration or obligation, the discharge shall not be valid; and any other creditor who had no knowledge of the facts constituting the fraud when the discharge was granted, may, at any time within two years thereafter, apply to have it set aside and annulled. In our opinion, the complaint stated all the facts required by the statute to render the defendants' discharge invalid, and the demurrer was therefore properly overruled.

2. It is claimed that the mode of proceeding adopted by the plaintiff to have the discharge set aside is not the proper one; that the remedy should have been sought by motion in the insolvency proceeding, and not by an independent action. The statute says that any creditor having a provable debt may apply to the court which granted the discharge to set aside and annul the same, but does not say how the application shall be made. In such a case any suitable mode of proceeding may be adopted, (section 187, Code Civil Proc.) and we fail to see why the mode adopted here is not suitable and proper.

3. It is further claimed that the findings are not justified by the evidence. In answer to this it is enough to say that the court found the facts to be as they are set out in the complaint, and there was testimony tending to support all of its averments. A new trial cannot, therefore, be granted upon this ground.

It follows that the judgment and order should be affirmed.

BEAL v. OSBORNE and others. (No. 11,941.)*(Supreme Court of California. May 20, 1887.)CORPORATIONS—OFFICERS—REPORTS—MINES.

In an action against the directors of a mining corporation, to recover for their failure to post reports and accounts current, as required by St. Cal. 1880, p. 134, a finding that the company worked the mines during a period named, held, upon appeal, to be supported by evidence showing that, during that period, the mines were worked under the superintendence of A., who, when elected superintendent, had refused to accept the office, although it appeared that he made some claim to own the mine himself; the record not containing the evidence in support of such claim.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county.

Harris & Allen, for appellants. Hargrave & Gray, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This action is brought by a complaining stockholder in a mining corporation known as the Alvord Consolidated Mining Company, against the directors of the corporation, to recover the sum of $1,000 as liquidated damages for the failure of the directors to have certain reports and accounts current made and posted, as required by an act of the legislature of this state. St. Cal. 1880, p. 134. The case was tried and judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiff. The defendants moved for a new trial, and now appeal from the judgment and order denying their motion.

The principal point made for the appellants is that the finding "that during the month of August, 1885, said corporation worked its said mines and was engaged in carrying on and conducting the business of mining, and therein and thereabout received and disbursed money and incurred liabilities," is not justified by the evidence. It was clearly proved that the defendants were the directors of the corporation, and that at a meeting held by them in June, 1885, the defendant Osborne was elected as superintendent. He was at that time also the largest stockholder in the corporation, holding more than one-half of all its capital stock. During the month of August, 1885, work was carried on at the mine and mill under the superintendence of Osborne, and money was received and disbursed and liabilities incurred.

It is claimed for the appellants that the work was done, the money received and disbursed, and the liabilities incurred by Osborne on his own account; that under a sheriff's sale he had acquired some title to the property, which he was asserting against the company until a settlement for moneys which he had advanced and paid out for the company should be made; and that in the mean time he was putting up his own money, and doing the whole business in his own name and for himself. All record evidence showing that Osborne had acquired any rights to the property, as against the company, is omitted from the transcript, and we cannot say what its effect would be if presented. We must conclude, therefore, in support of the judgment, that he had acquired no valid rights.

The case, then, is this: Osborne was a stockholder and director of the corporation, and was elected superintendent of its works. When elected superintendent, he told the other directors that he would not serve as such, but nevertheless did serve, and during the whole month of August superintended and managed the business of taking out ores from the company's mine, and working them in its mill. These facts were sufficient to justify the finding objected to; and, looking at the whole record, we fail to find anything which can be held to excuse the defendants for their failure to have reports and accounts current made and posted as required by the statute.

The other points do not require a special notice. There are two of them only, and they relate to alleged errors of the court in overruling objections to questions propounded to plaintiff's witnesses. We see no error in the rulings, but, assuming that they were improper, no harm was done to the defendants, as the answers to the questions were immaterial.

It follows that the judgment and order should be affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. May 20, 1887.)

EXECUTION—SALE—CORPORATE STOCK.

A purchaser of shares of corporate stock at execution sale is bound by notice of defects in the judgment debtor's title.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, San Francisco city and county.

T. Z. Blakeman, appellant, pro se. John C. Hall, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. Blakeman instituted this action for the purpose of compelling the corporation defendant to transfer to him 2,500 shares of its capital stock, of which he claimed to have become the owner, by reason of his purchase thereof at sheriff's sale under execution against one C. H. Simpkins. The court found that the latter was the owner of five shares of the stock in controversy, and gave judgment that the same be transferred to the plaintiff as prayed for in the complaint. From that and the order denying him a new trial he has appealed. From the record it appears that the plaintiff purchased the whole of the stock he claims at sheriff's sale, under execution, as the property of C. H. Simpkins, and paid therefor the sum of three dollars; that Simpkins was not the owner of the stock then being offered for sale, except five shares thereof, and that the plaintiff had full notice of such facts. Blakeman was therefore a purchaser at such sale, with full notice of the defects in Simpkins' title to the property sold, and could not and did not acquire any better title thereto than was possessed by Simpkins, and, under such circumstances, can have no just ground of complaint against the judgment and order made and entered by the court below, which should be affirmed.

A question put to a witness in the following form: "State only what you know about the matter,"—is not objectionable.

2. SALE—ACTION—EVIDENCE.

In an action for failure to accept fruit contracted for, where the plaintiff's testimony was self-contradictory as to the merchantable condition of the fruit tendered, held, that a finding of the court to the effect that the fruit tendered was unmerchantable would be upheld.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county.

Harris & Allen, for appellant. Curtis, Otis & Conner, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. Plaintiff brought this action to recover from the defendant a sum of money alleged to be due on a contract to deliver certain peaches. The cause was tried by the court, and judgment rendered in favor of the defendant, and from that, and an order overruling her motion for a new trial, the plaintiff has appealed.

It is argued for plaintiff—First, that the court erred in overruling the objection, interposed by her counsel, to a question propounded to Mr. Burt, a witness for the defendant, as follows: "State only what you know about the matter." Second, that the evidence did not justify findings 1 and 2; she alleging that the evidence was uncontradicted that the fruit delivered "was in good and merchantable condition," according to the terms of the contract which had been made between the parties.

As to the first contention it was only necessary to say that the question was proper, and the plaintiff's counsel pointed his objection at the question, and not at the answer thereto, which last was not responsive to the question, and no motion was made to strike it out.

The second point is untenable, for the reason that Mrs. Hicks, the plaintiff, testified in effect that the fruit delivered was bruised more or less, which fact rendered it impossible that it could have been in good and merchantable condition, as in other portions of her testimony she claimed it to have been. Where such a conflict exists, the findings should be upheld.

The judgment and order should be affirmed.

DAVIS v. COUNTY OF YUBA. (No. 11,880.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 25, 1887.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—BONDS—PAYMENT.

Bonds issued in pursuance of the California act of 1872, (St. 1871-72, p. 662,) entitled "An act to authorize the county of Yuba to issue $60,000 of bonds for the purpose of constructing, repairing, and improving wagon roads and bridges in said county," are not authorized to be paid prior to the expiration of 20 years from their issue, except out of a surplus remaining after payment of interest due, in the "wagon-road and bridge interest and sinking fund," provided for in the act; and an attempt by the county to pay such bonds prior to maturity, in any other manner than out of such surplus, is void, as against a non-assenting holder.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Yuba county.

W. C. Belcher, for appellant. A. L. Hart and E. A. Forbes, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. J. This action was brought to recover $5,600 and interest, alleged to be due upon coupons attached to certain bonds issued by the county of Yuba, under an act of the legislature entitled "An act to authorize the county of Yuba to issue $60,000 of bonds for the purpose of constructing, repairing, and improving wagon roads and bridges in said county of Yuba," approved March 28, 1872. The cause was tried by the court, and written findings filed, upon which judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff for $400, being for the interest on bonds from the first day of January, 1882, to and including March 30, 1882. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial.

If defendant, the county of Yuba, had a right, under the law, and by virtue of their contract with the bondholders, of whom the plaintiff was one, to pay off the bonds in question on the thirtieth day of March, 1882, the judgment of the court below is correct, and should be affirmed. If, on the other hand, the bonds could not, without the consent of the holders, be paid until the expiration of 20 years from the date of their issue, the court below erred in refusing to render judgment in accordance with the prayer of the complaint.

The act of March 28, 1872, (St. 1871-72, p. 662,) so far as is necessary to the consideration of this case, reads as follows:

"Section 1. The board of supervisors of the county of Yuba, in the name of said county, are hereby authorized, empowered, and directed to make, execute, and issue, from time to time, as it shall become necessary, not to exceed $60,000 of bonds of said county.

"Sec. 2. Such bonds shall be issued in denominations of $1,000 each, and be payable in twenty years from the first day of January, 1873, and shall bear interest at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually on the first day of July and January of each year. Said bonds and interest shall be payable at the office of the treasurer of said county in United States gold coin. Such bonds shall be signed by the chairman of the board of supervisors, countersigned by the county auditor, and indorsed by the treasurer of said county. Forty coupons shall be attached to each bond, and numbered consecutively, and shall express the amount of interest due at such payment, and shall be signed in the same manner as the bonds are required to be signed. * * * The said chairman of said board of supervisors, county auditor, and treasurer shall proceed to dispose of said bonds for the best sum or price in gold coin of the United States they can procure: provided, that they shall not sell or negotiate the said bonds at less than 80 cents gold coin on the dollar."

"Sec. 4. The said board of supervisors shall each year, previous to the making out the duplicate or general assessment list for said county in each year, levy a tax, to be styled the 'Yuba County Wagon-Road and Bridge Interest and Sinking Fund Tax,' and sufficient to raise the amount of interest required to be paid; and in ten years after the issuing of said bonds they shall levy a tax for each and every year, to liquidate and pay said bonds, in ten years, that shall then remain unpaid. The said taxes shall be levied and collected in the same manner as the general taxes for county purposes, and, when collected, shall be paid to the county treasurer, to be kept in a separate fund, to be known as the 'Yuba County Wagon-Road and Bridge Interest and Sinking Fund,' to be by him applied to the payment of the interest, as herein provided, and for the redemption and payment of said bonds under the direction of the board of supervisors.

"Sec. 5. The said board of supervisors of said county shall make arrangements for the payment of the interest on said bonds when the same shall become due at least thirty days before the time of payment; and in the event said Yuba county wagon-road and bridge interest and sinking fund is insufficient, the said treasurer shall draw on the general fund of said county for said purpose; and, in the event these funds prove inadequate, the said board of supervisors are hereby authorized to make such contracts and arrangements or loans as may be necessary for the payment of said interest, and the protection of the faith of said county.

"Sec. 6. Whenever, at any time after the payment of the July interest of said bonds, there shall be in the funds so raised for the payment of the principal and interest of said bonds a sum of money amounting to five thousand dollars over and above the amount required for the payment of the annual interest, the said board of supervisors shall advertise, in one or more public newspapers, published in the counties of San Francisco and Yuba, for a period of four weeks, for sealed proposals for the redemption of said bonds; and, ten days from the time of the expiration of the time for such publication, the said board of supervisors shall open said sealed proposals, and the said treasurer shall pay and liquidate, so far as the funds then on hand shall extend, such bonds presented, under said proposals, as shall have the lowest value proposed, at which day they may be liquidated: provided, there shall be no proposals for less than par value, then the payment of said funds on hand shall be made on said bonds according to the number of their issue, of which the board of supervisors shall give four weeks' notice of the number of bonds to be so paid, after which time said bonds shall cease to bear or draw interest."

The county issued its bonds for the full amount authorized by the act and sold them. The bonds all bore date January 1, 1873, and were made payable 20 years after date, with interest at 8 per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually. Plaintiff was the owner of the coupons of 20 of these bonds, (for $1,000 each,) for the years 1882, 1883, 1884, and the first half of 1885, upon which he demanded payment July 2, 1885, all of which was refused.

The provisions of the statute are to be read in connection with the bonds. They constitute a part of the contract entered into between the county and the bondholders, and all persons acquiring possession or ownership of the bonds, or any of them, must be deemed to have done so with full knowledge of all the stipulations contained in the statute, precisely as though these provisions were embraced in the bonds themselves. Viewed in this light, it is apparent that the bonds were payable absolutely, and in any event, at the end of 20 years from the first day of January, 1873. The board of supervisors was required to levy a tax each year, to be styled the "Yuba County Wagon-Road and Bridge Interest and Sinking Fund Tax." This tax was required to be sufficient in amount to meet the interest, which was payable semi-annually. If, after the payment of the July interest in any year, there remained in this interest and sinking fund a sum of money equal to $5,000 over and above the amount required to pay the annual interest, it was to be paid upon the principal in the manner provided by the statute. To the extent of the means on hand thus raised, and in such fund, there can be no serious doubt but the county had a right to extinguish its bonds. It was so nominated in the law.

and, had the resources of that fund thus accumulated been sufficient to pay the bonds in full at the payment of the July interest, they could have been extinguished.

The further provision requiring an annual tax after 10 years to pay off the principal of the bonds remaining unpaid need not be considered, except as it may tend to throw light upon the questions presented; for the reason that the attempted payment occurred before the time for action, under that clause of the statute, had arrived.

The question still remains, had the board of supervisors a right to resort to other and independent means, such as issuing new bonds under sections 4048 to 4052, inclusive, of the Political Code, and, by placing the means thus raised in the sinking fund, to pay off the bonds of plaintiff against his consent. Respondent concedes that these bonds are contracts of which the act under which they were issued forms a part, and the obligations of which cannot be impaired by subsequent legislation. His contention is that it was the purpose of the legislature, by the act of March 28, 1872, to give to the county of Yuba 20 years, within which to make payment of said bonds, if it so desired, and, at the same time, to confer upon the county authority to make payment thereof at any time within that period, provided sufficient funds were in the hands of the officers of the county with which to make such payment. We cannot so construe the act of March 28, 1872.

As before stated, the bonds were dated January 1, 1873, and purported on their face to have 20 years to run. The holder could not enforce payment before the expiration of this last period. For 10 years the supervisors were required to levy a tax sufficient to pay the interest, and at the end of 10 years they were required to levy such tax for each and every year of the remaining 10 years as would be sufficient to pay principal and interest by the time the bonds fell due. The board of supervisors was authorized by section 6 of the act, "whenever, at any time, after the payment of the July interest of said bonds, there shall be in the funds so raised for the payment of the principal and interest of said bonds a sum of money amounting to $5,000, over and above the amount required for the payment of the annual interest," etc., to pay such sum on the principal of the bonds in the manner by the act provided. A sum of money thus raised, and in the fund, was the condition upon which any of the bonds could be paid before the expiration of 20 years. If the bonds were due, it could make no difference to the holder from what fund he was paid; but the very question here is, were they due? The 10 years had not expired, and there could not have been in the treasury any sum of money raised for the payment of principal, because no tax could be levied therefor until the end of 10 years. What the board of supervisors did in fact do, was to raise funds by the issue and sale of other bonds, for the payment of those we are considering.

We are of opinion the purchaser of these bonds had a right to hold and collect interest on them for 20 years, subject to the contingency provided in the statute under which they were issued of having them paid sooner, if the fund therein provided for should prove adequate to that end. This was a contingency which the purchaser could estimate, and which might well become an important factor in determining the value of the offered security. It was a part of his contract, and he had a right to rely upon such contingency as the only one under which the term of his investment could be curtailed.

It follows that plaintiff was entitled to recover according to the prayer of his complaint.

The judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and a new trial ordered.

BURTON v. TODD. (No. 11,777.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 24, 1887.)

EVIDENCE—COMPETENCY—JUDGMENT.

In an action of ejectment involving the ownership of a piece of land lying along the boundary line of two adjoining ranchos, it being stipulated that plaintiff and defendant are the respective owners of the two ranchos, and the only issue being as to the location of the boundary line, a judgment offered in evidence determining the title to the ranchos to be in plaintiff and defendant, respectively, held properly excluded.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county.

Action of ejectment. Defendant had judgment below.

A. Packard and R. B. Canfield, for appellant. Fernald, Cope & Boyd, for respondent.

MCFARLAND, J. This is an action of ejectment involving the ownership of a piece of land lying along the boundary line of two adjoining ranchos,—the one called "The Rancho Jesus Maria," and the other "The Rancho Todos Santos y San Antonio." Appellant is the owner of the former ranchito, and respondent is in possession of the land in contest as tenant of the Newhall Land & Farming Company, who own the other ranchito as successor in interest of one H. M. Newhall. The question to be determined in the case was, in which of the ranchos does the land in contest lie? The case was tried without a jury, and the court found for defendant. From an order refusing a new trial the plaintiff appeals. The only point made by appellant is that the court erred in refusing to allow appellant to introduce in evidence the judgment roll of a former action brought by plaintiff against the said H. M. Newhall, defendant's predecessor in interest.

The Rancho Jesus Maria was patented to the predecessors of plaintiff by the United States government in September, 1871, and the Rancho Todos Santos was patented to the predecessors of defendant's lessor in 1876. In 1881, or thereabouts, plaintiff herein commenced an action to quiet his title to the Jesus Maria, describing it as patented, against said H. M. Newhall, who was then the owner of the Todos Santos. Newhall answered, disclaiming any interest in the Jesus Maria, and averring that he was the owner in fee-simple of the Rancho Todos Santos y San Antonio, as described in the patent of the United States government to his grantors. The court found and decreed March 26, 1881, that plaintiff was the owner in fee of the Jesus Maria as patented; that Newhall was the owner in fee of the Rancho Todos Santos as patented; and that "there is no conflict whatever between the two tracts as patented by the United States where the two ranchos aforesaid adjoin." That was the case the judgment roll of which was ruled out in the case at bar. (One Weil was also made a defendant, but his connection with the case is immaterial here.)

The judge before whom this present case was tried also presided at the trial of said case of Burton v. Newhall; and he ruled out the judgment roll in that case, not because the parties in the case at bar were not bound by it, but because it was immaterial, as not throwing any light upon the issue then before the court. The parties, by written stipulation, had admitted the titles to the two ranchos as established by the judgment in the case of Burton v. Newhall; and the only point at issue was the proper location on the ground of a part of the line between the tracts as patented.

From an examination of the record we are unable to see how the judgment in the former case would have aided in the determination of this point, and therefore unable to see that the ruling of the court complained of was either erroneous or harmful to appellant. Order affirmed.

Craven and another v. CENTRAL PAC. R. Co. (No. 9,044.)

1. NEGLIGENCE—CONTRIBUTORY—INSTRUCTION.

In an action to recover for injuries received in alighting from a train, where it was claimed that plaintiff heedlessly jumped from the train while it was in motion, an instruction that she could not recover if her negligence contributed to the accident is not erroneous for omitting the word "proximately," as in such case any negligence which contributed to the accident must have contributed proximately.

2. SAME—EVIDENCE—PREVIOUS NEGLIGENCE.

In an action to recover for injuries received in alighting from a train, where it was in dispute whether plaintiff carelessly jumped from the train while it was in motion, held, that defendant might show that, during the year preceding the accident, plaintiff had frequently traveled over the same route, had frequently jumped off the cars while in motion, and had been warned of the danger of doing so.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

Action to recover damages for personal injuries. Defendant had judgment below.

Alfred H. Cohen, for appellants. Wilson & Wilson, for respondent.

MCFARLAND, J. This is an appeal from an order of the court below denying appellants' motion for a new trial. The action was brought to recover damages for personal injuries received by the appellant Nettie K. Craven, who is the wife of the other appellant, in alighting from a train of cars of respondent. As she was about to get off the train at or near a place called "Willow-Street Station," in Alameda county, she was either thrown or fell violently to the ground, and was injured; and the main question in the case was one of fact, namely: After the train had stopped, did respondent's employes, without giving appellant a reasonable time to alight, carelessly and suddenly start it, and thus cause her to fall, or did she carelessly and needlessly jump from the train while it was in motion, and thus cause or contribute to her own injury? Upon this question the evidence was conflicting,—although, so far as the record shows, the weight of it was against appellant,—and the jury found a verdict for respondent. Under these circumstances the verdict should not be set aside, and a new trial ordered, unless there were clear errors of law occurring at the trial, which might reasonably have affected the jury to the prejudice of appellants.

The two grounds of error mainly relied on by appellants' counsel are—First, a certain omission in the charge of the court to the jury; and, second, the overruling of appellants' objection to certain evidence.

1. The court instructed the jury very fully as to the duty of railroad companies when stopping at stations for the discharge of passengers. They were told that "a railroad company carrying passengers for hire has not discharged its duty, or relieved itself from liability to them, until it has stopped at the end of their journey a reasonable time for them to get off the train in safety;" also, "if you believe the defendant did not afford the plaintiff Mrs. Craven a reasonable time for this purpose, but started the train suddenly while she was in the act of getting off the car, and before she had time to alight, it failed to perform its duty, was guilty of negligence, and is liable to her for damages she has suffered thereby not exceeding $20,000." Other instructions were given to the same effect. But the court instructed the jury that if the negligence of the plaintiff caused or contributed to the injury complained of, she was not entitled to recover; and appellants contend that a new trial should be granted because the court, in its charge on this point, omitted the qualification that, in order to defeat a recovery, the negligence of plaintiff must have contributed proximately to the injury.

A general definition of contributory negligence should, no doubt, include the word "proximate," although it is doubtful if juries attach any very definite meaning to that word. And if, in the case at bar, there were any room for doubt whether the alleged negligence of plaintiff contributed proximately or remotely to the injury, the point here made by appellants might be material. But the whole evidence revolved around this one question: Did the plaintiff, at the very time of the accident, negligently jump off the train while it was moving, and thus cause or contribute to the injury? If she did not, then the verdict should have been for plaintiffs. If she did, then there can be no doubt that her negligence contributed proximately to the injury. It was the very thing which then and there directly and immediately caused it. Under these circumstances, if the court had used the word "proximately" in its instructions, their effect upon the jury would not have been changed; and it would be a vain and unwarrantable thing to order an entire new trial of this action in order to allow the judge of the court below to insert in his charge a word which, when there, would be of no practical consequence.

2. The second point made by appellants is more difficult of solution. There being a conflict of evidence as to the averment that plaintiff carelessly jumped off the train while it was moving at the time of the injury, the court, against the objections of plaintiffs, allowed defendant to introduce evidence to show that within the year preceding the accident plaintiff had frequently traveled over that route, had frequently jumped off the cars while in motion, and had been warned against the danger of doing so. This ruling is assigned as an error for which a new trial should be granted. There is no doubt of the general rule applicable to criminal cases that, on the trial of a defendant for the particular crime charged, evidence of the commission by him of other crimes cannot be introduced. The same rule seems to apply in civil cases, when it is sought to show that some specific act was done maliciously, or that it was done intentionally with some definite purpose, and not carelessly, from mere force of habit. But when, in the absence of any question of evil intent, or of any intent at all, the point of fact to be determined is whether or not a person did a certain thing, or did it in a particular way, and the direct testimony as to the fact is conflicting, then evidence is admissible to show that he was in the habit of doing the thing in question, or accustomed to do it in a particular way. A sensible man called upon, out of court, to determine whether or not a certain person had, on a certain occasion, carelessly jumped off a moving train of cars, and finding the direct testimony as to the matter conflicting, would naturally and properly give some weight to the fact that the person was in the habit of alighting from cars in that manner; and the consideration of such a fact in cases resembling the one at bar has frequently been sanctioned in court. The evidence, at least, had some legal tendency to show that plaintiff's conduct at the time of the injury was such as defendant ascribed to her.

In Fitzpatrick v. Railroad Co., 128 Mass. 13, which was an action for injuries to a minor while on defendant's track, evidence that plaintiff had frequently been on the track on previous occasions, and had been warned to keep off it, was held to be admissible.

In Randall v. Telegraph Co., 54 Wis. 142, 11 N. W. Rep. 419, it was held that, in an action for injuries caused by defendant allowing its wires to lie across the road at a particular place, it was admissible to show that defendant's wires were down at other places, and at times previous to the date of the injury complained of.

In State v. Boston & M. R. R., 58 N. H. 410, the question being as to the rate of speed at which defendant's train was going at a particular time and place, evidence was held admissible of the rate of speed at which the same engineer drove the train at that place on previous occasions.

In the case of State v. Manchester & L. R., 52 N. H. 549, the court uses language peculiarly applicable to the case at bar. One of the questions in that case was whether or not the engineer and fireman of defendant's train ran it over a certain crossing at the time when the accident complained of occurred, without ringing the bell or sounding the whistle. There was direct evidence on one side that neither of the signals was given, and just as direct evidence on the other side that they were both properly given. Under these circumstances the court below admitted evidence that the same engineer and fireman, during the preceding year, had a number of times passed the crossing without giving the signals. Upon appeal the appellate court held the evidence to have been properly admitted, and in their opinion say: "It would seem to be axiomatic that a man is more likely to do or not to do a thing, or to do or not to do it in a particular way, as he is in the habit of doing or not doing it. But this must be understood of acts which are done, or omitted to be done, without any particular intent or purpose to injure any one. It cannot apply to acts that are done intentionally, willfully, or maliciously, because such acts are done with a specific object in view, and they are performed, not by force of habit, but with a definite purpose. * * * If, in this case, it had been charged that these agents of the corporation had knowingly, intentionally, willfully, and maliciously done or omitted to do any act, for the purpose of injuring the deceased or anybody else, then the only questions would be, was the act done or omitted as charged? and did the knowledge, the intention, the will, or the malice exist when the act was done or omitted? But when the question is, did these servants of the road, without any intention whatever, and through mere negligence and carelessness, omit to give these signals on that occasion, we think the inquiry was properly made as to what they had done before in that regard, and whether they had or had not grown habitually negligent of the requirements of the road in that particular. In this view of the case, we think the evidence was admissible, not as evidence of character, not as evidence of fitness or unfitness, but simply as having some tendency to show that, on this particular occasion, these agents were more probably negligent and careless because they had before frequently neglected the same duty with impunity, and had thus become habitually negligent in that regard."

These views of the supreme judicial court of New Hampshire seem to us to be correct; and, applying them to the case at bar, they solve the point now under discussion in favor of the ruling of the court below. The two cases of Largan v. Central R. Co., 40 Cal. 272, and Martinez v. Planet, 36 Cal. 578, cited by appellant, are not in point.

It may be remarked generally that, unless the case falls within some well-recognized class of exceptions, an evidentiary fact is relevant to the principal fact when the former tends to show that the latter probably did or did not occur; and mere remoteness usually goes to the weight, and not to the admissibility, of evidence.

Some other points are made in the record, but the two above noticed are the only ones discussed in the briefs. We see no error that would warrant a new trial.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: THORNTON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—ACCOUNTS—JURY.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. §§ 1716, 1717, providing for trial by jury in probate proceedings, is not to be considered as granting an absolute right to a jury trial in cases of the settlement of accounts of executors and administrators, in view of the fact that the language of the Code in many places implies that the settlement is to be by the court.

2. SAME—SUBSTANTIAL ERROR.

The verdict being only advisory, if the court finds upon all the issues submitted, mere irregularity in the formation of the jury, or error in the instructions, cannot affect the substantial rights of the parties.

3. SAME—EVIDENCE—WIDOW.

Upon the settlement of an administrator's account, where it appeared that the administrator had paid to the widow only a small portion of the monthly allowance made by the probate court for the support of the family pending the administration, on the plea that she had abandoned the children, testimony offered on her part of her readiness and willingness to take care of the children, and that she was forcibly excluded from the family residence by the administrator, should be admitted.

4. SAME—DELAY IN SETTLEMENT.

In the settlement of an administrator's account, evidence is admissible to show that he unnecessarily prolonged the settlement of the estate.

5. SAME—INSANITY.

The administrator having been confined in an insane asylum for a time during the administration, a ruling admitting in evidence his certificate of discharge from the asylum, held not prejudicial error.

6. SAME—ITEMS ALLOWED.

An administrator should not be allowed in his accounts for expenditures made in building an addition to a hotel belonging to the estate, or in purchasing adjoining property. The allowance of traveling expenses of the administrator's attorney, or of the salary of a book-keeper, will not necessarily be considered as error.

7. SAME—WHAT CHARGEABLE—INTEREST.

An administrator is not chargeable with interest agreed to be paid on a loan improperly made by him, unless he has collected or could collect such interest.

8. EVIDENCE—TAXES—PAYMENT.

Oral evidence of the payment of taxes is competent, especially if the loss of the tax receipts is first shown.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county.

Settlement of administrator's account.

The estate consisted, inter alia, of a dairy ranch of about 800 acres near Santa Cruz, and an undivided one-half of a hotel in Santa Cruz known as the Pacific Ocean House. The administrator, T. W. Moore, was committed to an insane asylum, April 28, 1881, and remained there until December 22, 1881. On April 20, 1882, he received a certificate of discharge, and July 25, 1882, his restoration to capacity was judicially determined. Objection was made to the admission in evidence of the discharge, but it was admitted, and the court ruled, in regard to the administrator's incapacity, that, after his restoration to capacity, he could ratify acts performed by him as administrator while insane. The other facts appear in the opinion.

Chas. B. Younger, for appellant. Hall & Rodgers, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. The decedent died October 30, 1871, leaving a widow and five minor children, four of whom were the offspring of a previous marriage. Letters of administration were issued to the respondent March 4, 1872, and an inventory filed June 27, 1872. Respondent, as administrator, took possession of the property of the estate, but allowed the widow and the children to occupy the residence until May, 1877, when, as is claimed by respondent, she voluntarily left with her own child, but, as she contends, she was forcibly excluded by the respondent. On the twenty-ninth of April, 1874, the court made an order allowing "for the support and maintenance of the family of deceased, consisting of a widow and five minor children, the sum of $250 per month, from the death of the deceased until the close of the administration."

September 16, 1882, the respondent filed an account of his administration. The appellant, William H. Moore, a minor child of the deceased, and a son of the widow, contested the account, filing 26 so-called exceptions to different items, each exception based upon many different grounds, and some of them attacking many items of the account. Upon the trial of the issues thus made, the contestant demanded a jury, which was granted by the court, and special issues were found.

The account was very lengthy, extending through many years, and including a great many receipts and expenditures. The trial was long, tedious, and complicated, imposing upon court and counsel a vast amount of labor, which would not have been necessary had the trial been before the court without a jury.

Very many of the alleged errors complained of arose in the impaneling of the jury, and the allowance or refusal of instructions. The record in fact affords very convincing evidence of the unsuitableness of this mode of trial in such contests; and the question arises whether the contestant was entitled to a jury trial as a matter of right, or whether it was allowed only as a matter of discretion, as in equity cases, the verdict being only advisory to the court. The fact that a jury trial is so inappropriate and inconvenient upon such a settlement raises a strong presumption that it was never intended to allow it as a matter of right. It is utterly impracticable for a jury to wade through, comprehend, and disentangle a long account, or to express an intelligent judgment upon each item. Furthermore, it was evidently contemplated that the settlement should be made by the court. Many matters are left entirely to the discretion of the court to allow or disallow. In many places the Code speaks of claims allowed by the court, and provides for a referee to examine the account and report thereon. It has been held that the right of trial by jury is secured by the constitution only in cases in which it had previously existed in the administration of justice according to the course of the common law. Probate matters belonged to ecclesiastical jurisdiction, where a jury was not a right. Such a proceeding is not really an action at law, as defined in the Code. Section 22, Code Civil Proc. There may be cases in which it would be very desirable to submit an issue arising on the settlement of an account to a jury. In such cases, no doubt, the court may frame an issue for a jury, and the verdict will even then be only advisory to the court. The trial of the issues made required the examination of a long account. That, indeed, was the purpose of the entire proceeding. In such cases the court may of its own motion, and without the consent of the parties, refer such issue to a referee to hear and report. And we do not understand that at common law the right existed to have the examination of a long and complicated account made by a jury. If the verdict is only advisory to the court, and the court has found upon all the issues submitted, it would seem that a mere irregularity in the formation of the jury, or error in the instructions, could not affect the substantial rights of the appellant.

The difficulty with this construction is found in sections 1716 and 1717, Code Civil Proc. Section 1716 is: "All issues of fact joined in probate proceedings must be tried in conformity with the requirements of article 2, chapter 2, of this title; and in all such proceedings the party affirming is plaintiff, and the one denying or avoiding is defendant. Judgments therein, on the issues joined, as well as for costs, may be entered by the court, and enforced by execution or otherwise by the court, as in civil actions." Section 1717 reads: "If no jury is demanded, the court must try the issues joined. If, on written demand, a jury is called by either party, and the issues are not sufficiently made up by the written pleadings on file, the court, on due notice to the opposite party, must settle and frame the issues to be tried, and submit the same, together with the evidence of each party, to the jury, on which they must render a verdict. * * *"

This language is certainly very positive and comprehensive. Was it really intended that every possible disputed fact in any step in the administration of an estate might, as a matter of right, be made an issue to be tried by a jury? If such be the construction, any litigious heir, though entitled to but an ininfinitesimal share of the estate, might devote the entire amount to court costs, and indefinitely prolong the settlement; for the same chapter provides for motions for new trial, bills of exception, and appeals, as in civil actions.

We think the courts would have little difficulty in conforming the operation of these sections to those cases in which the Code has expressly authorized issues of fact to be framed. Without such a provision under the decisions, parties to a contest in the probate court would never be entitled to a jury trial. But we think the statute should not be construed as granting an absolute right to a jury trial in cases in which, according to the course of the common law, a jury trial was denied as inappropriate, and especially upon the settlement of the accounts of administrators and executors, where so much is left to the mere discretion of the judge, and in the face of the language of the Code, in many sections implying that the settlement shall be by the court. Sections 1632, 1636, 1637, 1638, Code Civil Proc.

We think the court erred in excluding the testimony offered to show that the widow was forcibly excluded from the family residence. It was claimed by the administrator that she had voluntarily left with her own child, and thereupon the administrator seems to have taken charge of the residence and the other children of the deceased. From that time only $50 per month was paid to the widow, although $250 had been allowed by the court. The pretended reason for this, of course, was that she had abandoned the other children of the deceased. The same fact constituted the excuse for expending the money of the estate in the support of the other children. The administrator had been allowed to testify that she voluntarily left; that she had not offered to return; and that he had interposed no objections to her doing so. She offered evidence to disprove all this, and to show that all the supplies, clothing, groceries, etc., contained in the account, were to maintain the homestead and family in the exclusive possession of respondent while she was forcibly excluded from the family residence by the administrator. Presumptively the mother would be the head of the family, and the proper person to receive the family allowance. It must be, however, in the power of the court to direct the expenditure of the allowance in such manner as will insure the maintenance of the family, and it may happen in some cases that the mother would not be a suitable person to be intrusted with it. The administrator does not, however, by virtue of his office, become charged with the care of the family, and had no right arbitrarily to remove the children from the mother. Nor were the disbursements here in question proper charges against the estate. If, however, the conduct of the administrator was upon investigation found to be justifiable, and the expenditures for the family necessary, a reasonable allowance could be made for the support of that portion of the family. It would appear that to determine this question the evidence excluded was material and proper.

For the same reasons we think the court erred in sustaining the objection to the question asked Mrs. Moore relative to her readiness and willingness to care for, educate, and support the minor children of deceased.

We cannot say that the court erred in admitting testimony as to the traveling expenses of the attorney for the administrator. In allowing such claims, two limitations must always be kept in view: (1) The allowance should not exceed a reasonable compensation for the labor actually performed; (2) It should never exceed just compensation for such legal assistance as was necessary to enable the administrator to properly discharge the duties of his trust. This measure of compensation would be the same whether the attorney resided at Santa Cruz or San Francisco. The question is, what would be a reasonable compensation for the services required? An allowance ought not to be made for an attorney for services which the administrator should perform himself, and for doing which he receives a commission, nor for services made necessary in consequence of neglect of duty, or unnecessary and unreasonable delay in closing the administration. Such services should be paid for by the administrator from his commissions.

We think the court erred in allowing the claim for moneys expended in the erection of a new building to the Pacific Ocean House. This money was not expended in the care and management of the estate. It was the duty of the administrator to administer and turn over the estate as soon as possible, and not to speculate with it, or carry on business on its account, or to improve it for the benefit of the heirs. Page's Estate, 57 Cal. 240; Brenham v. Story, 39 Cal. 179; Tompkins v. Weeks, 26 Cal. 50; Knight's Estate, 12 Cal. 200.

In the matter of the items for clothing and supplies for the children of decedent enough has already been said. If there was error in allowing the other charges set out in point 6 of appellant's brief, such error is not made to appear to us.

As to the books of account, it does not appear what the nature of the account was. Probably it was an account of the receipts and expenditures on the farm. Nor does it appear that there was not other evidence as to each of those expenditures. From the bill of exceptions we cannot undertake to say that the evidence was not admissible in connection with other testimony.

We cannot lay down as a universal rule that in no case should an administrator be allowed to employ a book-keeper. This may properly be left to the probate judge. He may allow it if proper. If the services were such as, under the circumstances, the administrator ought to have performed, and for which his commissions are intended to compensate him, such charge should be disallowed.

We think the court erred in allowing the sum of $800 for the lot of land adjacent to the Pacific Ocean House. After what we have said in regard to the expenditure for building the addition to the hotel, it is not necessary to discuss the matter further.

We are unable to see how the appellant was injured by the ruling in regard to the certificate of discharge from the lunatic asylum.

We also think the court erred in excluding testimony offered to prove that the administration of the estate was unnecessarily prolonged through the willful fault of the administrator. This point seems to have been made in most, if not all, of the exceptions, and was a most important question with reference to the settlement. We refrain from expressing any opinion as to whether, as a matter of fact, the administrator is in fault in that respect; but, so far as the bill of exceptions discloses, there is no good reason why the estate could not have been settled up, and the property turned over, to the owners within one year. If he has failed in his duty in this respect, he should not be allowed any costs incurred which have been necessitated by such delay. It would seriously affect the question of the allowance of attorney's fees, and still more seriously the matter of the allowance for the support of the family. Apparently it is the most important question involved in the controversy.

There seems to have been no lack of evidence in regard to the expenses paid by the administrator before his appointment. They were fully proved to the satisfaction of the court.

There was no error in admitting oral testimony of the payment of taxes. The tax receipt is an official document provided by law, and raises a presumption that it is given for taxes duly assessed. This evidence, however, does not preclude other evidence, and in this case the loss of the receipts was shown before the oral testimony was received.

We do not understand from the findings that the estate suffered any loss from the loan of $2,000 to J. D. Chace & Co. It seems to have been found that the full sum was charged against the administrator without interest. If interest ought to have been charged upon that amount, the record fails to show the facts which would require it. While the good faith of the administrator is no defense for the loss of money so loaned by him, still he cannot be held responsible for the interest stipulated to be paid unless he has collected or can collect it.

This decision is of course upon the facts as presented in the record, which is quite meager. Upon a retrial it is possible a very different case may be made. The order and decree are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial of the contest in accordance with this opinion.

In re Disbarment of MOORE. (No. 11,905.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 25, 1887.)

ATTORNEY—DISBARMENT.

In a proceeding for the disbarment of an attorney, held, that charges against defendant of receiving money from a client to apply to certain purposes, and of retaining the money, and not applying it as agreed, were sustained by the evidence, and that defendant should be suspended from practice for five years.

In bank. Original proceeding.

N. S. Wirt, for prosecution. Mr. Moore, for defense.

THORNTON, J. The accusation against Moore contains four charges: "First. That about the eleventh day of October, 1886, one Erza F. Denison paid to said defendant the sum of $65 to procure a searcher to search the records and files of the county clerk's office of the city and county of San Francisco, and to have an abstract made of the suits pending against said Denison in the various courts of said city and county; that said search and abstract were never made, and said $65 were never returned or repaid to said Denison in any way. Second. That about the thirteenth of October, 1886, said defendant was requested and authorized by said relator to collect the sum of $90 from said Denison as an attorney's fee for professional services rendered by said relator, and it was then and there agreed that said defendant should have thirty (30) dollars from your relator for collecting the said ninety (90) dollars from said Denison; that about the twentieth of October, 1886, said defendant collected said $90, and kept the $60, the balance belonging to your relator, and still keeps and detains all of the same, without just cause after demand. Third. That said defendant obtained the further sum of $60 from said Denison about the twenty-fifth day of October, 1886, to procure dismissals of said cases pending against said Denison in said city and county, and that said cases and suits were not and are not now dismissed. Fourth. That said defendant obtained the further sum of $150 from said Denison to procure dismissals of the cases of Burke, Bourne, Forbes, Treadwell, Warrington, and Gray against Denison, and agreed in writing to repay said sum of $150 to said Denison, in case said actions were not dismissed, and said actions were not and are not now dismissed, and the sum last aforesaid has not been repaid, and said defendant still keeps and withholds said sum of $150 after demand." It is further averred that at all times referred to in the accusation the defendant was an attorney and counselor at law of this court, having been duly admitted to practice herein.

As to the first charge, the abstract was in fact made by one Peterson at the procurement of Moore. The sum of $65 was received by defendant to pay a searcher for this service, a portion of which, amounting to $15, was paid to Peterson at or about the time he made the abstract. The remainder was paid him by Moore after this proceeding was commenced. The testimony shows that the $65 was received to pay a searcher to make the abstract mentioned in the charge; that the abstract was made; that $15 was paid for it; that the remaining $50 was retained by Moore, and paid to Peterson after this proceeding was commenced. The evidence strongly tends to show that the $50 was paid to Peterson for making an affidavit the contents of which were not true.

The second charge is proven, in substance. The $90 was received from Denison to settle a suit brought by the Miners' Foundry against Denison, which sum was, by agreement, to go to the relator, Wirt, as a fee for legal services for the Miners' Foundry in the action against Denison. This was received by the defendant for the purpose above stated, and never paid over, and the suit was not settled. The evidence is not clear that defendant knew that this money was to be paid to Wirt as a fee, but that, in our opinion, is immaterial. The charge is, in substance, that the money was to be collected and paid over to Wirt. Defendant did collect the money of Denison, and never paid it over.

The evidence as to the third charge is too general to establish it. We find it not proved.

The fourth charge is proved. The payment of the money by Denison to Moore is proved by a receipt dated October 27, 1886, as follows:

"Received of E. F. Denison the sum of one hundred and fifty ($150) dollars, the same being for fees and court expense in procuring dismissals of the following actions: Burke v. Denison, Bourne v. Denison, Forbes v. Denison, Treadwell v. Denison, Warrington v. Denison, Gray v. Denison,—the same to be repaid in case I am not successful in said matters of procuring dismissals.
CHAS. H. MOORE."

We are satisfied this money was never used by Moore for the purpose for which it was received, and that it was never returned to Denison; nor was any settlement ever made by which Denison released Moore from the repayment of this money, or any other money to him in case it was not used in procuring the dismissal of the cases mentioned on the receipt, as was promised in the receipt. Denison denies that any such settlement was made, and, in our opinion, the proof sustains his denial.

In the matter of the three charges sustained, Moore was acting as attorney at law for Denison, regularly retained by him. As to the money he was to collect for the relator, Wirt, (specified in the second charge,) he was acting for Denison, and the money he was to collect was to settle the suit above named brought by the Miners' Foundry against Denison. The money was not paid to Wirt, and the suit was not settled. Neither was it returned to Denison. In the matter above mentioned, defendant was guilty of a violation of his duties as an attorney and counselor at law.

The judgment of the court is that the said Charles H. Moore be suspended from the practice of law in the courts of this state for the period of five years from the entry hereof.

ROWE v. COUNTY OF KERN. (No. 11,869.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 25, 1887.)

OFFICE AND OFFICER—COMPENSATION—COLLECTOR OF TAXES.

The tax collector of a county cannot recover, on a quantum meruit, from the county for services performed in the collection of county licenses, either by virtue of his office, or as a private individual, although the order imposing such licenses is passed after his term of office has begun, where the board of supervisors has made no provision for his pay for the collection of such licenses, where they have never authorized him to collect the same in any other capacity than as tax collector; and where both the supervisors and the tax collector supposed it to be his duty as such officer to collect the county license, and did not expect that he would receive any pay except as tax collector.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Kern county.

J. W. Freeman and B. Brundage, for appellant. Taylor & Holl, for respondent.

McKINSTRY, J. The action is upon the quantum meruit to recover the reasonable value of services alleged to have been performed in collecting county license taxes. The board of supervisors passed an order requiring all persons engaged in enumerated business and occupations to pay a license tax. If, when the board passed that ordinance, the duty at once attached to and was imposed upon the plaintiff, as tax collector, to collect the county license taxes, it was a duty to be performed without additional compensation; since the board of supervisors did not fix or determine the compensation to be paid, or provide that any compensation should be paid, to the tax collector for his services in collecting county licenses. There is no implied obligation on the part of municipal or quasi municipal corporations which obliges them to make compensation to officers of the municipality, unless the right to it is expressly given by law, ordinance, or contract. Such officers are deemed to have accepted their offices with knowledge of the provisions of the charter or law. 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. (3d Ed.) 230.

If it was the duty of plaintiff, as tax collector, to collect the county licenses, he knew, when he accepted the office of tax collector, that the county supervisors might pass a license ordinance, and that it remained with the supervisors in their legislative capacity (if, indeed, they had any power in the premises) to provide, or not to provide, fees or compensation for the service of collecting the licenses. Moreover, this action was not brought by the plaintiff as tax collector. His counsel insist that it was no part of his duty as tax collector to collect the county license taxes. But if the tax collector, as such, had nothing to do with respect to county license taxes, and the sole power of appointing a collector of such license taxes was in the board of supervisors, the supervisors of Kern county never, by ordinance or resolution, appointed the plaintiff license collector, or provided for his appointment, or authorized him to collect the same. The plaintiff, as a private person, could not, simply by inducing the payment of license taxes to himself, and then paying into the treasury the amount so received by him, establish a contract relation between himself and the county, from which could arise an implied promise to pay him for his services as having been performed for the county.

Whether the tax collector is ex officio collector of county licenses, or the county license collector must be a separate officer nominated by the supervisors, the collector of licenses is a county officer, clothed with public responsibilities, and invested with a public character. If the board of supervisors had formally appointed the plaintiff collector of county license taxes, without providing any salary or fees for the office, he could not, as we have seen, have claimed compensation after performing services, because he would have taken the office with knowledge that he was to receive no fees or salary. If the plaintiff voluntarily assumed public functions which there was no officer to perform, he can have no better claim to compensation than if the office had been created, and he had been duly appointed to fill it. Further, the fact seems to be that both the individual members of the board of supervisors and the plaintiff himself supposed it to be his duty as tax collector to collect the county license taxes, and did not suppose or expect he would receive any compensation for such service, except as tax collector. If the plaintiff may now say he did not perform the service as tax collector he must be treated as a mere volunteer. Thus, if any implied promise to pay the value of the services could arise prima facie out of the performance of the service, the presumption of promise to pay was overcome by proof of the circumstances showing that plaintiff did not expect any compensation, except as tax collector, but showing the contrary. Order reversed.

FURLONG and others v. COONEY and others. (No. 9,674.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 21, 1887.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—ADVERSE POSSESSION—OFFER OF SETTLEMENT.

The defendant, in an action of ejectment, had been in the open, exclusive, and notorious occupancy of the strip of land in controversy, claiming it as a portion of his lot, from 1850 to 1876, when it was discovered by a survey that it belonged to the lot of the plaintiff. As soon as the facts of the survey were made known to the defendant, he offered to buy the claim of the plaintiff, rather than have any trouble. Held, that the defendant had become invested with a perfect title to the land in controversy under the statute of limitations, which his offer to buy out plaintiff's claim did not invalidate.

2. ACTIONS—JOINDER—EJECTMENT.

Under the California Code, the plaintiff, in an action of ejectment, cannot join a claim for damages done by the defendant to other property than that sued for.

Commissioners' decision. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

B. McKime, for respondents. M. Cooney, for appellants.

BELCHER, C. C. The controversy in this case is about a strip of land 68 feet 9 inches long and from 4 to 13 inches wide. The strip is a part of 50-vara lot No. 186, which is situated on the side of Telegraph Hill, in the city of San Francisco, and is bounded on the north by Union street, and on the west by Montgomery street. The plaintiffs claim title to the strip under an alcalde grant of the lot, and through sundry mesne conveyances from the grantee, and the defendants claim title to it under the statute of limitations. The case was tried before a jury, and the plaintiffs recovered a verdict, on which judgment was entered for the possession of the strip in question, and damages in the sum of $300 for the withholding thereof. The defendants moved for a new trial, and now prosecute this appeal from the judgment and an order denying their motion.

The material facts of the case, as disclosed by the evidence, are as follows:

In 1850, John J. Cooney, the husband of the defendant Hannah Cooney, became the owner of a part of lot 186, bounded on the north by Union street, and extending back southerly $68\frac{3}{4}$ feet, and having its western line parallel with Montgomery street, and distant therefrom $68\frac{1}{4}$ feet. In 1851 Cooney had his lot surveyed out, and then built a two-story house thereon. The house faced on Union street, and from its south-west corner he built a fence back to his rear line, and then around, so that with the house the lot was wholly inclosed. Subsequently he built a one-story dining-room and kitchen at the end of his house, leaving then about 15 feet of the rear portion of his lot uncovered by buildings. The west line of the dining-room and kitchen was four inches further west than the corresponding line of the main house, and the roof extended out five inches further. From the time of its construction until his death, in 1879, Cooney resided with his family continuously in this house, and since his death his widow has resided in it. During all the time of his residence there Cooney claimed to own all the land covered by his buildings and improvements, and, so far as appears, his ownership was never questioned or disputed until 1876, when the plaintiffs became the owners of the lot lying west of and adjacent to his property.

A few years after Cooney erected his house, one O'Connor built a two-story house on the lot now owned by the plaintiffs, placing it back from Union street, so that the front line of it was only a few inches north of the rear line of Cooney's main building. Prior to 1876 that lot was owned and occupied by several different parties, one of whom, E. B. Mastick, was called as a witness for the plaintiffs, and he was the only one of them called by either side. He testified that he knew the lot from 1853 to 1864, and that he bought it and was in the use of it for five or six years, and built a barn there. "I never had the place surveyed. I supposed that the Cooney houses were east of my easterly line,—the easterly line of this land in controversy. No question arose about it when I lived there. When I bought the lot, Mr. Cooney's buildings were standing on the west line of his lot, where they stood during all the years I was there. We never had any dispute about our lines of land. They were good neighbors. Mr. Cooney's house was, I think, a two-story in front and one-story in rear, and a high board fence extended from his kitchen to the rear of the lot south. It was all inclosed. It was in that way all the time I was there." And on cross-examination, he said: "When I bought my lot I saw the Cooney buildings and fence there. Mr. Cooney occupied these premises and buildings with his family from 1853 to 1864. To my own knowledge he was in actual possession of the ground all that time. I never disturbed him, nor did he disturb me. The house now called Furlong house formed the inclosure on the east, and the Cooney fence was to the rear. Question. Did you during all that period, from 1853 to 1864, acquiesce in the possession by John J. Cooney of all this land inclosed and built upon by him? Answer. Yes, sir; I never knew of their being beyond the line."

The defendant Hannah Cooney was called as a witness for defendants, and testified, among other things, that she began to live on the lot in 1850, and had resided there ever since. "My husband and family occupied the land and premises upon which our buildings and fences now stand since 1850 to the time of his death, continuously, without any interruption by anybody until Mr. Furlong interfered with us. * * * He did not hold this strip of land under anybody. He claimed it in his own right. He occupied it as his home and for his family during all those years, and he held it as his own. * * * Mr. O'Connor built this Furlong house where it stands. The eaves of my kitchen and the main house were just the same when he built his house as they are now. * * * We did not know we were off our line, and did not know until after survey made in June, 1876. * * * I believe my husband had a survey made in early times,—I think it was in 1851,—and according to the survey we built our house there. I recollect his making a survey. We lived on this property before we put up our building. We had a tent there before that."

Another witness was called for defendants who had owned and lived upon the lot adjoining on the south the Cooney and Furlong lots for about 30 years. He testified that he had known these lots since 1851, and as to the times when and the persons by whom the improvements thereon were erected and occupied, and then said: "I never heard any of the former owners of the Furlong lot dispute Mr. Cooney's right to occupy this land upon which his buildings stood. I never heard any one dispute Mr. Cooney's right to occupy the land in dispute, and upon which his buildings have stood since 1851. Hudson occupied the adjoining lot at one time as owner. He never disputed Cooney's right to it. His right to it was never questioned by the owners before Furlong. I never heard any controversy between them—Cooney and Furlong's predecessors—as to this boundary line. There never was any claim made, to my knowledge, by any owner before Furlong for anything east of the Furlong house; they never claimed east of that. Mr. Cooney always, since 1851, to the time of his death, claimed all the land upon which his buildings stand to be his property." And on cross-examination, he said: "I did hear Mr. Cooney speak of this property; of course I did. He said he owned it. He claimed it all, because he had a survey made in 1850 or 1851. When he built his house he told me so. When I bought my lot he told me that the lot was his lot. I never heard him say anything about thirteen inches of land on Furlong lot. He did not know that he was on the Furlong lot."

In June, 1876, after the plaintiffs purchased their lot, they had it surveyed, and then for the first time discovered that Cooney's main building extended over their line four inches, his dining-room and kitchen eight inches, the roof reaching out five inches still further, and that the fence in the rear was over the line four inches. Thomas Furlong, one of the plaintiffs, testified that after making this discovery he at once notified Cooney of it, and that, after looking at the surveyor's lines and conversing upon the subject for about an hour, Cooney said he "did not want any man's land, and that he would fix it, and would pay whatever the land was worth,—the value he would leave to arbitration. * * * He told me in June, 1876, if he had any land belonging to anybody he would leave it to arbitration; he would rather compromise than have any trouble." And in July, 1879, "he made the proposition to me to purchase the strip of land upon which his buildings encroached. * * * He said he did not desire to go to law; that he wanted to settle matters. * * * He then told me he had so much trouble about the land that he would rather fix it in some way. He said his buildings were upon it, and he supposed he was on his own land." The witness further testified that the first intimation Cooney ever gave him that he claimed any adverse interest in this strip of land was in February, 1877, and from that time until July, 1879, he was not on friendly terms with Cooney. Mrs. Furlong testified that she heard the conversation in July, 1879, and that her "husband then told him that he was on a part of our land, and he [Mr. Cooney] seemed surprised. He said he was willing to leave it to arbitration; but nothing was ever done about it."

1. The action was commenced in April, 1881, and the first question is, "Did John J. Cooney acquire title to the demanded premises by adverse possession, under the operation of the statute of limitations?" It is, of course, settled law that, to constitute an adverse possession of land, so as to set and keep the statute of limitations in motion, the occupation of the one claiming to hold adversely must be open, visible, notorious, and exclusive, and must be retained under a claim of right to hold against the owner, and the owner must have knowledge, or the means of knowledge, of such occupation and claim of right. Thompson v. Pioche, 44 Cal. 508; Thompson v. Felton, 54 Cal. 547. Here the testimony shows, without conflict, that Cooney's occupation of the strip of land in controversy met all these requirements. For 25 years his occupation of it was open, visible, notorious, and exclusive. He claimed it, too, as his own during all that time, and the true owners had knowledge, or the means of knowledge, of his occupation and claim.

But it is urged on behalf of respondents that Cooney's statements, made to Furlong in June, 1876, and July, 1879, were, in effect, admissions that plaintiffs' title was good, and that he had not so claimed and occupied the property as to give him any right or title thereto under the statute. We do not think the statements referred to can have the effect claimed for them. They only show that he did not want any trouble or suit about the matter, and was willing to buy his peace. By his adverse occupancy he had already become invested with a perfect title, which could only be divested by a conveyance, or an adverse occupancy against him for five years; and by offering to buy out the plaintiffs' claim of title he did not thereby make good their title, or in any way render invalid his own title. Arrington v. Liscom, 34 Cal. 365; Canon v. Stockmon, 36 Cal. 535.

In both these cases it was held that an adverse possession of land for the period prescribed by the statute of limitations not only bars the remedy, but practically extinguishes the right of the party having the true paper title, and vests a perfect title in the adverse holder. And in the last case an instruction in the following words was asked by the defendant, and refused: "A party in possession of premises, claiming to own the same, may buy his peace by purchasing any outstanding title, or claim of title, without admitting such title, or claim of title, to be valid." Of this, the court said: "We have no doubt that the instruction refused correctly states the law on the point. A party may very well deny the validity of an adverse claim or title, and yet choose to buy his peace at a small price, rather than be at great expense and annoyance in litigating it. And such is, doubtless, often the wiser course. It is notorious that, in the confusion of titles to land in this state, it is a matter of every-day experience to buy up not one only, but many, adverse claims, even where the party buying believes he has, and actually has, the better title. To adopt any other principle than that embraced in the instruction refused would, in this state, be to deprive a very large portion of the holders of real estate, if not all of them, who stand in need of it, of all benefit of the statute of limitations. A party is not bound to admit, and does not necessarily admit, title in another, because he prefers to get rid of that other's claim by purchasing it. He has a right to quiet his possession, and protect himself from litigation, in any lawful mode that appears to him most advantageous or desirable."

2. The only other question which need be considered relates to the damages awarded the plaintiffs. In their complaint the plaintiffs alleged that the value of the rents and profits of the property sued for was $1 per month, and for this they prayed judgment in the sum of $49. They also alleged that they had been damaged by the withholding of the property in the sum of $5,000, and for this they prayed judgment. The answer denied that the value of the rents and profits was any sum greater than 20 cents per month, and denied that the plaintiffs had been damaged by the withholding of the property in the sum of $5,000, or in any sum whatever. No proof was offered as to the value of the rents and profits, but it was attempted to be shown that the plaintiffs' house on their adjacent land had been damaged very considerably by the obstruction by defendants of its lights, etc. Under our Code the plaintiff may unite in the same complaint a claim to recover specific real property with damages for the withholding thereof, or for waste committed thereon and the rents and profits of the same. Section 427, Civil Code Proc. The measure of damages caused by the wrongful occupation of real property, in a case like this, is deemed to be the value of the use of the property for the time of such occupation, not exceeding five years next preceding the commencement of the action, and the costs, if any, of recovering the possession. Interest may also be allowed when necessary to a complete indemnity. Sections 3287, 3334, Civil Code; Haggin v. Clark, 51 Cal. 112; Vandevoort v. Gould, 36 N. Y. 646.

But a claim for damages done by the defendants to other lands or property of the plaintiffs cannot be joined in an action like this. If such damages have been sustained, they must be sued for separately. Here the damages given the plaintiffs were clearly in excess of the value of the use of the demanded premises for five years before the action was brought, with interest thereon; and besides they were admittedly for injuries done to other property.

It follows, in our opinion, that the judgment and order should be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

NOBLE v. DESMOND. (No. 9,465.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 21, 1887.)

SHERIFF—LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE.

The sheriff seized a lot of cattle belonging to one B. under a writ of attachment against B. One G. claimed the cattle, brought replevin against the sheriff, and, after executing the usual affidavit and undertaking with sureties, the cattle were delivered up to him. The sheriff took no steps to find out whether G.'s sureties were sufficient, nor did he compel them to justify. G. sold the cattle and left the state. The attachment creditor recovered judgment against B., but never could collect anything on it. Judgment was given in the replevin suit against G. and his sureties, but this also could not be enforced. The attachment creditor brought suit against the sheriff on his official bond. Held, that the sheriff was clearly negligent, and that the suit would lie.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Clitus Barber, for appellant. Stetson & Houghton, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. In an action brought by plaintiff against one Bruce an attachment was regularly sued out and placed in the hands of the defendant as sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco, who levied it upon a lot of cattle as the property of Bruce, and took them into his possession. One Goss claimed the property, and sued the defendant in an action of claim and delivery, usually with us styled replevin, to recover the cattle seized under the writ. Goss made affidavit, and executed the usual undertaking with sureties, as required by the statute, (Code Civil Proc. §§ 510-519,) and upon the receipt of the affidavit, undertaking, and requisite notice, the coroner took the cattle from the possession of the defendant. The latter did not execute the counter-undertaking, as required by section 514, Code Civil Proc., nor did he give notice that he excepted to the sufficiency of the sureties, (see section 513, Code Civil Proc.,) and the coroner delivered the cattle to Goss. It appears that Goss, not long after receiving possession of the property, sold it, and left the state. The action brought by Goss was tried, and the usual judgment in replevin passed for the defendant. The plaintiff herein recovered judgment against Bruce, on which he has been unable to make anything. Bruce had no other property at the time the attachment was sued out except the cattle above mentioned. The judgment against Goss has not been enforced, nor any part of it paid or satisfied.

It is claimed that Goss, and the sureties on the undertaking given by him, were insolvent when it was executed, and still continue insolvent; that the sheriff (Desmond) failed to except to the sufficiency of the sureties on the undertaking; that the sheriff did not reclaim, or attempt to reclaim, the property levied on, and did not notify either plaintiff or his attorneys of the commencement of the action against him by Goss, or that any undertaking had been given by Goss.

The evidence tends to show that the sureties were insufficient at the time they executed the undertaking, and the jury must have found such to be the fact in rendering a verdict for plaintiff. On the evidence appearing in the statement, we cannot say that it was insufficient to sustain the verdict. It was for the jury to say what weight the evidence was entitled to; and, as it tended to show that the sureties were insolvent at the time mentioned, we cannot interfere with the judgment or order in this case on that ground. That the sheriff did not except to the sureties or give a counter-bond is not disputed. And we are of opinion that the plaintiff knew nothing of the action brought by Goss, or of his having executed the undertaking above mentioned, until after the property had been delivered to Goss, when it was too late to except to the sureties, or execute a counter-undertaking.

It is argued that the defendant did nothing and omitted nothing in his capacity as sheriff for which he is responsible. In our opinion, the evidence shows negligence in the sheriff for which he is clearly responsible. When the sheriff seized the cattle under the writ of attachment, he was bound to hold them to satisfy any judgment which might be recovered in the action of Noble against Bruce. The measure of his obligation in regard to the property seized is that of a person of ordinary discretion and judgment in respect to his own property; that is, he is bound to use such care and diligence as a person of ordinary prudence might reasonably be expected to use in regard to his own property. Jones v. McGuirk, 51 Ill. 382. See the cases cited in Shear & R. Neg. § 530, and notes.

The undertaking given in this case is intended by the law as standing in place of the property taken under it,—as the equivalent of it. See Swezey v. Lott, 21 N. Y. 483. It is conditioned for the return of the property taken to the defendant, if return thereof be adjudged, and for the payment to the defendant of such sum as may from any cause be recovered in the action against plaintiff. The sheriff is holding the property for another and is acting for another. He is to be regarded as an agent, and a paid agent of the plaintiff for whom he was acting. He is bound, in regard to the undertaking given to him as the equivalent of the property, to see that it is valuable; to act as an agent or a bailee for hire might reasonably be expected to act under the circumstances. Such agent or bailee would be expected to use every means to have his principal or bailor protected. It would be reasonable to expect him to inquire into the sufficiency of the sureties, and to use every reasonable mode of ascertaining whether they were or not solvent. If the plaintiff in the action in which he had seized the property, or his attorney, could be seen or communicated with, an agent of ordinary prudence would inform them, or one of them that they might aid in ascertaining the condition of the sureties in point of responsibility.

In this case we are of opinion that the sheriff was clearly negligent in accepting the undertaking in question without taking the steps to find out whether the sureties were sufficient. At any rate, he should have compelled them to justify, which he totally neglected to do. It does not appear that he made any inquiry as to the pecuniary condition of the sureties, and we are convinced that if the sureties had been held to justify, that they would have been rejected as insufficient. The sheriff did not come up to the obligation of care and diligence required by law. He was therefore guilty of negligence in the discharge of the duties required of him by law, for which he and his sureties are responsible.

We find no error in the record, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

We think it proper to say that, feeling some doubt on the point whether the appeal should be dismissed on account of the language of the stipulation in regard to the transcript, we do not pass on the motion; and, as we conclude to affirm the judgment and order, it is unnecessary to pass on it. Ordered as above.

We concur: MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

ALLEN v. COUNTY OF SAN BERNARDINO. (No. 11,683.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 4, 1887.)

DISTRICT AND PROSECUTING ATTORNEY—AUTHORITY—SPECIAL COUNSEL—DISMISSAL OF APPEAL.

As between the board of supervisors of a county and the district attorney, on the one hand, and an attorney claiming to be special counsel for the county, on the other, the former are superior in authority, and have a right to control all proceedings in a case to which the county is a party. An appeal taken by the county will therefore be dismissed on motion of the district attorney, made by direction of a resolution of the board, over the objection of such special counsel.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county.

Legare Allen, respondent, brought this action, as county recorder, to recover a money judgment against appellant, and the facts are as follows, viz.: The respondent from the first day of January, 1885, up to the first day of February, 1886, received the sum of $5,186.50 for official services as county recorder of the appellant, in the way of fees collected by him for recording instruments of writing, (and not as salary,) and then paid the same into appellant's treasury. Respondent asks to recover back a portion of said sum so paid over, to-wit, $301, for the reason this latter amount was received by him from diverse persons for recording, in his said office of county recorder, notices of location of mining claims, and that the law did not require him to record such notices, and, if recorded, did not require him to pay said sum into the county treasury. Plaintiff recovered judgment, from which, and an order denying new trial, these appeals are taken by the county.

John L. Campbell and Chas. R. Gray, for appellant. Harris & Allen, for respondent.

BY THE COURT. The board of supervisors, by resolution, directed the district attorney to ask this court to dismiss the appeal herein. The motion was made accordingly; counsel who had appeared specially in the court below for defendant objecting to the granting of the motion. As between the board of supervisors and district attorney, on the one hand, and an attorney claiming to be special counsel for defendant, on the other, the former are superior in authority, and have a right to control all proceedings in a case to which the county is a party; at least, in the absence of an objection by the attorney general. It is therefore ordered that the appeal herein be, and the same is hereby, dismissed.

WALLACE v. MAPLES. (No. 11,539.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 25, 1887.)

REPLEVIN—CROPS—CONTRACT.

Article 7 of a contract relating to the farming of certain lands provided that the title to the crops raised by M., the farmer, should remain in W., the owner of the land, until M. had performed the covenants in article 8. That article contained an agreement by W. to deliver four-fifths of the crop to M. "upon the full performance by him of all the stipulations and covenants in this article above specified." Held, in claim and delivery by W. for the whole crop on the ground of a breach of covenants contained in other articles, that the covenants in articles 7 and 8 were independent of those broken, and that M., having fully complied therewith, was entitled to four-fifths of the crop.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county.

Brown & Daggett, for Wallace, appellant. Atwell & Bradley and A. B. Hunt, for Maples, respondent.

MCFARLAND, J. This is an action to recover certain wheat or its value. The sheriff took possession of the property under the statute, and delivered it to plaintiff. Defendant answered, denying plaintiff's right to the wheat, averred ownership in himself, and claimed a return of the property or its value. The case was tried without a jury, and the court found in favor of defendant, and gave him judgment for the return of 4,360 sacks of wheat, or $7,935.20, found to be its value. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial.

The litigation arose out of a long, written contract between the parties about the farming of certain lands belonging to plaintiff. The contract is formally divided into 12 articles, numbered consecutively from "article 1 to article 12." The main drift of the contract is as follows: Defendant was to have possession of the lands, to be farmed and cultivated by him, for the term of four years from October 1, 1884. He was to cultivate all of said lands each season in a skillful and thorough manner, in alfalfa, corn, and wheat, at his own expense, and also to harvest, thresh, and sack the crops of corn and wheat. He was to give certain alfalfa and alfalfa seed to plaintiff. He was to pay all assessments on certain stock of water companies which furnished water for irrigating the land, and he was to do certain other things not important to be here mentioned. At the end of the harvest, and after the corn and wheat were sacked, defendant, upon certain conditions being complied with, was to have four-fifths of the grain, and plaintiff was to have one-fifth.

During the first year of the term, defendant failed to perform some parts of his contract. The main failures relied on by plaintiff are—First, that he failed to pay a small part of the assessments due on the water stock; and, second, that a part of the land was not cultivated, or, at least, was not cultivated in a "skillful and thorough manner." And plaintiff assumed that, on account of these breaches of the contract, defendant forfeited—or rather never acquired any interest in—the wheat which he raised on the lands. Upon this theory, after defendant had harvested, threshed, and sacked the wheat raised that year, and delivered one-fifth to plaintiff, and had hauled the other four-fifths to a warehouse as his own, she commenced this action, and took possession of it all.

The main question to be determined in the case is whether the covenants of articles 7 and 8 of the contract are independent covenants, or whether all the covenants are mutual and dependent. The parts of the contract which respondent failed to comply with, as above stated, are not contained in said articles 7 and 8. Article 7 provides that all the wheat and corn shall be the property of appellant, and that respondent shall have no right or authority to sell or dispose of it "until all the stipulations and covenants contained in article 8 hereof are fully performed by said party of the second part." The first part of article 8 contains covenants of respondent that he will mark one-fifth of the grain, when sacked, in a particular manner, and deliver it at a warehouse to be designated by appellant; that he will then pay appellant certain moneys for loans and advances, with interest; and that he will also pay appellant all moneys due on account of sales of her alfalfa hay and seed, etc. Respondent fully complied with all his covenants contained in said article 8. The article then proceeds as follows: "And said party of the first part [appellant] agrees that upon the full performance by said party of the second part [respondent] of all the stipulations and covenants in this article above specified, but not otherwise, she will deliver to said party of the second part, to have and to hold as his property, four-fifths of each crop of wheat and corn produced upon said lands while the same are cultivated by said party of the second part under this agreement, which said four-fifths of said crop shall be delivered to said party of the second part on the land when the same is threshed and put in sacks, and which four-fifths of said crops said party of the second part agrees to take and receive as his compensation for his labor and expense in cultivating said lands to corn and wheat under this agreement."

It seems to us clear that the provisions of articles 7 and 8 are independent covenants; and that upon a full compliance with them respondent became the owner of four-fifths of the wheat. Of course, if respondent violated any of his covenants not contained in said two articles, appellant has her remedy in an action to recover whatever damages she has sustained by such violation.

There is nothing in the point that appellant did not "deliver" the wheat in contest to respondent. Respondent already had the actual possession of both the land and the wheat, and there was no further act of delivery to be done by appellant.

Judgment and order affirmed.

TOBELMAN and others v. HILDEBRANDT and others. (No. 9,597.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 20, 1887.)

1. JUDGMENT—ESTOPPEL—EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1637, providing that the settlement of the account of an executor, and the allowance thereof by the court, is conclusive against all persons, not under disabilities, in any way interested in the estate, heirs at law are estopped by a decree allowing the final account of their ancestor's executor, and ordering distribution, to bring an action against the executor to recover the amount of a promissory note alleged to have been given by him in payment of land which he bought of the testator, and by him fraudulently destroyed, when the note was omitted from his inventory, and the heirs had knowledge at that time of the fraudulent destruction set out in their complaint.

2. JUDGMENT—COLLATERAL ATTACK—COURTS OF PROBATE.

Under the law of California, an order of a probate court allowing the final account of an executor is a final settlement and adjudication of the matter of which it assumes to dispose, and it cannot, therefore, be collaterally impeached or attacked in the same or any other court by the parties thereto, or those in privity with them.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

J. C. Bates, for Tobelman and others, appellants. A. H. Longborough, for Hildebrandt and another, respondents.

SEARLS, C. This is an action to recover upon a promissory note alleged to have been made by defendant Hildebrandt to August Tittel, the testator of plaintiffs. Judgment of nonsuit was rendered, from which, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. The complaint alleges that on the twentieth day of August, 1866, August Tittel, in consideration of $13,000, sold and conveyed to defendant, Hildebrandt, a lot of land on Sutter street, San Francisco; that defendant paid in cash $3,000, and made his promissory note for the sum of $10,000, the residue of the purchase price of said lot; that this promissory note was, with other papers of Tittel, placed in an iron safe, to which defendant had access, and that defendant was the confidential agent of Tittel.

August Tittel departed this life February 1, 1868, leaving a last will under which defendant Hildebrandt was appointed executor. The will was duly admitted to probate, and administered upon by the defendant as executor, who filed an inventory, and ultimately rendered his final account, which was approved, and a decree made distributing the estate. The note in question was not included in the inventory, and, the complaint charges, was fraudulently destroyed by the defendant and omitted from the inventory, with the fraudulent intent of cheating plaintiffs, who are beneficiaries under the will. The answer denies making the note, and all allegations relating thereto.

At the trial plaintiffs sought to prove, by plaintiff Margaret Tobelman, conversation between August Tittel, deceased, and his wife, including declarations of the former in his own favor, touching the existence of the promissory note in suit. The court sustained an objection to the testimony. These declarations were hearsay and clearly incompetent.

The motion for a nonsuit was based upon the following ground: "The complaint, containing a copy of decree settling a final account, is final and conclusive as to the parties, and cannot be disturbed, except by a direct proceeding." According to the allegations of the complaint, defendant filed his final account, and prayed for a decree of distribution of the estate, which was granted; and the decree, a copy of which is attached to the complaint, and made a part thereof, was duly signed and filed January 4, 1882. "The settlement of the account, and the allowance thereof by the court, or upon appeal, is conclusive against all persons in any way interested in the estate." Code Civil Proc. § 1637. Section 1908 of the same Code declares that the judgment or order of a court, having jurisdiction as to the administration of an estate, is conclusive. Reynolds v. Brumagim, 54 Cal. 254; Tebbets v. Tilton, 24 N. H. 120; Grady v. Porter, 53 Cal. 680; Estate of Stott, 52 Cal. 403.

The plaintiffs herein appeared in the probate court and filed objections to the final account of defendant as executor. They do not aver in their complaint that they were ignorant of the facts constituting the alleged fraud on the part of the defendant, at the time the executor's account was settled, and the evidence shows that they were aware of such facts long prior thereto. The decrees and orders of a probate court, made in the exercise of jurisdiction conferred upon it by law, are as final and conclusive as the judgments, decrees, or orders of any other court. The character and finality of res adjudicata attach to the decisions of probate courts, irrespective of the nature of the issue determined, provided the court had jurisdiction to determine it. Freem. Judgm. § 319a. It follows that an order of a probate court allowing or disallowing a final account is a final settlement and adjudication of the matter of which it assumes to dispose, and it cannot thereafter be collaterally attacked or impeached in the same or any other court by the parties thereto, or those in privity with them. The decree of a probate court settling the account of an administrator may be attacked for fraud or mistake like other judgments.

It was said in Griffith v. Godey, 113 U. S. 93, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 333: "If the property be omitted by mistake, or be subsequently discovered, a court of equity may exercise its jurisdiction in the premises, and take such action as justice to the heirs of the deceased or to the creditors of the estate, may require, even if the probate court might, in such case, open its decree, and administer upon the omitted property. And a fraudulent concealment of property, or a fraudulent disposition of it, is a general and always existing ground for the interposition of equity."

The evidence, as before stated, shows affirmatively that plaintiffs were aware of the facts constituting the alleged fraud, long prior to the settlement of the final account of the administrator. This being so, and there being no impediment to the investigation in the probate court, plaintiffs are concluded by the action of such court. For this reason, and for the further reason that there was no sufficient evidence to support a verdict in favor of plaintiffs, had such verdict been rendered, the judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

HEILBRON and others v. HEINLEN and others. (No. 11,566.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 28, 1887.)

TRESPASS—QUARE CLAUSUM—EVIDENCE.

In an action of trespass quare clausum, defendant, without pleading the statute of limitations, offered evidence of his own occupation of the close for 15 years. Held that, the question being one of possession, and not of title, such evidence was admissible.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, Fresno county.

G. A. Heinlen and Atwell & Bradley, for appellants. D. S. Terry, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. C. This is an action to recover damages for trespass upon real property. It is alleged in the complaint that for more than two years last past the plaintiffs have been seized and possessed of all that certain tract of land in the counties of Fresno and Tulare known as the "Rancho Laguna de Tache," containing about 48,000 acres, and for which a patent, dated March 6, 1866, was issued by the United States to Manuel Castro; that on the seventeenth day of December, 1883, the plaintiffs were engaged in constructing a fence of posts and wire along the right bank of Kings river, which is the southern boundary of the rancho, and had completed the fence for a great part of said line; that on the day named the defendants, without right, and against the will of plaintiffs, cut and destroyed the said fence for a distance of about one and a half miles on sections 30 and 31, in township 18 S., range 20 E., and on a portion of section 36, in township 18 S., range 19 E., and also cut and destroyed the posts which had been set by plaintiffs for the purpose of building a fence for a distance of about two and one-half miles on sections 1 and 2, in township 19 S., range 19 E.

The defendants, by their answer, deny that the plaintiffs are or ever were seized or possessed, or entitled to the possession, of the lands described in their complaint; deny that the plaintiffs at the time named, or at any time, were engaged in constructing or had constructed any fence along the right bank of Kings river; and deny that at any time, they, or either of them, ever cut or destroyed any fence, for any distance, on any sections in any township or range, or cut or destroyed any posts on any sections in any township or range, or at all, upon any lands of plaintiffs, or any or either of them, or that the posts or fence alleged to have been cut or destroyed were situate upon any lands of the plaintiffs, or either of them.

At the trial the plaintiffs introduced in evidence the patent, with the map attached thereto, from the United States to Castro; deeds from Castro, conveying the whole rancho to Jeremiah Clark; and a lease of the whole rancho, dated May 1, 1880, from Clark to the plaintiffs for a term of 10 years. They then called a witness to prove the building of the fence, and setting of the posts along the right bank of Kings river on the sections named, and that the fence and posts were cut and destroyed by certain parties, who said they were in the employment of defendants.

The defendants then called several witnesses, some of whom had lived near and known Kings river, and the sections of land named in the complaint, since 1857, and others for shorter periods, who testified that the fence constructed and posts planted by the plaintiffs were not upon the right or north bank of that river, but upon the bank of a slough which commences on the south side of the river in section 30, township 18 S., range 20 E., and runs thence south of the river, and at a considerable distance from it, to section 12, township 19 S., range 19 E.; that the slough has never carried any water except in times of high water, and is and always has been known as "Button Willow Slough." The defendants then introduced in evidence swamp-land certificates of purchase and patents from the state, conveying to the defendant, John Heinlen all the lands lying between the river and slough, and on which the fence and posts were placed, except that part thereof lying in section 30, township 18 S., range 20 E., and for that they introduced a similar patent to Justin Esrey.

The defendants then offered to prove by competent witnesses that for the last 10 or 15 years they had been in the quiet and peaceable possession of all the land described in their patents and certificates of purchase, and that they had continuously used and occupied it, by farming a portion of it, and grazing stock upon it. The plaintiffs objected to this testimony, upon the ground that the defendants had not pleaded the statute of limitations, and therefore it was incompetent and inadmissible under the pleadings. The court sustained the objection, the defendants reserving an exception; and this presents the principal question for consideration in the case.

It will be observed that the plaintiffs claimed to be tenants of the property, and that they offered no proofs to show that they had ever taken or been in the actual possession of it. And that they did not claim possession is shown by statements made by their counsel during the progress of the trial, as follows: "We don't rely upon anything but strict legal right. We don't claim by virtue of possession." The question, then, is, what must a tenant show in order to maintain an action of trespass quare clausum?

In Pollock v. Cummings, 38 Cal. 685, the court says: "In an action of trespass upon real property, the plaintiff may recover upon alleging and showing, in addition to the injury complained of, his possession of the premises; and his right to the possession is not involved unless the defendant tenders an issue upon that fact; and in such case, as was said in Holman v. Taylor, 31 Cal. 338, the right of recovery depends both upon possession in fact and the right of possession."

In Uttendorffer v. Saegers, 50 Cal. 496, the defendant pleaded a general denial, and the court said: "The action is trespass quare clausum. Its gravamen is the alleged possession of the plaintiff at the time of the entry of the defendant. In this view the offer of the defendant to show that a tenant of the plaintiff, and not the plaintiff himself, was in the actual possession at the time of the alleged trespass should have been allowed."

In Raffetto v. Fiori, 50 Cal. 363, the plaintiffs obtained a patent for mining ground, and brought an action of trespass against the defendants for working the ground, and taking gold therefrom. The defendants were in possession of the ground, claiming title thereto before the patent was issued, and when the action was brought and tried, it was held that the action of trespass could not be maintained. There have been several other analogous cases in this state where it was held that the owner of land could not maintain replevin for crops harvested therefrom by one in the adverse possession of the land; the court saying that the title to real property could not thus be tried in a personal action. Page v. Fowler, 37 Cal. 100; Page v. Fowler, 39 Cal. 412; Pennybecker v. McDougal, 46 Cal. 661.

In Greenleaf on Evidence (section 613) it is said: "Though the right of property may and often does come into controversy in this action, [trespass,] yet the gist of the action is the injury done to plaintiff's possession. The substance of the declaration, therefore, is that the defendant has forcibly and wrongfully injured property in the possession of the plaintiff, and under the general issue the plaintiff must prove (1) that the property was in his possession at the time of the injury, and this rightly as against the defendant; and (2) that the injury was committed by defendant with force."

There are many other authorities to the same effect, but they need not be cited.

Here the defendants denied the plaintiffs' possession of the locus in quo, and offered to show their want of possession by proving that defendants had been in possession of the land, using it for farming and grazing purposes for 10 or 15 years. The object was not to prove title in the defendants under the statute of limitations, and it was not necessary that the statute should have been pleaded in order to make the testimony admissible.

In our opinion, the court erred in excluding the offered testimony, and the judgment and order should therefore be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

By THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

(Supreme Court of California. May 28, 1887.)

1. PLEADING—AMENDMENT—EJECTMENT.

Plaintiffs in ejectment may be permitted to amend the number of the range described in their complaint. Such amendment corrects a mistake, and does not substitute a new cause of action.

2. EJECTMENT—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action of ejectment, where defendants claimed title by adverse possession, and there was evidence to support that defense, an instruction ignoring such defense, and directing the jury to find for the plaintiff if he established the title set up by him, held erroneous.

3. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—ADVERSE POSSESSION—STATUTES.

The amendment to section 325, Code Civil Proc. Cal., made April 1, 1878, which requires proof of occupation, claim, and payment of all taxes for five years, to establish adverse possession of real property, does not affect adverse holdings prior to the date of its passage.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, Fresno county.

G. A. Heinlen, for appellants. D. S. Terry, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. C. This is an action to recover possession of a tract of land in Fresno county, which is alleged to be a part of the Rancho Laguna de Tache, and is described as "that portion of the north-west quarter of section 36, township 18 south, range 19 east, which lies north of King's river." The complaint is in the usual form for actions of ejectment. The answer denies the plaintiffs' seizin, or right to the possession of the land, and sets up the statute of limitations. The case was tried by a jury, and the verdict and judgment were in favor of plaintiffs. The defendants moved for a new trial, and, their motion being denied, appealed from the judgment and order.

As originally filed, the complaint described the land sued for as in range twenty east. Shortly afterwards plaintiffs' counsel asked and were permitted, against the objections of defendants, to amend the complaint, by striking out the word "twenty" in the description of the range, and inserting in the place thereof the word "nineteen." It is claimed that the court erred in permitting this amendment to be made, as it substituted a new and different cause of action. We see no error in the ruling. A mistake had evidently been made in describing the land sought to be recovered, and it was not an abuse of the court's discretion to allow it to be corrected. Section 473, Code Civil Proc.

At the trial the plaintiffs introduced in evidence a patent from the United States to Manuel Castro, dated March 6, 1866, for about 48,000 acres of land, known as the Rancho Laguna de Tache, and deeds from Castro conveying all his right, title, and interest in the rancho to Jeremiah Clark, and a lease of the rancho, dated May 1, 1880, for 10 years from Clark to the plaintiffs, with the privilege of purchasing the property at any time during the term. They then called witnesses to prove that the demanded premises were included within the boundaries of the grant as fixed by the patent. In support of the issues tendered by them the defendants called witnesses to prove that the demanded premises were not within the calls of the Castro patent; that the land was swamp land, and was sold as such by the state in 1861, and that the defendant John Heinlen had been occupying and claiming it adversely to the plaintiffs and their grantor for more than 10 years before the commencement of the action.

At the request of the plaintiffs, the court instructed the jury as follows: "The jury are instructed that in no case can adverse possession be considered established under the provision of any section of the Code of Civil Procedure of California, unless it shall be shown that the land has been occupied and claimed for the period of five years continuously, and that the party or persons, their predecessors and grantors, have paid all state and county taxes assessed upon said land."

"If the jury believe, from the evidence, that the land in controversy is within the boundaries of the survey attached to the patent from the United States to Manuel Castro, and that Jeremiah Clark has succeeded to the title of Manuel Castro, and that the plaintiffs hold under title derived from Jeremiah Clark, then you will find a verdict for the plaintiffs."

These instructions were misleading and erroneous. The first is in the language of the amendment made on the first of April, 1878, to section 325 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But it has been held that that amendment was not retroactive, and did not at all affect adverse holdings prior to the date of its passage. Sharp v. Blankenship, 59 Cal. 288; Johnson v. Brown, 63 Cal. 391. The second took from the jury all right to consider the defendants' claim of title under the statute of limitations, and, in effect, told them to find a verdict for the plaintiffs. The principal question at the trial was whether the defendant John Heinlen did or did not have adverse possession, under a claim of right, commencing as early as 1872, and continuing for more than five years, and there was testimony upon that question, we think, which should have been submitted to the jury.

It is objected for the respondents that the appellants have not filed a printed transcript, properly authenticated as required by the rules of this court; that the transcript contains numerous interlineations and writings in the margin of pages, and it does not appear when or by whom such interlineations and marginal writings were made; and that the statement on motion for new trial, found in the transcript, is not shown to have been agreed to by counsel, or settled by the judge. It is sufficient to say, as to the first part of this objection, that, in considering the points here discussed, we have looked only to the printed transcript, which is properly certified by the clerk to be correct, and not to the interlineations and writings on the margins of pages; and, as to the last part of it, that the statement on motion for new trial was properly settled and certified by the judge who tried the case.

It follows that the judgment and order should be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

COHN v. PARCELS, City Tax Collector of the City of Los Angeles.
(No. 11,845.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 28, 1887.)

1. EQUITY—PARTIES—ASSESSMENTS.

By the charter of the city of Los Angeles, when land is condemned for the widening of a street, the damages are paid by the holders of property adjacent to the street to be widened, and in no event is the city liable for such damages. Held, in an action brought against the tax collector of Los Angeles to restrain him from a sale of plaintiff's property in payment of damages claimed to be due from plaintiff under the said provision of the city charter, that the city was not a necessary party defendant to the action.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—STREETS—CREATION OF.

A tract of land in Los Angeles was set apart by ordinance as a public square. For some time the whole tract was used as such, but afterwards a fence was erected, which inclosed the greater part of it, but left out a strip of land between the fence and the lot of C. The public used this strip of land for a long time as a passageway for vehicles and animals, but it was never declared by any ordinance of the city to be a street, or ever graded by authority of the city. Held, that the strip of land in question was not a public street, and that damages assessed upon C. for the widening of it as a street were improper.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

J. C. Daly and Williams & McKinley, for appellant. Howard & Scott, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. It is provided by the charter of the city of Los Angeles that, when land has been condemned for the widening or extension of a street, the damages shall be paid by the holders of the property fronting on and adjacent to the street to be extended or widened, and that assessments shall be levied on the property in a certain manner to raise the amount needed; and "in case any street crosses the line of or forms a junction with any street so laid out, extended, or improved, * * * the land on the corners formed by said intersection or junction shall be assessed" for an additional sum. Under the provisions of the charter, proceedings were regularly taken by the city authorities to widen and extend Main street. The plaintiff owned a lot fronting on that street, which was assessed for an additional sum of $213.78 on account of a supposed frontage on another street "forming a junction with" Main street. The defendant was about to sell the plaintiff's lot to pay this additional assessment, when this action was commenced to restrain the sale, upon the ground that the assessment was improperly made, and the sale would cast a cloud upon the plaintiff's title. The defendant demurred to the complaint upon the ground that, in collecting the assessment, he was acting in his official capacity as the agent and servant of the city of Los Angeles, and the city should have been joined as a party defendant. The court overruled the demurrer, and this ruling is assigned as error.

We think the demurrer was properly overruled. There have been many similar cases in this state brought against collectors of taxes and assessments, but the point here presented does not appear to have been made in any of them.

In support of their contention, counsel for appellant cite Gilmore v. Fox, 10 Kan. 509. That was an action to restrain the sale of real property for an assessment, and it was held that the city was a necessary party defendant. The decision was, however, based upon the ground that the money, when collected, would belong to the city, which was liable for the payment of the damages in case the assessments were not collected. That case is not in point here, for the reason that under its charter the city of Los Angeles was not made liable for the payment of the damages in any event, and the money, if collected, would have gone into a special fund, to be paid out to the parties entitled to it. The city had therefore no such interest in the case as to make it a necessary party.

At the trial the case was submitted upon an agreed statement of facts, and the only question made in regard to the validity of the assessment was as to whether plaintiff's lot fronted on a street forming a junction with Main street. Plaintiff recovered judgment, and from that, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appealed.

It appears from the agreed statement of facts that the strip of land which is claimed by appellant to be a street, and to form a junction with Main street, is a part of a tract which was owned by the pueblo of Los Angeles, and prior to 1846 was laid out by the authorities of the pueblo as a public plaza, and on the twentieth of December, 1856, was, by an ordinance of the city of Los Angeles, declared to be a public square. For some time after the passage of the ordinance, all of the land so set apart was open and used as a public square; but prior to 1872 a fence was erected which inclosed the greater part of it, leaving out Main street to the west, (which had theretofore been set apart as a public street,) and also leaving out a strip along the north line of plaintiff's lot eight feet wide. In 1872 this fence was changed and made elliptical in form, and was so placed that, at its nearest point, it was distant from the plaintiff's lot $70\frac{1}{2}$ feet. The ground within the inclosure has always been used as a public park, and the strip between the elliptical fence and the plaintiff's lot has since been used by the general public for passing and repassing on foot, and with vehicles and animals, but has never been declared, by any ordinance or resolution of the city, to be a street, nor has it ever been graded under authority of the city.

Upon these facts, did the strip of land in question become a public street? We do not see how it can be rightfully claimed that it did. As well might it be said, if the square had never been inclosed, and the public had been permitted to pass and repass, on foot and with vehicles and animals, diagonally across it, that the ways so used were thereby made streets of the city. Being a part of the land dedicated as a public square, the strip must be held, we think, to remain such until its character and use shall be changed by some official and authoritative action.

It follows that the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

MILLER v. DUNN, State Comptroller. (No. 11,288.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 6, 1887.)

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—APPROPRIATIONS—NON-ENFORCEABLE CLAIM.

An act to appropriate money to pay the indebtedness incurred by the state of California under "An act to promote drainage," which was afterwards declared unconstitutional, is not itself unconstitutional under article 4, § 32, Const. Cal., forbidding the legislature to pay claims against the state under an agreement made without express authority of law. TEMPLE, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county.

D. M. Delmas, for appellant. A. L. Hart, W. C. Belcher, and James A. Waymire, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. In 1880 the legislature passed an act entitled "An act to promote drainage," which was approved by the governor April 23, 1880. St. 1880, p. 123. In the passage of this act all the proceedings necessary to the effective enactment of a law by the legislature were had; and it was regularly and duly approved by the governor. According to the provisions of this act, "drainage district No. 1" was regularly organized, and public work under it commenced. The directors of the district, after proposals for bids, let contracts to different parties to do various parts of the work, as they were expressly authorized by the act to do. Respondent, among others, took two such contracts, and the amount involved in this action is for work and labor done and materials furnished under such contracts. There is no question as to the justness of his claims; but after he had done the work, and furnished the materials under his contracts, and before he had received his pay therefor, sued for in this action, this court, in an action brought against the directors of said district, decided that said "act to promote drainage" was unconstitutional. All proceedings under said act ceased, and the state comptroller refused to pay any more claims under it.

This being the situation, and some just claims acquired under the act remaining unpaid, the legislature passed an act approved March 10, 1885, (St. 1885, p. 78.) entitled "An act to appropriate money to pay the indebtedness incurred under an act entitled, 'An act to promote drainage,' approved April 23, 1880." This act expressly requires the comptroller to draw his warrants in favor of certain audited claims which accrued under said act of 1880; and plaintiff's demand here sued for is admitted to be one of such claims. The appellant comptroller refused to draw his warrants for respondent's claims; and this proceeding in mandamus was instituted to compel him to do so. The court below granted a peremptory writ, and the comptroller appeals.

The judgment of the court below should be affirmed. It is claimed by appellant that the act of April 23, 1880, having been held to be unconstitutional in the case of People v. Parks, 58 Cal. 624, was void ab initio, the same to all intents and purposes as if it had never been enacted,—a pure nullity; that an unconstitutional law is no law at all for any purpose, and that the word "law" in article 4, § 32, was used in its full sense,—i. e., a valid constitutional law. On the other hand, it is contended by respondent that the word "law" in its popular sense is a statute passed by the legislature and approved by the executive, and it is in this sense that the word was employed in section 32.

It is useless to attempt to apply iron-clad rules of interpretation to any phrase or word used in a constitution. Especially is this true of a word which has a technical as well as a popular meaning. There is no word in the language which, in its popular and technical application, takes a wider or more diversified signification than the word "law." Its use in both regards is illimitable. In determining the office of words used in a constitution, the object is to give effect to the intent of the people adopting it. Cooley, Const. Lim. (5th Ed.) § 66. And, "where a word having a technical as well as a popular meaning is used in the constitution, the courts will accord to it its popular signification, unless the very nature of the subject indicates or the text suggests that it is used in its technical sense." Weill v. Kenfield, 54 Cal. 111; Sprague v. Norway, 31 Cal. 173. Words used in a constitution should be construed in the sense in which they were employed. They "must be taken in their ordinary and common acceptance, because they are presumed to have been so understood by the framers, and by the people who adopted it. This is unquestionably the correct rule of interpretation. It, unlike the acts of our legislature, owes its whole force and authority to its ratification by the people; and they judged of it by the meaning apparent on its face according to the general use of the words employed where they do not appear to have been used in a legal or technical sense." Manly v. State, 7 Md. 135. The term "law," as used in its popular sense and in its common acceptation by "those for whom laws are made," it may be admitted, includes the whole body or system of rules of conduct, including the decisions of courts as well as legislative acts, but it certainly does not include that refined, technical, and astute idea claimed by appellant which recognizes nothing within the meaning of the term which is not constitutionally and technically perfect.

In addition to considering the independent, technical, and popular meanings of a word used in an act or constitution, we may look at other sections of the same instrument for the sense in which the word is used, as an aid to determine whether it has been used in its popular sense in the particular provision under consideration. People v. Eddy, 43 Cal. 331. A word repeatedly used in a statute will bear the same meaning throughout the instrument unless it is apparent that another meaning is intended. Pitte v. Shipley, 46 Cal. 154; Hoag v. Howard, 55 Cal. 564. Upon an examination of the provisions of the constitution in which the word "law" is used, it will be found, in a majority of instances, that it has been employed in the sense of a statute, bill, or legislative enactment, regardless of the constitutionality or validity of the act. Thus it is said: "No law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press," (section 9, art. 1;) "no ex post facto law shall ever be passed," (section 16, art. 1;) "the enacting clause of every law shall be as follows," (section 1, art. 4;) "the legislature shall not pass local or special laws in any of the following cases," etc., (section 25, art. 4;) "the legislature shall not pass any laws permitting the leasing * * * of any franchise," (section 10, art. 12.) When speaking of certain requisites of a valid law, however, the framers of the constitution did not use the words "statute" and "law" interchangeably. Thus it is provided that "no bill shall become a law without the concurrence," etc., (section 15, art. 4;) "every bill which may have passed the legislature shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the governor," (section 16, art. 4.)

Again, it is provided that "the making of profit out of county, city, or other public money, or using the same for any purpose not authorized by law, * * * shall be a felony." Can it be said that those who framed and adopted the constitution intended to use the word "law" in this section to mean a law absolutely unimpeachable on any ground? That every officer should handle and place the moneys intrusted to him at his peril, no matter how fair and regular the law directing him may be on its face? If yea, "then, indeed," as was said in St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Evans & Howard Brick Co., 85 Mo. 307, "are the rights of the citizen to be sacrificed on the altar of mistake, and the statute is to be made a veritable pit-fall and snare."

And so it is with respect to section 32. If it places a citizen who has dealt with the state, under circumstances like those in the case at bar, beyond the pale of legislative relief for acts done by him prior to discovering the invalidity of the law, it will be very unsafe for any one to deal with our officers unless he be possessed of that superhuman intuition or mediate intelligence which alone can tell how the question of the validity of such an act may be raised and determined after he has performed the work. Of course there is no moral obligation on the part of the state which can be enforced upon equitable principles, nor does the good faith of the party dealing with the state cut any figure in the case if, in fact, the work was done "without express authority of law;" for this provision was placed in the constitution to cut off all claims based upon mere good faith and equity. There was a feeling, which had been long suffering, that there should be some inhibition to prevent the legislature from allowing the payment of extra compensation to officers who, subsequent to their election or appointment, discovered that the regular salary was insufficient, and also to prevent relief bills in favor of those who had dealt with state and municipal officers acting without express authorization from any source, or under palpably unauthorized and invalid contracts, and who were constantly asking the legislature to consider their misfortunes in pity, and regard them as deserving subjects of public benevolence. All this was doubtless well understood, and the phrase "without express authority of law" was used in view of the judicial and legislative history of the state; and yet it is by no means clear that it was intended to prevent the payment of a just claim, expressly authorized by an act in due form, duly passed and approved, and within the scope of lawful legislation, simply because, after the work has been done, the court may upon great deliberation and searching investigation declare the act for some reason—such as defect in title or wrongful delegation of power—unconstitutional.

The case of Nougues v. Douglass, 7 Cal. 65, relied on by appellant, is unlike the case at bar. In that case, and in People v. Johnson, 6 Cal. 499, the legislature had contracted a debt admitted to be in excess of the $300,000 limit specified in the constitution, and the court held that, until the claim was legalized by being submitted to a vote of the people, it could not be paid. There is no doubt as to the correctness of the decision in those cases. The constitutional inhibition contained in article 8 of the old constitution was so clear that the conclusion, as said by the court, was "most obvious." The meaning of words similar to those in question here were not involved in that case. The court had no doubt as to the meaning of the language used in article 8; and, if we could say the same of section 32, which is before us, we should, of course, apply the same rule.

But it follows, we think, from what has been said, that the meaning contended for by appellant is not necessarily implied in the language of section 32; and, if there be a fair doubt as to the true construction of that section, we should refrain from declaring that the legislature and the governor have exceeded their authority in the passage and approval of the act of March 10, 1885, appropriating money to pay the indebtedness incurred under the so-called drainage act of April 23, 1880. The doctrine has been so often enunciated—it has passed into an aphorism—that statutes will not be declared unconstitutional if there is a fair doubt as to their validity. The judicial department will not hesitate to interfere with the work of a co-ordinate branch of the government when the latter goes beyond its constitutional limitations, but the ground of interference must be plain and substantial.

Again, it is not a universal rule, as claimed by appellant, that an unconstitutional law is void ab initio and absolutely wanting in all binding force, and a nullity. There is at least an exception, viz., that an act duly passed or approved has the force of law to protect citizens dealing with public officers under its provisions up to the time that it is declared unconstitutional. Sessums v. Botts, 34 Tex. 335. And, if a decision that an act is unconstitutional be afterwards overruled, the statute will be deemed to be valid for the whole period. Pierce v. Pierce, 46 Ind. 86. It has been held that an act creating an office, though unconstitutional, is sufficient to give color of title, and that an officer acting under it is an officer de facto. Duff's Appeal, 56 Pa. St. 436; Clark v. Com., 29 Pa. St. 129. But, whether this be supported by the weight of authority or not, "nothing is better settled," it is said in State v. Douglass, 50 Mo. 596, "than that the acts of an officer de facto (although his title may be bad) are valid so far as they concern the public, or the rights of third persons who have an interest in the things done. Without this rule the business of a community could not be transacted. * * *

It would cause a suspension of business till every officer's right de jure was established." State v. Carroll, 38 Conn. 462; Harbaugh v. Winsor, 38 Mo. 327; Wilcox v. Smith, 5 Wend. 221; People v. Salomon, 54 Ill. 39; Ex parte Strang, 21 Ohio St. 610.

It must be remembered that the act of April 23, 1880, was judicially declared unconstitutional solely on the ground that, under article 3 of the constitution, the legislature could not delegate to executive officers such legislative powers as it had attempted to confer by that act. This was the only ground upon which the minds of a majority of the members of the court met. People v. Parks, 58 Cal. 645. It has never been claimed seriously that the work contemplated by the act was beyond the power of the legislature to provide for in some manner. If the legislature had defined the boundaries of the several districts, instead of delegating the power to the judgment of the governor, surveyor general, and state engineer, and had provided, in the manner it did provide, for the appointment of the three directors who were authorized to let, and who did in fact let, the contracts for the work, the result might have been different. The act has not been declared to be and is not necessarily unconstitutional in all of its parts. It is true, this court held that the directors had no authority to contract, but the creation of the office of director by the act, the appointment by the governor of three directors, and the ostensible authority conferred upon them by the act to contract, furnish some color of right to do the thing attempted by them.

I do not wish to be understood as saying that the directors were officers de facto with color of authority sufficient to bind the state, notwithstanding the unconstitutionality of the act under which the contract was let, and without regard to the provisions of section 32 as to "express authority of law." I cite the cases upon the effect of the acts of officers de facto simply to show that an unconstitutional law is not always and for all purposes a nullity so far as the rights of a citizen are concerned, and refer to the history of the case simply in illustration of my conclusion that, after a citizen has dealt with the state under circumstances like those shown here, the case does not come within the purview of section 32, and the legislature is not prohibited thereby from authorizing the payment to him of such reasonable sums as shall to it seem proper. It is unnecessary to say whether in all cases an act duly passed and approved would be "express authority of law" within the meaning of that section. There may be statutes palpably violative of principles so plain and well understood as to be no authority or protection at all; but as to that I express no opinion. Judgment affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

TEMPLE, J., (dissenting.) I cannot agree with the conclusion of the majority in this case. It seems to be admitted that the contract was void, the law authorizing it unconstitutional; and, if this be so, the debt for the services is expressly denounced as unauthorized by the constitution. The language is: "The legislature shall have no power * * * to pay or to authorize the payment of any claim hereafter created against the state * * * under any agreement or contract made without express authority of law; and all such unauthorized agreements or contracts shall be null and void." Article 4, § 32.

So far as I am able to understand the logic of the leading opinion, it is this: The constitution only forbids the payment of claims arising upon contracts made without express authority of law. The word "law" is a very general term, and was not used in any technical sense. It includes all sorts of laws. A void law, or at least a void statute, is in the popular sense some sort of a law. This contract was authorized by a void law; therefore the legislature is not prohibited from paying; therefore the legislature has the power to pay.

Now, in the first place, I deny that there is any common usage or popular sense in which a void statute is spoken of as a law which differs from the use of the words by lawyers or by the courts. We all speak of void laws, unconstitutional statutes, void contracts, void judgments, etc., meaning the things which in some respects appear to be the things named, but which really are not. So, if we desire to refer to one of these void instruments to identify it, we might say the contract A or the statute of April 1st, etc. If there be any common usage beyond this, and which is not common to lawyers, I challenge example and evidence of it.

But, admitting that even void laws or statutes are sometimes referred to as laws or statutes, that does not meet the necessities of the case. The phrase in the constitution is, "without express authority of law." Will any one assert that in any use whatever of language an act is ever said to be authorized by law, meaning that it is pursuant to law known to be void? How is it authorized if the law be void? The very words used imply a valid law. An act authorized by law must be a lawful act. Would it not have sounded strange if the convention had used the words "without authority of a valid law," or had added, "provided a void statute shall be deemed authority of law."

But waiving all this, and admitting that the contract we have just declared void because not authorized by law was authorized by law in the "popular sense," so that the legislature is not by this constitutional provision expressly prohibited from paying the claim, the difficulty is not ended. It is necessary to find in this negative language, not only no prohibition, but an affirmative grant of power to pay; for there still remains the implied prohibition that the legislature cannot authorize the payment of a debt created in violation of the constitution. There still remains the admission that the contract was void because not authorized by law.

If it requires authority to show that even without an express prohibition the legislature cannot authorize the payment of a claim created in violation of the constitution, we have it in Nougues v. Douglass, 7 Cal. 65. The legislature authorized a contract for a state capitol. Plaintiff took the contract, and performed labor upon it, for which he was entitled, by the terms of his contract, to receive an admitted sum of money. The act was within the general scope of legislative power, but the court held that the legislature could not pay the debt. It was said: "If, then, the legislature had no right to create a state debt beyond the limit fixed by the constitution, that body has no constitutional right to tax the people to pay a void debt. * * * The restriction upon the power of the legislature would be nugatory if the same end could be accomplished by other modes. The evil intended to be prevented would still exist, and the injury to the people would be the same. If the power to create the debt is denied, the power to levy taxes to pay it must be equally denied. The power to pay is a necessary incident to the power to tax, and they both must stand or fall together."

And, again, let it be admitted that there cannot be found in section 32 of article 4 of the constitution a limitation on the power of the legislature, either express or implied. Why is not this relief bill a gift within the meaning of section 31, article 4, of the constitution? "Nor shall it [the legislature] have power to make any gift, or authorize the making of any gift, of any public money or thing of value to any individual, municipal or other corporation whatever." It is admitted that the contract is utterly void; that it imposes no legal liability or obligation upon the part of the state. The state has received and will receive nothing from the parties to whom this money is to be given. True, if the contract had been valid, in legal contemplation the state would have received a consideration in the service performed by reason of the contract, although there was nothing of benefit in it. Now, a gift is something bestowed without return. If this be not something bestowed without return, what is the thing returned? Can there be any other reason for holding this appropriation not a gift, except that it would be highly inequitable and unjust not to compensate the respondent for services rendered pursuant to an act of the legislature believed to be valid? In other words, the claim is founded upon a moral obligation which the state ought to recognize and satisfy.

This construction, I submit, virtually repeals sections 31 and 32 of article 4 of the constitution. What sense is there in prohibiting the contract, and declaring it void, if the legislature may nevertheless voluntarily perform the contract on the part of the state? What practical purpose is served by forbidding gifts of the people's money or property if the legislature can recognize and discharge a moral obligation? The legislature must be the judge of the moral obligation, and would rarely ever care to make a gift where it could not claim the existence of a moral obligation. My brothers deny, as I understand the decision, that they hold any such doctrine. I hope this will prevent the decision from being regarded as a precedent upon this question; but will it? I have shown that, disclaim it as they will, such is the real ground of the decision. Our successors will justly claim that it can be sustained on no other theory. This is the excuse for all relief bills. Can any one deny that the sole purpose of the provisions was to prevent this very legislation?

But I do not care to pursue the subject further. The constitution itself directs how laws shall be made, and of course the law meant must be a law passed as in the constitution provided. The whole claim seems to be baseless. A void contract based on a void law, ratified against the express prohibition of the constitution, constitutes no valid claim against the state. I do not think it necessary to pass upon the question whether there might not be an unconstitutional statute which would have some effect.

We are not now considering such a question as was before the court in Sesums v. Botts, 34 Tex. 335. It might be admitted that the convention adopted sections 31 and 32 of article 4 of the constitution in view of such a rule, and to prevent its application to the cases like that in hand. The rule was there adopted, however, to protect ministerial officers who had obeyed the law before it was held unconstitutional, and to prevent judgment creditors from losing their liens because the officers had obeyed such law. Here the question is simply as to the meaning of two sections of the constitution.

In re AMBROSE. (No. 20,299.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 31, 1887.)

DIVORCE—INTERLOCUTORY AND FINAL ORDERS—HABEAS CORPUS.

In an action of divorce, brought by the wife, an order was made on the twenty-sixth of July, 1886, allowing the wife $200 per month as alimony pendente lite. On the twenty-seventh of September all questions of property between the parties were referred to a referee. On the third of January, 1887, while the reference was still pending, judgment for divorce was entered, providing that "all questions as to property, and as to a suitable allowance to the wife, are hereby reserved." The husband refused to pay the alimony granted by the order of the twenty-sixth of July, claiming that that order was vacated by the judgment of the third of January, and was imprisoned for contempt. Held, on an application for a writ of habeas corpus, that the judgment of the third of January, as to questions of property, was interlocutory, and not final, and therefore did not vacate the order of the twenty-sixth of July.

In bank. On habeas corpus.

Stanly, Stoney & Hayes, for petitioner. McAllister & Bergin, for respondent.

MCKINSTRY, J. On the twenty-fourth of June, 1886, Mary C. Ambrose, wife of the petitioner, commenced an action for the dissolution of the bonds of matrimony. In her complaint, after alleging facts showing extreme cruelty, she alleged that the defendant in said action, the petitioner herein, was a man of large means, and the owner of tracts of land therein described of very great value,—of the value of between $500,000 and $600,000. The prayer is for a divorce, and an injunction restraining defendant from disposing of his property pendente lite; that such portion of the property of defendant as the court might, on the hearing, think should be distributed to her, be adjudged and decreed to her; that reasonable alimony be allowed her for her support during the pendency of the action; that costs and counsel fees for plaintiff be forthwith paid by defendant; that in the final judgment there be adjudged to the plaintiff such portion of the property of defendant as might be deemed just; and for other and further relief, etc.

The action was called for trial in the superior court, and testimony taken therein in the months of August and September, 1886, and on the twenty-seventh of said September the court filed findings of fact, and the conclusion of law that the plaintiff was entitled to a divorce, with the further order:

"All questions as to property are hereby reserved, and the cause is now referred to B. A. Reynolds, Esq., as referee herein, to take such testimony as the respective parties may offer upon the question of property, and to report to this court: First. What is the common property of plaintiff and defendant? Second. What is the separate property of plaintiff, and the present income of said separate property? Third. What the separate property of the defendant, and the present income of said separate property? And also to report to this court all testimony taken before him."

On the thirtieth of December, 1886, and while the reference was pending, the superior court filed additional findings of fact, and a conclusion of law as follows: "And as conclusion of law the court finds that the plaintiff is entitled to a judgment for divorce from defendant on the ground of extreme cruelty;" and ordered: "Let judgment be entered accordingly; all questions as to property being reserved." (Signed by the judge.) And on the third of January, 1887, a judgment in form was made and entered in the action in words and figures following:

"[Title of court and cause.] In accordance with the findings heretofore entered and filed in this action, it is hereby adjudged and decreed that the marriage heretofore and now existing between the plaintiff, Mary C. Ambrose, and the defendant, Thomas Ambrose, be dissolved, and the same is hereby dissolved, upon the ground of extreme cruelty inflicted by the said defendant on the plaintiff; and the said parties plaintiff and defendant are, and each of them is, freed from the obligations of said marriage. All questions as to property, and as to a suitable allowance to the wife for her support, are hereby reserved."

On the twenty-sixth of July, 1886, an order was made by the superior court, in said action, that the plaintiff be allowed the sum of $200 per month as and for alimony "pendente lite," commencing with the date of the commencement of the action.

On the first of April, 1887, the plaintiff in the action aforesaid demanded of the defendant therein, the petitioner herein, the payment to her of $200 by virtue of said order of July 26, 1886, which petitioner refused to pay.

April 14, 1887, on application, the judge of the superior court ordered the petitioner to show cause why he should not be adjudged guilty of contempt in disobeying the order of the twenty-sixth of July, 1886. The petitioner appeared by himself and counsel in response to such order to show cause, and such proceedings were had under such order that the same came on for hearing before the superior court on the eighteenth of April, 1887, when the petitioner appeared and claimed to show, for cause, that the order of July 26, 1886, was vacated by the entry of the judgment and decree of January 3, 1887. The superior court made and entered an order adjudging the petitioner, defendant in said action, guilty of contempt, and that he stand committed to the jail of the city and county of San Francisco, there to remain until he pay said sum of $200 to said Mary C. Ambrose, plaintiff in said action. A warrant of commitment was issued to the sheriff, who attached the person of the petitioner, and imprisoned him in the county jail, and continues to imprison him; the said $200 not having been paid. The petitioner contends that the imprisonment is illegal, and the order directing it void, and asks to be discharged.

It is contended by counsel for the petitioner that the sole question to be determined in this proceeding is, was the decree entered, in the case of Ambrose v. Ambrose, on January 3, 1887, a final or interlocutory decree? We do not find it necessary to decide, however, that the decree was not a finality, so far as it adjudged a dissolution of the marriage. We have only to consider the effect of the clause, "All questions as to property * * * are hereby reserved." The language imports at least a reservation of the issues made by the pleadings as to property, common or separate, for further investigation in the action. If not a reservation for that purpose, it means nothing. It would be a forced construction to say the words employed are simply a declaration that the court refuses to try or pass on those questions. Moreover, the same rules of interpretation apply in ascertaining the meaning of a court order or judgment as in ascertaining the meaning of any other writing, and, if the language be in any degree uncertain, we may properly refer to the circumstances surrounding the making of the order or judgment,—to the condition of the cause in which it was entered. When the decree of January 3, 1887, was entered, the referee was proceeding under the order of July 26, 1886, which order remained in full force and effect. The decree may properly be read in connection with the order of reference, and the proceedings thereunder. All questions of property were "reserved," to be disposed of on the coming in of the referee's report.

It seems to us that, to justify an order discharging the petitioner, we would be compelled to treat the reservation clause in the decree as absolutely void, and that, on the entry of the decree for divorce, the superior court became functus lite, with no jurisdiction to proceed further in the cause, to entertain the report of the referee, to hear the parties upon any question of property, or to render judgment in the action with respect thereto. But this would be to disregard the clause of the order or decree which, as we construe it, reserves such questions, and, in view of the previous order, evidently contemplates further judicial action in the same cause; would leave untried important issues, and questions undetermined for the determination of which the suit was commenced and prosecuted. In construing its meaning, we are not required to decide whether it was an irregularity to enter the decree before all the issues were tried. If the court had no power to enter it, certainly the suit was not terminated by the decree. If the power existed, the meaning of the decree is that the questions as to property be reserved for further hearing and consideration in the same action.

Ordered that the petitioner be remanded to the custody of the sheriff.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; THORNTON, J.; MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; TEMPLE, J.; PATERSON, J.

STUTTMEISTER v. SUPERIOR COURT. (No. 12,168.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 9, 1887.)

APPEAL—FROM PROBATE COURT—APPEALABLE ORDER—CONTEMPT.

The claim of an attorney for services rendered to the estate of a deceased person, when allowed and approved by the probate court, not as costs, but to be paid in due course of administration, becomes one of the "acknowledged debts of the estate, to be paid in due course of administration," (Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1497;) and an order for its payment is appealable, under section 963, Code Civil Proc. Cal., which provides that an appeal lies to the supreme court from certain orders of the superior court in probate proceedings, among which are orders for the payment of a debt, claim, legacy, etc.;¹ and after an appeal taken by an administrator from such an order of the superior court, and the filing of a supersedeas bond, the action of the superior court in fining the administrator for contempt for refusing to pay the claim of the attorney is in excess of its jurisdiction.

Department 2. Review to superior court, San Francisco, department 9.
Ben Morgan, for petitioner. E. J. & J. H. Moore, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. J. This case comes up on a writ of review issued to the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco, department 9. From the record presented it appears that, in 1884, John A. Collins presented a claim for services as attorney against the estate of F. W. R. Stuttmeister, deceased, to W. O. Stuttmeister, the administrator of such estate, and such proceedings were afterwards had therein that, on or about October 10, 1884, such claim was allowed and approved by the probate court for $300, and ordered to be paid out of the estate in due course of administration. On the seventeenth day of May, 1887, the said superior court, in probate, made an order upon the administrator, requiring him to forthwith pay to said John A. Collins said sum of $300, so allowed as aforesaid; that thereafter, and on the eighteenth day of May, 1887, W. O. Stuttmeister, administrator as aforesaid, took and perfected an appeal to this court from said order of May 17, 1887, requiring him, as such administrator, to pay said sum of $300 as aforesaid. A supersedeas bond was filed, and the appeal is in all respects regular in form.

Subsequent thereto the court below proceeded to adjudge said administrator guilty of contempt for failing to pay over said sum of money, in accordance with such order of May 17, 1887, and adjudged him guilty of such contempt, and fined him in the sum of $200, and, in default of payment thereof committed him to the custody of the sheriff, etc.; whereupon said administrator sues out this writ of review.

If the order for the payment of the $300 was appealable, then the proceedings thereon, having been stayed by an appeal and supersedeas bond as provided by the Code of Civil Procedure, the superior court was divested of jurisdiction to act further in the matter pending such appeal.

By section 963, Code Civil Proc., an appeal to the supreme court is given from certain orders of the superior court in probate proceedings, among which are judgments or orders for "the payment of a debt, claim, legacy, or distributive share," etc. The contention of counsel for respondent is that the demand in question is for services rendered in the progress of administration, and is not a debt or claim within the purview of section 963, supra, and consequently that no appeal lies therefrom. We are inclined to agree with counsel for respondent that the term "claim," as used in the Code, in reference to estates of deceased persons, has reference to such demands or debts against the decedent as existed and (if due) might have been enforced against him in his life-time by proper action, (Fallon v. Butler, 21 Cal. 24; Estate ¹An order in probate proceedings directing the sale of real estate is appealable, In re Stuttmeister, (Cal.) 12 Pac. Rep. 563; nor from an order refusing to vacate an order of distribution and settlement of the final accounts of an executor, In re Lutz, (Cal.) 8 Pac. Rep. 39. As to appeals from other orders of probate courts, see Gilbert v. Thayer, (N. Y.) 10 N. E. Rep. 148; Putney v. Fletcher, (Mass.) 5 N. E. Rep. 640, Pemberton v. Pemberton, (N. J.) 7 Atl. of McCausland, 52 Cal. 568;) and that liabilities of the administrator or executor, incurred in the management of the estate, or in administering the trust, stand upon a different footing. Conceding all this, however, and the case is not altered. In this instance, it is apparent the demand was presented, allowed, and ordered paid as a claim against the estate; to be paid, not as costs, but in due course of administration. When so allowed, it became one of the "acknowledged debts of the estate, to be paid in due course of administration." Code Civil Proc. § 1497. When thus treated, an order for its payment was appealable under section 963, supra.

Respondent cannot treat the claim against the estate as an established debt, for the purpose of enforcing its payment out of the estate, and at the same time impugn it, and the order founded thereon, as the basis of an appeal. It follows that the action of the court below, in adjudging the administrator guilty of contempt after the appeal was perfected, and a bond for the stay of proceedings filed, was in excess of jurisdiction, and such proceedings to adjudge the administrator guilty of contempt, and to punish him therefor, are quashed, and the court below ordered to stay further proceedings in such behalf until the hearing and determination of the appeal from the order aforesaid.

FRESNO CANAL & IRRIGATION CO. v. WARNER. (No. 11,911.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 28, 1887.)

1. CORPORATIONS—EXISTENCE OF—ESTOPPEL.

When one has contracted with an alleged corporation, and is sued for failure to perform his contract, he cannot be heard to say that the corporation had no existence, and for that reason no contract was made.¹

2. SAME—EVIDENCE OF EXISTENCE—ARTICLES.

A copy of articles of incorporation filed in the office of the county clerk of the county in which the principal business of the company is conducted, as required by Civil Code Cal. § 296, when certified by the secretary of state, as provided by section 297, is admissible as prima facie evidence of the existence of the corporation.

3. SAME—OTHER EVIDENCE.

In an action in California by a corporation, a certified copy of the articles of incorporation were introduced in evidence, but they were not read to the jury, nor was their reading waived. The president of the company testified that he owned all of the stock except a few shares, and that he had been its general manager or president since its organization. The court refused to allow the jury to take the copy of the articles with them when they retired, but instructed them to find specially whether or not the plaintiff was a corporation, as alleged, and told them that they could not consider any documentary evidence that might have been offered, unless the document had been read to them, or its reading waived. The jury found that the plaintiff was a corporation. Held, that the court properly submitted the special issue to the jury after the argument and instructions, under Code Civil Proc. § 625, authorizing the submission of special issues to the jury, and that the verdict was not contrary to the law and the evidence.

Appeal from superior court, Fresno county.

Wigginton, Creed & Hawes, for appellant. Nourse & Church, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. U. This is an action to recover the sum of $500 alleged to be due the plaintiff for conducting water, sufficient for irrigation purposes, upon the lands of defendant, under a contract made between the parties. The complaint alleged that the plaintiff was a corporation, incorporated under the laws of this state, and engaged in the business of diverting water from Kings river, and supplying therewith, for irrigation and other useful purposes, the people of Fresno county. The answer denied that the plaintiff was a corporation, and also denied the making of the contract alleged, or any contract, for conducting water upon his land. The case was tried by a jury, and the verdict and judgment were in favor of plaintiff. The defendant moved for a new trial, and now appeals from the judgment and order denying his motion.

It appears from the record that, at the commencement of the trial, counsel for plaintiff offered in evidence a copy, certified by the secretary of state, of the plaintiff's articles of incorporation. Counsel for defendant objected to the offered evidence, upon the ground that it purported to be a copy of a copy, and was irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent. The court overruled the objection, and thereupon the paper was handed to the clerk of the court, and by him marked "Plaintiff's Exhibit A." It was, however, never read to the jury, and the reading of it was neither waived nor admitted.

M. J. Church was then called as a witness, and testified that he was "the M. J. Church named in the articles of incorporation of plaintiff as one of the corporators of said plaintiff, and that he owned all but five shares of the capital stock of plaintiff, and that he had been its president ever since its organization, except about three years, and its superintendent ever since its organization." No other or further evidence as to whether plaintiff was a corporation or not was offered during the trial of the cause.

Upon the other questions involved, considerable evidence was introduced by both sides, and at its conclusion counsel argued the case to the jury. The court then gave its instructions, and counsel for plaintiff asked that the jury be permitted to take with them, upon retiring for deliberation, the certified copy of plaintiff's articles of incorporation. This was refused, and thereupon counsel asked that the jury be instructed, in addition to their general verdict, to answer the question: "Was and is the plaintiff a corporation, as alleged in the complaint?" This last request was granted, against the objection and exception of defendant. The jury then retired, and in due time returned with a general verdict in favor of plaintiff, and an answer to the question submitted, as follows: "We, the jury, find that it was and is so a corporation."

The first point made for the appellant is that the court erred in submitting to the jury the special issue as to whether the plaintiff was a corporation or not. A sufficient answer to this point is that the Code fully authorized the ruling. Section 625 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the court, "in all cases, may instruct them, [the jury,] if they render a general verdict, to find upon particular questions of fact, to be stated in writing, and may direct a written finding thereon." That this was done after argument, and after the giving of the instructions to the jury, is not material.

It is next claimed that the court erred in admitting in evidence the certified copy, from the office of the secretary of state, of the plaintiff's articles of incorporation, as it was only a copy of a copy. Here, too, the Code furnishes full justification for the action of the court. Section 296 of the Civil Code provides that articles of incorporation must be filed in the office of the county clerk of the county in which the principal business of the company is to be transacted, and a copy thereof, certified by the county clerk, with the secretary of state.

And section 297 then further provides: "A copy of any articles of incorporation filed in pursuance of this chapter, and certified by the secretary of state, must be received in all the courts and other places as prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated."

Lastly, it is insisted that the verdict was not justified by the evidence, and was against law. The court charged the jury that, under the laws of this state, they could not consider any documentary evidence that might have been offered, unless the document had been read to them, or its reading waived; and the position of appellant is that, as the plaintiff's articles of incorporation were not read to the jury, nor the reading waived, there was no evidence before them showing the plaintiff's corporate character; and hence the verdict, finding that the plaintiff was a corporation, was contrary to the evidence, and also contrary to the instructions of the court.

Leaving out the articles of incorporation, we think there was some evidence before the jury tending to show that the plaintiff was a corporation. The testimony of Church was admitted without objection, and in that he speaks of the plaintiff as a corporation, and of himself as one of the corporators, and says he owned the larger part of its capital stock, and had been its president a part of the time, and its superintendent all the time, since its organization. How could this be true if the plaintiff never became a corporation, either de jure or de facto? But, however this may be, we think the verdict may be sustained upon another ground. It is not denied that there was ample evidence before the jury to show that the contract was made and executed by the plaintiff, as alleged in the complaint. This being so, the defendant, under the rule of law now generally accepted, cannot be heard to question the plaintiff's existence as a corporation.

In Lehman v. Warner, 61 Ala. 455, it is said, on page 466: "It is too well settled now to be controverted that a party who contracts with a corporation, whether it be by subscription for its stock, or by promissory note, bond, mortgage, or other form of contract, is estopped from denying the existence of the corporation;" citing authorities. It is then added: "It has often been said that, when a corporation sues, its corporate existence must be shown, if it is controverted. When the action is against one contracting with it in its corporate capacity, the contract furnishes the evidence."

In Close v. Glenwood Cemetery, 107 U. S. 477, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 267, it is said: "One who deals with a corporation as existing in fact is estopped to deny, as against the corporation, that it has been legally organized."

In Oregonian Ry. Co. v. Oregon Ry. & Nav. Co., 10 Sawy. 470, 23 Fed. Rep. 232, it is said: "The law is well settled that the person who contracts with an apparent corporation as such is estopped, when sued on such contract, to say that the plaintiff had no corporate existence, or power to make such contract. A corporation, like an individual, when sued on a contract, may set up as a defense its want of power or capacity to make such contract; but the party with whom it contracts cannot set up such a want of power or capacity as a defense to an action by the corporation for a breach thereof." The same doctrine is announced in Bigelow, Estop. (4th Ed.) 527, and many authorities are cited in support of it.

In support of their contention that the existence of the plaintiff as a corporation may be questioned in an action like this, counsel for appellant cite Mokelumne H. C. & M. Co. v. Woodbury, 14 Cal. 426; Harris v. McGregor, 29 Cal. 127; and Oroville & V. R. Co. v. Plumas Co., 37 Cal. 360, 361. But these cases are not in point. In neither of them was the action based upon a contract alleged to have been made between the corporation and the adverse party. The distinction seems to be this: In actions not founded upon contract made between the parties, the existence of the alleged corporation, if put in issue, must be proved; but when one has contracted with an alleged corporation, and is sued for failure to perform his contract, he cannot be heard to say that the corporation had no existence, and for that reason no contract was made.

In our opinion the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

By THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

LENT and others v. TILSON and others. (No. 8,540.)*(Supreme Court of California. May 31, 1887.)1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—LOCAL IMPROVEMENTS—SUPERVISORS.

The act of California of March 23, 1876, providing for the widening of Dupont street in the city of San Francisco, defining the district benefited thereby, and appointing a board of commissioners to carry out the work, and assess the cost thereof on the property benefited, did not deprive the supervisors of the discretion with respect to local improvements secured to them by the city charter, because by its terms it was not to go into operation until the board of supervisors should declare, in such form as they should deem advisable, that it was expedient to widen the street in the manner proposed.

2. SAME—DUE PROCESS OF LAW—NOTICE.

Said act does not conflict with the provision of the constitution that no person shall be deprived of his property without due process of law, because, first, such process is provided by the notices, (that the board of commissioners is organized, and that its report, giving full information of every determination of the board which can affect the interest of any person, is open for inspection and objection,) which are required by the act to be published in the newspapers, and which are sufficient when construed together with the act; for the sufficiency of such notices is to be determined from the particular circumstances of the case in hand, and in this case the owners of property assessed knew that the act was passed, knew what notices were provided for, and knew that the entire cost would be a lien on their property; hence they ought to have been diligent to see that the board performed its duties properly. The district to be assessed was defined in the statute, and publication during 20 days that the report of the board was open for inspection for 30 days was reasonably sufficient, when helped out by the statute.

3. SAME—APPEAL TO COURT.

And, second, as the power to determine the expediency of a public improvement rests with the legislature, and is not judicial in its nature, the rights of persons whose property is taken are fully secured if they have a right to be heard as to the amount of compensation awarded, and as to the assessment levied, before the lien becomes final upon their property. Such right is protected by the provision that any objection to the action of the board, as shown in the report, may be heard and decided by the county court; and the notice to be given was sufficient to bring into court all parties interested, not as if the proceedings were judicial, but such as the case admits.

4. SAME—INJUNCTION—ESTOPPEL.

Owners of property assessed under said act of March 23, 1876, cannot bring suit, on account of the misconduct of the board of commissioners, to enjoin collection of taxes for the payment of bonds issued to pay for the improvement, when ample provision is made for the correction of such irregularities at the hearing before the county court, and the act itself provides that completion of the work "shall be deemed an absolute acceptance by the owners of all lands affected by this act of the lien created by this act upon the several lots so affected."

5. SAME—ASSESSMENTS—DISTRICT BENEFITED.

The legislature has authority to declare what district is benefited by a local improvement, and to levy on such district an assessment therefor, and the courts will interfere to set aside such assessment only where there has been a manifest abuse of discretion.

6. PUBLICATION—NOTICE—SUPPLEMENT.

Publication of a notice on the third sheet, called the "supplement," and containing matter for which there was no room in the two sheets on which the paper was usually printed, is sufficient when it appears that the so-called "supplement" is circulated co-extensively with the rest of the paper.

PATERSON, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

McAllester & Bergin and D. M. Delmas, for appellants. Garber, Thornton & Bishop, for respondents.

TEMPLE, J. This suit was brought to enjoin the tax collector of the city and county of San Francisco from selling certain real estate, for the collection of the tax imposed for the payment of the Dupont-street bonds, issued under the act of the legislature approved March 23, 1876, (St. 1875—76, p. 433.) That act provided for the widening of Dupont street, but was not to go into operation until the board of supervisors should declare by resolution or order that in their judgment it was expedient to widen the street in accordance with and in the mode prescribed by the act. The act specially defined the district benefited by the proposed improvement which should bear the burden of making it, to be assessed to the owners of land in proportion to the benefit received. The district was described as two separate parcels of land, being two strips,—one on either side of the street,—extending from Bush street to Market; the strip on the east side in width extending half-way to Kearny, and that on the west half-way to Stockton,—such streets being the parallel streets nearest to Dupont on the east and west. In case the board of supervisors expressed their judgment in favor of the improvement, the Dupont-street commissioners named in the act, to-wit, the mayor, the auditor, and county surveyor, were to publish a notice in two of the daily papers printed in the city of San Francisco, informing property owners along the line of said street of the organization of the board, “and inviting all persons interested in property sought to be taken or which would be injured by said widening, to present to the board maps and plans of their respective lots, and a written statement of the nature of their claim or interest in such lots.” The board was required to have an office in the city, and was furnished with a secretary, and allowed to employ clerks, attorneys, surveyors, draughtsmen, searchers of records, etc., and section 7 of the act defines with considerable particularity the duties of the commissioners, and the mode of performing them. It is provided, however, that within 30 days after the publication of the notice of the organization of the board the owners of a majority in value of the property fronting on the street may interpose their veto to the further prosecution of the work, which veto shall be final. If the proceeding was not thus arrested, the board was to proceed, and, having completed the work of estimating damages and benefits, was to embody the result in a report, the precise nature of which is minutely defined in the act, and which apparently, when so made, would give full and particular information of every determination of the board which could affect the interest of any person. This report, when thus completed, was to be left “at the office of the board daily during ordinary business hours, for 30 days, for the free inspection of all parties interested, and notice that the same is open for such time and such place,” to be published by the board daily, for 20 days, in two daily newspapers printed and published in the city. At any time within this 30 days any person interested, who felt aggrieved by the action of the board, could file in the county court his petition setting forth his grievance, and the court was empowered to approve the report, or to cause the same to be altered or modified, and finally to approve as modified. When the report was finally approved, the board was to issue bonds of the city and county in a sum sufficient to pay the damages awarded, and all costs, the bonds to be paid by a tax on the district benefited. When the damages were all paid by the proceeds of the bonds, and the persons receiving the payments had conveyed to the city and county the lands taken, the board was to remove the buildings and widen the street; and it was provided that the completion of the work “shall be deemed an absolute acceptance by the owners of all lands affected by this act, and by their successors in interest of the lien created by this act upon the several lots so affected. * * *

The complaint avers that the work was actually performed, that is, that during the first seven months of the year 1877 the street was actually widened from 44 feet to 74 feet, by the removal of the buildings, and the turning of the same into roadway and sidewalk; that the bonds were sold, and the money thus obtained was used for the payment of the damages and costs; but it is claimed that money was expended improperly, and a large sum retained without just authority, for costs to accrue.

The objections to the proceedings are numerous, but may be included under the following: (1) The act is unconstitutional; (2) the board of commissioners had no power or jurisdiction to act because the board of supervisors did not properly express their judgment that it was expedient to widen Dupont street; (3) the notices required to be given to parties affected were never, in fact, given as required; (4) the board was guilty of fraud and misconduct; and (5) the report, as confirmed, shows that the damages exceed the benefits.

1. It is claimed that the act is unconstitutional on many grounds.

First. Because it is an attempt by the state to exercise the power of assessment for local improvements within the limits of a municipality. People v. Lynch, 51 Cal. 34. In that case it was said of the statute there under consideration: "Such law is unconstitutional, because it is mandatory in its nature, and deprives the board of trustees * * * of all choice or discretion in reference to improvements." The act in question does not do that. It leaves the matter entirely to the local legislature to say whether the work shall be done or not. True, if the board of supervisors concludes to order the work to be done, the act designates the city officers who shall act as commissioners. This power to act as a board is given to such officers, and their successors in office. The mode of procedure is also prescribed. There is nothing unusual in this. Nor does it matter that the mode differed from that laid down in the consolidation act for inaugurating other improvements. But this question is not an open one. People v. Bartlett, 67 Cal. 156, 7 Pac. Rep. 417; Pacific Bridge Co. v. Kirkham, 64 Cal. 519, 2 Pac. Rep. 409.

Second. It is claimed that the act is unconstitutional because it does not provide for due process of law.

1. It is claimed that the parties to be affected had a right to be heard upon the question whether the street should be widened or not, that the proceeding is judicial in its character,—is, in fact, a part of the proceeding to take private property for public use, to which the persons whose property is affected must be parties. There was no provision for such hearing. But it is plain that it is not a judicial act in that sense. It may be said to be judicial in the sense that it is not ministerial. It is an act which rests in the sound discretion of the authority. It may act or not, or may act in such mode as it may deem best, within legal limits, but it is not a determination by a judicial tribunal of the rights of parties before it. It is a legislative act, and the power to determine the expediency of a public improvement rests with the legislature, or such local authorities as have been charged with the duty of determining the policy of the government in such matters. Some authorities from New Jersey are cited to the contrary, but the overwhelming current of decision is in accord with this view. Where compensation is provided for property taken, and persons interested are awarded an opportunity to be heard as to the amount, the constitutional requirement is satisfied. So, too, where a district is charged with an assessment for a local improvement, it is enough if the parties to bear the burden have a right to be heard as to the assessment before the lien becomes final upon their property. Reclamation Dist. v. Evans, 61 Cal. 104; In re Zborowski, 68 N. Y. 88; Holt v. City, 127 Mass. 408; Pearson v. Zable, 78 Ky. 170; Brewster v. Syracuse, 19 N. Y. 116; People v. Smith, 21 N. Y. 595.

2. It is claimed that the act does not provide for due process of law, because the notices prescribed are insufficient. The notices provided for in the act which are criticised under this head are the notice of the organization of the board; and the notice that the report of the board is open for inspection.

The sufficiency of the notice will depend, to a very considerable extent, on the nature of the proceeding, and the statute on which it is based. The statute is always presumed to be known, and whether the notice really affords the necessary information, and gives the party whose interests are affected an opportunity to be heard, must depend largely upon those provisions. It has been repeatedly held that proceedings for the levy and collection of taxes are not necessarily judicial, and that due process of law, as applied to such matters, does not require such notice as is considered essential to the validity of a judgment. In Kentucky R. R. Tax Cases, 115 U. S. 331, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 57, it is said: "Notice by statute is generally the only notice given, and that has been held sufficient. 'In judging what is due process of law,' said Justice BRADLEY in Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 'respect must be had to the cause and object of the taking, whether under the taxing power, the power of eminent domain, or the power of assessment for local improvements, or none of these; and, if found to be suitable or admissible in the special case, it will be adjudged to be due process of law; but if found to be arbitrary, oppressive, and unjust it may be declared to be not due process of law.'" In other words, the sufficiency of the notice must be determined in each case from the particular circumstances of the case in hand. And further, in matters of assessment and taxation, the same character of notice is not required as in ordinary actions in a court of justice; for the reason, I presume, that in such summary proceedings it is not practicable or usual.

Now, then, what are the circumstances of this case which have a bearing upon this question? Dupont street is one of the oldest streets in the city of San Francisco. That portion affected by this proceeding was in the heart of the city, and had long been a finished street, the lots along it on both sides built upon and occupied. The district which it was alleged would be benefited was specifically defined in the act. Kearny street had shortly before been widened by a proceeding somewhat similar, and the result had been to make the street more attractive. The tendency of business was westward, and Dupont street was the next parallel street. It was 44 feet wide. It was not to any considerable extent a thoroughfare, except for local purposes. There was not much reason for widening the street which could interest the general public, but the case comes as near as can be imagined to being one in which it was a certain proposition that the proposed improvement would be greatly to the advantage of the individual property owners. The municipality and the general public, however, were obviously so little interested in the matter that it would hardly be putting the matter too strongly to say that there was no decent pretext for the improvement except upon the hypothesis that the local property holders desired it, and would be advantaged by it. It is inconceivable that the matter should be passed through the legislature without being a frequent subject of discussion among the lot-owners, even if it were not done at their instance. They had notice, not only as a rule of law which charges every one with knowledge of the statute, but must have had such information as a fact; and also that in making the improvement the officials were acting, in a certain qualified sense, as their agents, for their individual advantage, rather than for the public. After the supervisors had resolved that it was expedient that the street should be widened, and the board of commissioners was organized, the whole proceeding could even then be stopped by a majority in value of frontage on the street. And when the work should all be completed, the act provides, as already recited, that the completion shall be deemed an acceptance by the lot-owners of the lien of the debt, as an absolute waiver of all claim upon the city for any part of the debt, and as a contract between such owners and the holders of the bonds issued under authority of the act.

Under such circumstances, it seems to me the notices required are greatly helped out by the act itself. The owners are in a certain sense parties to a proceeding, and are informed beforehand of the notices which will or may be given and of the purpose of them. They are informed minutely of the course of procedure, and the duty, in my opinion, is cast upon them of exercising a certain degree of diligence in regard to them. Having notice that the municipality would assume no part of the burden, and that when completed the entire cost would become a lien upon their property, and the bonds be considered as their individual contracts, they were put to their diligence to see that the board faithfully performed its duties, at least to the extent that they could not afterwards complain of mere irregularities, or of any misconduct on the part of the commissioners which they could have had reviewed and corrected in the proceeding itself, dum fieri. This, of course, if correct, does not obviate the necessity of notice, but I think it has an important bearing upon the issue as to the sufficiency of the notices provided; and, if I am right, it is unnecessary to mention particularly some objections to the statutory provision which I may venture to say, in such a view, seems almost trivial. Some of them, however, cannot justly be so characterized. Among these are the objections that the notice is not required to be addressed to any one; that, at the best, it is only for those owning property fronting on Dupont street.

As already indicated, the notice must be read in the light of all the provisions of the act. In Boorman v. Santa Barbara, 65 Cal. 313, 4 Pac. Rep. 31, which is much relied upon by the respondents, the act authorized the mayor and common council, upon petition, to lay out, widen, etc., any street in the city, and directed them to give notice by publication in a newspaper of the time and place where they would proceed to examine the property to be affected. St. 1877-78, p. 777. This court held the act unconstitutional, because it did not sufficiently provide for notice. As it "provides for no notice at all addressed to any particular person or class of persons, or which would inform any particular person that on failure of appearance any burden would be imposed upon him or his property," the court said: "It will be observed the act neither fixes the boundaries of an assessment district nor authorizes the common council to fix them. * * * It is possible, if the commissioners were authorized to fix the limits of the assessment district, finally or conditionally, in the first instance, and then to give notice—even by publication—to the owners of property within the district, the notice would be sufficient. But the act provides only for notice, at most, to all property owners in Santa Barbara. Who can know that his property may by the commissioners be deemed to be benefited?"

Plainly, that is not an authority against the sufficiency of the notice here. The authorities seem to be all, or nearly all, in favor of the proposition that when the limits of the assessment district are defined in the statute the notice need not be addressed to the persons whose property is affected by name; and certainly, in this particular case, we see no good reason for such a requirement. In re Mayor, 99 N. Y. 580; City of Ottawa v. Macy, 20 Ill. 413. Nor was it necessary that the property sought to be taken or affected should be specifically described in the notice. As a whole, the property is so described in the statute.

The first notice prescribed in section 6 was, in part, to inform property owners along the line of the street that the board was then organized. The words, "property owners along the line of said street," as there used, are not the equivalent of the words, "owners of property fronting on said street." For the meaning of the language we must again refer to the statute. There we find the lands to be assessed for benefits described as two narrow strips on either side of the street, each fronting on and along the line of the street. For one purpose, no doubt, the notice was effective only as to owners of frontage; that is, to set the time running in which the owners of frontage might have stopped the proceedings; for it seems that only such persons could act in the matter. But it was also a notice to all persons interested that the proceedings were then pending, and that the board, unless proceedings were arrested by the veto of the owners of frontage, would proceed with their labors.

3. Various objections are made to the notice prescribed in section 7 of the act. That provision is: "Such report, as soon as the same is completed, shall be left at the office of the board daily, during ordinary business hours, for thirty days, for the free inspection of all parties interested, and notice that the same is so open for inspection for such time and such place shall be published by said board daily, for twenty days, in two daily newspapers printed and published in said city and county." This must be construed to require the notice to be published as early as the first day of the 30 days during which the report was to remain for free inspection. Otherwise the notice could not truthfully state: "The report is open for inspection" for such time. It is said this is insufficient, because the 20-days publication of notice must come out of the 30 days, which would leave only 10 days for the parties to object; which would be an unreasonable period in which to require parties affected to make their objections. The idea that the notice only allows 10 days after notice seems to be derived from the practice concerning the service of summons. There the summons, when not personally served, may, under proper conditions, be sometimes served by publication for the two months, or such period as the judge may direct. The law provides that the service shall be complete when the term of publication has expired, and the person served may have a certain number of days after service within which to appear and answer. But evidently that is a mere statutory arrangement, and the service would be just as effectual if the time for answering was made to expire with the publication; provided a reasonable opportunity to be heard was afforded by the notice given. So here it would not matter if the publication were required to continue for the entire period of 30 days. It would be curious if the court should hold that the notice would have been good if it had been published only 5 days of the 30, as was very nearly the case in San Francisco v. Certain Real Estate, 42 Cal. 513, and bad because it was required to be continued for 20 days. On such principles there would have been no notice, though it were published for a twelvemonth, during all of which the report was open for inspection and objection.

Of course, unless the notice required can be helped out by reference to the statute, it would amount to nothing. It is true it is not required to be addressed to any one specially. It informs no one what property is to be affected. It indicates no steps to be taken by the person aggrieved to obtain redress, and mentions no tribunal before which, or any time or place at which, his grievance, if he have any, can be heard. But all this is provided for in the statute. He has been already informed that this very notice will be so published, and of all the steps he will be required to take to protect himself. The privilege afforded by the statute to apply to the court to fix a time for his grievance to be heard is as beneficial to him as though such time and place had been fixed by the notice. The authorities upon all these questions of notice are exceedingly numerous, and apparently, in some respects conflicting. Much of this apparent conflict disappears, however, when we remember that each case must be judged by its own circumstances, and under the rule I have cited from Kentucky R. R. Tax Cases, 115 U. S. 331, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 57. All the cases on the subject seem to be referred to by counsel, but I do not deem it important to cite or discuss them in this opinion. I call attention, however, to the numerous statutes of this and other states quoted by counsel for appellants, which show that the mode here adopted is not strange or novel to judicial proceedings. It seems to me quite clear that there is no objection to the act under consideration on the ground that it fails to provide for due process, so far as the matter of notice is concerned.

But it is contended, admitting that the notices were sufficient, no adequate hearing was awarded to the parties whose rights were affected. So far as the claim that there ought to have been a hearing by the commissioners before the assessment was made is concerned, the point has been settled in this court by the case of Reclamation Dist. v. Evans, 61 Cal. 104, and by the Kentucky R. R. Tax Cases, supra, and, in fact, by all the cases upon the subject.

Section 8 of the act provides for a hearing before the county court. Any person interested, feeling himself aggrieved by the action or determination of the board, as shown in the report, might, at any time during the 30 days that the report was to be kept for inspection, "apply by petition to the county court, * * * setting forth his interest in the proceedings had before the board, and his objections thereto, for an order on said board requiring it to file with said court the report of said board, with such other documents or data as may be pertinent thereto, in the custody of said board and used by it in preparing said report. Said court is hereby authorized and empowered to hear said petition, and shall set the same down for a hearing within 10 days from the date of the filing thereof." It then provides for service upon the members of the commission, that they may answer the petition and appear by counsel in response thereto. "Testimony may be taken by said court upon said hearing, and the process of the court may be used to compel the attendance of witnesses, and the production of books or papers or maps in the custody of the board or otherwise. It shall be in the discretion of said court, after hearing and considering said application, to allow said order or deny the same; and, if granted, a copy thereof shall be served on said board, and it shall proceed to obey the same according to the terms of the order to be prescribed by the court. * * * The court shall have power to approve and confirm said report, or refer the same back to said board, with directions to alter or modify the same in particulars specified by the court in the order referring the same back."

Now, it is argued that after the person aggrieved has filed his petition, and a day has been fixed for the hearing, and the hearing had, witnesses summoned, books, papers, and maps produced under the process of the court, and counsel heard, and the court is fully advised as to the grievances, all the court can do in the matter is to order the report to be filed; and even this, although affording no relief, is in the discretion of the court. It is a proposition so often asserted by courts that perhaps now the question should be considered as closed, that the constitution is to be read in connection with laws of this character; and, if no hearing is expressly provided by the statute, still, if the constitution guaranties it, the statute is to be properly construed so as to allow it if possible, and not to deny it. The constitution and the statute will be construed together as one law. This rule was carried so far in Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 370, that words denying the right were regarded as stricken out of the state constitution and statutes by the controlling language of the constitution of the United States. Kentucky R. R. Tax Cases, 115 U. S. 334, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 57.

We are not considering here a statute which is silent as to the hearing. The provisions in question were undoubtedly inserted in view of the constitutional requirement, and for the purpose of affording that opportunity to be heard without which the law would be void. To give the statute the construction contended for would not only defeat the evident purpose, but would make the whole proceeding farcical. And I must confess it seems to me it requires great industry in going wrong, in view of all the circumstances, to conclude that such can be the meaning. Inapt words certainly are found in the section, but it would not have provided so elaborately for a thorough investigation of grievances if it was not intended that redress should be awarded. The statute has apparently been patched and tinkered after it was first drawn, and incongruous matter injected into the body of it. But it still provides for a full hearing, and that the court may alter and modify. And it seems that such action is to be based upon the hearing provided for. The word "discretion" is used in various meanings, but here evidently it was intended to submit the whole matter to the sound judgment of the court, to be exercised according to the rules of law.

The statute does not expressly authorize the court to pass upon the validity of the act, or whether the board of supervisors had passed the necessary resolution, or the notices had been given. But the power to do this is necessarily involved in the power of the court to act at all. It may be that the court could not pass upon these questions upon which its jurisdiction depended, so as to conclude all inquiry even on a collateral attack. It was a constitutional court, invested with jurisdiction by the constitution of special cases. The parties had full notice of the proceeding, and of their right to be heard. If to be heard upon such questions was a constitutional right, and the constitution is to be read as a part of the law governing this procedure, as the authorities plainly hold, then the law must clearly be held to give the parties that right. In my opinion, however, the right is not doubtful under the statute itself, independent of this proposition. The statute places no limit upon the objections which might be made by those deeming themselves aggrieved by the action or determination of the board as shown in the report. As all their determinations which could affect any person were required to appear in the report, this would seem to include all possible objections. The determination, for instance, might have been objected to because, the act being invalid or the notices not having been given, the board had no right to proceed to act at all. If this contention were sustained, the result would have been that the court would not have confirmed the report, and the proceedings would have ended without fixing a charge upon the property of plaintiffs. They could have complained that a wrong basis was adopted in estimating damages or benefits; that the estimated cost was too much; or for any misconduct of the commissioners which could affect them; or that the cost exceeded the estimated benefits; and it does not seem to me that the court would have found any difficulty in granting relief.

I do not regard the fact that the commissioners were allowed to answer the petition of the aggrieved party as of any consequence. There was no occasion to require an answer at all. The provision was intended to prevent the matter from going by default, and to enable the commissioners to aid the court by such information as was in their power. This aid did not prevent any person interested from being heard, and, if the commissioners betrayed their trust in this matter, that of itself would have constituted a proper subject of complaint which any one might have presented to the court. The idea evidently was that there might be many complaints made by persons feeling themselves aggrieved. The court was bound to hear all and consider all competent and pertinent testimony offered. If any of the alleged grievances were found to be well founded, the report was to be ordered into court. After all complaints had been duly heard, and the court duly advised, the final order was to be made declaring what alterations and modifications were necessary. In this order the court was authorized, not only to grant the specific relief asked for by the petitioners, but also to so modify the report in other respects, so as to adjust the final determinations in regard to the assessment to the report as altered at the prayer of the petitioners.

I concede at once the proposition that, to maintain this final order, it is necessary to hold that all persons whose rights were affected by the proceeding were before the court; that the notice given under section 7 of the act was a process by which they were brought into court, and from that time on they were charged with notice of everything done, and of any step taken in the county court. I think this is perhaps the most debatable point in the case, but the difficulty arises to great extent from a disposition to compare the opportunity here afforded with that deemed essential in ordinary judicial proceedings. Measured by that standard, it would unquestionably be deemed insufficient. But that cannot be accepted as furnishing the rule. "Due process of law," says Judge Cooley, (Const. Lim. 356,) "in each particular case means such an exertion of the powers of government as the settled maxims of the law permit and sanction, and under such safeguards for the protection of individual rights as those maxims prescribe for the class of cases to which the one in question belongs."

Under a statute which authorized the commissioner of immigration to prevent paupers, criminals, lewd women, and certain others to land, certain women were detained, and on application to this court on a writ of habeas corpus, it was adjudged that the act did not violate the requirement of due process. Here there was no hearing provided by the act at all. Any woman, if found on a vessel from a foreign port, was liable to be deprived of her liberty under circumstances most humiliating and degrading. This court, speaking through Justice MCKINSTRY, said: "The peculiar necessities which call for the action of the officer, and whether a power was exercised in the same manner prior to the adoption of the constitution without being regarded a violation of the principles of magna charta, may be considered; and if it be found that like proceedings have always been recognized as constitutional in England and this country, and if the person who is subjected to them is accorded every reasonable opportunity to defend his individual rights which the nature of the case will admit,—the case being one in which the end sought to be attained is lawful,—a statute cannot be said to deprive a party of the benefits of due process of law." Ex parte Ah Fook, 49 Cal. 406.

This conclusion was based partly upon the fact that the object of the law could not be attained unless the action under it was prompt and summary, precluding the possibility of according a hearing at an appointed time and place, and, although it is not so stated in the opinion, perhaps to some extent because the imprisonment, if it can be said that there was any, was so only in a qualified sense. They were only prevented from entering this state, but were not prevented from going anywhere else. This is an extreme case, no doubt, but it well illustrates, as all quarantine laws do, the proposition that the constitutional provision will not be given such effect as will render impossible laws which are generally admitted to be essential to the safety and well-being of society, and that, when usage and necessity both sanction it, the opportunity may be so limited as not to render the law inoperative.

The sufficiency of the opportunity to be heard, accorded, must be ascertained in each case, not only by considering the adequacy of the opportunity to be heard, but the practicability of a more perfect and satisfactory hearing in the particular case; and if that which is provided is such as the settled maxims of the law permit and sanction in such cases, and is reasonable in view of the necessities of the case, it is enough. The practice upon this subject, so far as this particular question is concerned, seems to have been uniform. It has never been held, so far as I can find, by any case really in point, that a new notice is necessary, or that parties whose individual assessments have not been altered must be brought in and given a right to be heard as to other changes, no matter how much their individual burdens may be increased by such changes.

The precise question here raised has been often discussed. Patterson v. New York, 1 Paige, Ch. 114, is directly in point. The court said: "The notice to propose objections to the report is a sufficient notice to those who are satisfied with the original report to appear before the commissioners, and oppose any alterations which may be proposed by the persons objecting." To the same effect is In re William St., 19 Wend. 680.

In Gilbert v. City of New Haven, 39 Conn. 472, it is said: "It is further objected that the defendant had no notice of the recommittal, and of the subsequent proceedings. We are satisfied none was required. The whole matter, from the time of its first reference to the board of compensation to the time the report was finally adopted by the court of common council, is one proceeding. The appellant was notified in the first instance, and appeared. If he neglected to attend the subsequent stages of the proceeding, it affords no ground of complaint now."

Chamberlain v. Cleveland, 34 Ohio St. 569, was a case very similar to this in the respect under consideration. It was held that, after the notice, "all persons interested are bound to take notice of what is done up to the time the equalized assessment is confirmed." See, also, Astor v. Mayor, 62 N. Y. 588; Murray v. Graham, 6 Paige, 625; Gates v. Brooks, 59 Iowa, 510, 6 N. W. Rep. 595, and 13 N. W. Rep. 640; Avery v. East Saginaw, 44 Mich. 589, 7 N. W. Rep. 177.

That is all I deem it necessary to say upon the subject of due process of law. It is charged, also, that the act is unconstitutional, because it was not competent for the legislature to determine that the improvement would benefit the property owners, or would benefit them to the extent of the costs and damages. While I understand that this point is made by the learned and able counsel for respondents, it is fair to say that they have not much insisted upon the proposition in this form. They really claim that the act directs the commissioners to ascertain the benefits; that they did ascertain them, and determined that the benefits would be less than the estimated cost of the improvement. In this, however, it is clear the counsel are in error. The act only requires the commissioners to estimate the benefit which will accrue to each lot relatively to the benefits to accrue to other lots. The act certainly was not constructed upon the idea that the proceedings could be arrested by any possible finding in regard to benefits. Unless its final operation was made to depend upon such a finding, it is difficult to see why there should be one. Nor, in my judgment, did the commissioners pretend to ascertain the amount of such benefits. The report as first filed showed benefits and costs exactly equal, being each estimated at $898,105. It would have been marvelous if, upon a real estimate of the amounts, they should have come out exactly equal, considering the great number of properties. If, however, they had first ascertained the amount of the costs of the improvement, it would then have been easy to have distributed them proportionately upon the properties benefited. And this is evidently exactly what they did do.

If I rightly apprehend the position of counsel, they seem to think the validity of the law in the first instance, and the jurisdiction of the court or commission which is to conduct the proceeding afterwards, will depend upon the fact as to whether the property is benefited, and this fact must appear affirmatively in order to give validity to the proceeding. But the power to assess for local benefits is not based upon the fact of local benefit in any other sense than all taxes are based upon supposed benefit to the tax-payer. The power of taxation is said by Chief Justice MARSHALL to be vested in the government by all for the benefit of all. "The state taxes are based upon the theory that all are benefited by the government which they are designed to support. And so of county and municipal taxation. And the legislature may also organize smaller or different districts than these usual political subdivisions, and place upon such districts the burden of taxation for purposes in which the inhabitants have a special interest, or which will specially benefit the property within the district."

Now, in regard to general taxation, if a case were presented in which we could plainly see that the tax was not for the benefit of the government, but was wholly for the private advantage of an individual, we should not hesitate to declare that it was not an exercise of legislative power, and the levy would be held void. The same rule, and no other, applies to assessments for local improvements. The main practical difference between assessment for a local improvement and general taxation seems to be that in general taxation it is difficult, and generally impossible, for the court to say that the purpose of the tax is not a public purpose, or that no benefit will result to the tax-payers, while in local assessments it is more often easy to see that the improvement will not be a special benefit. Still the benefit is not the source of the power. That is inherent in the government, and is only limited by express or implied limitations found in the constitution, or by its own nature and purposes. Within these limits the legislature is the sole judge of when and to what extent the power shall be used.

It may be said that all the cases on this subject are exceptional, and many of them are cases of great hardship and clear extortion, in which the local benefit claimed is only a pretense to cover the unjust exaction, and the courts have often attempted to find some limitation, in the nature of the power, which would enable them to prevent the injustice. Thus it has sometimes been said that, the power being based upon the supposed benefit, the burden cannot go beyond the actual benefit, which may be inquired into whenever the attempt is made to enforce the tax; but this, obviously, cannot be so. The legislature must act, after all, in providing for the public good, upon the judgment of its members as to what is expedient or will prove beneficial. The most wisely planned projects often fail to realize the good expected. And then the benefits need not be immediate. I see no just limitation in this respect, except that the tax will not be upheld when the courts can plainly see that the legislature has not really exercised this judgment at all, or that manifestly and certainly no such benefit can or could reasonably have been expected to result. The judge should not place his mere opinion against that of the legislature. So, too, it has been said, that as the tax is in this instance imposed by a power ab extra, it is taxation without representation. I find no such limitation upon the power in the constitution, though if there were it might be questionable whether in this case there has been a violation of it. These, and some other limitations which courts have attempted to find in the nature of the taxing power, seem to me to be plain attempts to import into the constitution restrictions which cannot be found there by any just reasoning.

Judge Cooley, in his work on Taxation, 622, says: "The power to determine when a special assessment shall be made, and on what basis it shall be apportioned, is wisely confided to the legislature, and could not, without the introduction of some new principle in representative government, be placed elsewhere. We dismiss this topic, therefore, with the simple remark that with the wisdom or unwisdom of special assessments, when ordered in special cases in which they are admissible at all, the courts have no concern, unless there is plainly and manifestly such an abuse of power as takes the case beyond the just limits of legislative discretion."

The power being in the legislature, the limitations upon it must be found in the constitution, either in express provisions or by implication; and there exists, which must be recognized by the courts, the same presumption that the law is within legislative power that applies to any other statute; that is, the law will not be declared unconstitutional unless it plainly appears to be so. Therefore it is presumed that the power of assessment existed, and the contrary must be very clearly made to appear before the court could declare the law invalid. It does not so appear in this case.

But it is contended, admitting that the law is valid, the board of supervisors did not authorize the work to be done by expressing their judgment that such improvement would be expedient. March 27, 1876, the board passed a resolution which fully satisfies the act. The proceeding was not conducted under the consolidation act. The statute is complete in itself, and it prescribes no preliminary notice. It furthermore expressly authorizes the board to express such judgment in such form as they might deem advisable. Counsel say this has reference only to the language in which the judgment should be expressed. Since the board could not express its judgment at all without choosing the language, that construction is not tenable.

It is objected that the notices were not duly published because sometimes printed in the supplements. The supplements, however, in this particular instance, were part and parcel of the newspaper itself. They constituted only a third sheet when there was too much matter for the usual two-sheet issue. Why they were designated as "supplements" I do not know, nor does it matter. The mere fact that the word "supplement" was printed at the head could not change their character. I have looked in vain for any evidence to sustain the finding that the so-called supplement was not circulated co-extensively with the balance of the paper. All the evidence upon the subject is the other way.

If I am correct in my conclusions as to this point, the remaining objections do not require much consideration.

That the benefits, as shown in the report, are less than the cost of the improvement, has been already sufficiently noticed. If the intervenors in their cross-complaint have improvidently admitted the construction of the act contended for, it will not help the plaintiffs. It cannot change the meaning of the law, or the legal effect of the finding. If there was a valid law authorizing the improvement, and the board was authorized to act and the county court obtained jurisdiction, the plaintiffs cannot complain here of mere irregularities or bad conduct on the part of the commissioners for which that court could have afforded relief. The alleged frauds were all such as by the exercise of a proper diligence ought to have been known by the interested parties in time to present to the county court. This action is by the property owners on the east side of the street; the property taken was immediately opposite. It is averred that the commissioners, willfully and intentionally, determined the value of lots taken to be more than three times as much as they in fact were, and omitted from their estimate of benefits to the same lots about two-thirds of the actual benefit. This overestimate of damages and underestimate of benefits, so far as I can judge from the statement of the case in the record, seems to be fully sustained. But the report showed fully what the estimates were, and the injustice was so obvious that a mere inspection by those familiar with the property, as the plaintiffs were, could not fail to disclose the fact. As to the interest of Bryant, one of the commissioners, I find no evidence of it except the admission in the cross-complaint that he had for seven or eight years owned the undivided half of a certain lot on the northeast corner of Dupont and Morton streets, which fact appeared upon the maps and reports made by the commissioners.

But admitting the validity of the statute, and that the preliminary steps were taken which authorized the work to be done, the plaintiffs cannot now maintain this action. The statute, as I have already stated, manifested very plainly that the improvement was to be made for their special benefit, and that they were to bear the entire cost. They were afforded an opportunity, even after the board was organized, to arrest proceedings, if a majority in value of frontage should be of opinion that it would not be to their advantage; and were distinctly notified that if they permitted it to be completed their acquiescence would be deemed an absolute acceptance by them of the lien created by the act. Under such circumstances, they could not remain silent, and permit the money obtained of the bondholders to be expended in the improvement of their property, and then escape liability on the plea that the officers charged with the work, who were in a sense their agents, were guilty of misconduct and fraud, which they by proper diligence could have prevented.

The pleadings and the briefs are full of the most positive charges of fraud and corruption against the commissioners, and, although apparently hurled at the board, they are constantly put forward as though the bondholders were in some way responsible for them. They represent themselves as victims who should be relieved at the expense of those who were induced by their former silence to loan the money to improve their property. There was fault and culpability over and above that of the board which is charged with the perpetration of the frauds. The culpability is on the part of the lot-owners who remained silent while the bondholders were advancing the money to their agents and it was being expended by them for their benefit. I see no reason why the legislature might not declare, by a law before the fact, that such remissness shall constitute an estoppel. Certainly, under such circumstances, a court of equity would not lend its aid to the plaintiffs. Authorities are not wanting on this point, many of them going much further than this court is prepared to go. They fully sustain the proposition, however, that it is competent for the legislature to declare that the tacit acquiescence of parties interested, and their failure to challenge proceedings while in progress, will estop them from questioning them after they are completed; that they cannot accept the benefits and avoid the burdens.

In Palmer v. Stumph, 29 Ind. 329, an assessment was laid for the improvement of a street, under a statute which provided for an appeal, but declared that no question or act shall be tried which may arise prior to the making of the contract. The court held that the plain intent was that the owner should not remain silent until he had secured the full benefit of the work, and then avoid payment. It is said: "If he denies the power of the council to order the improvement, he must test the question by injunction before the work is done. Acquiescence in the action of the council is by law made to estop him from going behind the making of the contract."

The same statute was under consideration, and the same ruling made, in Commissioners Allen Co. v. Silvers, 22 Ind. 491. See, also, Quinlan v. Myers, 29 Ohio St. 500; State v. Wertzel, 62 Wis. 184, 22 N. W. Rep. 150; People v. Common Council, 65 Barb. 9; State v. Mayor, 40 N. J. Law, 244; Kellogg v. Ely, 15 Ohio St. 64; Pittsburgh v. Scott, 1 Pa. St. 309; Patterson v. Baumer, 43 Iowa, 477; Weber v. City of San Francisco, 1 Cal. 455.

I think the cause should be remanded, with directions to dissolve the injunction and dismiss the complaint. So ordered.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; THORNTON, J.; MCFARLAND,

McKINSTRY, J., (concurring.) I concur in the order of judgment directing the court below to dismiss the complaint.

1. If there were irregularities in the proceedings to widen Dupont street, which did not deprive the plaintiffs of opportunities to contest them, they should have been objected to in the course of the proceedings. If the statute is a valid statute, but it appears from the record that there were omissions, defects, or departures from the procedure prescribed by the statute, which render the assessment of the commissioners, or judgment of the county court invalid, for want of jurisdiction of the persons or property of the plaintiffs, each of the plaintiffs had a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law, by means of the writ of certiorari. Ewing v. City of St. Louis, 5 Wall. 413; Spring V. W. Co. v. Bryant, 52 Cal. 132; People v. El Dorado, 8 Cal. 61; People v. Board of Delegates, 14 Cal. 479.

2. And so, if the assessment or judgment is void because of the invalidity of the statute, each of the plaintiffs could have resorted to certiorari. Moreover, if the act of March 13, 1876, is unconstitutional and void, as contended by counsel for respondents, a sale of the lands assessed, and the tax collector's deeds thereof, would constitute no cloud on the title of the plaintiffs. An injunction will not be issued to restrain the collection of a tax or assessment by the sale of real property, unless it appears that the plaintiff would suffer irreparable injury, or an injunction is necessary to prevent a multiplicity of suits, or the sale would cast a cloud on his title. Dean v. Davis, 51 Cal. 407; Houghton v. Austin, 47 Cal. 647; Savings & Loan Soc. v. Austin, 46 Cal. 448; Wiggin v. Mayor, 9 Paige, 23; Dows v. City of Chicago, 11 Wall. 108;

Central P. R. Co. v. Corcoran, 48 Cal. 65. When a statute gives to a tax deed, the tax being levied by a valid law, effect as evidence prima facie of the regularity of the assessment, and of all proceedings under it, the deed may create a cloud. Palmer v. Boling, 8 Cal. 384; Bucknall v. Story, 36 Cal. 73; Patten v. Greene, 13 Cal. 328; High v. Shoemaker, 22 Cal. 372; People v. Crockett, 33 Cal. 157. But whatever effect the legislature may attempt to give to a tax or assessment deed as evidence, every such deed must be read with the statute under which it purports to have been issued, and, if the statute is void, the deed issued under it can cast no cloud on the true title.

3. At a very early day in the judicial history of this state it was held where an assessment was laid for improving a street, thereby benefiting the property of the plaintiff in common with the property of other persons, and the improvement was completed without the plaintiff's interposing to prevent it, an injunction to prevent the sale for the assessment was properly denied on the ground that he who seeks equity must do equity; and that the city should be permitted to proceed and sell the plaintiff's land, leaving him after the sale to the technical rights which he set up in his bill. Weber v. City of San Francisco, 1 Cal. 455. I know of no case in which the doctrine of that case has been expressly overruled, or overruled by necessary implication. And while there is some conflict in the decisions of the courts of the several states with reference to the conditions under which equity will interpose to enjoin the sale of lands for assessments, there is ample authority to uphold the view taken by the supreme court of this state in Weber v. San Francisco. "One of the first of these [equitable principles] is that parties coming into equity must do equity. * * * If parties cannot come into equity without submitting to do equity, a fortiori they cannot come for the summary interference of the court when their conduct before coming has been such as to prevent equity from being done." Per TURNER, L. J., Great Western Ry. v. Oxford, etc., Ry. Co., 3 De Gex, M. & G. 359. Here the plaintiffs with full knowledge of what was done by the officers and others under color of the statute,—for the contrary is not alleged, found, or proved,—with full knowledge of all the acts of which they now complain as wrongful and unlawful, remained quiescent until they had received the benefits of the work. The legislature had declared that their lands would be benefited, and there is nothing in the record to indicate that their lands were not, in fact, benefited to the full amount for which they have been or will be assessed. When the complaint was filed, valuable buildings belonging to many different persons may have been removed or destroyed, and the work of widening the street had been completed at very great expense. So far as appears, while great loss and injury to others would be the consequence of an injunction herein, the plaintiffs will suffer no real injury by a denial of an injunction. Under these circumstances, I think it clear that the plaintiffs so far acquiesced in the work of widening the street and the issue of the bonds as that they should have been denied an injunction decree. Lux v. Haggin, 10 Pac. Rep. 694, and cases there cited.

Where the county commissioners contracted for the building of a bridge without legal authority, and the bridge was completed, it was adjudged that payment for it could not be enjoined at the suit of a tax-payer. Clark v. Dayton, 6 Neb. 193. When an improvement had been made along a public street, to which the owner of property abutting thereon had made no objection until after its completion, upon a bill being filed by him to enjoin the assessment for want of notice, it was held he must do equity by paying the amount which his property was benefited. Barker v. Omaha, 16 Neb. 269, 20 N. W. Rep. 382. In Indiana the doctrine has been carried further, and it is settled that a property owner cannot quietly permit money to be expended in a work which benefits his land under a contract with a city, and then deny the power of the city to make the contract. Palmer v. Stumph, 29 Ind. 329;

Hellenkamp v. Lafayette, 30 Ind. 194; City of Lafayette v. Fowler, 34 Ind. 146.

4. It may be urged, however, that equity should entertain jurisdiction of a suit like the present "to prevent multiplicity of actions." The multiplicity of actions which it may be said (although in the absence of averment) the complainants here seek to avoid would not injuriously affect any one of them. Cooley, Tax'n, (2d Ed.) 771; Dodd v. Hartford, 25 Conn. 232. But, if that be not the true rule, and a bill may be filed by many persons to enjoin sales of the separate property of each for the same assessment; if the only necessary community of interest among the plaintiffs is in the questions at issue to be decided by the court,—“in the mere external fact that all their remedial rights arose at the same time, are of the same kind, involve similar questions of fact, and depend upon the same questions of law,” (1 Pom. Eq. § 260,)—the question still remains: Will a suit be entertained to prevent multiplicity, when it appears that no one of the plaintiffs could separately demand equitable relief? The cases sometimes supposed to do so do not, when examined, answer the foregoing question in the affirmative.

Kennedy v. City of Troy, 14 Hun, 308, and Clark v. Village of Dunkirk, 12 Hun, 181, were cases in which it was held that, when an assessment is invalid, but such invalidity is shown only by matters dehors the record, which in itself is in all respects regular, and within the power and jurisdiction of the authority laying the same, an action in equity may be maintained by any one upon whose real estate an apparent lien has been created by the assessment on behalf of himself and others in like situation; but to justify such an action it must be alleged in the complaint that the assessment is regular upon its face, and apparently in accordance with the provisions of the law authorizing it.

In Ireland v. City of Rochester, 51 Barb. 435, the supreme court said: “The assessment being void as to the plaintiffs, their right to maintain this action is clear, not only to avoid a multiplicity of suits, but to remove a cloud from their respective titles;” citing 14 N. Y. 534. The case referred to is Heywood v. City of Buffalo, 14 N. Y. 535. That was a suit by a single plaintiff, and the decision was: When an action was brought to restrain the collection of and annul an alleged illegal assessment, which, if legal, was a lien on the plaintiff's real estate, but the complaint did not show but that its invalidity appeared on the [face of the] proceedings imposing it, on demurrer to the complaint, held the action could not be maintained. And in Scofield v. Lansing, 17 Mich. 437, the supreme court of Michigan held that, when by the provisions of a city charter a tax was declared to be a lien on premises, it constituted a cloud on the title. In these cases each of the plaintiffs could have claimed separately (as was held by the courts of New York and Michigan) the aid of equity to remove a cloud from his title, as well as have maintained his action or defense at law. In some of them the plaintiffs were permitted to join as plaintiffs in an equitable suit, because the title to their respective tracts of land was affected by the same cloud, created by the same proceedings.

Even if there are cases in which each of the several plaintiffs would not be allowed to maintain a separate suit in equity, but yet all would be entitled to unite in one suit for the determination of questions which might arise in separate actions at law, the result herein must be the same. The plaintiffs, by their acquiescence and consent, having lost their right to ask the aid of equity by injunction, the court ought not to have granted to all that which it should refuse to each. To grant the injunction to all because each may be subjected to a separate action at law is to reward the laches and neglect which has deprived each of his right to seek the equitable relief. The acquiescence which estops the plaintiff from obtaining an injunction is in the nature of a defense in equity, and, by holding all estopped by such acquiescence, it is not necessarily held that the plaintiffs were improperly united as plaintiffs, whether they were united to prevent multiplicity of actions or for any other reason. It is simply to say that none of the plaintiffs are entitled to the preventive decree.

PATERSON, J., (dissenting.) I think the judgment should be affirmed. I assent to some of the propositions advanced in the leading opinion, but the statute and proceedings in controversy are in many respects, it seems to me, plainly violative of that clause in the constitutional declaration of rights, which says: "No person shall be deprived of * * * property without due process of law."

1. That the act itself should provide for "due notice" to the property owner, and afford him an opportunity to be heard, is settled beyond all controversy; and, whatever may be the conflict of opinion upon the question of what is "due notice," there can be no question that it should be notice of a full hearing as to time, place, and liability. Section 7 is the only provision which assumes to satisfy this requisite, but it provides no notice at all. It affords no notice of a hearing, and none was given. It provides for a notice, after assessment is complete, that the report "is open for inspection." It is true section 8 attempts to give any person dissatisfied with the report a hearing upon petition before the county court, which court could not, under sections 6 and 8, art. 6, of the old constitution, be clothed with jurisdiction of any case involving the title or possession of real property; but it is only by implication, if at all, that the court could aid him, the language of the statute being: "It shall be in the discretion of the court, after hearing and considering said application, to allow or deny the same." As to those, however, who were satisfied with the report, which had been left "open for inspection," there is no hearing provided, although the court is given in such cases absolute power to fix values and assess damages of its own motion, and according to its own rules and estimates, notwithstanding the report of the commissioners, with which the owner may be content.

The following is the concluding portion of section 8: "But, in case no such petition shall be filed with said county court within the time above limited for the filing thereof, the said report shall be presented by the said board to the said county court, with a petition to the court that the same be approved and confirmed by the court. The court shall have power to approve and confirm said report, or refer the same back to said board, with directions to alter or modify the same in the particulars specified by the court in the order referring the same back; and thereupon the said board shall proceed to make the alterations and modifications specified in the order of said court. The alterations and modifications aforesaid being made, the report shall be again submitted to the said court; and if the court, upon examination, shall find that the alterations and modifications have been made according to the directions contained in said order, the said court shall approve and confirm the same by an order to be entered on its minutes; but, if the said board shall have neglected or failed to make the alterations and modifications set forth in the order of reference, the court may again refer the report back to said board, and so on until its original order of alteration and modification shall have been complied with by said board, and the said court shall then approve and confirm said report." St. 1875-76, p. 436, § 8.

Of course, if we can say that the citizens of the state are charged with notice of all the acts of the legislature affecting their private interests, and must be on the alert to prevent fraud in the carrying out of the work provided for, the objection just considered is not well taken; but that would be equivalent to saying that "notice" and "opportunity to be heard," are not essential elements of "due process of law."

2. We might be able to overlook the defects referred to if it were clear that the parties whose property was affected had, as matter of fact, due notice and substantial hearing; but, as I read the record, such is not the case here. Many of the orders seem to have been made nunc pro tunc in regard to the time for hearing. Several of the petitions were set for hearing on December 8th. On that day no orders were made; nothing was done until December 15th, when they were continued to December 18th. On December 19th the whole matter was continued to and set for hearing December 22d. Thereafter, and without further notice or opportunity to appear, the court, on an ex parte motion, took up the case and finally disposed of the matters before it, two days before the day set for regular hearing. These interesting, if not suspicious, facts appear on the face of the court's records, and in ordinary cases would not support a judgment. Tompkins v. Clackamas, 4 Pac. Rep. 1210.

3. The report and judgment show that the assessment was for about $100,000 in excess of the benefits. If I understand the authorities on this proposition, a statute which imposes an assessment in excess of special benefits is unconstitutional. Davidson v. New Orleans, 34 La. Ann. 170; Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 254; Creighton v. Mason, 27 Cal. 624; In re Market St., 49 Cal. 549; Chicago v. Larned, 34 Ill. 203.

It may be admitted that the legislature had the power to declare the benefit, but I fail to find any declaration of that kind in the act referred to. It is true the act speaks of "the district hereinafter described as benefited by said widening," but there is no direct finding of the fact of benefit therein by the legislature. On the contrary, the board of commissioners are therein directed to ascertain and fix the extent of damages and benefits "according to the judgment of the board." Section 7.

4. The bondholders stand in no better position than the municipal authorities. The bonds are not general or ordinary municipal bonds, issued for the benefit of the general fund. They are payable out of a special fund, raised by special tax, on a small district. They do not show on their face that the act has been complied with,—which is essential even if the act referred to be valid,—and consequently they are not negotiable so as to cut off the defenses claimed. Carroll Co. v. Smith, 18 Reporter, 33; Williams v. Roberts, 88 Ill. 11; Cagwin v. Hancock, 84 N. Y. 532; Craig v. Andes, 93 N. Y. 405; Lyons v. Chamberlain, 89 N. Y. 585.

WHITE v. SUPERIOR COURT, etc. (No. 11,614.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 7, 1887.)

NEW TRIAL—PRACTICE—PROHIBITION.

Under the California practice, where the notice of the intention to move for a new trial, as served upon the opposite party, specifies that the motion will be heard upon a statement of the case, and the notice is not filed, and no draught-statement of the case for new trial has been served or filed, the trial court has no power to consider the motion; and if it persists in doing so the supreme court will issue a writ of prohibition to prevent it.

In bank. Petition for writ of prohibition.

The petition prayed that a writ of prohibition issue directing that the superior court, and judge thereof, be absolutely restrained from any further proceedings in the hearing of motion for new trial in the case of White v. Gutenberg, which was an action brought originally in a justice's court to recover a debt of $100.

Wilbur F. George, for petitioner. Grove L. Johnson, for respondent.

BY THE COURT. On appeal from the justice's court upon questions both of law and fact, the action (White v. Gutenberg) was retried in the superior court, and a judgment therein rendered in favor of the plaintiff, the peitioner for prohibition. The defendant Gutenbergger served a notice of intention to move for a new trial, specifying that said motion would be heard upon a statement of the case, but such notice was never filed. No draught-statement of the case for new trial was ever served or filed by the defendant in said action. Neither the plaintiff, White, nor his counsel, ever stipulated that the statement of facts on which the cause was tried, should be adopted as the statement on motion for new trial, nor was it ever agreed between White and Gutenbergger, or their respective counsel, that the motion should be heard, although the notice of intention was not filed. The notice of intention to move for new trial was served July 10, 1882. The present proceeding was commenced May 5, 1886. December 15, 1885, plaintiff, White, moved to dismiss the motion for new trial on the grounds (1) no notice of intention, etc., had been filed; (2) no statement had been served or filed, or any affidavits, etc.

The superior court has no jurisdiction to hear and determine the motion. Ordered and adjudged that the writ issue prohibiting said superior court, and the judgment thereof, as prayed for in the petition herein.

HECHT v. SLANEY and others. (No. 11,908.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 28, 1887.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—RUNNING OF STATUTE—IMPLIED TRUST.

Upon a suit to subject to the satisfaction of a judgment property of an insolvent debtor, upon which he has filed a declaration of homestead, and which he has procured to be set apart to him as exempt in insolvency proceedings, upon the ground that the property was not subject to be selected as a homestead, and that the order in the insolvency proceedings was obtained by fraud, and without notice to the parties interested, and that, therefore, the debtor holds the property as trustee for his creditors, the statute of limitations will begin to run at least from the time when the stay effected by the insolvency proceedings ceased to operate.

2. SAME—NOTICE.

A party is presumed to know whatever he might with reasonable diligence have discovered; and when the fundamental facts upon which an alleged fraud rests are matters of public record, open to his inspection, ignorance of the fraud will not excuse his laches, nor stay the running of the statute of limitations.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Graves & O'Melveny and Chapman & Hendrick, for appellant. H. M. Smith and W. H. Clark, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. C. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment entered against him, after demurrer sustained to his complaint. The facts set forth in the complaint may be briefly stated as follows: On the seventeenth day of May, 1879, S. W. Levy recovered a judgment in the district court of the Twenty-third judicial district of this state against the defendant William Slaney for the sum of $2,296.17, and $32.20 costs. On the tenth of May, 1884, Levy assigned the judgment to the plaintiff, and no part of it has ever been paid. On the twenty-fourth of July, 1879, Slaney filed a petition in insolvency in the county court of Los Angeles county, and on the same day an order was made staying all proceedings against him; which order remained in full force till the twenty-eighth of February, 1882. On the thirtieth of August, 1879, H. M. Mitchell, sheriff of Los Angeles county, was appointed assignee of the estate of Slaney, and received the usual assignment; and he continued to act as such assignee until he was discharged, on the twenty-eighth of February, 1882. On the twenty-fifth of February, 1879, Slaney was the owner of certain real property in the city of Los Angeles, and filed a declaration of homestead thereon. On the seventeenth of September, 1879, he filed a petition in the county court, where his insolvency proceedings were pending, asking that the property on which he had filed his declaration of homestead be exempted and set apart to him. The petition represented that the property had been duly selected as a homestead, and was exempt from execution; and without any notice of the filing of the petition, or of the time set for the hearing thereof, the property was, by an order of court made on the twenty-fourth of January, 1880, set aside to him as a homestead.

It is then alleged that the representations in the petition were false; that the property was then worth at least $10,000, and was not subject to be claimed as a homestead, because at the time of its selection, and up to the time when it was set aside, it was used almost wholly for business purposes.

It is further alleged that the representations were fraudulent, and made for the purpose of defrauding his creditors by withdrawing this property from the assignee's hands, and that it really constituted all the assets of the insolvent; that neither the plaintiff nor his assignor had any notice of the order setting aside the property, or of the representations, until the seventh day of May, 1884, and that, by reason of the imposition practiced upon the court in procuring the order, he became, and now holds the property as, a trustee for his creditors, including the plaintiff.

The prayer is that he be adjudged to hold the property in trust for his creditors, and that it be sold, and the proceeds applied to the payment of the debt of plaintiff, and other creditors who may come in. The defendants, other than Slaney, were made parties to the action because they claim some interest in or lien upon the property.

The demurrer was upon the grounds—First, that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; second, that Mitchell should have been made a party plaintiff; third, that the action was barred by sections 336 and 343 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The action was commenced on the ninth day of April, 1886,—more than six years after the homestead was set aside, and more than four years after the insolvency proceedings were terminated,—and it was brought to set aside a judgment, and to establish and enforce against the defendant a constructive trust. The plaintiff set forth in his complaint the facts in regard to his judgment; but this was only to show that he was a creditor, and as such entitled, with the other creditors, to the relief which he sought.

The theory upon which the action was commenced evidently was that the property was not subject to be selected as a homestead, and so the declaration filed did not constitute it a homestead, and that, as there was no valid homestead when the order was made setting it apart, the order was a nullity, and the property was still subject to the payment of the insolvent's debts. And this theory was supposed to be sustained by the decisions of this court. Tiernan v. His Creditors, 62 Cal. 286; Laughlin v. Wright, 63 Cal. 113; Matzen v. Shaeffer, 65 Cal. 81, 3 Pac. Rep. 92.

In this view of the case the principal question is, was the action barred by the statute of limitations? Whatever may once have been the rule, it is now well settled that the statute of limitations runs in favor of a defendant chargeable as a trustee of an implied trust, and it is not necessary, in order to set the statute in motion, that he should have denied or repudiated the trust. Howell v. Howell, 15 Wis. 55; Hagnie v. Hall, 5 Humph. 290; Wilmerding v. Russ, 33 Conn. 67; Kennedy v. Baker, 59 Tex. 150; Currey v. Allen, 34 Cal. 254; Perry, Trusts, § 865. In such a case the statute begins to run when the wrong complained of is done, and under our Code the limitation is four years. Section 343, Code Civil Proc.; Piller v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 52 Cal. 42.

As the plaintiff's action was commenced more than four years after the order staying all proceedings against the insolvent ceased to be in force, it was clearly barred, unless saved by the averment in the complaint that neither the plaintiff nor his grantor had any notice of the order setting aside the homestead, or of the false and fraudulent representations in the petition asking that it be set aside, until the seventh of May, 1884.

But these were matters of record in the court, which, with reasonable diligence, Levy, the assignor, might seasonably have known, and, it would seem, should have known. As no averment is made to the contrary, it must be presumed that he actually knew of the filing of the declaration of homestead, of the value and use of the property at that time, and that, notwithstanding the declaration, it did not become a homestead in fact; that proceedings in insolvency were commenced, and regularly conducted to an end; and that he, as a creditor, was entitled to have the property sold, and the proceeds distributed. Still, though no dividend was received, both he and the plaintiff slept on their rights for years. No reason being assigned why notice of the representations and order was not sooner had, the case would seem to be one where the maxim, vigilantibus non dormientibus, jura subveniunt, has peculiar application. The rule in such cases is that a party is presumed to know whatever he might with reasonable diligence have discovered; and when the fundamental facts upon which the alleged frauds rest, are matters of public record, open to his inspection, ignorance of the fraud will not excuse his laches, nor stay the running of the statute. Smith v. Talbot, 18 Tex. 775; Nudd v. Hamblin, 8 Allen, 130; Manning v. San Jacinto Tin Co., 7 Sawy. 418, 9 Fed. Rep. 726.

It follows, in our opinion, that the action was barred, and the judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. BROWN. (No. 20,277.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 31, 1887.)

QUALIFICATION OF JUROR—OPINION—CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Where a proposed juror, who was challenged for actual bias, stated on his examination that he had formed an opinion on the subject of defendant's guilt which it would require evidence to remove, but that he could give the defendant a fair trial, held, that the exclusion of questions asked by defendant's counsel, evidently designed to bring out the character and force of the opinion, was error.¹

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county.

Trial for murder. Defendant was convicted. The point referred to in last paragraph of the opinion is the exclusion by the court of a question put by defendant to a witness, as follows: "Question. Was the wound inflicted on the breast of Luther Brown (deceased) made by the entry or exit of the bullet?" The objection was that no sufficient foundation had been laid for the introduction of such testimony, and that it did not appear that the witness was an expert on gunshot wounds and was a surgeon.

Oregon Sanders, J. W. Davis, and P. Reddy, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. The defendant was tried upon a charge of murder, and was convicted of murder in the first degree. The appeal is from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial.

On the trial, M. P. Troxler was examined as to his qualifications as a juror. He stated that he had heard some talk of the case, and had read accounts of the affair in the local newspapers, and he thought he read the evidence taken before the coroner, and had formed an opinion in reference to the guilt or innocence of the defendant. He was then asked by defendant's counsel, was that opinion favorable or unfavorable to the defendant? Objection was made that it was irrelevant, incompetent and immaterial, and the court sustained the objection. Defendant then asked: "What is your opinion now, from what you have read, as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant?" To which there was interposed the same objection, and the same ruling was made.
